"But, Georgie, you know what it means to me. I mean you know I could never change or forget."

"Why not?" she returned quickly. "That is just what I wanted to speak to you about. You see"—and her proud head was raised a trifle higher—"you only want a wife who can see that you get a good dinner every day and sew the buttons on your shirts. You have known us all for years. Why do you expect me, the unpractical one of the family, to snatch at the offer of this post? You would have shown more sense in asking Madge or Lillian, and I dare say one of them might have had you."

For a moment there was a dangerous gleam in his eyes, but it changed to a tender look of amusement as the girl flung herself viciously into a chair with the air of a sulky child.

"I suppose it would have been more sensible," he agreed, "only I don't love either Madge or Lilian. If you will only have me," he continued, a twinkle in his eye and abject humility in his voice, "I will do my best to overcome my disgraceful appetite and dine off a sentimental song if you deem it best. I will also look out for some patent shirt fasteners which will save you the trouble of sewing on buttons."

Georgie looked up quickly.

"You needn't try to be funny, Rex!" she said severely. "You know quite well I should have to become a domesticated woman if I married, and I won't. I am going to devote my life to music, and if I were to sacrifice that and marry you I should stop loving you in a fortnight and hate you in a month. There; that's all!"

Rex looked up quickly.

"You would stop loving me in a fortnight?" he asked. "Then I may infer you have begun already?"

"You may infer nothing, sir!" she retorted sharply, but her face was crimson.

"By Jove, that's the nearest I've ever got!" thought Rex. "I believe she does half like me, but must make her cave in before she'll respect me."

There was a moment's pause, then he said gently:

"I beg your pardon, Georgie. I believe you may be right, after all, though it is hard to think of giving you up." And he sighed softly, but resignedly. "If you are not too angry with me, will you tell me which you think it would be best for me to try to like, Lilian or Madge?"

"I am so glad, Rex, you are sensible at last! Really, I have thought it out carefully, and, though Lilian is awfully sweet and—and everything, I think Madge is the one best suited to you. You see, she cooks splendidly and knows exactly how everything ought to be done in a house and would be perfectly satisfied if you kissed her once a month or so and occasionally said the dinner was excellent. She really would, she is so easily pleased. While I— Well, you know what I am."

"Yes, I know what you are," he replied quietly. "You are very young."

She misunderstood him, as he had intended she should, and assented eagerly.

"Yes, I am young—only 19—and you are nearly 30. Madge is nearest you in age, and I believe you could make her love you if you tried."

"Shall I try? Do you want me to?"

"Yes, of course I want you to. It is for your own sake. She would make you a better wife than I because I don't want even to be loved. I am satisfied with my life as it is."

"All right, Georgie. In a month I shall have made up my mind, and I will tell you. Goodby."

"Goodby," she murmured, vaguely afraid of what she had done. She tried to reason out the cause of her depression, but it seemed to have no cause, and with a lagging step she made her way to the sunny den which she shared with her sisters.

Madge was sitting there alone, sewing and singing gayly. She looked up, with a smile, as Georgie entered, and an unusual merriment danced in her eyes.

"Guess who's been here?" exclaimed Madge.

"Who?"

"Rex. And he's got a box for 'The Loves of Henrietta' tomorrow, and he's asked mother and me to go."

"I'm so glad," said Georgie, but with singular want of enthusiasm.

And Madge stole a furtive look at her, and the corners of her mouth quivered.

A month had passed. Once more Georgie stood at the same window, softly humming. She was waiting for Rex, and her face was very pale. It was the same face still, but there was a difference, the difference which marks every girl's face when she becomes a woman.

She had learned her lesson and borne her punishment in silence.

Today she had nerved herself for a supreme effort that she might do no wrong to the sister who had stepped into the place she had voluntarily resigned.

She had thought love not worth the sacrifice of art, and if art without love had turned to dust and ashes in her hand who was to blame but herself?

She was waiting for Rex—Rex, who had fallen such a helpless victim to Madge that he had had scarcely a look or a word to spare for her the whole month. It was this that had first taught her what she had lost and that had afterward nerved her to play her part—for a week's experience had taught her that it was only a part—of careless indifference and entire absorption in her art.

When it seemed too hard for her, she reminded herself sternly of her own words, "I am satisfied with my life as it is."

"They shall never see I am not satisfied," she said and struggled on.

Today there was a set, stern look on her face, for this was to be the supreme ordeal, and at present there was no one to see her. But as she leaned her head listlessly against the window there came from the hall the sound of a familiar whistle, and instantly her expression changed. A smiling, expectant face greeted Rex as he entered, and she scrutinized him with playful anxiety.

"The funeral and wedding marches are side by side on the piano," she began, with an affected attempt at seriousness, "but I was waiting to choose between them till I have seen your face."

"What does my face tell you?" he asked.

She looked at him critically.

"That the momentous question is to be asked no later than this evening," she replied. "Good luck attend you."

"Wrong. Try again."

"Is it possible it is to be postponed till tomorrow morning?" And she held out her hand with a playful gesture of sympathy.

"Wrong again. I see I must tell you."

He had seized the hand she had offered and was looking her straight in the face.

"What do you say to the question having been asked already?"

The last month had wrought many changes in Georgie. She had, for one thing, learned to keep her face under control, and only the slightest trembling of the eyelid showed that she was taken by surprise.

"My dear brother to be," she said, regaining possession of her hand, "I consider I have been grossly ill treated in having this fact sprung upon me so suddenly. I had heard of a delightful little book called 'The Right Word In the Right Place'—a help to those people born devoid of tact. I was going to purchase it in the assurance that I should find a paragraph entitled, 'What to say to a future brother-in-law,' or words to that effect, and now you pounce upon me like this and crush me. I feel unfit for conversation. You had better go." And she turned majestically away.

"I will. Only you must first allow me to make one remark. You did not ask what Madge said to me." He paused impressively. "She has refused me."

It was his trump card, and he was growing desperate. He took advantage of Georgie's back being still turned toward him, and, creeping softly behind her, took one glance at her face before she knew he had moved.

It was enough.

"Georgie," he cried, "hasn't the play gone far enough? I am tired of acting, and I want you, Georgie—I can't tell you how much I want you!" There was passionate entreaty in his voice.

"What did you mean," she asked slowly, "by saying you were 'tired of acting?' I don't understand."

"No; I know," he answered guiltily. "I've got to tell you. Madge and I have been playing at being lovers during the last month. I have even asked her to marry me, and she has refused. It was the natural climax to the play, she said, and she told me to do it, because nothing else would put you off your guard. I had to know whether you loved me or not," he ended desperately.

"It was very cruel," she whispered at last.

"Ah, Georgie, don't!" he entreated. "I thought of that, but, honestly, would you ever have known you loved me if we had gone on in the same old way?"

There was a moment's silence.

"I should never have known I loved you," she answered softly.—Chicago Times-Herald.

Rest Your Eyes.

The moment you are instinctively inclined to rub the eyes that moment cease to use them; also it is time to give your eyes a rest when you become sensible of an effort to distinguish. Cold water is about the safest application for inflamed eyes. Never sleep so that on awakening the eyes shall open on the light of a window. Never read or sew directly in front of the light of a window, the better light being that that comes from above or obliquely or over the left shoulder. Too much light is an evil, just as is scant light. It creates a glare that pains and confuses the sight.

In every town and village may be had the Mica Axle Grease that makes your horses glad.

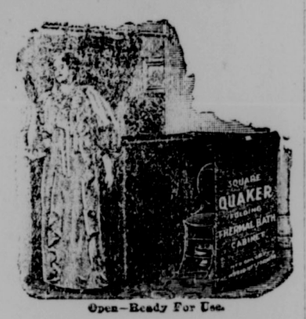
Made by Standard Oil Co.

Turnbull's

China and Japan Mattings, all weaves and colorings.
Porch and Lawn Furniture,
Iron and Brass Bedsteads,
Linoleums and Oil Cloths,
Carpetings.

JOHN TURNBULL, JR., & COMPANY,
16, 18, 20 West Baltimore Street,
BALTIMORE

The Quaker Bath Cabinet.



Open—Ready For Use.

A 16-page descriptive catalogue sent free upon request. AGENTS WANTED. Write for terms. Address all letters to

QUEEN CITY NOVELTY CO.,
General Agents. OAKLAND, MD.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St.Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.

A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

The Garrett County Bank
OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,
Office 7 North Liberty St.
CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—Opera House.
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
OAKLAND, MD.
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. fe14-1

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—lyr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 10

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice,
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

M. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 18-'99

H. W. McCOMAS M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county, Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 6 22 ly.

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md.
Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26tf

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats & descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42	A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.35	A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01	A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52	P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07	P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50	A. M
No. 2—Daily	6.52	A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41	P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12	P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35	P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37	A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.
IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3 P. M.	No. 1 A. M.	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2 NOON	No. 4 P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va., C. June.	10 51	5 50
4 30	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05	3 05
6 37	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 39	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 43	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 29
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv*7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.			A. M. A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager. G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank
OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE

SECOND NATIONAL BANK
of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital	$100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits	250,000
Liability of Shareholders	100,000
Additional Security to Depositors	$450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart,
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

The Wilkes Stallion

EMPEROR WILKES
TIME, 2.28.

Will stand at the stables of the undersigned in Oakland on the following terms:

$10 to Insure a Mare With Foal.

Money to be paid when mare is known to be with foal. Persons parting with a mare or fails to attend forfeits insurance money. A lien will be retained on the colt until insurance is paid. We will not be responsible for accidents should any occur, but the best of care to prevent such will be exerted.

This horse has a record of 2.34. On a trial he trotted a mile in 2.28. He is a full brother of WILL KERR, 2.07¼, Champion Green Harness Horse of the World, and also of VINETTE, 2.09¼.

EMPEROR WILKES is a dark bay stallion, snip on nose, black points, height 15¾ hands. He was bred by Thompson & Bro., Cynthiana, Ky. He comes from the best trotting family of horses in this country and has a bright future. He is the sire of the fastest colts in Garrett county and is without doubt the best bred stallion and the fastest trotting animal in Western Maryland.

M. MARONEY & SON.

I HAVE PURCHASED
THE OAKLAND COAL YARD
of Mr. D. L. Conneway and will continue the business. I will keep constantly on hand a large supply of
HARD AND SOFT
COAL,
KINDLING WOOD, Etc.
All orders will receive prompt attention. Leave orders with the weighmaster or at my residence, the Giessman Hotel.
35-2 GEO. GIESSMAN

Oakland Pharmacy
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.
Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars Cameras and Photo Supplies

TO CURE LAGRIPPE IN TWO DAY
Take LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE TABLETS. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. GROVE'S signature on every box. 25c.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for
ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the utmost extent of the law.

Call on or address:
C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.
Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.
Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE
REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

133¾ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale. House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187¾ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26¾ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swanger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to
JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent,
OAKLAND, MD.

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1901. NUMBER 19.

A LEADING DEMOCRAT SPEAKS. | CORKSCREW PHILOSOPHY. | GOVERNOR DID NOT VOTE. | STATE OF DELMARVIA. | LAWYERS TO MEET. | THE GAME WARDEN

A LEADING DEMOCRAT SPEAKS.

Jas. T. Doyle Finds Party Organization Unfair, Corrupt and Most Unjnst.

Jas. T. Doyle, jail warden of Baltimore, a leading Democrat and the chief lieutenant of Mayor Hayes, of Baltimore, in speaking of the Democratic machinery, says:

"In the first place it is absolutely necessary that there should be a broadening of the controlling influence whereby all factions may be represented and have a say in the party management. For thirty years the Democratic party in this city has been ruled by an oligarchy, and despite rebukes at the poles, this same dominant force insists on retaining control, to the exclusion of all elements.

"An oligarchy is abhorrent to the rank and file, and the time has arrived when Democrats will not be led by the halter and supinely bend their necks to the halter of bossism. There has been an awakening, and the old clique which has dominated party affairs must consent to listen to the demands of the people or defeat will surely follow. To secure a concert of action there must be an opportunity afforded to all the factions to have a say in the party management. This must be on a broad and liberal basis, and the will of the people permitted to express itself in the matter of nominations and the control of the machinery.

"It is high time that this sort of political 'holdup'—the meanest, lowest and most contemptible kind of robbery—be stopped.

"There is nothing in the law, as it stands, to prevent it, and under the present conditions it would be idle and a waste of time for the great mass of Democrats to enter any primaries with a view to beating the machine, for the coterie of "machine manipulators" in Baltimore, with their control of the power that creates all controlling forces in the window of the polling places, have in the past, can do so now, and will again, unless public sentiment be so thoroughly aroused as to frighten them to a halt, vote anything they please, Democrat or Republican, in order to override the will of the people and keep themselves in sole possession of the party saddle.

"There has got to be a change—an honest change. It will not do any longer to say that A or that B has retired from politics, or that he 'is'nt going to meddle in the present campaign,' or a lot of other similar rot. The people are not to be blinded by any such drivel. What they do want and what they insist upon is some honest act that will guarantee to them their share in the counsels of the party of which they are a part, and for whose reputation and conduct they are held accountable. A or B has as much right as any other Democrat to take a part in politics and in the present campaign.

"The people recognize that right as the right of all men, but what they do insist upon is that the ways that are dark and devious and the paths of chicanery and deceit and fraud be abandoned. Let the party management be made of men of all shades of Democracy; have them to be honest and straightforward, men in whom the people have confidence. Then you will have harmony, not before."

Killed by a Plucky Officer.

The town of Salisbury, six miles south of Meyersdale, was terrorized Saturday night by a gang of drunken thugs. They were drinking in the bar-room of the Hay hotel, where they picked a quarrel with P. L. Livingood. The bartender called in Policeman Joy, who, entering by a back door, drove the crowd into the street, where he attempted to arrest them. He was knocked down and severely beaten with beer glasses and brass knuckles, but managed to get hold of his revolver, and fired five shots in quick succession into the retreating crowd.

Harvey May, a leader of the gang, was shot through the heart, expiring instantly. A ball struck a beer glass in the pocket of Calvin May, a brother, and glanced. Another man deputised by Policeman Joy to assist in the arrest, had two ribs broken in the fight. Policeman Joy gave himself up to the authorities, who allowed him to remain on duty. An inquest was held over the remains of the dead man, but no verdict was given. The remains were taken to his home at Boynton, where they will be interred.

Naylor is headquarters for the McCormick Mowers, Rakes, and also has the Thomas Rakes and Tedders on hand, at the lowest prices.

CORKSCREW PHILOSOPHY.

Its a wise man that knows what not to tell to a woman.

Money is more to a woman than love when she is not in love.

Men who make money wisely often make love foolishly.

When a woman runs herself down she wants you to wind her up.

When a woman is bent on having her own way she is generally straight about it.

The last word never satisfies some women, they want a chance to say more.

Cynics says when you ask a woman to be your wife you should give her ample time to say no.

Justice is represented as a blind goddess. Is it because women are blind to all justice?

The hand that rocks the cradle is in the same class with the hand that wields the hoe—without them all life fails.

Never explain matters to a jealous woman; it is worse than trying to put out fire with oil.

When a woman is all the world to you, be sure that you are well up in feminine geography.

A mean man is abominable, but a mean woman is pitiful, the one saddens the heart—the other merely loses our regard.

Love may have been blind in the days of old Adam,
When every young woman was willing to be madam;
But the new century woman, so far in advance,
Keeps her weather eye open and spots the best chance.

JACKSON.

Deer Park Improvement Society Fair.

The exact date in August upon which this fair will be held will be determined later and published in the Oakland papers and placarded in public places.

The articles for which prizes are offered will be arranged for convenience in classes. Those exhibiting in class I will pay 50 cents exhibition fee; in classes II and III will pay 25 cents exhibition fee; in class IV will pay 15 cents exhibition fee. Each exhibitor is entitled to an exhibition ticket, which will admit him to the fair without further payment.

CLASS I.

Best farm teams (horses and wagons.)
Best lamb (yearling.)
Best pair chickens (cock and 2 hens.)
Basket vegetables (greatest variety and best in quality.)
Basket flowers (greatest variety and best in quality.)
(Baskets furnished by Association.)
Best and prettiest rag carpet.

CLASS II.

Best piece embroidery.
Best piece drawn work.
Best piece knitting or crocheting.
Best piece of boy's work.

CLASS III.

Best butter (in taste and appearance.)
Bread, rolls or biscuits. Cake.
Richest sweet cream.
Strawberry preserves.

CLASS IV.

Best potatoes.
Best parsley.
Best dressed chickens, dry picked, ready for cooking.
Best and prettiest baby socks.
Best cauliflower.
Best egg plant.
Best hand-sewed apron.

Any person desiring to compete for one or more of the prizes may obtain any further details they desire from any member of the Information Committee, and they must also send their names and a clear statement of what they desire to exhibit to Mrs. Lorenzo Thrasher by July 20, 1901.

There must be as many as five competitors for each prize, otherwise it will be withdrawn.

Exhibitors need not sell their exhibits unless they so desire, but if sold at the Fair one-half the money is to go to the Society and one-half to the owner, except such articles as sell for less than two dollars each. Articles worth less than two dollars, if offered for sale at all, must be sold for the benefit of the Society.

There will be refreshments for sale and all sorts of useful, practical ornaments and fancy articles.

Competition for the prizes is open to all who live within a radius of ten miles of Deer Park (whether they belong to the Improvement Society or not), subject to the payment of the exhibition fee.

The Information Committee—Chairman Mrs. Lorenzo Thrasher, Mrs. S. A. Laughlin, Mrs. Shreves, Miss Sadie Thrasher.

Members of the Deer Park Village Improvement Society will be admitted at half rates; also their exhibition fees will be one-half.

GOVERNOR DID NOT VOTE.

Annapolis Democrats Do Not Like Way He Acted at Election.

From Annapolis there comes a loud wail about the failure of Governor Smith to vote in the municipal election held there on Monday.

The Governor, as is well known, is registered at Annapolis, and each election day there is a little story printed in the newspapers about the Governor walking up to the rails and dropping his ballot in the box. It seems the Governor did not take the walk this time, and on this, and the action of what is known as "the State crowd," the defeated Democrats lay particular stress.

Dr. Wells, who is opposed to the State crowd in Anne Arundel politics, got such a start in the fight for the control of the Annapolis primaries that his right to name the candidates was not contested at all. Mr. Robert M. Moss, who is the head of the anti-Wells faction in Annapolis, practically gave up the fight, and Dr. Wells was allowed to go his own way. The Democratic ticket had Col. Luther H. Gadd as the candidate for Mayor and Mr. James W. Owens as the candidate for City Counselor. The Wells people now say that Moss and the State crowd "laid down." They assert that if Moss had had control of the candidates, Governor Smith and the others in the State crowd would have been hard at work for him, but as it was, only one man connected with the State government was at work for the ticket, and this was John Sullivan, the janitor of the House of Delegates, who is a Wells man anyhow.

The result was that, notwithstanding the operation of the new election law, which was supposed to disfranchise a large number of Republicans, the Republican ticket won the city for the first time in a municipal election since 1883. Governor Smith went to Buffalo on Monday night, but the Annapolitans think that he should have gone down there to vote before he went, and that his presence would have galvanized a sufficient number of lukewarm Democrats into action to have turned the tide the other way.

BLOOMINGTON.

Piedmont Independent.

Mr. Jacob Stump of this place, was nominated for County Commissioner by the Republican convention, at Oakland, last Wednesday. This is a place on the ticket that the people of this end of the county have sought for a long time and it is predicted that Mr. Stump will receive a large vote from both parties.

Mr. and Mrs. Dawson, of Goblers Nob, were guests of relatives on last Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. A. Davis, of Blaine, were visitors in town the first of the week.

Miss Lucy O'Neil spent the fourth in Lonaconing and was accompanied home on Monday by her sister and brother-in-law.

Miss Clementine Roe, of Pruntytown, W. Va., is visiting relatives, Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Mullen.

A lawn festival under the direction of the M. E. Mite Society will be held "on the green" next Saturday evening one week.

Mr. Otto Warnick, of Chestnut Grove, was in town on business Thursday.

Mr. Gilbert Warnick, who was operated on a few weeks ago for appendicitis is rapidly improving.

'Squire Moody was in Piedmont on business Thursday.

The junior base ball club, of this place, under the management of Mr. Russel Pattison, secured a victory from the Piedmont second nine, last Wednesday afternoon.

Accident Near Rowlesburg.

Quite a series of accidents occurred near Rowlesburg, along the line of the Baltimore and Ohio railroad Saturday morning. A train hauled by engine 1870 had two or three cars off the track caused by a broken rail. Another train behind was flagged and stopped. While the second train was waiting for the wreck to be cleared, a third train ran into the rear end of the second train, smashing the caboose and throwing two other cars off the track. No one was injured.

Estray Notice.

Strayed, early the present spring, five ewes, four being yearlings and one older. The sheep each had the top of one ear off and also an undercrop. Information leading to their recovery will be rewarded by the undersigned.

I offer for sale my farm of 146 acres near the Bowers place. The improvements consist of 35 acres cleared, good house, barn and two orchards. Well watered. L. W. Clark, Oakland, Md.

STATE OF DELMARVIA.

Proposition to Unite Delaware and the Eastern Shore of Maryland and Virginia.

Delmarvia is the old name that some persons would bestow upon a hypothetical state of the American Union. A proposal to create such a state, says the New York Sun, by the union of Delaware with the Eastern Shore counties of Maryland and Virginia has been often discussed, usually with considerable interest and decided approval by the people of Delaware, occasionally with qualified approval by the people of Maryland most directly interested, never with either interest or approval by the Eastern Shoremen of Virginia and usually with unqualified disapproval by Virginia and Maryland.

The Calverts claimed under their original grant of nearly two and three-quarter centuries ago not only the Eastern Shore of Maryland, but also the whole of what is now Delaware. They failed, however, after long litigation with the Penns, to make good their title to Delaware, and the order of the English court for a partition of the Peninsula between the litigants brought about the running of the most famous boundary in American history, Mason and Dixon's line.

Whenever the Eastern Shore counties of Maryland have felt themselves aggrieved with their relations with their neighbors of the Western Shore some Eastern Shoremen have talked of the advantages of union with Delaware. Such was the condition of feeling on the Eastern Shore about seventy years ago that the Delaware Legislature sent to Maryland Legislature a proposal looking on a union of the Eastern counties with Delaware, and a resolution for a reference of the question to the people of the Eastern Shore was carried through the lower house of Maryland and narrowly defeated in the Senate.

The subject was again much discussion especially in Delaware, rather more than twenty years ago and there has never been a time since when the question was not one of lively, if only academic interest to Delaware. The Eastern Shore became somewhat interested in the matter again when at the election of Wellington to the Senate the historic right of that region to one of the senators was ignored, but the discussion at that time took on no great importance.

Were the suggested union of Delaware with the rest of the Peninsula brought about the resultant state would have an area of about 5,000 square miles, considerable more than that of Delaware, and a population of nearly 430,000. The State of Maryland would lose in population nearly 200,000 and the State of Virginia about 47,000, while Delaware would considerably more than double her population.

Rural Delaware and the Peninsula counties of Maryland and Virginia have a common English origin and a population almost exclusively native and of native ancestry. But Wilmington, which will soon include half the population of Delaware, has a large foreign element. Eastern Shore traditions, also, are more distinctly Southern and aristocratic than those of Delaware, and the strong Quaker element in northern Delaware has no counterpart on the Eastern Shore.

Delaware has always been favorable to the proposed change because she has everything to gain by it, and the attempted purchase of a seat in the United States Senate by a wholesale bribery at the polls and bribery on a smaller scale in the legislature has recently called the attention of the people of Delaware to the dangers that may beset a very small state.

Such a piecing together of fragments to form a state has not been known in recent American history, though such things happened in Colonial days, and a familiar provision of the Constitution seems to contemplate the possibility of future cases. Transfers of small areas from one state to another have been frequent in the settlement of boundary disputes, and within a few years Pennsylvania formally recognized as Delaware territory a few square miles which had been in dispute for more than a century.

Census Nearly Ready.

Everything is being put in readiness for the closing of the state census bureau in Baltimore. The work of the office has been accomplished, and possibly by to-day or to-morrow at the latest the result will be sent to Annapolis for examination by the Governor, and the official announcement of the result will follow.

LAWYERS TO MEET.

State Bar Association's Program for Deer Park.

The program for the sixth annual meeting of the Maryland State Bar Association, at the Deer Park Hotel, Deer Park, Md., on Wednesday, July 31, and Thursday, August 1, has been issued by Judge Conway W. Sams, secretary of the association. Morning, afternoon and night sessions will be held on the first day and morning and afternoon sessions and a banquet at night on the second day.

At the morning session, commencing at 10 o'clock, on July 1 the meeting will be opened with an address by President Stevenson A. Williams, of Belair, Harford county. This will be followed by reports of the standing committees, comprising the committee on election and admission of new members, John S. Wirt, Elkton, chairman; committee on legal biography, John P. Briscoe, Prince Frederick, chairman; committee on judicial administration and legal reform, John C. Rose, Baltimore, chairman; committee on grievances, Alexander Armstrong, Hagerstown, chairman, and committee on legal education, Benjamin A. Richmond, Cumberland, chairman.

The committee on judicial administration and legal reform will report on the bribery resolution offered at the meeting last year, and will also report a code of legal ethics for the bar of Maryland.

Alfred S. Niles, of Baltimore, will read a paper on "Where the Law Fails" at the afternoon session on July 31. Reports of special committees and of the secretary and treasurer will be made at this session and a committee on nominations will be appointed.

At the night session on July 31, commencing at 8 o'clock, a paper on "Legislation, Its Errors and Needed Reforms," will be read by James W. Owens, of Annapolis. The reports of the committees will be discussed and unfinished business will be transacted.

The annual address will be delivered at the morning session on August 1, the second and last day of the meeting. The address will be made by Henry C. Niles, of the York county (Pa.) Bar, upon invitation of the Executive committee. His subject will be "Priests of the Temple." Unfinished business will also be transacted at this meeting.

At the afternoon session on August 1 Alexander Armstrong, of the Washington County Bar, will read a paper on "The Propriety of Establishing a Permanent Law Reform Association for the State of Maryland." After the address officers for the ensuing year will be elected and delegates appointed to the American Bar Association.

The banquet which will wind up the meeting, will be held at the hotel, on the night of August 1. Ferdinand Williams, of Cumberland, will be toastmaster. Speakers will be selected from those at the banquet.

The association has obtained half rates over the Baltimore and Ohio railroad and a large attendance is expected at the meeting.

Died.

SHARTZER.—On Thursday morning last at his home near Accident, John Jacob Shartzer, aged 88 years, was found dead in his bed, having retired the night previous in his usual health. It is thought that heart disease was the cause of his death. He was the father of Messrs. John, Andrew and George Shartzer of Oakland. His funeral took place on Friday afternoon from the German Lutheran church at Accident, of which he was a member.

BROWNING.—On Friday morning at the residence of Mrs. Charles Jamison in Oakland, after an illness of 12 hours of congestion of the brain, Anastacia, aged 14 years, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John S. Browning, of near Gortner. The sufferings of the young girl from the time she was taken ill on Thursday evening until her death were intense, although everything was done to relieve her. Funeral took place on Saturday, the interment being made in the Catholic cemetery in Oakland.

Cure For Cholera Infantum—Never Known to Fail.

During last May an infant child of our neighbor was suffering from cholera infantum. The doctors had given up all hopes of recovery. I took a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy to the house, telling them I felt sure it would do good if used according to directions. In two days time the child had fully recovered. The child is now vigorous and healthy. I have recommended this remedy frequently and have never known it to fail.—Mrs. Curtis Baker, Bookwalter, Ohio. For sale by all dealers, Oakland; and J. W. Laughlin, Deer Park.

THE GAME WARDEN

Sounds a Note of Warning to Non-Residents.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Your county at this season of the year has within its confine so many visitors and non-residents, who are doubtless ignorant of your game and fish laws, that I think you will be doing them a service by publishing the following extracts as I have instructed all my deputies to enforce the same:

Chapter 189, Acts of 1900, compels non-residents to obtain a license to hunt, costing $25, from the clerk of your court. The license is not transferable and cannot be issued to corporations but individual members may obtain it.

Under this act it is unlawful to kill, have in possession, etc., any woodcock, partridge or quail, pheasant or wild turkey except during the month of November. The penalty one to ten dollars. Rabbits may be shot only from November 1st to December 1st, wild ducks, wild swan, wild goose and wild brant from November 1st to April 10th.

It is unlawful to kill or hunt deer until after the year 1905.

Chapter 504, Acts 1900—And it is unlawful at any time to chase deer with dogs unless first wounded during the open season. Penalty $50 to $100.

P. L. L., Art. 12, Sec's 65, 66, 67—Unlawful to trap or ensnare any of the above at any time.

Chapter 371, Acts 1900, P. L. L., makes it unlawful to trap, catch, kill or otherwise take any mink, raccoon or muskrat in the state or to have same in possession, if taken within the state, between April 1st and January 1st. Penalty $5 to $20 or ten to thirty days in jail for each animal.

This law applies to your county and must be enforced.

TROUT FISHING.

The Legislature of 1900, Chap. 544, made it unlawful to float saw dust in the Casselman river or any of its tributaries. Penalty $200 or one year in jail for each offense. And while this specific act applies to the above river only, it is clearly unlawful under the state law to float saw dust or to permit it to get into any running stream in your county, and my deputies are instructed to enforce the law against all offenders, or in cases of special importance to inform the judge of the Circuit Court, who will see that the proper witnesses are summoned before the grand jury. The Legislature of 1900 made no other changes in your fish law.

Trout may be taken only on week day during April, May, June and July by angling with hook and line only. It is unlawful at any other time to take fish in your county by any other means than hook or line, except minnows for bait, from streams where trout are not known to exist, and there only and for the purpose of bait only, with nets not over three feet long and without other attachments. Penalty $10 to $100. P. L., Art. 12, Sec. 107—For destroying or attempting to destroy any fish by any explosive the penalty is $25 to $100.

Non-residents of the state must have written permission from the owner of the land from which they fish or hunt to do so. Penalty $10 to $50.

As fishing for trout closes in two weeks I trust you will at once publish the foregoing with such editorial comments as its importance warrants. Your laws seem ample for the protection of game and fish and I trust you will urge upon your people a hearty co-operation for their enforcement with the officers of the county and state.

His Honor, chief judge of this circuit, has advised me of the propriety of furnishing to the grand juries the names of proper witnesses to all important violations of the fish and game laws and has promised the full support of the courts.

Yours very truly,
JOHN W. AVIRETT,
State Game Warden.

No. 8 Wrecked.

Chicago express No. 8, due at Oakland at 5.50 a. m., ran into a mass of rock and earth at Buckhorn wall, west of Oakland yesterday morning and was wrecked, the engine being thrown into such a position as to block both tracks. At the point where the wreck took place there is an almost perpendicular decent to the Cheat River for two hundred or three hundred feet. Had the engine jumped over the side of the mountain the death list would have been appalling. Aside from a severe shaking up and a bad fright the train crew and passengers were uninjured. As a result of the wreck all traffic was tied up for six hours or more.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

TRUE-HEARTED NAN

By Elizabeth Cherry Waltz.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

IT MAY not be much of a story for those who like to read about people that are rich and raised above common life and its necessities. All the comedy and tragedy of life are not in the wake of money, however, so Nan had a story as well as bright brown hair and red cheeks.

Born on a northern Kentucky farm, with perhaps two full years' schooling in her life, married at fourteen to escape a grudging stepmother, widowed at fifteen with a babe of a few months, it may be seen that Nan at five and twenty, was well aware that there were such things in the world as poverty, suffering, struggle, good and evil, importunate lovers and faithless friends.

Something awoke in her then. It was probably because of the chance word of her mistress' visitor, a broad, brown man, who was smoking on the wide porch of the summer house. She heard him as she went driving a flock of young turkeys across the grass plot. She heard him clearly:

"I wonder if that woman knows she is handsome in her way."

"Who, Nan?" replied the hostess, turning languidly over in the hammock, "really I never thought about it. What good does it do her?"

Then the white-haired mother of seventy sitting by added gently:

"But Nannie is good—which is better. There is not a soul about here but likes her because she is so unselfish."

"Handsome and unselfish," mused the man, "a rare combination, I am sure."

He noticed the woman again the next day as he rode about the place, saw her coming in from the great vegetable gardens with a negro man following her. She came fearlessly up the tree-bordered avenue, her sunbonnet in her hand, her russet hair blowing, her eyes shining. Behind her, old Billy carried a basket on his head full of green lettuce and bright red tomatoes. It was a picture that caught Hector Pryn's artistic fancy.

"Equal to the French peasantry," he declared to his aunt; "a bit of American life that ought to go on canvas; I wonder if she would let me use her as a model."

"She never saw a picture outside of this house," declared his sister-in-law, "and it might make her angry. I do not want to lose my cook on account of your need for a model;" but she laughed idly when she said it.

The white-haired mother came to her rescue.

"I remember when the old Philadelphia artists used to visit at our

BEHIND HER CAME OLD BILLY, WITH A BASKET ON HIS HEAD.

Virginia place," she said, with a faint glow in her cheeks, "and used to make beautiful sketches to carry back with them. If you want to paint the avenue and Nannie, I will try to explain to her."

When the matter was explained to the woman she grew red and became confused.

It took considerable eloquence to explain why she must wear her everyday gown instead of her Sunday one. The latter was an abomination.

"This here dress is so faded," said Nannie, "it's washed out."

"Mr. Pryn likes it faded," explained Miss Lily.

So the picture was made in the faded blue jeans, the throat button open, the sunbonnet in her hand. At first Nannie was awkward. Over and again the artist explained that she must be natural. It seemed a failure until a clear boy's voice sounded from behind the little group of critics:

"Don' git fussy, mom — come straight erway."

The hearty laugh that followed restored Nan's equilibrium. She came "straight away" with a color and a dimpling of smiles that made her charming. She was the very soul of the scene and the summer, the goddess of the garden and the riotous growth of southern vine and bush and wealth of bloom and fruit.

Sometimes it was very hot in the afternoons. Then the bronze hair curled into moist rings on her forehead and her eyes became large and languorous. It was too warm for the ladies — even old Billy went to sleep. But Hector Pryn felt to his inmost being that he was painting the picture he had always hoped to paint, something that was human, truly typical of a phase of life, vivid and beautiful. It is needless to say that Nannie was delighted with the picture. It seemed to her that she had awakened from a dream. She saw herself as she was, she felt raised above groveling, actual existence. She forgot her hard life, her rough, red hands, her responsibility. Hector Pryn liked to talk to her, to hear her crude opinions, her naive comments. Then he made some extraordinary discoveries. Despite her hard work and wages, despite her constant endeavor, Nan was a perpetual pauper. Miss Lily had to watch her to keep her from going ragged. As for the boy, Louis, he was a curly-haired scarecrow who was strictly forbidden the front yard because of his dilapidated appearance.

"But her money," gasped Hector, "what does she do with it?"

"She has a horde of relatives," replied Miss Lily, calmly, "and some of them are always in want or sick and dying. You have never heard the name she goes by, have you? I forgot to tell you, we're so used to it. She's known far and near as "'True-Hearted Nan.'"

"I'm going to buy you a new gown and some ribbons and a hat for the county fair, Nannie," said the artist, as he was working industriously the next afternoon. "Miss Lily shall choose them and is going to fix up Louis so he will not be a disgrace to Bonneair. And you must not give those clothes away."

"Law now, Mr. Hector!" smiled Nannie.

"I want to see you in a neat gown like other women," went on Hector; "I believe you would astonish us. Why do you give everything to others?"

And Nannie's color deepened a great deal as she returned the true answer:

"Law now, Mr. Hector, I just can't help it when folkses air so baid off."

The household at Bonneair entered with zest into Mr. Pryn's plan of fixing Nannie up for the county fair. Miss Lily and her daughter made the purchases and impressed their maids into the making of a simple lawn gown, and the trimming of a straw hat. But not one of them were prepared for the entire transmutation the simple costume effected. It was, as the young Mr. Pryn said, "almost appalling." It changed a healthy and attractive country woman into a positive beauty. Even Hector Pryn shuddered at her possibilities. But it did not at all change her manner. The picturesque boy sitting beside the driver of the servant's wagon kept the helm that would ever steer that beauty "straight away."

But again and again as the artist looked that day over the motley throng gathered in the fair grounds, he saw the truth. That servant at Bonneair was beautiful, calmly, alluringly beautiful. Transplanted elsewhere she would learn the old lesson of what woman's fascination could do in the world.

One morning the doctor from the county town was summoned to Bonneair. And when he had been fifteen minutes in the room, he locked the door and bade the black people outside to ride for another doctor as fast as horse could go. When Miss Lily demanded entrance and explanation he told her to stay in her room and keep Mrs. Pryn away. When she insisted he slipped under the door a card that had been dipped in carbolic acid.

"Mr. Pryn has the smallpox!"

Miss Lily and Mrs. Pryn fled bag and baggage by the next train.

All day the doctors gave their messages through crevices in the door and were without food or aid. A huddled group of black folk stood in the rear house lot. But in the late afternoon a firm step came along the hallway and a woman's voice called:

"Open the door, doctor. It's Nan—Nannie Watts. I come to help. I have had the smallpox."

The doctor opened the door in her fair, calm face.

"I believe you're lying," he said.

"Yo' can't prove hit. I had hit when I warn't knee high to er grasshopper. I'm comin' in, anyway."

And that is why Hector Pryn owed his life to her nursing, her untiring, loving care. And it was not until he was almost convalescent that she broke down and her place was taken by a colored man from Lexington. The doctor evaded his questions. Nannie was tired out, needed rest, etc. But the sick man knew, and it kept him anxious and weak. One day the doctor told him she was out of danger and Hector Pryn's eyes were dim.

"How can I ever repay her?" he murmured. "'True-Hearted Nan,' indeed."

The old doctor shook his head.

"She only waited that day to carry that urchin out of danger and then tramped back—but—I think you ought to know—she will never be the same, in looks, again. It goes hard with a woman."

At Bonneair, a year later, Miss Lily and her daughter discussed the matter calmly.

"It is hard to believe how pretty she was—but maybe it is best. And she is satisfied to have the boy go with Hector and be educated. Will you ever forget how she looked the day of the county fair? As far as we are concerned, she shall never need a home—but, after all, it was only her way, and that's the whole truth."

FISH LINES.

A fish sat him down with a blink to think,
And dipped his fin thoughtfully into the ink;
Then finned this short note.
"Dear Tommy," he wrote,
"In response to your line of the other day
I hasten to thank you without delay.
But, had not that squirming, delicious young worm
Shown a set in his curves too suspiciously firm,
I might not be here
To write you, my dear
(What you may not believe, 'tis so monstrously queer),
That the wriggler you sent
With most kindly intent
Had swallowed a pin that was frightfully bent!

"You see—if I'd greedily taken a bite,
The pain and the shock would have finished me quite;
So, the next time you send,
My juvenile friend,
Just mark if the worm has a natural bend
Ere you dangle him temptingly down here to be
The death of some innocent young thing like me."

And he grinned as he used some dry sand for a blotter
(Ink dries rather slowly, you know, under water),
Then signed it in haste
And sealed it with paste.

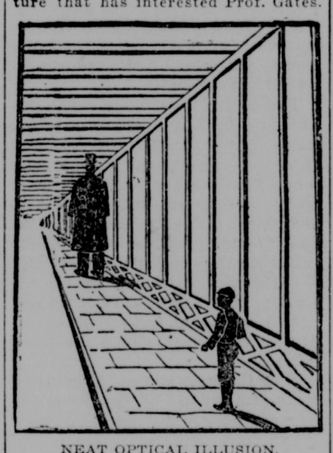
It was growing quite dark and he'd no time to waste,
So he posted it slyly, without wasting more,
On the crest of a ripple that ran toward the shore;
Then, shaking his scales in a satisfied glow,
All shining and shimmering, sank down below,
Where he soon fell asleep
In an oyster-bed deep,
With the green sheets of water his slumber to keep.
—Jessica H. Lowell, in St. Nicholas.

DECEIVES THE EYE.

New Optical Illusion Found by Prof. Gates, a Washington Scientist of National Repute.

Prof. Gates, of the laboratory of psychology at Washington, has been experimenting with optical illusions and he has found some new designs that completely deceive the human eye.

Here, for instance, is a strange picture that has interested Prof. Gates.



NEAT OPTICAL ILLUSION.

At first glance you would not doubt that the man with the top hat and the cape coat was much taller than the small boy in cap and knickerbockers. Yet an actual measurement of the two figures with a pair of compasses or by marking on a piece of paper will show you that they are precisely of the same height. Try it.

NAMES OF PRESIDENTS.

Most of Them Are Derived from Christian Names, a Few Others from Occupations.

The origin of names is ever an interesting field of study and exploration. One newspaper writer has been looking into the patronymics of our presidents, with this result:

Washington is an English territorial name, being, with the exception of Lincoln and Garfield, the only one of its kind on the list. Adams, Jefferson, Madison, Jackson, Johnson, Harrison, are all true derivations from Christian names, meaning, respectively, the son of Adam, of Geoffrey, of Matthew, of John, and of Harry, which last is not a nickname in English, but the true form of the word, Henry being later and a purely slavish following of the French spelling of the word. Polk is an abbreviation of Pollock or Pollok, itself from Paul, and the "l" in it used to be sounded, though it is now dropped for the sake of euphony. Pierce follows the same analogy, coming from Peter, the French Pierre—"Piers Ploughman."

Tyler, Taylor and Cleveland are from occupations. Hayes is from an old English word, "hay" meaning simply a hedge, and denoting in the first instance one who dwelt near a notable feature of that kind in the rural landscape. Fillmore seems to be a nickname fastened to a bibulous ancestor. Buchanan is Scotch and the first syllable is to be sounded with a short, not a long u." McKinley is also Celtic. Van Buren is Dutch. Lincoln derives the latter syllable of the name from the Latin "colonia," indicating that in ancient times the Romans held a colony in that particular locality, while the field in Garfield's name has the significance in Danish of a camp or fort, the "gar" meaning a weapon, as in the Christian name Edgar, and the whole standing for a battle-ground. Grant is simply the old Norman-French grand, and means great, properly enough.

COUNTING-OUT RHYMES.

Some of Those Now in Use Present Curious Mixture of English and Otherwise Strange Words.

There has been much conjecture as to the origin of children's "counting-out" rhymes. Many persons believe them to be corruptions of what was once good English, that has become twisted through much repetition by children who repeat what they hear, literally. This would seem the best solution of the matter, though there are theorists who believe that this doggerel had its start in the folk song of a foreign people, who brought them to this country, where they became somewhat Americanized by phonetic repetition.

"ENI, MENI, MINI, MO!"

Some of these rhymes present a curious mixture of English and otherwise unheard-of words. The following are excellent examples of the latter class:

Onery, oery, ickery, ann,
Fillison, follison, Nicholas, John,
Qeevy, Quavy, English navy,
Stinklum, Stanklum, Buck.

Illery, Nillery, Mexican navy.
Hirabo, Crackaho, tenor o' lavy,
Whisky drinker, American time,
Humbledy, bumbledy, ninety-nine.

Others contain no English words at all, as:

Eni, meni, mini, mo,
Crack a feni, fini, fo,
Ommanuga, poppatuga,
Rick, hick, hando.

A curious hodge-podge, evidently of Scotch origin from its allusion to "Gowan Gorse," is as follows:

Out in the manor of Gowan Gorse
Up jumped the winding horse,
He can trip and he can trot,
And he can play in the mustard pot.
Aye oh, who's below?
Mammy, daddy, dirty Joe.

A winding horse is a new manner of animal, but his accomplishments seem to be many. Many other rhymes have no foreign words at all, but are wholly English. Perhaps they are not sufficiently hackneyed or of great enough antiquity to be corrupted, or is it possible that American children are becoming a more distinctly speaking class? Examples of these are:

One, two, three, four,
Mary at the cupboard door,
Eating pie off a plate,
Five, six, seven, eight.

And again:

One, two, three, four, five, six, seven,
All good children go to Heaven.

THE ROAD TO SUCCESS.

Always Begin a Task with the Determination That You Can Carry It Through.

The man or boy who begins an undertaking by saying: "I know I shall fail," generally does fail, while the one who says: "I know I shall succeed," generally does succeed. A very successful business man once said: "I always had perfect confidence in myself, and always made sure that I should succeed before I began anything," which was not saying that he paid no attention to the possibility of failure. This was considered and disposed of before the venture was made.

I remember that a woman once came into a business office in which I was employed. She had with her a tall, strong-looking boy of about 14, who had come to apply for the position of office boy.

The manager of the office, a keen, live business man, explained the duties of the situation to the boy, and asked:

"Do you think you could do the work?"

"I—I don't know," was the hesitating reply. "I'm afraid that maybe I couldn't."

"You might try, James," said his mother, who seemed anxious that he should secure the place.

"Yes," he replied, in a hesitating tone, "I s'pose I might, but I'm afraid I can't do all those things."

"Then it is not of the least use for you to try," replied the business manager, a little sharply.

And the boy went away with his mother chiding him for his lack of self-confidence.

Ten minutes later another boy of 14 came in by himself, walked up to the counter, took off his cap and asked to see the manager. He, too, was an applicant for the place.

The business manager carefully explained the duties of the situation, and the boy listened very attentively, while seeming to weigh the matter well in his mind.

When asked if he thought he could do the work, he promptly replied:

"Oh, yes; I know I can."

"And you don't feel afraid that you won't succeed?"

"Not a bit afraid. I can do it."

"I think you can, too," replied the manager, encouragingly. "I think you'll succeed."

And he did. He is in the same office still, but is no longer an office boy. He is the head bookkeeper, with a large salary, and a fair prospect of becoming a partner in the house some day.—Golden Days.

A Medical Testimonial.

Sirs: We fed our baby on modified cow's milk the first six months, but the milkman did not understand how to modify his cows properly, and in consequence the child lost flesh till he weighed but one pound.

I now procured some of your celebrated Infant's Food. This the baby managed to trade off to the dog for some dog biscuit, which he ate, and is now well and hearty.

The dog died, but dogs are cheap.

We are grateful to you, indeed. You may use my name if you like, John Jones.—Detroit Journal.

Too Suggestive.

"You look discouraged," remarked the visitor.

"And I feel it!" sighed the manager of the great Pacific Slope Prune company. "After all the time and money I have expended proving to the public that the prune is no longer a fake, that miserable old editor has to step in and wreck my assertions."

"I hope he didn't run your ad. in the humorous column?"

"Worse than that! He ran it under the boarding house notices."—Chicago Daily News.

A Matter of Expense.

"Doctor, what is the matter with me?"

"You need about three months' rest from business—that is all."

"Three months' rest? That will cost me $5,000. The other doctor said I needed an operation for appendicitis. That would cost only $100. I think I'll let him operate."—Chicago Tribune.

Baiting Him.

Rodrick—It seems incredible that the wise Bostonian should have been duped by the grafter's game of three shells and a pea.

Van Albert—It is easily explained. The pea was discarded and a bean substituted.—Chicago Daily News.

Laundering Thin Dresses.

To launder the exquisite creations of muslins and lace in which this season abounds has become quite a problem, yet the most delicate materials will not be injured if washed with Ivory Soap and then dried in the shade. But little starch need be used.
ELIZA R. PARKER.

It is better to go to bed hungry sometimes than to get up every morning hopelessly involved in debt.—Christian Intelligencer.

Too Suggestive.

"You look discouraged," remarked the visitor.

"And I feel it!" sighed the manager of the great Pacific Slope Prune company. "After all the time and money I have expended proving to the public that the prune is no longer a fake, that miserable old editor has to step in and wreck my assertions."

"I hope he didn't run your ad. in the humorous column?"

"Worse than that! He ran it under the boarding house notices."—Chicago Daily News.

A Medical Testimonial.

Sirs: We fed our baby on modified cow's milk the first six months, but the milkman did not understand how to modify his cows properly, and in consequence the child lost flesh till he weighed but one pound.

I now procured some of your celebrated Infant's Food. This the baby managed to trade off to the dog for some dog biscuit, which he ate, and is now well and hearty.

The dog died, but dogs are cheap.

We are grateful to you, indeed. You may use my name if you like, John Jones.—Detroit Journal.

Insulting.

Dashleigh—That was an insulting thing Miss Swab asked me at the reception last night.

Freshleigh—What was it?

"Wanted to know if I was a college graduate; the idea!"—Ohio State Journal.

Pleasures of Amateur Gardening.

"William, I wish you would go and weed out the flower bed."

William went out and inspected it.

Then he returned.

"It would be a simpler job, Marie," he said, "to flower out the weed bed."—Chicago Tribune.

A Doubtful Compliment.

Miss Mudd—Mr. Freshleigh paid me a very pretty compliment about my hair.

Miss Wise—Indeed!

"Yes; he asked me if it was mine."—Ohio State Journal.

Doctors Mistaken.

It is seldom that a number of doctors agree in a wrong diagnosis, but they evidently did in one case as instanced in the following letter, from Anson, Baker & Co., in New York City: "Your Lotion has cured an acquaintance of Eczema on both legs and feet, after having been pronounced incurable by physicians in and out of Hospitals." Palmer's Lotion has effected many cures that physicians could not and it is the one remedy that should be kept in every home. If your druggist hasn't it send to Solon Palmer, 374 Pearl St., N. Y., for samples of Palmer's Lotion and Lotion Soap.

A Doubtful Compliment.

Miss Mudd—Mr. Freshleigh paid me a very pretty compliment about my hair.

Miss Wise—Indeed!

"Yes; he asked me if it was mine."—Ohio State Journal.

Do Your Feet Ache and Burn?

Shake into your shoes, Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It makes tight or New Shoes Feel Easy, Cures Corns, Itching, Swollen, Hot, Callous, Smarting, Sore and Sweating Feet. All Druggists and Shoe Stores sell it, 25c. Sample sent FREE. Address, Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y.

Hardships of City Life.

"Pa, what's a metropolis?"

"A metropolis, Jimmy, is a place in which it costs you about 25 cents street car fare to get out where you can pick clover."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Best for the Bowels.

No matter what ails you, headache to a cancer, you will never get well until your bowels are put right. Cascarets help nature, cure you without a gripe or pain, produce easy natural movements, cost you just 10 cents to start getting your health back. Cascarets Candy Cathartic, the genuine, put up in metal boxes, every tablet has C. C. C. stamped on it. Beware of imitations.

Pleasures of Amateur Gardening.

"William, I wish you would go and weed out the flower bed."

William went out and inspected it.

Then he returned.

"It would be a simpler job, Marie," he said, "to flower out the weed bed."—Chicago Tribune.

Bronchitis Can Be Cured

With Hoxsie's Croup Cure, speedily. 50 cts.

Insulting.

Dashleigh—That was an insulting thing Miss Swab asked me at the reception last night.

Freshleigh—What was it?

"Wanted to know if I was a college graduate; the idea!"—Ohio State Journal.

I do not believe Piso's Cure for Consumption has an equal for coughs and colds.—John F. Boyer, Trinity Springs, Ind., Feb. 15, 1900.

His View of It.

McJigger—I thought your wife was economical.

Thingumbob—Such ignorance! My dear man, no woman is ever economical. She is either extravagant or stingy.—Philadelphia Press.

Old Soldiers!

Now is your opportunity! The right to enter 2,000,000 acres of choice lands in Oklahoma is to be determined by a government drawing. Ex-Union soldiers may register and file by agent. Send $2 and I will prepare your papers and register your names. If claim is secured, an additional fee equal to 5 per cent. of the value of the claim will be charged for selecting the land and filing the Declaratory. Refer to any banker or public official in Oklahoma. Address DICK T. MORGAN, Perry, O. T.

ECONOMY CREAM SEPARATOR

Pays for itself in a few days. Separates in 40 minutes automatically and gets all the cream. Only costs a trifle and lasts forever. AGENTS WANTED. Big pay—every farmer buys. Where we have no agent we will send a Separator at agents' prices, to introduce it. Write for catalogue, prices, etc., to ECONOMY SUPPLY CO., 554 Main St., Kansas City, Mo.

PILES ANAKESIS gives instant relief and POSITIVELY CURES PILES. For free sample address "ANAKESIS," Tribune Building, New York.

EDUCATIONAL.

IMA COLLEGE. Eight Departments. Fine location and building. Strong faculty. Expenses low. Catalogs free. Rev. Carl Lehmann, Ph. D., Dean, Ilma, Ohio.

Get Rid of your Headache!

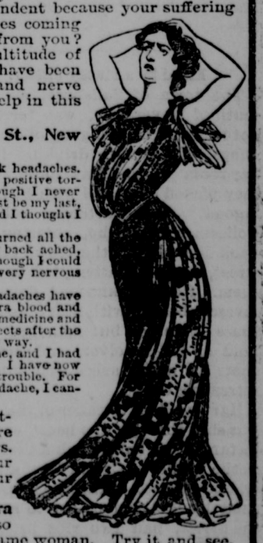
TAKE Dr. Greene's NERVURA

BLOOD and NERVE REMEDY

"MY HEAD WILL BURST!"

"This head will be the death of me and I don't care how soon. I don't want to try to drag through life with pain like this."

Are you going to give up now? Are you tired out with the effort to bear that awful pain? Are you despondent because your suffering makes you haggard and thin? Are lines coming into your face? Is your beauty going from you? Think for one moment of the great multitude of women, suffering in just this way, who have been cured by Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. There is absolute certainty of help in this grand medicine. Here is an instance.



Miss Agnes Graham, 403 W. 28th St., New York City, says:

"For years I endured the greatest agony with sick headaches. My head would throb so that every step I took was positive torture. When I went home, after work, I felt as though I never could get there. It seemed to me that every step must be my last, and when I tried to go up stairs my head ached so bad I thought I must scream.

"Nothing I took helped me. The headaches returned all the time, and I despaired of ever getting over them. My back ached, too, and often I felt so tired and weak it seemed as though I could not go to work. I was badly run down, and in a very nervous condition.

"But I am thankful to say that these terrible headaches have left me, now that I have taken Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. I cannot say too much for this great medicine and what it has done for me. I began to feel its good effects after the first dose. I felt brighter and more cheerful in every way.

"After the first bottle, my nervousness was gone, and I had but one attack of headache since taking Nervura. I have now taken four bottles and have had no return of the trouble. For women suffering from woman's greatest enemy, headache, I cannot recommend this wonderful medicine too highly."

Headache powders have lost their effectiveness with you, haven't they? You are letting yourself be driven to narcotic drugs. You are letting your headaches wreck your life. Your doctor fails to help, and your nerves are in an awful state.

Just one bottle of Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy will do you so much good that you won't feel like the same woman. Try it and see. If you have complications, get Dr. Greene's free advice by call or letter. His address is 35 W. 14th Street, New York City.

Nervous headache is quickly cured by Dr. Greene's NERVURA

BLOOD and NERVE REMEDY

EDUCATION FOR ALL.

National Capital a City of Colleges and Universities.

Titans of Every Age Were Men of Humble Parentage Who Secured Their Education by Application and Self-Denial.

[Special Washington Letter.]

THE close of the college year is called "commencement," because the young people who are given degrees are supposed to have completed educations, and be ready in every sense for the "commencement" of their careers in contact with the world.

The national capital is becoming more and more an educational center. Colleges have been here from the early days of the past century, and now we have prosperous universities. There are many busy people who do not understand the difference between a college and a university, but well-informed people know that each university is composed of a number of colleges. The college bears the same relation to a university that a king bears to an emperor. An empire comprises kingdoms, and a university comprises colleges.

It is well known that George Washington advocated the establishment of a national university in the national capital; and his desire is gradually being developed. But the national university is yet only in embryo. It will not be perfected until the congress definitely acts upon the proposition which a number of good men have been projecting for more than a quarter of a century, out of their own individual means.

The secretary of agriculture says that the ideal national university would be a term of service in the executive departments for young men who have been graduated from secular or religious colleges and universities; a term of service in which they would learn all about the federal government, as government clerks, with opportunities for attending the congressional debates, the use of the congressional library and contact with the statesmen from all of the states.

The idea of the secretary, as gleaned from many conversations, is that poor young men may thus have opportunity to earn their bread and butter by working in the government departments, while they also earn their educations by devoting their extra time in taking advantage of their environments. To the writer this seems impracticable, because a national university of that character could furnish no diploma, no insignia to demonstrate the course of study. It would be a good thing for the poor young men who constitute the majority of students, and would greatly enhance their worth to themselves, to the republic and to the world; but it would be difficult to systematize such a comprehensive course of studies.

In this city, as in all educational centers, it is safe to say that the number of students who support themselves in part, or in fact wholly, is constantly increasing. Although not possessed of exact statistics as to the number of men who support themselves wholly or in part when going through college, it is known to be much larger than the outsider who gets only a superficial view of matters would believe.

Not only this, but the percentage of poor young men increases as well as does the number. Perhaps our colleges have a certain extent more of the poor young men than other colleges. Of course, there is a large number of very wealthy ones, more of them in every entering class, but that is accounted for merely by the greatly increasing wealth of the country.

TEACHING TO PAY FOR HIS OWN EDUCATION.

"Tutoring," that is, private teaching of high school students by college or university students, furnishes at least partial support of a college young man. It is far more extensively carried on than ever before, and on the account of the employment it provides, if for no other reason, does considerable good. Then there are all sorts of things many young men can do which will bring them in money. Some have worked regularly a few hours every day. Possibly this is a satisfactory way. A number turn to writing as an aid, and contribute to magazines and papers. There is no doubt of success. Year after year classes are turned out in which, ever-present, we find the poor young man who has had a struggle through college, and the struggle is not always an unpleasant one, nor unprofitable.

There is no doubt in the minds of experienced educators of the effect of this double struggle for existence and education upon the character of a poor young man. It can be but for the best, in every instance. This is one rule to which there seems to be no exception. For, no matter how hard the struggle, he is independent. He feels his independence and soon becomes self-reliant. Sometimes he is offensively self-conceited, but that's all right. His self-reliance and his self-conceit are parts of the development of ambition, and at the end of four years he is better able to face the world than some of those who have not been through a poor young man's experiences. Moreover, the poor young man has a higher and better appreciation of the education which he has earned by hard knocks. The men of renown who

THE LIGHT OF OTHER DAYS.

"Pluck bright glory from the pale-faced moon,
Or dive into the bottom of the deep
Where fathom-line could never touch the ground
And drag up drowned honor by the locks," are not the scions of noble blood; not the sons of the rich who were dandled in the lap of luxury. No, all experience, all history shows that the Titans of every age and of all conditions were progeny of the yeomanry whose fathers and mothers held in their loins the bone and tissue of contention for existence; physical strength which they transmitted to the poor boys who were to become Napoleon, Grant, Disraeli, Lincoln.

Archbishop Keane, of Dubuque, when he was rector of the Catholic university here, in the founding of which he was a potential factor, delivered a lecture on "The Light of the Dark Ages," in which he gave noble tribute to education by saying: "Throughout the darkness and hopelessness of those dreadful years there comes down to us a shimmer of light which shines through all of the awful gloom. It is the light of the tallow dip in the cell of the cloistered monk. Whatever else he did of good or bad, by keeping alight the student's lamp, the monk gave a light to shine through the dark ages, so that we to-day have transmitted to us the learning of the ancients, all of it of inestimable value to students."

That is a tribute to the value and power of all education, and not a bit of praise of the priesthood; for John J. Keane is no bigot. Biblical scholare alone are indebted to those monks for the Masoretic pointings of the Hebrew, Chaldaic and Syriac versions of the Scriptures; and also for the Hellenistic Greek of the gospels and epistles. Catholic and Protestant alike draw from those fountains of learning, and also from the Sinaitic manuscripts for their acute and comprehensive knowledge of the Word, in which all denominations "think they have eternal life." The students of the world of science are indebted to those monks for the wonderful Ptolemaic theory of the universe, the details of which are marvelous and of great value. To those monks also historians are indebted for all of the knowledge which has been given concerning the great past; and also for the information which has guided modern explorers to the excavations of ancient cities wherein human knowledge has been almost miraculously developed.

When he was a professor of exegetical theology, President Dwight, of Yale, said to the writer: "The college is truly democratic, no matter whether it be located in a republic, in a kingdom or an empire. The sons of rich men and of noblemen stand on a level with the sons of poor men. In college a young man is esteemed for what he is and for what he does; and the worthy poor man may stand far in advance of the unworthy rich."

Every man who has had experience in educational matters realizes the forcefulness of that statement. In seeking the Utopia of true democracy one must look to the college or university. This fact is particularly notable in the national capital, where hundreds of young men of all conditions in life are struggling together for that educational development which will fit them for all of the vicissitudes of the battle of life; the battle of which it has been said: "No time for loitering here. In this battle it is only for God and the angels to be lookers-on." Our national university is slowly developing. The religious denominations are building universities all around the city upon healthful eminences. Men of wealth of the various denominations are endowing professorships, and others are endowing scholarships for the successful poor young men who need aid and encouragement. Thus the national capital is becoming permanently our national center of education.

SMITH D FRY.

HEROIC FATHER JACQUET.

Jesuit Priest Undertakes to Fill a New and Difficult Post at Cape Nome.

After 20 years in the tepees of western Indians, Father Aloysius Jacquet, with body racked by rheumatism, is now on his way to the frozen Nome, in which wild camp he will be the first regular priest. Since 1882 Father Jacquet, a Jesuit priest, has traveled over the sage brush plains and through the thick wooded mountain valleys of eastern Washington and Idaho, educating the naked savages of that region to civilization and religion. He is now on his way to build the first Catholic chapel and the first Catholic hospital for the rough miners of the newest and most northern placer camp of the world, says the New York World.

Father Jacquet will be the first Catholic priest to have charge of Nome as a parish. Before him Father Dreka made occasional trips from St. Michael. Last February Father Dreka was on his winter journey from St. Michael to Nome. The great blizzard which claimed so many victims overtook him. With the priest was a native lad who had acted as a guide and helper.

After 24 hours' constant struggling in the face of the bitter wind the boy became exhausted. The priest wrapped him in a blanket and drew the sled through the fast deepening drifts. Two days and two nights the blizzard raged and the old priest struggled on with the dying boy. On the morning of the third day the priest crawled into a cabin on the outskirts of Nome. The boy on the sled had long since died. The priest, his face frozen and black, was, at last reports from Nome, in a dying condition.

Father Jacquet will finish the work Father Dreka had attempted to begin at Nome. Twenty years as a priest in the wildest country of the northwest has fitted Father Jacquet to understand the ways of the roughest miners and of the most ignorant natives. Twenty years ago he left his studies in London to take a parish in Washington and Idaho. Four tribes of naked Indians and the wildest of western miners constituted the membership of his flock. The former were intractable and sullen; the latter tolerated the black robed visitor with an amused and half contemptuous curiosity.

Father Jacques went first to work among the savages. Summer and winter he lived in their tepees. The work was difficult beyond the telling, and the hardships were more terrible than man is often called upon to endure. But Father Jacquet converted the Indians and he awoke the lonely whites to a realization of the religion they had forgotten. He built chapels and later founded churches in the small settlements. As these later grew to towns other priests came to take charge, but among the old pioneers Father Jacquet was always most loved of all the clergy.

Years of privation and exposure on the frontier finally sowed the seeds of disease in the priest's constitution. During the past two or three winters he has sought the climate of California. At the springs of Paso Del Robles he has undergone treatment for nervous rheumatism which has kept him on the rack of keenest torture for weeks at a time. From one of these sieges of illness he departed a short time since for this city, where he took a steamer for the windswept northern beach, the scene of his future labors. Many say that the man has sought his death. When men have reasoned with him on the subject Father Jacquet has shrugged his shoulders. Perhaps he thought at such times of the motto of his order: "For the Greater Glory of God."

A DEMAND FOR CHEMISTS.

Louisiana It Is Reported Is Greatly in Need of "Sugar Engineers."

Most professions are overstocked. Young lawyers, doctors, newspaper men, architects and electrical engineers know that in their several fields of activity there are more aspirants for favor than there are business openings, even though applicants bring good recommendations and possess talent. But according to Prof. L. W. Wilkinson, who occupies the chair of chemistry in Tulane university, New Orleans, there is a growing and unsatisfied demand for chemists who understand the manufacture of sugar. In Louisiana it is common to employ in every sugar mill a man who has a sufficient knowledge of machinery to superintend the power plant and mechanical operations of the industry, but it is now becoming the custom to require of him a familiarity with the chemical problems involved also.

Special courses of instruction are given at Tulane with this object in view. But that institution does not supply enough "sugar engineers" to meet the needs of the Pelican state. Prof. Wilkinson expresses the opinion that competent men from outside could secure positions there with salaries of $2,000 or $2,500. The boiling season is comparatively short. And in instances men make a three months' engagement for $1,500 and have the rest of the year to themselves.

Public Expenditures in Mexico.

The Mexican army of more than 25,000 men is supported upon a trifle more than 1,000,000 Mexican dollars a month. The Mexican congress does not cost $1,000,000 a year.—Chicago Chronicle.

Thirteen British life assurance offices decline proposals from unvaccinated persons.

PUNGENT PARAGRAPHS.

"In what way did he lose his self-possession?" "Very simply. He gave himself away."—Philadelphia Times.

"What you doin' now, Eben?" "I'm barberin'." "Well, I always said you'd be a barber ever since you was a little shaver."—Indianapolis News.

Tact.—Weary Waggles—"Dey ain't no sich a t'ing as hydrophobia." Willie Wontwork—"Aw, I'm on ter youse; youse wants me ter tackle de houses where dey got dogs, don't yer?"—Ohio State Journal.

"Say, Madge," remarked her slangy brother, "if I tell you a secret can you keep it 'way down in your boots?" "Yes," she replied, demurely; "if it isn't a very big secret I can."—Philadelphia Record.

Delays Are Dangerous.—"It's time, Emil, that we thought of Hulda's getting married. She is already 18 years old!" "Oh, let her wait till the right sort of a man comes along!" "Why wait? I didn't!"—Fliegende Blaetter.

Did She Accept Him?—Tess—"He proposed to her in rather a grewsome way." Jess—"Why, I understood he merely asked her to share his fortune." Tess—"No, he asked her if she would care to share his lot. They were walking in the cemetery at the time."—Philadelphia Press.

"Bretheren and sistern," concluded Rev. Washington Johnson, "I hab demonstrated abstrusely dat de Lord hates a thief—dat he is not to be propigated by no offering, thefo' I beg de pusson or pussons who stole yo' pastor's hog to make no contributation at de circulation of de offertory platter." Note: The collection beat all previous records—Princeton Tiger.

SILVER OF THE NAVY.

Waldon Fawcett Tells of Beautiful Silver Services That Are Kept on Uncle Sam's Battleships.

In Woman's Home Companion Waldon Fawcett has an article on "Presenting a Silver Service to a Battleship." He not only describes some of the most interesting pieces of plate, but goes into the details of the presentation. The following is an extract:

"The method of procedure when a sovereign state undertakes to procure some handsome tableware for the jolly tars whom it regards as specially under its care is an interesting one. It is customary, almost as soon as the navy department has announced that one of the battleships building or projected will bear the name of a certain state, for her representatives in congress to hold a meeting and launch a project for presenting the vessel with a silver service. Next prominent naval officers have to be consulted with regard to the number of pieces considered desirable, and as to their design and finish. It is notable that the authorities consulted under such circumstances are certain to be almost unanimous in their advocacy of simplicity of design. The naval officers are also very likely to suggest the desirability of securing massive ware and pieces large enough to prevent their being easily lost. The regular committee, which has meanwhile been appointed, embodies this advice in a circular, and invites all the leading silversmiths of the country to submit competitive designs. Not infrequently these sketches are all completed and on exhibition long before the funds have been raised. Thus there is ample opportunity for the thorough discussion of the artistic merit of the various suggestions. Then comes the award of the contract, and finally, after a year or two, the formal presentation ceremonies, which are attended by prayer and music and much speech-making. The presentation address is made by the governor or some other state dignitary, and the captain commanding the new vessel endeavors to express the gratitude of the ship's company."

INSECT PESTS OF HAWAII.

Many Destroyers of Humanity's Peace Have Come to the Islands from Other Lands.

No spot on earth has suffered so much from the importation of insect pests as the islands composing the Hawaiian group. Time was when it was a pleasure to live there because of the absence of such plagues; now it is different, says a recent report.

The two chief products of these islands are sugar and coffee, while a considerable amount of fruit is also grown. Along with the imported trees came their insect enemies, notably the scale insect and the aphis. In the course of time these increased so prodigiously that they threatened to destroy the industries of the country. Man is doomed to a constant struggle against nature and he is often compelled, so to speak, to fight her with her own weapons. So it was in this case. The trees were being destroyed by insects; remedy, import more insects. So in 1890 a certain ladybird (vedalia cardinalis) was sent over from Australia. It became completely naturalized and increased prodigiously, feeding on the scale insects, which it soon reduced in numbers until they became comparatively scarce.

But there were other insect plagues—aphides and others of different orders. The government therefore employed a naturalist to import more insects. These were brought from Australia and many of them were ladybirds. Several of them have established themselves and done good service. One of the most useful is a ladybird which feeds on the aphides, which had seriously attacked the sugar canes. It has done such good work that there is every prospect of the canes being speedily cured.

THE RECHABITES.

There entered in the promised land, a band
Of Arabs with the pilgrim Israelites;
Dear to the God of Israel, though not named
Among the chosen tribes of Jacob's sons.
Austere, discreet; though knowing not the law
Of Moses, fearing God; content to live
In quietness, unknown to rank and state.
Such were the sons of Rechab—such the men
Who, knowing with far-seeing eyes and minds
The ruin wrought by fleshly lust and wine
Among the kingdoms of Phoenician fame,
Forswore themselves to nevermore drink wine;
To never leave their tents and healthful lives.

They kept their promise well; when years had passed,
When generations came and centuries fled,
They still remained a vigorous, noble clan.
Jehovah saw, approved, espoused them then—
Such merit surely should receive reward;
Among His chosen tribes, among the priests
They should find room and rank forevermore.

But there temptation came within the house
Of God—e'en to the temple of the Lord:
"Drink with us, sons of Rechab; share this wine!
As Levites do, do you; then drink this wine!
Exalted of the Lord, come, drink ye wine!"

Then they stood up in all their God-like strength
And raised on high their eyes and sinewy hands.
"Our vow is sacred yet; 'tis writ in stone;
As firm as rock we make the vow again:
Before the Lord of Hosts, before His throne,
We drink no wine—not now nor evermore;
Not only we, but those who are our own—
Our wives, our sons, our daughters, while we live."

The Lord most high, who heard the solemn vow
In words whose truth and power the ages prove,
Spake once, and fixed the high decree for time,
And showed His love and care for all things pure—
His estimation placed on temperate lives,
His words were these—they're written in His Book:
"The sons of Rechab shall not want a man
To stand before Me evermore—amen!"

And so among the priests and scribes we find,
E'en to Messiah's time, these Rechabites,
In priestly office, honored by all men,
With unstained lips which wine has never touched—
So fit to stand before the Lord of Hosts,
To wear the robes ordained by sacred writ,
To stand for Him, the author of all good!

And now, not less, a blessing waits for us
Who firmly stand rejecting proffered drink;
Who say: "I promise by the help of God
To keep from drinking all intoxicants."
Who say: "What things are pure and just and true,
I make my own and ponder in my heart."
—Phoebe Parmelee, in Union Signal.

GEN. BELL ON TEMPERANCE.

Severely Reprimands an Officer in the Philippines for Second Offense of Drunkenness.

An army officer on duty in the Philippines is in trouble for the second time on account of intemperance. Capt. W. F. Hancock, of the Sixth artillery, is scored severely in official orders of Gen. Bell, provost marshal of Manila. Capt. Hancock appeared in a drunken condition at the Army and Navy club in Manila, and failed to show up for duty on two occasions. He was sentenced to be reprimanded in orders.

Gen. Bell's caustic remarks are as follows:

"It frequently is observed to be the melancholy fact of persons addicted to the excessive use of alcoholic liquor to lose the power of clear judgment with respect to the degree of their failing in this regard, and to attribute a spirit of persecution or prejudice to all persons who feel called upon by a sense of duty to take official cognizance of their misbehavior. That this is a state of mind at which Capt. Hancock has arrived is indicated by the character of his defense, in which he attacks the motive of everyone connected with the bringing of accusation against him, but shows not the slightest appreciation of the reprehensible character of his conduct.

"Considering himself, by a rather forced construction of the ordinarily accepted views of club relations, the host of his accusers, Capt. Hancock seems sorely scandalized at their breach of etiquette, but apparently is unconscious of his own breach of etiquette in appearing before his guests in a disagreeable and repulsive condition.

"As there is little ground for hope of reform from such a mental condition, it probably is useless to expect any beneficial effects from words uttered here, but it might be beneficial to Capt. Hancock to reflect that an officer twice tried for intemperance within nine months is in danger of exhausting the patience of his friends and has used up any credit which might attach to previous good conduct and soldierly qualities."

Capt. Hancock already has been released from arrest and returned to duty.

Would Burn the Breweries.

Said Dr. Joseph Parker once: "I could make a garden of Eden in the East end of London in three months if I had my own way. I should do nothing but burn down all the breweries and shut up all the public houses." This will go alongside Dr. Edward Everett Hale's statement that if some one would take care of the poverty in the city of Boston that is caused by the drink traffic, the South Congregational church, of which he is the pastor, would single-handed take care of all the rest.

WITH A STOP TO IT.

The Only Kind of a Drink That a Stanch Temperance Youth Was Willing to Take.

"Come in and take a sip of something good," said bloated old Jack Saunders to Tommy Bristow as he was passing the saloon door on his way to school.

"I'm a temperance boy," answered Tommy, "and I've signed a pledge neither to touch, taste nor handle."

"Oh, that's all right," answered the old toper; "you can take a glass of beer or wine and still be a temperance man. You don't need to keep on drinking until you're a drunkard. That's all nonsense. You can take a drink and stop right there."

"If they have that kind of liquor in there," answered Tommy, who was a bright little fellow for his years, "I don't know that I would mind taking a glass, just to see what it tastes like. You are sure they have that kind, are you?"

"What kind?" demanded Jack.

"Why, the kind that has the stop in it. I guess not many of the men of this town have ever drank that kind. They drank the kind that had a keep on. But if you've got the kind in there that has a stop to it I'll go in and take a glass."

"I'M A TEMPERANCE BOY."

Jack Saunders hung his head. He knew what the boy said was true, and that the nonsense was all on his side—talking about taking a drink and then stopping when he felt like it. The trouble was he didn't please to stop, nor did any of the others. And Tommy was exactly right. It isn't safe for any boy, or man either, to take the first drink until some one invents the kind that has a stop to it.—Our Morning Guide.

TEMPERANCE SERMON TO JURY

Judge Thomas' Plain Talk to Panel in Chickasaw Nation Concerning Unlawful Liquor Selling.

In his charge to the grand jury at Paul's Valley, Chickasaw nation, the other day, Judge John R. Thomas, of the United States district court, delivered a scathing indictment of unlawful liquor selling as well as a quaintly put temperance sermon, says a correspondent of the Kansas City Journal.

"About eight-tenths of the crimes committed in the Indian territory," said his honor, "can be traced directly to the immoderate use of intoxicating liquor. If the devil has been able to find one agent of mischief more potent than all the others, it is intoxicating liquors. I don't drink myself, but if a man wants to take a drink I don't object to it, if he feels that he can stand it. I used to drink some, and I am a pretty thorough American. I never liked to go up against a game that I could not beat sometimes, and they always could make whisky faster than I could drink it. That was not all that made me quit its use, either. When I came to preside as judge and had to sentence men to the penitentiary for introducing liquor, I felt and knew that in order to maintain my self-respect I had to be on pretty good terms with the fellow I slept with, and I could not be guilty of the same crime and conscientiously enforce the law.

"It is against the law to introduce intoxicating liquor into the Indian territory, whatever its name, whatever its composition; if it intoxicates it is against the law to introduce it; it is against the law to sell it; it is against the law to give it away. Suppose you buckle on the armor good and strong this morning, and, looking back to the solemn oath you have taken, conclude that you will help the officers of the law in driving out, exterminating if we can, the sale of intoxicating liquors. The man who steals my horse—and I think a horse thief is a pretty bad man—is a gentleman and a good citizen compared to the whisky seller, to the man who deliberately steals my brain, my sense, and the bread of my wife and children; not of me alone, but of hundreds of men in every community where homes are blighted through the greed and crime of men who sell whisky.

"Why, the man who will sell whisky is so much meaner than a thousand horse thieves that he is not to be mentioned in the same year, to say nothing of the same week or month. A man who sells whisky is the meanest animal of his kind. If a man wants to get a bottle of whisky and take a drink himself, I have nothing to say about that; that is a matter of taste; and if a man happens to be over in Arkansas or Texas or Oklahoma and puts a bottle of whisky in his pocket for his own use, the law was never intended to reach cases of that kind. We can't fool away time on such cases as that. The cases intended to be reached by the law are where men bring in intoxicating liquor for the purpose of selling it."

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, JULY 18, 1901.

Republican Nominations.

FOR STATE SENATOR:

ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

FOR HOUSE OF DELEGATES:

PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.

CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

FOR SHERIFF:

WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

FOR TREASURER:

JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONERS:

TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.

JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

FOR REGISTER OF WILLS:

EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY SURVEYOR:

FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

MR. S. A. WILLIAMS' friends announce him a candidate for the Republican senatorial nomination. Mr. Goldsborough, Mr. Lowndes and others have also been announced. This is in striking contrast with the Democratic party. There Gorman has announced himself and no others dare apply. It is, indeed, strange the Democratic party cannot find a single man as a candidate except one who has been defeated, driven from office and whose name is synonymous with everything that is unsavory in Maryland politics. Yet with that condition a fact it is not surprising a Democratic governor refuses to vote for Democratic candidates outside the ring. It is nothing more than can be expected to find all independent, fair minded, substantial citizens outside the ring and relegated to the shades.

In the Republican party it is entirely different and the best men are put forward because the party stakes its existence on the commendation and approval of the people. It is a well known fact that the Republican party has been looking after the affairs of the country for nearly half a century. It gave Maryland the best administration it has had for many years and the people will place it in control at the next opportunity and see that it is kept there.

In the meantime the Democrats can determine whether Mr. Gorman shall be their candidate or Mr. Gorman, who is sometimes styled the "boss" or the "old man."

GOVERNOR Smith, in his speech at Buffalo on Maryland Day, expressed regret that the "material wealth and resources" of this State are not more extensively represented at the Pan American Exposition. The Governor tries to shift the blame by saying that the value of expositions are not appreciated by tax-payers or by legislators.

This will remind the taxpayers, especially, that Governor Smith called the Legislature of this State together last March in extraordinary session. To advance the material interests of Maryland? to provide for the local industries of Maryland? Not a bit of it. John Walter did not say a word about the Buffalo Exposition, but the Democratic stronghold was in danger and a hundred thousand dollars of the public money was appropriated to save the party from destruction. When he signed the new ballot law, which was intended to disfranchise all the illiterates who would not support Mr. Gorman, did any one hear the governor regret that the State would make a poor showing at the Buffalo fair? And when a useless census was provided for—useless because the Federal authorities are making the necessary corrections—Mr. Smith, the governor, was thinking of future political power and the United States Senate.

The fact is, the governor has been entirely engrossed, during his service in office, with political scheming, and the "material wealth and resources" of the State will have to worry along as best they can until Maryland gets another governor. John Walter did not ask the taxpayers to provide funds for a creditable exhibition of our resources at the Pan American, and he also failed to get the public consent to his extra session and all that followed therefrom. When election day comes around that one hundred thousand dollars which was in effect a Democratic campaign fund, will have been spent, and the Buffalo fair will be at end. Perhaps the governor will again have occasion to express his regrets.

Bryan a Dead One.

When Mr. Bryan recently eliminated himself from the list of candidates for the next Democratic presidential nomination there was a general belief that he would be found at the old stand, and ready to accept, when the crucial moment arrived. Later developments, however, have demonstrated that Bryan has been deposed from the leadership which he arbitrarily assumed at the time of his first nomination, and that his words of counsel are no longer seriously considered by the party which twice honored him with its support.

The first step in the reorganization of the Democratic party was taken when the Ohio convention not only put its foot down on Bryanism, but also trampled under foot his portrait. This radical breaking away from the hobbies and follies of the past five years naturally aroused interest as to the sentiment of Democratic leaders in other states, and expressions of that sentiment were not long in coming. The always vigorous Henry Watterson promptly applauded the action of the Ohio convention, and without any mincing of words relegated Bryanism to the rear. From Missouri comes the opinion of Charles A. Walsh, secretary of the Democratic National Committee, that the next Democratic nominee will be a Missourian. Such prominent Georgians as Governor Chandler, Senator Clay and Hoke Smith indorse the work of the Ohio Democracy, and ex-Congressman Twigg predicts that Virginia Democrats will follow the lead of the Columbus convention. The leaven of reorganization is working, and so rapidly that it promises to soon permeate the whole lump, so far as the regulars are concerned.

The abandonment of Bryanism, however, does not mean the end of trouble for the Democracy, for it will undoubtedly meet with the opposition of Bryan's large following, and create dissentions more serious than that resulting from his first nomination, when many Democrats bolted the ticket. How far this antagonism of the Bryanites will go can only be conjectured at present, but it is bound to be felt in the campaign in the Buckeye State.

It is a hopeless fight that the Bryanites will wage, their leader having been discredited by the party; but it is within their power to throw serious obstacles in the path of the reorganizers. No difference what his disgruntled followers do, the fact looms up prominently that Bryan is at last a "dead 'un."

Republicans Aided by Gorman.

The Republican party in the country as a whole has been served well by Gorman. In his own state he has rendered still greater service to the Republicans. Maryland was one of the Democracy's fastnesses until recently. At the present time, however, it has a solid Republican delegation in the Senate, and also a solid Republican delegation in the House. It elected a Democratic governor in 1899, but this was due to two causes which are not likely to co-operate or to operate in the future—a feud between Senator Wellington and the Republican candidate for governor, and the fact that Gorman was enabled to keep himself so far in the background that his personality did not appear in the canvass at all, and thus the voters got no chance to him. Twice in succession has Maryland cast its electoral vote for the Republican party. In every important election, beginning with that for governor, in 1894, and onward to this day, except the one in 1899, Maryland has been carried by the Republicans.

Now, perhaps the Republicans ought to be grateful to Gorman for his powerful aid in making the State anti-Gorman and anti-Democratic. Moreover the Republican whom Gorman is working to succeed in the Senate is George L. Wellington, whose term in the Senate expires on March 4, 1903. Gorman wants to succeed Wellington. Perhaps Gorman hopes that a comparison with Wellington's obliquities will diminish his own angularities. But he will be mistaken if he supposes Wellington's feebleness will strengthen him. There are tens of thousands of voters in Maryland belonging to both the great parties who hate Gorman for himself, and are not going to be deluded into sanctioning him on account of their detestation of the Republican in the present Senate. Gorman will be combated on his own merits. Wellington will step down from the Senate in a little less than two years hence, and the man who takes his place will not be named Gorman.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Alack Alas!

Poor old Democracy, what a pitiful sight it does make before the eyes of the people! Its behavior is similar to that of a wilful fretful child rather than that of men of mature minds. A few years ago a leader appeared for the Democratic hosts and he was elected president, but before his second term expired his party turned against him and the Democrats have labored ever since to bring reproach and obliquity on the name of Grover Cleveland. The Democrrcy turned to a new star in the west with all the enthusiasm of fanatical devotion, and twice nominated Wm. J. Bryan as presidential candidate. It upheld his platform because it represented just the opposite from that of Cleveland. The party went over to him with complete abandon and repudiated all those principles that had been synonymous with Democracy for years.

Now Democracy startles the country by trampling Bryan's picture in the dust. A convention composed of 950 delegates only had six to do honor to the man who was called but a short while ago the "Great Commoner," the "Boy Orator of the Platte," the "Apostle of Free Silver" and the "Savior of Democracy."

Certainly the affairs of such a great nation as this cannot be entrusted to the care of a party that is so contradictory, so capricious and seemingly so unbalanced. Democrats say that they are not for gold but for free silver, and now they insult the very inspiration of the free silver cause. As long as the Democracy is in a position to plunge about from one platform or set of principles to another without doing any damage to the nation, there can be no objection entered to its gymnastics. The only thing necessary is to keep it where it can do no harm and the people will see that it is done.

Struck by Lightning.

During the severe electrical storm which prevailed in this section yesterday afternoon a bolt of lightning descended and entered the home of Thomas Sanders, who lives some five or six miles south of town on the West Union road. The lightning entered under the kitchen door tearing up the weather strip and running along to where Mrs. Sanders was engaged at the cook stove preparing supper it struck her on the left foot tearing her shoe into shreds and passing to her right foot moved upwards along her limbs and body, burning her quite severely and almost deduding her of clothing. Her burns appear as though she had been scalded with hot water. She was wholly conscious when Dr. Hinebaugh, who had been summoned to attend her, arrived, and to him she related her experience.

After the lightning had entered the house it evidently divided, one fork striking Mrs. Sanders and the other going on through the kitchen to the sitting room where it struck a stove after having splintered the floor and setting fire to the carpet. The flames were extinguished, however, before any material damage had been done.

Mrs. Sanders had a miraculous escape from almost instant death and this morning she is reported to be very much improved and that no serious consequences are likely to follow her experience.

Another Murder in Preston County.

To the long list of murders recently committed in Preston county, W. Va., another was added on Sunday when two Italians employed by Contractor Broadhead, who is putting in a new siding near Cranberry grade, between Terra Alta and Rowlesburg, got into a fight on the railroad tracks, over some trivial affair. One of the men drew a knife and stabbed the other to death in sight of a number of people. The officers were apprised of the murder, and with a posse, started in pursuit of the murderer, who made for the mountains. The man was kept in sight by the pursuing party for a long time, but finally made his escape and so far as could be learned yesterday he had not been captured.

Two Full Moons This Month.

There are two full moons this month, and our satelite during the July nights keeps up an unusual flirtation with Jupiter, Mars, Mercury, Saturn, Venus, Neptune and Uranus. But Luna never forgets that the earth is her steady company.

The New Vault at the Garrett County Bank.

There has just been completed for the above named bank one of the latest improved burglar proof vaults, massive in appearance, artistic in design, and of the best known burglar proof metal.

The interior of the brick walls, which are two feet in thickness, is lined with five ply Chrome steel, and contains 48 safe deposit boxes for the storing of valuable papers. It also contains a Corliss Burglar Proof Safe, in which are kept the funds and securities of the bank, and one entire side of the vault is taken up by a cabinet for the accommodation of the books and papers belonging to the bank.

The inner door from appearance would seem to be all that could be desired for the protection of the contents of the vault, being built up of steel plates and braces to a thickeess of three and a half inches, but in addition to this is the massive outer door, built of drill proof steel plates and heavy braces to a thickness of six inches, and operated and controlled by the celebrated "Yale Automatic Time Lock," an ingenious piece of machinery which operates the 22 large bolts with comparative ease, and which does its work with the regularity of the finest watch. This time lock is composed of three of the finest movements, either of which will operate the bolt work.

In addition to all this, is a very strong and artistic gate which affords protection at all times during the day, and can only be opened by the employees of the bank who are entrusted with a key, and not by them without ringing a bell which calls the attention of every one in the bank that some one is entering the vault.

This magnificent structure reflects great credit on the management of the bank and evidences to the public that every precaution is being taken by this old reliable institution to safeguard the funds entrusted to its care.

Additional Train Service.

It will not be many more weeks until the Second division of the B. & O. will have added to its passenger train traffic some eight or ten Pennsylvania railroad flyers, which will be run direct from Cleveland, Ohio, to Washington. The Pittsburg Post, one of the best authorities on railroad matters in the country, had the following to say in its columns Tuesday:

"With the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio consolidated, a Cleveland-Washington-Baltimore flyer is assured. The route via of the Pennsylvania lines and Baltimore and Ohio between Cleveland and Washington will be just 444 miles, or 63 miles shorter than the line via Altoona and Harrisburg. It is 517 miles from Washington to Cleveland via the Pennsylvania and the Pennsylvania lines, and only 444 miles via the Pennsylvania lines and the Baltimore and Ohio. When the new bridge is completed and the Baltimore and Ohio connected with the new Union Station established, the C. & P. flyers can be run through solid to Washington and Baltimore on the direct and short line."

A New Heating Apparatus Needed.

At a recent meeting of the school board the subject of heating the Oakland public school building was discussed. The present system of heating the building, although put in at an enormous cost, has never been entirely satisfactory and in recent years the odors ascending from the closets in the basement of the building to the rooms above have been almost unbearable. In a number of cases scholars have become ill and thereby lost time at their studies. These, however, are not the only objections to the system. Another, aside from the cost of installation, repairs, bad odors and fuel, is the immense amount of space taken up by the ventilating stacks and chimneys. All this room could be easily utilized just now to great advantage owing to the crowded condition of the building.

The system has been a bill of expense to our people ever since it was put in and the sooner a plan to heat and ventilate the structure is evolved the better. Another objection has been that during extreme cold weather it has been found almost impossible to raise the temperature to even a normal degree of warmth with the result that day after day teachers and scholars have been uncomfortably cold.

A Narrow Escape.

Yesterday Mr. Edward E. Sollars and his son Inskeep were in a field doing some work when a storm came up. They took refuge under a tree until lightning begun to play around when they started for the barn some distance away. When less than half way to the building a bolt of lightning struck the tree they had just left and splintered it into kindling wood. If the two men had delayed their departure for a few minutes both would have probably been instantly killed.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

Returned from the Philippines.

Peter Bickford and M. L. Ralston, of this county, after serving almost two years in the volunteer service of the army, were mustered out at the Presidio, San Francisco, Cal., on July 5, and arrived in Oakland a day or two ago. Mr. Bickford was a member of the 43d regiment and during the service in the Philippines extending over a period of 16 months his regiment was engaged in 451 different actions and sustained a loss of 53 men killed, 58 wounded and 2 drowned. In return the regiment captured from the enemy a large number of rifles, cannon, ammunition, etc., and $27,900 in Mexican money.

Mr. Bickford expresses himself as being entirely satisfied with his army life and has no desire to re-enlist. His chum Ralston shares his sentiments and they both expect to again take up a civilian's life, well knowing that to their country they have rendered efficient and valuable service.

Fire at Bloomington.

The dwelling house of James Flynn, of Bloomington, was entirely destroyed by an accidental fire on Monday night about 11 o'clock. The Westernport fire engine with its company, was taken to Bloomington on a special train from Piedmont to fight the fire but it had burned out before their arrival.

National Bank at Grantsville.

The Comptroller of the Currency has authorized the First National Bank of Grantsville, this county, to begin business. The bank will have a capital of $25,000 divided into shares of small amounts. The incorporators are Uriah M. Stanton, Dr. G. C. Keller and Cortez Jennings, of Grantsville; Frank Watts and W. E. G. Hitchens, of Frostburg.

The location of the institution at Grantsville will be a great convenience to the people of that section and will result in keeping the money otherwise sent away at home. The banking room will probably be in a room of the Getty store building.

Arm Broken.

Thomas Turney, Esq., sustained a broken arm yesterday afternoon late by being thrown from a horse in a field of the Bradley farm near town. The fracture was reduced by Dr. H. W. McComas.

Monte Vista Sold.

Mr. Edwin L. Mitchell, of Oakland, acting as agent for the owner, recently sold to Nelson Thomasson, Esq., of Chicago, Ill., the place recently owned by Dr. G. M. P. King, known as Monte Vista, situated a short distance south of Oakland, for the sum $12,000. The property commands a view of the country on the east and south and comprises besides the large and roomy house a tract of forest and improved land, barn and other buildings. Mr. Thomasson is a wealthy real estate man of Chicago and his newly acquired property in this section will be vastly improved and used by him as a summer residence. Mr. Thomasson and family are now at Altoona, Pa.

Finger Cut Off.

Dash Dunham, who is employed at the Offutt sawmill west of town, cut the index finger almost entirely off one day last week with an ax which he was using in splitting wood. He came down to Oakland and had the wound dressed by Dr. H. W. McComas.

Injuries May Prove Fatal.

Edward Raley fell from a cherry tree near Bittinger on Friday last and sustained injuries which may prove fatal. His lower limbs seem to be totally paralyzed and the physician attending him has very little hopes for his recovery.

Call for Your Letters.

Mrs. Wm. J. Groye, Miss Louise Caton, S. E. Kennedy, U. M. Stanton, Mr. A. L. Lee, Mr. Charles Leber Knight, Mr. A. H. Lawrence, Mr. A. G. Rodgers.

Wanted at Garthright's.

All the fresh butter, fresh eggs and chickens to be had. Twenty cents for butter; 16c for eggs, $2.00 to $2.50 and $3.00 per dozen for chickens—one half cash for all. Bring on your products and get the cash. Other trade wanted daily. 2t

Cuts and bruises healed by Chamberlain's Pain Balm in about one third the time any other treatment would require because of its antiseptic qualities which cause the parts to heal without maturation. For sale by all dealers.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

DOCTORS

say "Consumption can be cured." Nature alone won't do it. It needs help. Doctors say

"Scott's Emulsion

is the best help." But you must continue its use even in hot weather.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists,
409-415 Pearl Street, New York.
50c. and $1.00; all druggist.

REGISTERS OF VOTERS.

Election Supervisors' Notice of Appointment.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF ELECTION SPERRVISORS,
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., JUNE 29, 1901.

The Board of Supervisors of Election for Garrett county, Maryland, having selected the following named persons to be Registers of Voters and Judges of Election in and for the several election districts of said county in accordance with the provisions of Section 10 of Article 23, of the Code of Public General Laws of the State of Maryland, hereby give notice of the names and postoffice address of each person so selected and also the political party which the Board of Supervisors of Elections intends each of said persons to represent, respectively.

The law makes it the duty of the Board to examine promptly into any complaints which may be preferred to them in writing against any person so selected and to remove any such person whom upon inquiry they find to be unfit or incapable to discharge the duties incumbent upon them as election officials.

District No. 1.—Daniel E. Beckman, Beckman, Democrat; L. H. Friend, Swanton, Republican.

District No. 2.—William Welch, Friendsville, Democrat; Walter W. Savage, Friendsville, Republican.

District No. 3.—James H. Bevans, Grantsville, Democrat; C. C. Durst, New Germany, Republican.

District No. 4.—Ervan Fazenbaker, Westernport, Democrat; James H. Reynolds, Bloomington, Republican.

District No. 5.—John H. Gatterman, Strawn, Pa., Democrat; Asa B. Friend, Hoyes, Republican.

District No. 6.—Harrison Sines, Sang Run, Democrat; Ruben M. Enlow, Sang Run, Republican.

District No. 7.—Joseph H. Smithman, Oakland, Democrat; Lincoln Callis, Mt. Lake Park, Republican.

District No. 8.—John H. Harvey, Sunnyside, Democrat; George D. Stahl, Gortner, Republican.

District No. 9.—Michael Cunningham, Frostburg, Democrat; Dan'l B. Layman, Frostburg, Republican.

District No. 10.—Arla Sollars, Deer Park, Democrat; C. L. Paugh, Thayerville, Republican.

District No. 11.—Walter Warnick, Barton, Democrat; John Merrill, Merrill, Republican.

District No. 12.—James Bowser, Bevansville, Democrat; Joslah Bittinger, Bittinger, Republican.

District No. 13.—L. C. Hamill, Blaine, Democrat; W. S. Pew, Blaine, Republican.

District No. 14.—Wade H. Hinebaugh, Democrat, Oakland; Simon Myers, Oakland, Republican.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President,
FRANK WELCH,
A. G. STURGISS,
Board of Supervisors of Elections for Garrett county, Maryland.
EDMUND JAMISON, Clerk.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. MCROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH MCROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

SHERIFF'S SALE

Of Valuable

REAL ESTATE

In Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, at the suit of Philip T. Garthright against Alfred W. Dennett, the same being No. 7 Judicials to July Term, 1900, of said Court, and to the undersigned sheriff of Garrett county directed, I did in pursuance and by virtue of said writ actually enter upon the real estate hereinafter described, on the 24th day of June, 1901, and did seize and levy upon all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Alfred W. Dennett, both at law and in equity, in and to all the hereinafter described real estate, and I hereby give notice that I will sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash on the day of sale, in front of the storehouse of P. T. Garthright, in the town of Mountain Lake Park, Garrett county, on at the hour of two o'clock p. m. of said day, all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alfred W. Dennett in and to all that lot of ground situate, lying and being near Mountain Lake Park, in Garrett county, Maryland, and described as follows, to-wit:

Saturday, 3d day of August, 1901,

Beginning for the same at the southwest corner of A. C. Brooke's lot, on the road leading from Mountain Lake Park to Oakland, and running thence along said road 8 rods, 11 feet and 7 inches; thence by a parallel line to that of Jennie Smith and others, on the opposite side of the lot, 100 rods to the Park alley; thence by and with said alley, 34 rods to the aforesaid line between Jennie Smith and others and James R. Bishop, 74 rods, 11 feet, 7 inches to Brooke's lot; thence with the third line of said Brooke's lot reversed, 25 rods, 4 feet and 9 inches; thence with the second line of said Brookr's lot reversed, 25 rods, 4 feet, 9 inches to the place of beginning, containing more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed to the said Alfred W. Dennett by James R. Bishop and wife by deed dated October 7th, 1895, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 28, folio 340, one of the land records of Garrett county, Maryland.

17 1-4 Acres of Land,

The said property will be sold to satisfy the aforesaid writ of fieri facias and costs.

Terms of Sale:—Cash on the day of sale.

A. J. OESTER,
Sheriff of Garrett County, Maryland.

E. W. Grove

This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets the remedy that cures a cold in one day

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

Rev. Henry Hamill is in Oakland visiting relatives.

Fine walnut organ for sale at Cheap John's. A bargain. 18-3t

Joe Wolf is in Rawlings erecting a greenhouse for Messrs. H. Weber & Sons.

One-half car of good fertilizer for sale cheap and on good terms at Naylor's. 16 3*

The first ball of the season at the Loch Lynn Hotel was given on last Saturday night.

Bargains at Cheap John's. Going out of the toy business. Wagons, Carts, Wheelbarrows, Games, etc. 3t

C. M. Livengood, Esq., of Grantsville, has been granted a pension of $8 per month.

Heptasophs can hear something to their advantage by sending name and address. C. Heyer, 38 South St, Baltimore, Md. 4t*

Mrs. Jennie Trussel and two sons, of Winchester, Va., are visiting her brother, Mr. Jas. W. Leathers this week.

Mr. Alexander Good, formerly a resident of Oakland, but now living at Kirkwood, Mo., is here on a visit to his daughter, Mrs. Judge Sloan.

Mr. Ryland, of Grantsville, was an early morning visitor Tuesday. His wife is here in attendance on her sick sister, Mrs. Susan Zimmerman.—Meyersdale Commercial.

When you want a modern up-to-date physic, try Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. Price, 25 cents. Samples free at all druggists.

The press work on Mr. Oren F. Morton's new book has been completed and it will now be bound and placed upon the market. The volume contains 364 pages and a number of full page half-tone engravings.

Mrs. Alfred H. Turner, nee Miss Lily Brown, formerly of Oakland, has arrived in this country from Honolulu, H. I., and expects to come to Oakland after visiting the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo.

FOR SALE:—The Lutheran parsonage, located on the corner of Fifth and Green streets, in Oakland, near the court house. Contains 8 rooms, hallway, cellar and porches; excellent well of water. Will be sold cheap. Apply to or address Rev. George I. Uhler, Oakland, Md.

An editor, newly married, asks: "What is the difference between a honeycomb, a honeymoon and a pretty girl?" Another editor, who is a confirmed old bachelor, answers: "A honeycomb is a small cell, a honeymoon is a sell and a pretty girl is a damsel."

The hotels in this section are almost overrun with guests. Oakland is enjoying the most prosperous season in a long number of years and as a result our farmers are finding a ready market for everything they produce at prices somewhat advanced over former years.

Mr. and Mrs. Nelson and family, formerly of this place, now of Chicago, spent the Fourth with Mrs. Nelson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Louis Marx, on Douglas avenue, and other friends. They will also visit Mr. Nelson's parents, Mr. and Mrs. James D. Nelson at Oakland en route on their return home.—Lonaconing Star.

Commencing Tuesday the Baltimore and Ohio railroad resumed the old pay car system west of Cumberland. The check system has been in vogue on the Baltimore & Ohio for about a year, during which time hundreds of dollars have been paid out by the company for revenue stamps on the checks.

When the farmers have a daily delivery at their doors, telephones in their houses, trolley cars pass their gates, electric lights on their fence posts, macadam roads smooth as asphalt, they will need only a few other things to make life thoroughly enjoyable, such as the cows milking themselves, the pigs feeding by automatic process and committing suicide when ripe for market, self churning cream and electric harvesters.—New Cumberland Independent.

If you are so fortunate as to have old folks in the house, says an exchange, see to it that they have the coziest and sunniest corner, and a goodly portion of the best that can be afforded of comfort, convenience and beauty; that aged blood may be kept warm and cheerful; that failing limbs may have restful repose, and that dim eyes that have watched over you and yours through so many toilsome years may see around them the ever present evidence of faithful and grateful care.

The new three cent piece to be issued by the Government has already been styled the doughnut coin, by reason of the fact that the piece is to have a hole in the center. The innovation in the coinage of a part of Uncle Sam's money was deemed necessary from the fact that the coin is the exact size and of the same material as the present five cent piece. It was impossible to keep the old style three cent piece in circulation because of the aptitude of the people to mistake it for the dime or ten cent piece.

Miss Ethelyn Houghton, of Washington, is visiting Miss Orley Dunham.

Mr. Samuel G. Steyer, of near Mt. Lake Park, was in the city to-day on business.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

Mrs. Kidd and daughter, Mrs. Beatson, mother and sister of Mr. W. C. Kidd, are here on a visit to friends.

Mr. W. M. Junkins, of near Deer Park, passed through Oakland this morning on his way to visit in Ohio.

Thornton Sliger, Esq., spent Sunday in Oakland with his son, Cashier R. E. Sliger, of the First National Bank.

Mr. J. Frank Legge and son, of Washington, who spent several days here last week with the family of Geo. W. Legge, have returned home.

Attorneys Fred. A. Thayer and E. H. Sincell, of Oakland, and Mr. M. N. Wilson, of Wilson, are on a fishing expedition up on the Dry Fork Railroad this week.

Mr. Austin Brown, of D. E. Bolden & Co., furniture dealers, spent a day or two last week in Wheeling, where he attended a meeting of the Undertakers' Association of West Virginia.

When your neighbor reads your paper suggest to him that there is a very much better and decenter way for him to get the news—subscribe for the paper himself and pay for it.

PEACHES. Dixon & Kelso having contracted with three of the largest growers in the East will make the peach business a specialty this season. Peaches will commence to arrive July 17 to 20. 2t

Willie Hailer, who was employed some weeks as assistant baker at the Grafton Hotel, has returned to his home in Oakland and has a position at the Oakland Hotel.

A controversy is in progress between Rev. H. H. Flick, of the Lutheran church, in Manchester, Carroll county, and his congregation. Rev. Flick was a year or two ago pastor of the Lutheran congregations of Accident and Friendsville.

Harper Bartlett, son of Dr. and Mrs. E. H. Bartlett, of Oakland, who recently returned home from Clarksburg, W. Va., expects to open an office here next week where he will carry on the lumber business. He is a sterling young man and his friends here hope for his success.

Mr. Henry Sausman, of Grantsville, Md., spent July 4th in Salisbury. Our friend Sausman is now owner of the Henry Wagner farm near Grantsville, and we are glad to know that he is prospering. He is a first rate, whole-souled fellow.—Salisbury Star.

Cherries are about all gone although there are a few being brought into market. The crop was a good one and a great many have been marketed in town. The raspberries are pouring in in large quantities and they were never of better quality than they are this year.

In many towns and cities the horses have been equipped with bonnets but the horses in Oakland are receiving nothing in addition to the old diet of a gad well applied when they find themselves overcome by the heat and the heavy loads with which they have to contend.

Mr. James O. Cleveland was taken suddenly ill while engaged in work at Eglon on last Saturday morning and had to be conveyed to his home here where for a time it was thought his ailment would result seriously, but a rest of a few days has set him on his feet again. Mr. Cleveland has two good contracts of plastering at Eglon which he will complete shortly.

Next week a beautiful gold shield, bearing on its front the name of the recipient, and on its back the name of the donors, will be presented to Capt. J. M. Shorts, at this place, chief detective of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, by his assistants, Charles R. Lilley, H. Metz, William Findly, S. H. Sams and C. Headly. The chief has his office at Fairmont, and the above named officers do the detective work over Baltimore and Ohio lines between Clarksburg, Grafton, Belington and points east as far as Piedmont.

At one of the farmers' institutes in Iowa, last winter, one of the speakers said: "As a rule the farmer has no firmer friends than the county press. The home paper is distinctly the farmers' own paper, supported, directly and indirectly by the farmers, who compose the backbone of the printer's subscription list and largely for what the enterprising merchant advertises. Let us not forget our friends. Let us see that our subscription is paid a year in advance. The man or the paper that fights my battle shall have my support. The merchants who advertise are the ones who make it possible for us to get a good local paper, and the men who are too penurious to advertise and help support the local press have no right to the farmer's patronage. I propose to go to a live advertiser and a man who will do his share in supporting the local press, thus contributing to my support, rather than buy from a man who proposes to take all and give nothing in return."

Miss Almira Mitchell arrived here last night from her old home in Pennsylvania.

A. D. Naylor has a few second-hand Buggies, Surreys, and a 3-seated Wagon for sale cheap.

Truman West and ex-Mayor Jamison have each improved their properties by painting and other repairs.

Policeman R. Harry West, who was sick last week and in consequence unfit for duty, resumed his beat on Sunday night.

Mr. and Mrs. David T. Enlow, of near town, have as their guest Mr. George C. Sparks, of Washington, D. C.

Go to Townshend's and get 12½c. lawns and percales for 10c.; 10c. lawns for 8c.; 10c. ginghams for 8c. Clothing at almost your own price. 50c. shirt waists at 35c. to 45c. 18-4t

Judge David W. Sloan went down to Cumberland this morning on business. He expects to return to-night. His condition has greatly improved during his stay here.

Miss Mae Hamill is over at Blaine on a visit to relatives and friends. She was accompanied thence by her brother Roy who returned to Oakland Monday afternoon.

Mr. Chas. D. Smith has gone to Terra Alta and opened an office for the practice of law. He is followed thence by the best wishes of his many Oakland friends.

A new merry-go-round has been set up at the east end of town. While the children and young folks may be delighted with this manner of sport older and sterner heads are not looking upon it with much favor owing to the crowd of people around the machine and the consequent noise.

Mr. and Mrs. H. Allen Ison and little daughter, of Washington, D. C., are in Oakland occupying the residence of the late Dr. Benjamin Ison on Fourth street. Mrs. Dr. Ison, who visited relatives and friends in Parkersburg for some weeks, has returned to Oakland.

Albert Lee, colored, now of Washington, D. C., but a number of years ago employed here as a barber by Handy Gibson, was in Oakland a few days ago selling a hair restorer to those affected with baldness. He has a number of letters from prominent people in Washington recommending his preparation as a sure cure.

Mr. L. D. Rowley, publisher of the News at Maynard, Iowa, accompanied by his brother, was in Oakland two or three days last week. The brothers have an interest in a large tract of land in this county and were here for the purpose of looking after it.

Here is a conundrum which a very pretty girl in this town sprung on an old bachelor: "What two words can you make out of enough—that is not enough?" Of course he gave it up. "Why 'one hug,' you goose!" was the answer.

The wheat harvest in this county has been well under way for several days past. The majority of our farmers have finished cutting the grain and some have theirs already under cover. None has yet been threshed and until that is done nothing definite can be said as to the yield, but indications point to a crop slightly above the average.

There are a number of towns in the county where readable and newsy letters for this paper could be gotten up by those whose time "drags heavily upon their hands." Every village of the county should be represented weekly in these columns. To those who will correspond with us we will furnish the necessary stationery and stamps and also a copy of the paper free so long as the correspondence is continued. We already have a number of writers who contribute letters from their communities occasionally and these are highly appreciated by the editor and his readers. Almost without exception the towns that are represented in the columns of the local paper are more directly benefited than the publisher.

A novel appeal to the equity side of a court of law has been made by a man in Michigan whose wife seems inclined to fickleness, and domestic peace appears to be endangered by an intruding male friend. Instead of waiting until his happy home should be made a wreck, and then suing the wrecker for damages or seeking a remedy in the Divorce Court or by the speedier method of private revenge, the individual referred to has applied for an injunction to restrain the intruder from visiting the woman in the case, or speaking to her, or communicating with her in any way, either directly or indirectly through the instrumentality of third persons. The extension of the government by injunction to the protection of conjugal felicity would not involve the establishment of an absolutely new legal precedent. In former times the Ecclesiastical Courts used to exercise a very wide jurisdiction over domestic relations and punish contumacy by imprisonment of the offenders until they had purged themselves of contempt. The proceedings of the fearsome Michigander amount in fact to a return to first principles.

Cashier Scott T. Jones left on Monday night for a business trip to Indianapolis, Ind.

Mrs. John Brown and daughter, of near Kingwood, are here as the guests of Dr. and Mrs. W. H. Ravenscraft.

Miss Grace Robinson, of Baltimore, is here as the guest of her brother, Dr. John G. Robinson, and other relatives.

Services will be held Sunday morning and evening at the usual hours in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, Rev. George I. Uhler pastor.

The infant son of Mr. and Mrs. John T. Mitchell has been very dangerously ill for some days but at present is somewhat improved.

Mrs. Marshall Feathers, of Parsons, W. Va., has been in Oakland the past several days the guest of the Misses Fringer on Second street.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Ravenscraft, of Fairmont, W. Va., stopped in Oakland a few hours Tuesday on their way home from the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, N. Y.

There is no royal road to fortune. Every man who starts out to achieve business success must expect to find plenty of hard, uphill work on the way. Advertising will not make a fortune for you in a day, but if done judiciouely, it will pay handsomely in the long run. If the business is of a kind that can be politably increased, it will pay to advertise it.

The Social Event of the Season.

The ball given at the Oakland Hotel Saturday evening July 13, by D. Edward Offutt, jr., of Oakland, and Maurice Tyson Ellicott, of Baltimore, was by far the greatest social event of the season. The ball room was beautifully decorated with potted plants and cut flowers. The music was furnished by the famous Morgantown orchestra. The hospitality of Mine Host Headley of the Oakland Hotel, has always been known but never before has he exerted himself so much for the welfare and pleasure of his guests as he did on this occasion.

The wit and beauty of the ladies present did much to make the ball one long to be remembered.

Among those present were:

Mr. and Mrs. S. V. Nicholas, J. D. Nicholas, Misses Burns, of Coshocton, O.; Mrs. E. H. Gold, Mr. and Mrs. Wright, of Belpre, O.; Mrs. E. H. White, of Parkersburg; Mr. and Mrs. N. Gutman, Mr. and Mrs. George Leatherberry, Miss Porter, Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Kraus, Mr. T. C. Davis, W. C. Kidd, T. B. Scott, Maurice Tyson Ellicott, Mr. and Mrs. Nottingham, Jos. R. Wilson, Mr. and Mrs. F. Suter, Miss Stewart, of Baltimore; Mr. and Mrs. Lansburg, Mr. and Mrs. Nealy, Mr. and Mrs. Eledora Infante, of Washington; Mr. and Mrs. M. W. Mack, of Cincinnati; Mrs. E. F. Hartley, of Fairmont; Mrs. H. J. Summerville, Cumberland; F. A. Blair, J. H. Man, of Chicago; A. Taylor, Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Ast, of Grafton, Mr. and Mrs. I. Hirsh, of Cumberland; Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Beckley, A. Hiller, of Pittsburg; Mr. and Mrs. C. E. Headley, of Grafton; Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Watson, Mr. and Mrs. H. G. Greerm, Mr. Fleming, of Fairmont; Mr. and Mrs. W. B. McMechen, of Wheeling; B. W. Hancock, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. Robins, of Dayton, O.; Mr. Worthington, of Winchester, Va.; Miss Anna McQuay, of Mountain Lake Park. The following Oaklanders were present: Mrs. D. E. Offutt, Mr. and Mrs. Norman S. Heindel, Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Sliger, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Scott, Misses Virginia Johnson, Anna Grant, Josie Robinson, Bess Offutt, Nell Offutt, Margaret Sincell, Gertrude Sincell; Messrs. W. A. Sturgiss, Bowie Johnson, Semmes Hamill, Stewart Hamill, Austin Brew, John T. Sincell, Percy H. Veitch, D. Edward Offutt jr., Will Weber

Close of the Camp Meeting.

Monday night the great Interdenominational Camp Meeting at Mountain Lake Park closed with a prayer and praise service and amid great manifestation of the Divine power.

On Sunday the Park was almost overrun with people who went there to attend services. Had the day been clear instead of rainy and stormy it is thought by many in attendance that the present tabernacle would have been wholly insufficient to accommodate the crowd. As it was the house was almost packed.

The meeting Monday night was attended by an immense crowd from all sections, and was the most successful camp meeting ever held at the Park.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., July 8, 1901.

Chaddie Hager, appointed Democratic Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 29, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead James Bower is hereby appointed, to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 4 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand and souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD
CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA
AND
RETURN $50.00 FROM CHICAGO.

Correspondingly Low Rates from Intermediate Points. Tickets on sale July 5th to 13th.

Personally Conducted Tour

to SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., account International Epworth League Convention.

(A limited number only will be accommodated on this Tour, insuring perfect comfort to members of party.) Illustrated Itinerary and full particulars upon application.

Very Low Rates to COLORADO Points all Summer.

Quickest and best line to the Famous
BEAUMONT TEXAS OIL FIELDS.

Superior Service to OKLAHOMA and all points North, West and South.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER, T. P. A.
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Notice to Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, either in person or by deputy, will be in each of the Election Districts in Garrett county, Md., to collect and receive taxes at the time and place following:

July 5, E. A. Wimer's store, McHenry.
July 6, W. A. Smith's store, Hoyes.
July 8, R. A. Liston's store, Selbysport.
July 9 and 10, J. H. Cuppet's store, Friendsville.
July 11, J. L. Englehart's store, Accident.
July 12, W. M. Lohr's farm, Cove.
July 13, Harry Leathen's store, Keyser.
July 15, C. M. Livengood's Hotel, Grantsville.
July 16, Thomas Johnson's, District, No. 9.
July 17, P. E. Finzel's store, Finzel.
July 18, Thomas Layman's Farm.
July 19, R. E. Garlitz's store, Avilton.
July 20, J. H. Gregg's Mills, District No. 11.
July 22, C. J. Otto's, New Germany.
July 23 and 24, G. W. Engle's store, Bittinger.
July 25, Company store, Crellin.
July 26, T. G. Palmer's office, Hutton.
July 29, Merritt Wilson's, No. 8.
July 30, Mrs. Browning's, Gorman.
July 31 and August 1, J. H. Rafter's store, Kitzmillerville.
August 2 and 3, Wm. Moody's Bloomington.
August 5 and 6, Wade H. Lohr's, Swanton.
August 7 and 8, S. P. Specht's store, Deer Park.
August 9, L. A. Rudisill's office, Mt. Lake Park.

The Treasurer's office in Oakland will be closed from July 3rd to August 10th, 1901, inclusive.

N. B.—By an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1890, being chapter 566, it is provided that all county texes shall be due and payable on the 1st day of September next succeeding the date of levy thereof and on all county taxes paid on or before the said 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed; and after the 1st of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid; the Treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on all tax bills for county purposes regulating in the manner aforesaid and shall note same upon the receipts given for taxes so paid; but the discount allowed on county tax by this section shall not be made to any person or corporate institute unless the whole amount of State and county taxes due by such person or corporate institution for the current year be paid when the same is made.

WM. M. LOHR,
Treasurer of Garrett county, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands through which the following road is prayed to be changed, said road so prayed to be changed is the county road leading from Oakland to Crellin, said change to be in at or near where the run (that comes from Hesen's saw mill) crosses the road and running through the lands of John Bradley, to intersect the county road leading from Charles Shaffer's to Oakland at or near the bottom of the hill, a distance of about one-fourth mile, and examine whether the said county road should be changed, will meet on the 3rd day of August, 1901, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said change of said county road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

E. E. SOLLARS,
T. W. CASTEEL,
Examiners.

What it Cures

COUGHS. BRONCHITIS. RAWNESS.
COLDS. LOSS OF VOICE. SORENESS
HOARSENESS. LARYNGITIS. TICKLING.

PINE AND TERPIN COUGH SYRUP

Is the new remedy that is astounding the medical world with the rapidity and permanency of its cures—it never fails—one dose relieves while a few more cures—price, 25 cents a bottle.

LOGAN DRUG COMPANY,
At all Druggists. WHEELING, W. VA.

After Twenty Years

By William Wendham.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

MAJ. GILLESPIE, was distinctly old-fashioned. "Old-fashioned and out of date and irritable and cranky, by George, sir," said he to himself as he watched the blue flames struggle unsuccessfully to leap into something like cheerfulness. "Even my fire won't burn. I've jawed every man in the office to-day, quarreled with every client I have seen, bullied the janitor and spent the intervening time in hating myself. I guess Eastman is right. I ought to take a vacation, and see if I can't get into some sort of harmony with things in general."

What was it all worth, anyway—these days and nights of toil? To be sure, he was successful, far beyond the measure that comes to the average man, his reputation was high in the profession—the greatest cases came to him, and he generally won them. His name stood high in the community, and honors on the bench or in political life waited him at any time he would accept them. But these things held no fascination for him. For 20 years his life had been centered in this old-fashioned back office. He had enjoyed no social life and little companionship with his fellows, excepting his relations with his partners, his clients and his opponents in the courtroom. He trembled to think of the result should he lose interest in his work.

And yet it had not been always so. Nor was he by nature designed for a life apart from his fellows. In his younger days he had been a prince of good fellows, and had numbered his friends by the score.

But this was before the broken chapter in his life, and that broken chapter had changed all the rest of the story. He thought as he tried to coax some warmth out of the grate how different it all might have been. He arose and locked the door leading to the outer office, and then he went to the old-fashioned safe, and, unlocking a drawer, took from it an old daguerrotype. Going back to his seat, he contemplated the portrait long and earnestly. It was the face of a beautiful, high-spirited, impetuous girl.

This was the face which had caused the broken chapter. As he looked at the old daguerrotype his features softened and he lived over again the old days when all the horizon was rose-colored. This was away back when he was a boy. He was accounted a smart boy and was making strides in his profession, and every effort and every ambition was centered upon Amy Lester. She liked him, too—there was no doubt of that. Even now, at a distance of 20 years and with the keenest knowledge of men and affairs, he did not doubt that she loved him in the old days. They had been youthful sweethearts and had built all the air castles of two lives upon a united future. Then came the firing on Sumter and the call to arms by President Lincoln. The blood of the major quickened a little even at this distance of a quarter of a century as he recollected the thrill with which that call had been received. A delirious month or two and he had found himself at the front. There rolled before the memory of the major all the excitement, the dangers, the deprivations, the heroisms of those dreadful four years; his steady advancement until he was mustered out a major of volunteers.

The perspiration rolled from his face as he remembered his homecoming and found that Amy had plighted her troth to another—one far richer than he and the choice of her family. He had never asked her to marry him. He had always supposed it to be understood. They had written continually, and although her letters had grown more formal he had been so engrossed in his soldierly profession that he had scarcely had the time to wonder what the cause was. So the full knowledge of the truth, when he arrived home, nearly took him off his feet. His great pride kept him from doing anything to prevent her marriage, even had it been possible, and so she had faded from his life, and with her all the joy and all the hope he had ever cherished. Then followed the weary years in the profession to which he had turned.

A knock aroused the dreamer, and hastily stuffing the picture in his pocket he opened the door. It was a card from one of his most profitable clients, for whom he had recently won a hardly-contested lawsuit.

"Show him in," grunted the major, grudgingly.

Accordingly in bustled Peter Vandelmeier, prosperous, pushing, self-complacent, but apparently somewhat worried.

"You have got to get possession of that Fletcher property, that's all there is to it, major," said Vandelmeier, as he seated himself and mopped his brow. "Oh, I know you are not a sheriff or a marshal or anything of that kind," he went on, as he observed the major's rising ire, "but what good will our decision do us unless we get possession of the property? There is a funny condition down there. A chit of a girl—grandchild of old man Fletcher—is in possession, and she seems to be too much for the officers. They have failed utterly to get her out and have about given it up as a bad job. We have but two more days, according to the verdict. Now, I want you to go to Cherrydale yourself. You will have all the officers you want, but they are frightened and need somebody to direct them. Name your own fee, of course, but you've got to go. You know how important it is to our general plan that we get possession."

The result was that Maj. Gillespie found himself the next afternoon at the depot of the little town of Cherrydale, some 40 miles from home.

After making some inquiries at the country tavern he decided to begin operations at once, so as to end the disagreeable task as soon as possible, and was driven to the Fletcher homestead on the outskirts of the town. He went to get the lay of the land and left the officers sent with him at the tavern. He found an old-fashioned country place—a big, homelike house surrounded with great trees in the midst of a farm of great natural beauty, rolling meadows and fruitful fields traversed by a rippling brook.

In response to the knocker a grim old woman opened the front door far enough to let the major see that it was fastened with a chain inside, and in response to his request to see Miss Fletcher was told to wait on the porch and she would see him there. As the major stood smiling at the crude attempt to thwart the edict of the law, and inwardly fuming at the trivial necessity for taking him so far from his snug bachelor apartments, the door opened and immediately he heard the chain rattle into place again. Turning, he lifted his hat to the girlish figure in the doorway. It was a perfect type of budding womanhood, the major noted briefly, just before his eyes rested on her face. Then with a start the hat dropped from his hand and he grasped the railing for support.

"Amy!" he gasped, his hand seeking his brow with a gesture of bewilderment. For there before him in the flesh stood Amy Lester, the sweetheart of his boybood, just as she had looked on the day he had left her to go to the war. Not a day older, not a feature changed! And he knew she had died these ten years ago. Had he lost his mind? Had paresis overtaken him in the prime of life? He stood transfixed, with trembling limbs and staring eyes.

"Amy Fletcher, if you please, sir," replied the young woman, with some spirit. "And what is your business here, may I ask?"

"I must beg your pardon," said he, with courtly grace. "You reminded me so strongly of an old and very dear friend."

"You were a friend of mamma's, then?" inquired the girl. "Her name was Amy Lester."

"Yes; she was once a very dear friend of mine," replied the major, gravely.

The girl, who had been standing defiantly, with eyes flashing, softened visibly.

"Oh, I'm so glad you came. I'm in the most dreadful trouble, and they are trying to take the old place away from me; but they won't do it. I'll never let them. I'll die first. Grandpa told me never to let them do it, and that they had no right, and I won't. But it's so hard for a girl who don't know anything about business or law or anything to combat all those men. I need a friend. Indeed I do, and if you were a friend of mamma's you will be my friend; I know you will. You will help me, won't you? You are so big and strong. And you know all about these horrid business things; I know you do. And—and you—you are kind—and honest; I know you are. Tell me—tell me what to do."

"Tell me all about it," he said, with a tremor in his voice.

They sat down on the rustic bench together—and the major's tall, soldierly figure thrilled as it had not for 20 years, and he could not realize that it was not the other woman—the woman of 20 years ago—who was seated beside him, as she had been so often in the old days. She told him her pathetic story—how she had been left an orphan to her grandfather's care, and how he had died a year ago in the midst of a quarrel with a big land syndicate that sought to acquire his property, and had told her that the negotiations had not been closed, although some papers had passed. He warned her never to yield possession of the property. Then there had been lawsuits, and now they were trying to eject her from the house in which she was born and to deprive her of all she had in the world. Going further into the matter, the major learned many things that had puzzled him during the trial of the case involving the property, and discovered how a great injustice had been wrought.

"Do not be afraid," said he, rising abruptly. "You will be harassed no more."

He went straight back to the city, and there was an interview with Vandelmeier—the stormiest, it is said, that ever occurred in the major's old-fashioned back room—and the result was that certain checks bearing the major's signature passed to Vandelmeier and the deed to the Fletcher estate passed to Amy Fletcher.

There was the glow of long-deferred youth on his face and the agility of a boy in his soldierly carriage as he sprang up the steps with the deeds in his pocket. She did not entertain him on the veranda this time, and before the day was over she invited him to enjoy a short season on the estate he had saved for her—she did not know at what cost. He remembered Eastman's admonition that he needed a vacation, and he decided to spend it.

There really is no need of telling the rest of this story, for the major was in the very prime of life, despite his iron-gray hair, for a life of moderation and regularity had left him in perfect health, and she had been drawn to him from the first by that subtle attraction always felt by daughters for the unsuccessful suitor for the mother's hand. As for the major, he never could realize that it was not his Amy of old to whom he was paying court.

It might be added that after the wedding the major, greatly to the delight of his partners, abandoned the old-fashioned office and the firm moved into palatial quarters in the newest building in the city.

RUIN WASHINGTON MONUMENT

Relic Hunting Fiends Deface and Destroy Delicate Carvings in Wanton Fashion.

The Washington monument is badly scarred by the depredations of the souvenir fiends. Inside the memorial slabs presented by the states in the union at the time of the monument's erection and by various societies have suffered most. There are more than 150 of these, and many of them are in a sad condition of mutilation. Missing heads, arms, legs and darpery bear eloquent witness to the manners of visitors. Just exactly what value, real or sentimental, the left ear lobe of the Goddess of Prosperity, for instance, can have for any person is hard for a sane man to understand. Somebody got it, however, says the New York Sun.

Most of the slabs presented by the states bear simply names and dates in large, bold letters that defy umbrellas and the like, and these remain untouched, save by pencils that mark their owners' names. But of the delicate carving there is little left. The handsomest slab, though one of the smallest, measuring 3x5 feet, is that presented by the American Medical association, representing a group of the fathers of medicine. It is about midway up the monument, about where climbers rest, and about four feet from the floor, a convenient reach. Hence the condition of the figures, two headless and three armless.

Two landings above is a slab representing a locomotive. The locomotive looks as if it had got the worst of a collision. The souvenir hunters did it. Not far away is a large slab occupying the center of one wall for a height of six feet. In its present condition it would do for a puzzle picture. Before the enthusiastic tourists got at it with their umbrellas and canes it represented a fire engine of the old type. A volunteer fire department of some city presented it. Probably the name of the city is in some old record. It isn't on the slab. Once it was, but the souvenir sharks got it.

One thing they haven't got is the fine carving of a pelican, the symbol of the state of Louisiana. The reason is that instead of being a bas-relief the pelican is carved in the stone, intaglio fashion, and no predatory umbrella can dig that out.

When most of the vandalism in the monument occurred no one knows, but it probably took place before the checking system was there, compelling visitors to leave all implements of destruction before going up the monument.

At Mount Vernon there is a small army of guards on the lookout for the worker of souvenir iniquity. In Washington's old home there is one thing that strikes the eye by its contrast to the prevailing simplicity. It is the carved mantel piece of Carrara marble in the dining-room. Even with watchers in every room some individual managed to get in his work and knock off the head of a galloping deer in the center of the group. The animal remained headless for months. Then one day back came the head in a little box, postmarked Paris. The culprit had realized the evil of his ways. Said the accompanying note:

"It did not occur to me in my own country, where everything is so perfectly preserved, the outrage that it is to mutilate historic places for relics. Here is nothing is preserved; everything is chipped and marred and broken by travelers like myself. I return herewith, etc." Signed—not at all.

The head was stuck on, the glue stained the marble and the milk-white deer has a yellow streak around his neck.

Mistaken for a Tramp.

Appearances are often deceitful and even monarchs may be mistaken for paupers. It is related that once, not long since, when King Edward of England was prince of Wales, he was staying with Leopold Rothschild near Leighton Buzzard and followed the hunt one day. About lunch time he found himself alone near Berkhamsted, feeling very hungry and without immediate prospect of getting any food. Recollecting, however, that the Smith Dorriens' place, Haresfoot, was somewhere within easy reach, he rode over, found the house and rang the front door bell. A footman appeared. "Will you kindly tell your master that the prince of Wales is outside and would like some lunch?" he said. "Walker!" answered the man and banged the door in his face.—N. Y. Sun.

Edison's Deafness.

The Electrical Review says that an ear specialist recently visited Thomas A. Edison and offered to cure him of his deafness. "What!" exclaimed Mr. Edison, "and give up the great advantage I have over you fellows! Why, I need it in my business—for, you see, my business is thinking, and, no matter what the rest of you are doing or how much noise you are making, it doesn't bother me, and I am able to concentrate my mind fully upon the subject in hand without interruption. Give up an advantage like that! Not much, until, possibly, I get so old I cannot work any longer."

Long Time Between Showers.

The dryest place on the earth is the little town of Payta, on the coast of Peru, where seven years is the average interval between two rains. In old times the water supply of Payta was brought down from the mountains every night by a herd of little donkeys, who returned in the cool of the evening.—N. Y. Post.

BEING BORN LUCKY.

Its Benefits Illustrated by the Good Fortune of a Man Who Tunneled a Hill.

The men around the table were telling stories about being born lucky or vice versa, says the Detroit Free Press.

"And," concluded a Chicago drummer who had been telling of an unlucky friend of his, "what did he do at last but gather together what little money he had left and buy a lot in a western oil district, before prices boomed. He started to sink his well, with just enough money on the mortgage to finish it, if he had luck, and he struck a rock before he had gone 20 feet. He drove away at it and kept driving for a hundred feet, breaking drills and costing money, till he finally threw up his hands, gave the property to his creditors and killed himself. The creditors investigated the boring and found that my friend had struck a petrified tree, upright in the earth and had bored for a hundred feet right into it. They moved the drill only four feet to the right and within two weeks had tapped a well that was good for 300 barrels a day."

There was a chorus of sighs at the sad fate of this unlucky one, and a Philadelphia railroad man began something more cheerful.

"I had a friend," he said, "whose luck was just the reverse of the gentleman's whose history we have listened to with so much pleasure—I mean sorrow"—the Philadelphian was getting mixed.

"That's all right," laughed the Chicago man, "I know what you mean."

"And he made his ten-strike on a case of boring, just as the other one did not. Which shows that fortune is truly a fickle goddess. My friend Smith, I'll call him, had luck always as a boy, and as soon as he graduated he got a good job, although he was not a brilliant man at all. Which, however, is no sign, because some of the best jobs—that pay the best, I mean—are held by men who get them by luck and not by genius. He became a promoter and schemer later, and went in for himself, coming out of every undertaking with more or less success, and never losing money. It made no difference to Smith what kind of a proposition came before him; if he thought there was anything in it, he did not let it get away. The one particular instance I have in mind was the driving of a tunnel on a southwestern railroad. He didn't know any more about that sort of business than a pulpit knows about practical politics, but he thought it was a chance to make something, and he went in with a contractor, who had only done small jobs. Their bid was so low that if Smith hadn't had rich and influential friends he would have lost it. He had made considerable money in his ventures and he put that up also as his backing. The tunnel was to cost about half a million dollars and Smith stood to win $50,000 at his own estimation, and to lose $100,000, according to estimates of the contractors who had put in higher bids. There was to be $100 a day bonus for every day ahead of time that the tunnel was completed, and a forfeit of the same amount for delay.

"Well, he got everything ready and set his men to work at one end of the tunnel only, for the first month. Then he expected to put on a night and day force at both ends, for Smith was a hustler. However, his luck was with him, as usual, and it wasn't necessary to hustle. Before his sappers had gone 50 feet into the hill, and they began almost at the face of a cliff, I'll be jiggered if they didn't break through into a cave 40 feet high and 20 wide and running that size half way through the hill. It got down small again for a hundred feet and then widened again and ran big to within 50 feet of daylight on the far side of the hill. There was some work to do to put it into shape, but it hardly amounted to anything, as tunneling goes, and Smith not only made a big thing on his contract direct, but the bonus on extra days was nearly enough for a modest man to retire from business on."

"And yet," said a man of years, "you hear people say that there is no such thing as luck in the making of a man's success."

Albert Edward Unchanged.

He is one of the heavy swells and struts. Nothing pleases him so much as to hold forth eloquently before new acquaintances. Old ones can't bear him. He had just returned from Europe, where he won something over 12,000 "puns" "over" the "Darby." He said to a delighted audience at the club that the impression sent abroad that the king is not the same old prince of Wales is erroneous.

"The whole world seems bent on making him a second Prince Hal-Henry V. It is said that he has gone back on his old Falstaffs. Not a bit of it. He is the same Albert Edward. When I met him the other day he treated me just as he always did."

Some one at the pool table was mean enough to ask: "How was that?" To which the plunger "over" the "Darby" replied: "He didn't notice me at all." —N. Y. Press.

Many Are Built That Way.

"My aim," said the confidence man, "is to give happiness. In one way I may claim to be a philanthropist."

"A philanthropist!" exclaimed the listener.

"Certainly," was the answer. "If you have followed the various fakes and swindles of the present day, you surely must have noticed that some people are happy only when they are being properly humbugged."—Chicago Post.

WIDE-AWAKE FARM BOY.

Evidently This Youngster Is Determined to Make Agriculture a Profitable Occupation.

This article is for the boys; those live, up-to-date lads that like the farm and its stock. The boy that it is about lives in Portage county, and I know that you will be interested in hearing about him. Last fall the writer attended the Chagrin Falls fair, and on the road from that fair we passed a boy driving a pair of calves hitched to a wagon. He was sitting on the spring seat, whip in hand, as dignified as any grown man. The calves were well broken, and they responded perfectly to a word and a light tap of the whip which he carried in his hand. We noticed that he never beat them or yelled at them, as some grown persons do when they drive oxen.

We thought: "Now, here is a nice picture," so it was arranged that Harry Stebbins (for this is the boy's name) should bring his calves and wagon over to Mr. John Gould's the next day and have their photograph taken. The next forenoon Harry was on hand with his outfit, and Mr. Gould borrowed a neighbor's children to help fill the wagon, for that is the only way John has any children of his own. The sun was just right on the south side of the windmill, derrick and large maple in the yard. Sitting there in the morning sunlight, Harry looked as pleased as a "sure-enough" farmer. Snap went the camera, and the picture was taken as quick as a flash, and you can see all just as they looked.

You will think it must have taken Harry lots of time to break these calves. Yes, it did, but then boys have lots of odd hours, and Harry used his in training his calves, besides forming the habit of industry.

HARRY AND HIS TEAM.

The managers of the fair invited Harry to bring his trained calves to the fair and go in the procession in the ring, and gave him a premium for doing so. That was why he was feeling so gay and proud coming home that evening from the county fair. His little yoke of steers, one year old, had won a prize all through his own efforts.

One day Harry's father wanted some bran from the feed store, two miles away, and Harry said he could go after it with his wagon and calves. There was a big hill to come up on the road home, and Harry's father thought that they could not haul more than 200 or 300 pounds, but Mr. Stebbins was surprised to see them bring home 700 pounds. Some time before Christmas Harry sold his calves for $45 to a man in the neighborhood who wanted a young yoke of oxen for his farm. He is breaking another pair, getting them ready for work on the farm. Apparently this boy is cultivating a love for farm industries that will make the right sort of a farmer.—George E. Scott, in Ohio Farmer.

Our Sturdy Country Boys.

There is no question of the influence which the sturdy outdoor life has upon country boys; and the fact that the life is harnessed to regular, imperative duties is to the boy's advantage. He is developed gradually and healthily, his mind following his physical strength rather than the reverse. And around him, for his everyday observation and study, are the very best object lessons possible for a boy's developing life. He associates familiarly with nature during his work and recreation; and even during his sleep, the air which enters his open chamber window is laden with the odors of apple blossoms, or the harvest season, or, perhaps, is the pure, stimulating atmosphere of the white, undulating winter fields. But it all goes toward making him stronger, sturdier, more self-reliant, more ambitious, more observing. He is healthy all through, physically, mentally, morally.—Farm Journal.

Remedy for Duck Cholera.

Mix up a batch of Douglass mixture and use, according to following directions. It is one of the best poultry tonics: Dissolve one pound of copperas (sulphate of iron) in two gallons water, and add one ounce sulphuric acid. The latter must be carefully handled, as it is a dangerous poison. The dose of the mixture is one teaspoonful to each quart of drinking water. Do not use except in cases of disease, or when it is threatened. Good in cases of roup and cholera and as a disinfectant. Keep the ducks in a well sheltered place; don't allow them to get wet. Feed clean grain and plenty of green grass.—Ohio Farmer.

By all means use water fountains, or at least some form of water vessel that the flock cannot be foul with their feet or otherwise. Set in shady places and fill daily with fresh water.

The ram controls the extenal points such as color, size and wool, and the ewe the disposition, constitution and vitality.

FLY BRUSH FOR CATTLE.

A Simple Arrangement Which Enables Stock to Wage War Against Insect Enemies.

In the summer it is just as necessary to provide cattle with a place in the pasture field where they may brush off the flies as it is to furnish shade, food or drink. The device in the illustration shows a good arrangement for this purpose. It consists first of four posts set in the form of a rectangle 12 feet long and eight feet wide. At one end the posts are about 5½ feet high, at the other only three feet. Across each end of the rectangle an eight-inch board is nailed at the top of the posts. In the upper edge of these boards are cut notches about four inches deep and 2½ inches wide. Beginning next to the posts these notches are cut at intervals of 18 or 20 inches.

Now take boards four inches wide, 13 feet long and not heavier than one inch thick. Arrange these in pairs, as many pairs as there are notches in each end board, and bore holes through them at intervals of one foot, preparatory to bolting them together. Brush which has been collected from the thicket is now placed between these boards and clamped fast. For the sake of clearness only one of these brush is shown in the illustration. The clamps thus formed are now placed in the notches prepared for them in the end boards, with the brush hanging down. They are held down by a narrow board nailed across the tops of the posts at each end.

ARRANGEMENT OF THE BRUSH.

The device is now complete. The difference in height at the two ends makes it suitable for cattle of all sizes. The brush will last for a long time, but should they become much worn, or old and brash, they may be easily replaced. —Orange Judd Farmer.

DRESSING SHEEPSKINS.

Not a very Intricate Operation If Executed According to the Directions Given Herewith.

To tan sheep hides with the wool on and to dye wool on the same, spread skin, flesh side up, when taken off. Sprinkle pulverized alum over it, followed by a little saltpeter and plenty of common salt. Roll up and put where it will not freeze. Two ounces each of alum and salt will tan a sheep or other similar sized skin. When the skin is tanned the flesh on it will rub off easily. Then nail the skin to boards in the sun, stretching it tight, and apply a little neatsfoot oil, which should afterward be worked out with a wedge-shaped piece of wood. The skin is then wet until soft and then worked until dry. If it is not worked and rubbed it will dry harsh and stiff. For sheep and lamb skins a strong suds is usually first made with hot water, in which the skins are washed carefully, squeezing them between the hands to get the dirt out of the wool. The skin is then washed in clear water, and alum and salt, half a pound each are dissolved in a little hot water, which is put into enough cold water in a tub to cover two skins. Let soak over night and then hang on a pole to drain. When well drained, spread, stretch and tack them to a board, flesh side up. While yet a little damp put on the pulverized saltpeter and alum, rub it in well, then lay the flesh sides of two skins together and hang them in the shade two or three days, turning the under skin uppermost every day until perfectly dry. Then scrape the flesh side with a dull knife to remove the remaining scraps of flesh and rub the flesh side with pumice stone and afterward with the hands, until soft and pliable. For dyeing buy the analine dyes, of the colors wanted, and get directions with them. —Home, Stock and Farm.

SHEEP ON THE FARM.

They Are of Inestimable Value Because of Their Fondness for Young Sprouts and Weeds.

The sheep is among the most useful and valuable of domestic animals, being a producer of wool used for clothing and other purposes, and of wholesome meat. But the sheep also is of large value on the farm because of his fondness for young sprouts and weeds.

According to an authority there are nearly 600 varieties of known weeds, of which sheep will eat 515 kinds, while horses, cattle and hogs will eat but a few varieties. It is apparent that every farmer could well afford to raise a few sheep if for no purpose other than the destruction of weeds.

Weeds increase in numbers and varieties as the country grows older. They are found most abundantly in the old countries of Europe. Their steady increase in this country demands that farmers should raise sheep as among other means looking to their extermination.

By all means get two or three ewes already bred and give them the run of that foul pasture. Increase the flock by breeding and purchase if advisable, until the number is sufficient to keep down the weeds on a given area.

No farm is properly equipped without sheep.—Farmers' Voice.

Dwarf Essex rape will furnish green food for young and old birds. Sow now or any time up to September.

The surplus layers should be started on the way to market. The chicks will soon need more room.

WOMAN AND HOME

MISS SARAH GRAND.

Author of "Heavenly Twins" Has Achieved Notable Success on the Lecture Platform.

Sarah Grand, who has been delighting British audiences in her new capacity as a lecturer, first became prominent through the publication in 1893 of the "Heavenly Twins." None of the works which have followed from her pen since that time has earned so wide a fame as her first effort. In 1894 she published "Our Manifold Nature," in 1897 "The Beth Book," in 1898 "The Modern Man and Maid" and in 1900 "Babs, the Impossible." The last named book came nearer than any of the others to reaching the high tide of popularity attained by the "Heavenly Twins." Miss Grand was born in Ireland. Her father was Edward J. Clarke, a lieutenant in the royal navy, and her mother the granddaughter of Robert Bell, of Humbleton house, Yorkshire. The future author was married at 16 to Lieut. Col. McFall, a brigade surgeon in the army, who died in 1898. As wife of the obiquitous army surgeon Miss Grand traveled through the east generally. She is intensely interested in the general movement for the uplifting of women and is vice president of an English woman suffrage association.

MISS SARAH GRAND.

The Royal Cradle of Italy.

A remarkable cradle is that which has been sent to Rome for the little heir to the throne of Italy. It was made at Naples and is of tortoise shell, richly inlaid with gold and mounted on golden rockers. Victor Emmanuel I., the grandfather of the present king, was the first occupant of this beautiful cradle, which was made specially for him.

Hard Soap for the Laundry.

Use hard soap in washing clothes. In boiling white clothes add a tablespoonful of turpentine to the water to assist in the whitening process. Boiled starch is much improved by the addition of salt or a little gum arabic dissolved. Another hint in reference to starch is that the iron will not stick in ironing if the starch has been mixed with soapy water.

A Dainty from Australia.

Here is an Australian breakfast dish. Boil and mash some potatoes, place part of them on a dish well spread with butter, salt and pepper; cover with the contents of a tin of lobster or salmon, then spread the remainder of potatoes over, and place in the oven till nicely browned. Pour over melted butter flavored with anchovy.

Kills Odor of Onions.

It may not be generally known that a sprig of parsley with a dash of salt taken after one has eaten onions will entirely remove the disagreeable odor from the breath.

COUNTRY HOME COMFORTS.

How to Obtain Some Very Pretty House and Piazza Effects at a Nominal Expense.

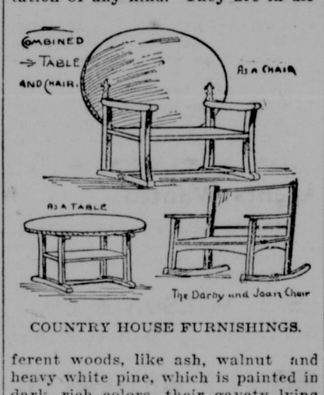
In furnishing a home a variety of pretty effects can be gained by small seats which hug the corners closely. Among the latest are those with a single ornamental end of fine etched wood cut out in appropriate shape.

The couch is low, well cushioned and equipped with some three or four pillows of any spring-like material which matches the seat, while the unornamented end is finished simply with a frill that falls from the cushion to the floor, the entire length of the seat.

This one tall end may be an attractive feature of those skilled in pyrography, but to be at its best it should be made of holly or basswood, cut in sections, and then joined to prevent warping. If desired, on the inside of this end there can be a shelf for books and the like. The design may be outlined and then burnt in. It may have a floral decoration, a pastoral scene or an embellishment of cupids and blossoms, taking care according to the rules of this art that if the background is dark the design should be light, or reverse the picture leaving the ground work light.

As for coverings there are charming stuffs in cotton tapestries, liberty cretonnes, sateen quill and the pretty Normandy dimities. Any of these look well, as their flower effects are gay and brilliant, while the cushions may be made of Priscilla silk in any of the solid and delicate tints preferred.

Among the striking novelties for country homes is the Darby and Joan chair, a low rocker for two, on the one foundation. The wood of heavy make is painted in a good tone of forest green, the rush seats in brilliant tints of red. These odd pieces are severe in form without ornamentation of any kind. They are in different woods, like ash, walnut and heavy white pine, which is painted in dark, rich colors, their gayety lying in the stuffs with which they are decorated.

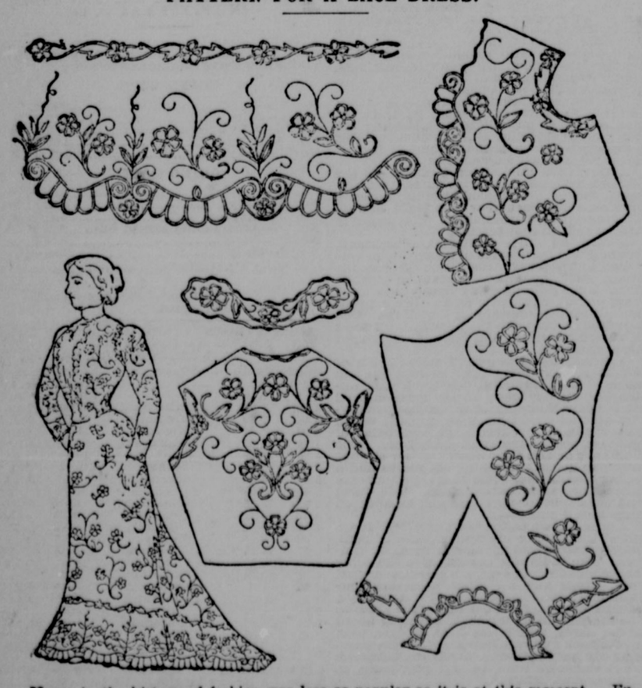


COUNTRY HOUSE FURNISHINGS.

Another pronounced style is the King Arthur chair, an artistic and decorative hall or piazza furnishing, which can be converted into a table at need. It is of walnut, roomy, low and cushioned. Its back is a great oval covered inside and out with nut-brown leather. The chair when not in use serves as a stand for the oval, which, by closing the hinges, forms a table, and is quite large enough for four at a game of cards or for a slight repast. There are book shelves which hang against the wall, on which are appropriate mottoes, and peculiar lounging chairs with wide, long arms held in place by a seat of stout crash of striped and plaid effects.

For draperies the top ruffle is again to the front. The windows when treated this way have first sash curtains of dotted Swiss, which are looped back or slightly parted in the middle. At the top of the woodwork hangs a long cream-colored dimity with a flower border or covered with wild roses, and over it a deep frill of the same design as the drapery. The frill and its hangings are on separate brass rods of slender make.—Chicago Record-Herald.

PATTERN FOR A LACE DRESS.



Never in the history of fashion was lace as popular as it is at this moment. European fashion writers say that the woman who is without a lace gown might just as well be out of the world. This is, of course, an extreme view, yet one in which fashionable women will join. The outline of the pattern here given will give ambitious home dressmakers an idea of how a lace gown should be put together, and may enable them to duplicate the work turned out by the swell shops of Paris, New York and Chicago.

Popular Science

INSECTS FOR FOOD.

Men of Science Proclaim Cockroaches and Locusts Rare Dainties, If Properly Prepared.

A French entomologist, M. Dagin, recommends insects as an article of food. He speaks with authority, having not only read through the whole literature of insect eating, but having himself tasted several hundreds of species raw, boiled, fried, broiled, roasted and hashed. He has even eaten spiders prepared according to the following recipe: "Take a plump spider, remove the legs and skin. Rub over with butter and swallow. However, he does not recommend them, but this may be prejudice on his part. He states two objections to spiders. They are not insects, and they feed on animal food.

Cockroaches are a foundation for a delicious soup. M. Dagin follows the recipe given by Senator Testelin in a speech delivered in the senate on February 12, 1878: "Pound your cockroaches in a mortar; put in a sieve, and pour in boiling water or beef stock." Connoisseurs prefer this to real bisque. M. Wilfrid de Fonvielle, the French scientist, prefers the cockroaches in the larval state. The perfect insect may be shelled and eaten like a shrimp; that way Dr. Gastler, member of the national assembly of 1848, used to eat them.

Caterpillars are a light food of easy digestion. Not only African and American native races but Frenchmen appreciate them. M. de Lalande, astronomer, had dinner every Saturday with the zoologist, Quatremere d'Isjonvalle. Mme. dIsjonvalle, who knew his tastes, collected in the afternoon all the caterpillars she could find in her garden and served them on a plate to her guest. The most popular insect food is the locust. It is eaten fried, dried in the sun, ground in flour, broiled (among the Beduin), boiled in milk (a Morocco recipe), or fried and served with rice as in Madagascar. The Jesuit Father Cambou thinks that locust flour might become popular in Europe as a condiment. Travelers' opinions on locusts differ. Amicis finds they taste like shrimps, Niebuhr like sardines, Livingston like caviare.

FRICTION AND SPEED.

A Clear Explanation of a Law That Has Seemed More or Less of a Mystery to Everybody.

The following explanation of why friction is less at high than at low speeds is due to Capt. Galton, who gave it in connection with the Galton-Westinghouse brake trials in England. Railway and Locomotive Engineering, in a discussion of the subject, calls it the clearest explanation yet given. Says the writer:

"It should be borne in mind that any two surfaces which are placed in contact are not perfectly smooth surfaces, but have small inequalities or roughness upon them. The figure shows in a very exaggerated form what two surfaces in contact may be supposed to be like. When the two surfaces are at rest relatively to each other, the hills of the upper surface will fit closely into the hollows of the lower one. But if the surfaces are in rapid motion past each other, the upper surface will not have time to fit itself into the lower, but would take a position like that shown in the figure. Then any point at O of the upper surface would first be dragged up to the vertex A, and would then fly across the space A C, till it struck some point O on B C. As the speed was greater, the distance through which O would fall in the passage would be less; consequently the distance O C would be less, and the work of dragging O up to the vertex C would be less also. Hence it might be seen how the actual work done per foot-run of service, or, in other words, the apparent coefficient would be less as the speed was greater."

THE LAW OF FRICTION.

Liquid Air for Blasting.

In the new Simplon tunnel experiments have been made with liquid air for blasting purposes. The cartridges consisted of wrappers filled with paraffin and charcoal soaked with liquid air. When placed in the shot holes they were detonated with guncotton primers. The use of these cartridges was discontinued because they had to be fired within a few minutes after being taken out of the liquid, else their power was gone. But the problem of adapting liquid air to blasting is still being studied in Germany.

A Safe for Every Flat.

The latest convenience in the New York apartment is a private safe, built into the wall, and so arranged that only the tenant is acquainted with the combination. This makes it possible for the flat dweller possessing valuable silver, jewels and papers to keep them in his apartment instead of in the vaults of the safe deposit or the bank.

Texas Leads the World.

Texas produces aout a third of the cotton of the country. In peach production the state ranks next to Georgia.

SCIENCE IN WARFARE.

Naval Fight of the Future a Contest Between Flying Machine and Submarine Boat.

Navies are soon to disappear, according to a critic who has been watching recent mechanical depelopment. He knows that nothing is more likely to become obsolete than an existing naval institution, the moment something better is discovered, and he points to the rapid extinction of wooden warships propelled by sails when the Merrimac-Monitor fight demonstrated that with such vessels the greatest squadrons under the ablest commanders were at the mercy of a little iron monitor.

Man's command of the air through aeroplanes and flying machines, and his utilization of a water-blanket to protect submarine boats, will, says this critic, render ships that float on the surface worthless. The floating warship, he says, will be subject to attack from above and from beneath by enemies which it cannot reach.

NAVAL FIGHT OF THE FUTURE.

He draws, therefore, an interesting and thrilling picture of a naval battle of the future, which includes a fight between a flying machine and a submarine boat. This, he says, is not so improbable as it seems.

The flying machine can, he says, see the submarine beneath the surface when it would be invisible to men on a vessel, just as the fish hawk can locate its submerged victim. As the aeroplane can move with celerity, it can hover over the submarine until the latter is compelled to come to the surface for air or rises for attack. Then it can drop dynamite bombs upon the submarine and train rapid-fires upon its thin shell.

The submarine, however, will not be quite helpless. A well-aimed shot from its bow rapid-fires (which can be uncovered the moment the nose of the boat rises above the surface) would instantly put the flying machine out of business, thus clearing the way for other submarines to rise to the surface or for a bevy of friendly flying machines to come up. Meanwhile, there would be no vessels in sight.

The critic does not, however, utterly extinguish ships. They can, he says, act in a subordinate capacity, dependent upon the preliminary fighting which must be done between flying machines and submarines to clear the mouths of harbors and make navigation safe. It is admitted that a big dynamite or guncotton bomb dropped from the air upon the deck of the strongest warship afloat might be likely to destroy it. Moreover, a submarine getting home a single torpedo upon the bottom of such a ship would sink it.

But naval officers (ever conservative and properly waiting for demonstrated superiority before accepting so-called improvements) comfort themselves with the reflection that command of the air and of the submarine world is far from being actually achieved, and that so far as anybody can see navies will remain in existence for a few years yet.

WARM WEATHER DIET.

Meats, Heavy Soups and Hot Bread Should Be Used Sparingly from June to October.

"It is astounding," said a physician to the writer, "how little thought the people give to their food in relation to various seasons of the year. To this very carelessness I lay much summer sickness, often an illness that ends fatally. Take the matter of leftovers. A warming hash, ragout or meat pie is all right for the depth of winter, but not for weather when the blood needs cooling. I would entreat every housekeeper not to buy a morsel of pork, ham or sausage from June till October. Reserve even beef, lamb and veal for the cooler days of summer, and in long hot spells let meat alone entirely. Nature provides for these burning days with vegetables and fruit, tender chicken and fine, firm, white-fleshed fish. If you have left-over foods to be utilized, convert them into chilled, appetizing salads instead of ragouts. If soups are a necessity, let them be thin consomme or chicken soup, not purees or bisques. I would prohibit pie and rich cake, and let fruit, ices, delicate jellies or milk puddings take their place. I'd also put a veto on hot breads. If people could turn an X-ray on the poor, overworked stomachs I'm called to care for all summer long and see the mischief done by overeating and eating things that have no business to be cooked in hot weather, they would realize I am speaking earnest truth." — Good Housekeeping.

BEAUTIFUL LADIES GIVE VALUABLE ADVICE TO SUFFERING SISTERS.

Peruna the Great Tonic Cures Catarrhal Dyspepsia of Summer.

For Ills Peculiar to Women, Peruna is an Invaluable Remedy.

KATHLEEN GRAHAM.

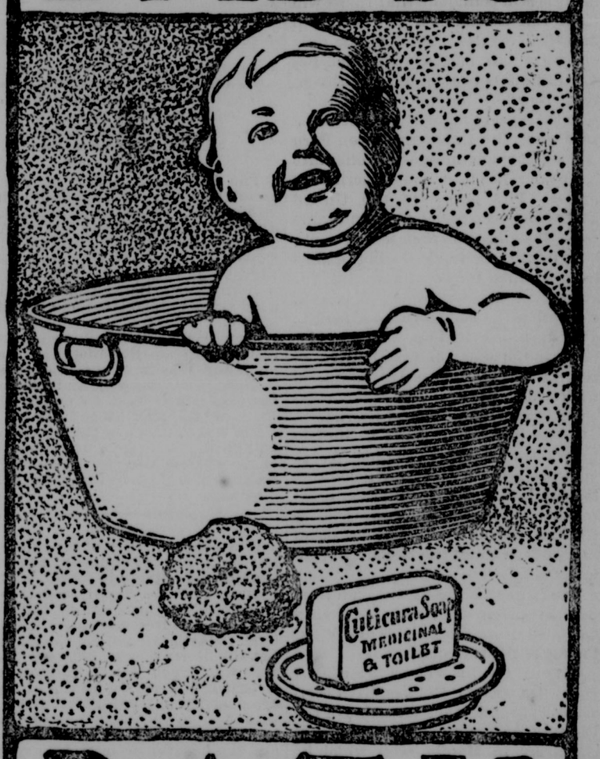
Miss Kathleen Graham, 1459 Florida Ave., N. W. Wash., D. C., writes: "At the solicitation of a friend I was advised to use Peruna and after the use of one bottle for dyspepsia I felt almost entirely cured. I take pleasure in recommending your remedy to anyone who needs an invigorating tonic."—Kathleen Graham.

FLORENCE ALLAN.

Miss Florence Allan, 75 Walton Place, Chicago, Ill., writes: "As a tonic for a worn out system Peruna stands at the head in my estimation. Its effects are truly wonderful in rejuvenating the entire system. I keep it on hand all the time and never have that 'tired feeling' as a few doses always makes me feel like a different woman."—Florence Allan.

Dr. S. B. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, Ohio, a prominent authority on women's catarrhal diseases will take charge of as many cases of female catarrh as make application to him during the summer months. Advice free. Address Dr. S. B. Hartman, Columbus, Ohio.

BABY'S



BATH

MILLIONS OF MOTHERS USE CUTICURA SOAP ASSISTED BY CUTICURA OINTMENT THE GREAT SKIN CURE

For preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin of infants and children, for rashes, itchings, and chafings, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Millions of Women use Cuticura Soap in the form of baths for annoying irritations, inflammations, and excoriations, for too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women, especially mothers. No amount of persuasion can induce those who have once used these great skin purifiers and beautifiers to use any others. Cuticura Soap combines delicate emollient properties derived from Cuticura, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odors. It unites in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the BEST skin and complexion soap and the BEST toilet, bath, and baby soap in the world.

COMPLETE EXTERNAL AND INTERNAL TREATMENT FOR EVERY HUMOR.

Cuticura THE SET

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle, CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humors, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. British Depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 27-23, Charterhouse Sq., London. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U.S.A.

SOZODONT for the Teeth and Breath 25c

At all Stores, or by Mail for the price. HALL & RUCKEL, New York.

STARK TREES best by Test—77 YEARS LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 55 S. California Ave., Chicago.

A. N. K.—C 1873

25 CTS PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 16.—President McKinley is expected back in Washington within a short time for a talk with his cabinet officials and for the transaction of any business that may demand his personal attention here. There are some features of the Chinese problem that may have to be passed upon by the President. It is said that nothing has been heard at the State department from Commissioner Rockhill in regard to the hitch over the Japanese indemnity, which seems to be the only stumbling block in the completion of arrangements. Japan, it will be recalled, contented herself with the extremely modest indemnity of $24,000,000, which represented the obligations actually incurrec by her. When she came to arrange for the floating of the Chinese 4 per cent, bonds with which the indemnities were to be paid she found they would not command in her own market more than 86 per cent. of their face value. She accordingly went back to the powers to ask for an increase to make good the 14 per cent discount. To this the powers were ready to agree, and Russia was particularly hostile. The attitude of the United States, which Mr. Rockhill has represented, has been that this extra allowance to Japan will be fair, and we have been willing to grant it if the other powers would agree. The commissioner's silence is thought to indicate difficulty in reaching an agreement.

Minister Conger leaves San Francisco tomorrow for his old post. Commissioner Rockhill will sail for this country on the 28th to resume, it is supposed, his duties at the head of the bureau of American republics. In fact, it is supposed that his return has been hastened by a desire to get the work of the bureau in complete readiness for the congress which meets in Mexico in October. Our government is still confident that there will be a full attendance of the South American States. Peru is the only one that has officially signified her unwillingness to attend. The discontent elsewhere has no other foundation than press reports. It is believed that when the time comes even Peru will see the advantage of going into the conference if at some sacrifice of pride. The policy of the United States has been to let the disputants settle the affair for themselves.

Adjutant General Corbin cabled from Manila today announcing the arrival of the transport Hancock, with all her passengers in good health. The Hancock had on board besides General Corbin, Senator Dietrich, of Nebraska, Representative Kahn, of California, General Weston, chief commissary, and General Sternberg, surgeon general; Colonel C. McKibben, 12th Infantry; Colonel W. P. Hall, who is to be adjutant general of the division of the Philippines; Lieutenant Colonel Johnston, who is General Corbin's aid, besides other army officers, and the Second Battalion of Engineers.

The Hancock made the run from San Francisco to Manila in twenty days, showing that she is one of the fastest of the transports.

General Corbin will have a conference with General Chaffee, Civil Governor Taft and other members of the Philippine commission and officers of the army in Manila after which he will make a tour of the islands, visiting the interesting points, accompanied by the staff officers who went to Manila with him and General Humphrey, chief quartermaster of the Philippines, with the object of effecting a material reduction of the expenses of the army as well as improving the military conditions in the Philippines.

Secretary Long now has in hand the report of the naval board, headed by Admiral Taylor, which was charged with the plans for the naval station for the Phillipines at Olongapo, on Subig bay. The board has been stopped from submitting a detailed project by reason of the broaching of a proposition to inaugurate at that point the favorite project of Secretary Long looking to a combination of the various staff bureaus in its management. The board now asks Secretary Long for direction in this matter. Under the existing practice each of the four bureaus—construction, steam engineering, equipment and yards and docks—maintains independent establishments in each yard, which is thus a navy department in miniature. Secretary Long has stronly recommended to Congress a consolidation of the bureaus in the navy department itself under one head, so as to rid the service of the eternal wrangling and jealousies that mar the best plans for ship construction. The Taylor board now offers the Secretary an opportunity to put his theories in practice, and meanwhile they wait on his decision before completing their plans.

To maintain the political balance of the American representation on the Hague arbitration commission the President regards it as essential to appoint a Republican to fill the vacancy created by the death of ex-President Harrison. Although many applications have been received for this post, some difficulty is being experienced in finding a person of national reputation who combines with the judicial temperment the knowledge of international law and other qualities necessary to fit him for the high honor. It is determined that the supreme court will not be further drawn upon to the manifest delay of its other business, the United States Senate is barred as a field of selection, and the indications are that the choice will fall upon some distinguished member of the State judiciary.

The incident connected with the alleged escapade of Capt. Putnam Strong of the quartermaster's department, has been officially closed, so far as the war department is concerned, by the acceptance of his resignation, to take effect at once. The action was taken by Secretary Root by direction of the President, with whom he was in telegraphic correspondence yesterday. The original intention to withhold action on Captain Strong's resignation pending official investigation of his alleged misconduct at San Francisco was abandoned. It was concluded that no good purpose would be served by still further exploiting the San Francisco scandal, and therefore the President directed the acceptance of the officer's resignation. Captain Strong is a son of the late ex-Mayor Strong, of New York, and is a personal acquaintance of President McKinley and Secretary Root.

Many thousands have been restored to health and happiness by the use of Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. If afflicted with any throat or lung trouble, give it a trial for it is certain to prove beneficial. Coughs that have resisted all other treatment for years, have yielded to this remedy, and perfect health been restored. Cases that seemed hopeless, that the climate of famous health resorts failed to benefit, have been permanently cured by its use. Bear in mind that every bottle is warranted and if it does not prove beneficial the money will be refunded to you. For sale by all dealers.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

Heartburn.

When the quantity of food taken is too large or the quality too rich, heartburn is likely to follow, and especially so if the digestion has been weakened by constipation. Eat slowly and not to freely of easily digested food. Masticate the food thoroughly. Let six hours elapse between meals and when you feel a fullness and weight in the region of the stomach after eating, indicating that you have eaten too much, take one of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and the heartburn may be avoided. For sale by all dealers.

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Rattlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

The Best Remedy For Stomach and Bowel Troubles.

"I have been in the drug business for twenty years and have sold most all of the proprietary medicines of any note. Among the entire list I have never found anything to equal Chamberlain's Cholic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for all stomach and bowel troubles," says O. W. Wakefield, of Columbus, Ga. This remedy cured two severe cases of cholera morbus in my family and I have recommended and sold hundreds of bottles of it to my customers to their entire satisfaction. It affords a quick and sure cure in a pleasant farm. No family should be without it. I keep it in my house at all times." For sale by all dealers.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the road prayed to be changed, known as the White and King road, and examine whether the said changed road should be located, will meet on the 15th day of July, 1901, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said changed location of said White and King road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

WILLIAM WHITE,
J. R. MEESE,
CHARLES THOMPSON,
Examiners.

Some Reasons

Why You Should Insist on Having

EUREKA HARNESS OIL

Unequaled by any other.
Renders hard leather soft.
Especially prepared.
Keeps out water.
A heavy bodied oil.

HARNESS

An excellent preservative.
Reduces cost of your harness.
Never burns the leather; its Efficiency is increased.
Secures best service.
Stitches kept from breaking.

OIL

Is sold in all Localities

Manufactured by Standard Oil Company.

Turnbull's

China and Japan Mattings, all weaves and colorings.

Porch and Lawn Furniture, Iron and Brass Bedsteads, Linoleums and Oil Cloths, Carpetings.

JOHN TURNBULL, JR., & COMPANY,

16, 18, 20 West Baltimore Street,

BALTIMORE

The Quaker Bath Cabinet.

Open—Ready For Use.

A 16-page descriptive catalogue sent free upon request. AGENTS WANTED. Write for terms. Address all letters to

QUEEN CITY NOVELTY CO.,
General Agents. OAKLAND, MD.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.

A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS.
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St.Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

The Garrett County Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank

OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE

SECOND NATIONAL BANK

of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital.....$100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits. 250,000
Liability of Shareholders..... 100,000
Additional Security to Depositors...$450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart,
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

The Wilkes Stallion

EMPEROR WILKES

TIME, 2.28.

Will stand at the stables of the undersigned in Oakland on the following terms:

$10 to Insure a Mare With Foal.

Money to be paid when mare is known to be with foal. Persons parting with a mare or fails to attend forfeits insurance money. A lien will be retained on the colt until insurance is paid. We will not be responsible for accidents should any occur, but the best of care to prevent such will be exerted.

This horse has a record of 2.34. On a trial he trotted a mile in 2.28. He is a full brother of WILL KERR, 2.07¾, Champion Green Harness Horse of the World, and also of VINETTE, 2.09¼.

EMPEROR WILKES is a dark bay stallion, snip on nose, black points, height 15¾ hands. He was bred by Thompson & Bro., Cynthiana, Ky. He comes from the best trotting family of horses in this country and has a bright future. He is the sire of the fastest colts in Garrett county and is without doubt the best bred stallion and the fastest trotting animal in Western Maryland.

M. MARONEY & SON.

I HAVE PURCHASED

THE OAKLAND COAL YARD

of Mr. D. L. Conneway and will continue the business. I will keep constantly on hand a large supply of

HARD AND SOFT

COAL,

KINDLING WOOD, Etc.

All orders will receive prompt attention. Leave orders with the weighmaster or at my residence, the Giessman Hotel.

35-2 GEO. GIESSMAN

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars Cameras and Photo Supplies

TO CURE LAGRIPPE IN TWO DAY

Take LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE TABLETS. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. GROVE'S signature on every box. 25c.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for

ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.

FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy

MONUMENTS HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the ullest extent of the law.

Call on or address:
C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.
Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

1338 acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale.

House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187½ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26½ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swanger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to

JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.
OAKLAND, MD.

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,

Office 7 North Liberty St.

CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—Opera House,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
OAKLAND, MD

STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. fe14-1y

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 10 6

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice,
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

DR. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

DR. W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 16-'99

DR. H. W. McCOMAS, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 6 22 6m

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J. HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md.
Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26tf

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Will sell Real or Personal Estate.
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats, descriptions and estimates furnished.
40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42	A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.55	A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01	A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52	P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07	P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50	A. M
No. 2—Daily	6.52	A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41	P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12	P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35	P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37	A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager.
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.
IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3	SOUTHWARD No. 1	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2	NORTHWARD No. 4
P. M.	A. M.		NOON	P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 45	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. Junc.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05	3 05
6 31	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 59	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 41	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 29
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv*7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.		A. M.	A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager.
G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1901. NUMBER 20.

ADDITIONAL MARYLAND LEGISLATORS.

An Extra Member in Washington, Dorchester, Prince George's and Montgomery.

Under the new state census, just completed, the results of which were given out by the state authorities, four counties—Washington, Dorchester, Prince George's and Montgomery—will each be entitled to one additional member in the lower house of the legislature.

It was thought that Kent county would also show a sufficient population to entitle it to another member, but it fell short of the 18,000. Under the federal census, Anne Arundel, Charles and Kent, in addition to the above named counties, were also entitled to additional representation,an increase of seven in all.

The state census does not admit of additional members in Anne Arundel or Charles county. The House of Delegates of the next general assembly will accordingly be composed of ninety-five members, a gain of four.

A comparison of the number of registered voters in Garrett county returned to the census office by the enumerators and the number appearing on the registration books of the county show a very material difference. The registration books are without doubt entirely correct and that the state census is not only unreliable but misleading. The census credits Garrett couny with a voting population of 3,296, while the registration books show 4,220 registered voters. In addition to this the state census figures credit Garrett county with 1,002 males of voting age not registered.

Lynched at Elkins.

A special despatch from Elkins dated Monday tells of the execution of a colored desperado at the hands of an enraged mob of the citizens of Elkins.

William Brooks, a negro, on Monday evening just at nightfall was lynched by an angry mob of over four hundred citizens of Elkins, W. Va., for having two hours previous fatally shot Robert Lilly, chief of police. Brooks was employed on the building of the Coal and Iron extension of the West Virginia Central and Pittsburg railroad, and had quarreled with a colored woman at a negro picnic in the city park. Lilly attempted to arrest him, but he broke away and suddenly drew a revolver, which he shot the officer twice through the abdomen and once in the shoulder. Brooks attempted to escape, but was soon captured and placed in the city lockup preparatory to be taken to Beverly on the night train. An angry mob surrounded the lockup, but bided their time, knowing it would be easier to take the negro as he would be escorted from the lockup to the train.

The citizens were not masked and they overpowered the officers without trouble. The negro was dragged by a rope fastened about his neck quite a distance over the rough road to the city park, the scene of the shooting, and there strung to a tall tree. He begged pitiously but was soon unconscious from the rough handling, his clothes being nearly torn from his body and he was quite dead when the park was reached. His body was still hanging late Monday night. No bullets were fired into the body. Very little is known about Brooks. The negroes, several hundred of whom live about Elkins, are overawed and the town is quiet as the whites have made threats to summarily deal with all who should attempt trouble.

The several murders in and about Elkins the past few months, and the murderers all escaping, had caused the citizens to vow that the next murderer would be lynched if caught.

A Drive for the Lawyers.

The Bar Association of Garrett county has extended an invitation to the members of the State Bar Association to take a drive during the meetings of the state convention at Deer Park. The itinerary of the drive will be as follows: The local association will meet the members of the state association upon the arrival of the morning accommodation at Oakland at 10 o'clock. Mountain wagons will be in waiting at the depot to convey the members to Table Rock, located upon the summit of the Backbone mountain, about eight miles south of Oakland, where a light luncheon will be served, and after spending an hour or so viewing the beautiful scenery at the rock, the return trip will be made by way of Oakland and Mountain Lake Park to Deer Park.

Naylor is headquarters for the McCormick Mowers, Rakes, and also has the Thomas Rakes and Tedders on hand, at the lowest prices.

CORKSCREW PHILOSOPHY.

The Biscayans say: "Marriage is a blessed misery."

The ancient Greeks said that the gods are concerned for mothers alone.

Let the women vote by all means, but make the right rest on motherhood.

The Swabians say that fatherhood is a gift of chance, and motherhood a gift of the gods.

It was Thackeray, I believe, who said that he would not do women the injustice of accusing them of being just.

Plato said that he knew nothing. Had he been a woman he would have said: "I know it all." That is what the new woman thinks.

The bible does not give any account of women angels—this may be the reason some women desire all the privileges of a man.

A leading thinker says: "I take off my hat to the willing mother of children; she is God's most perfect work on earth."

Henpeck says that heaven must indeed be a happy place—there are no marriages there. The divorce lawyer will be out of a job.

JACKSON.

A Correction.

Rev. H. H. Flick, formerly pastor of the Accident and Friendsville congregations of the Lutheran church, in a letter published last week in the Messenger of Manchester, Md., in which town Rev. Flick is now stationed, lays before the public his position in the reported "controversy" existing between himself and his congregation and at Mr. Flick's request we reproduce the letter herewith:

To the Editor of the Messenger:

Permit me to say that the article you published in last week's issue with the caption, "Refused to Preach," is a misstatement of facts from beginning to end.

To begin—there was no "friction" between the pastor and the members and the pastor never used the phrase "sore displeasure," neither did the congregation decrease, but on the other hand the pastor has been told frequently that our congregations are larger than formerly, but such attendance never amounted to more than one-fourth or one-third of the total membership. There was no German service in the morning. We had German service at 2 p. m. and an appointment was made for the next regular time, viz., in two weeks from that date at 10 a. m., which service will be held D. V.

That I delivered some very "plain talk" is correct. I always try to do so. The phrase "The people lie around like dogs" is manufactured from the whole cloth. What I did say was a quotation from Dr. Luther's Large Catechism, where he shows that the third commandment is violated, not only by those who grossly abuse and desecrate the Sabbath, but also by those who lie around like swine, etc. In the case referred to the word "dog" was substituted for "swine."

To say the least, it ill becomes ignorance to criticise the writings of the great hero of the Reformation who gave not only religious but also civil liberty to the entire world.

Now, Mr. Editor, I never was a foreign missionary and do not know what kind of an audience I could get from the converted natives—but I presume not any, as I am unable to speak their language, and they cannot understand English, German, Greek, Latin or Hebrew. What was said was this: The question, "Don't you think that from a congregation of over 600 converted heathens there would be better attendance?" I said this because foreign missionaries tell us they are very devoted and come many miles, if necessary, to attend divine worship.

There was no reference made to the church council at the "conclusion" of the remarks. The pastor does not make announcements at that time. They are always made before entering the pulpit. The announcement was simply this—that there would be no announcement made for further services unless the people wanted it. The council had nothing to do in this matter, neither was there any council meeting Monday evening, as every intelligent church member knows that council meetings must be called by or through the pastor, and the pastor had nothing to lay before the council. On the other hand Godly and pious members deeply grieve over the too common Sunday desecration and with tears in their eyes have asked me to continue to preach, which I have consented to do, and they have promised to make every effort to improve the services and help their fellow men to see the truth.

The pastor shall therefore continue his "plain talks" and deliver "the whole counsel of God" and may some times use some of Dr. Luther's thunderbolts in the hope they will strike the erring ones, slay the sin and save the sinner.

Yours for truth and righteousness,
H. H. FLICK.

Manchester, Md., July 15, 1901.

The Pan-American Exposition.

To the Editor of The Republican.

I have thought for some time about writing a letter to THE REPUBLICAN for the information of my friends who desire to sing "Put me off at Buffalo."

I would advise you to buy a guide book, which costs only 10 cents. A very good one is the "Buffalo Red Guide." It tells you of all points of interest, how to reach them and cost of trips.

This city has an acreage of 25.343; population 393,600; 60 public schools; 187 churches, consisting of Catholic, Catholic Apostolic, Methodist, Free Methodist, Episcopal, Presbyterian, Baptist Evangelical, Evangelical Reformed, German Evangelical, Jewish, Congregational, Universalist, Unitarian, United Brethren, Scientists, Friends, Diciple, Floating Mission, Canal Street Mission, Adventists and Spiritualists; 24 banks, 180 miles street railway; 28 railroads enter the city; 250 passenger trains daily and now have about 50 excursions every day; the best water I have ever drank in a city, excelling many country springs, being supplied from Lake Erie.

I think it best to get rooms without board and meals at a restaurant, for when you are at the P. A. X. or any other point of interest you only pay for the meal you get and not for one you don't get.

The most fakirs I have ever met are at the falls. They are only one minute's walk from the car and you are told they are a mile away for the purpose of getting you to take a carriage. I have not been swindled out of one cent yet, but many have lost dollars in less than twelve hours after they arrived.

I am rooming with a Mr. Wallace, 57 Spring street, and if you want to feel at home while here I would advise you to take Jefferson or Seneca street car to Spring. It only costs five cents to go to the exposition grounds and would cost you that if you were only two blocks away, and rooms are so much higher near the grounds. I am working in a restaurant at 322 Michigan street, three blocks from Main. I took my meals there three weeks before I went to work in it and have taken meals at some of the others when in some other part of the city and found none to beat it for good meals and little money.

Wishing all that visit this city a pleasant trip and safe return, I am

Courteously yours,
T. P. WARNICK.

Deer Park Improving.

One visiting Deer Park at this season of the year is rather forcibly struck by the improvements made recently in the town.

The residences all present good appearances, being neatly painted, and the yards about them are in good order. Flowers are blooming profusely in beds and tubs and consequently the town is inviting to the stranger. The board walks are in good repair, the streets are kept neat and clean and the merchants and business men take commendable pride in keeping their stores and places of business in good order and their stocks of goods nicely arranged.

All this has been brought about through the influences set in motion by the Deer Park Village Improvement Society, which was organized a year or two ago by some of the summer residents of the town and which the local residents have given their unalloyed support. The society is in a flourishing condition and next month a fair will be held under its auspices at which prizes will be awarded for the best of many articles.

Many towns throughout the state would do well to organize these improvement societies as an influence in the community is thus exerted which in time spreads outside the pale of local affairs, and, as in the case of the fair to be held at Deer Park, takes on the dimensions of something that is of benefit to the entire community as well as the town for whose welfare the society was originally intended.

Lawn Fete.

A lawn fete will be held in the yard of Trinity Reform church, New Germany, Md., August 3, 1901. If the weather is rainy will be held in the church. Proceeds will be for the benefit of the church. Everybody heartily welcome.

FROM THE PHILIPPINES.

James G. Jarboe Writes of Army Life in the Archipelago.

BUHI, LUZON, P. I., June 10, 1901.
BENJ. H. SINCELL,
Oakland, Md.

DEAR SIR:—I will pen you a few lines from the Philippines that will perhaps prove of interest to you. This is one of the prettiest countries I have ever seen. It abounds in all kinds of tropical fruits and animals. The natives of these islands are a very peculiar race of people. They resemble the monkey very much, both in features and actions and as for clothing they have scarcely any. The males seldom wear more than a breech clout and the women wear a dress that would be the envy of any woman in the States. It is made like a sack without a bottom and is fastened around the waist with a hemp orpe. They wear a sort of sandal on their feet and when they walk they have to shuffle along to keep them from coming off and they can carry an enormous load on their heads, the top of which is as flat as can be. For transportation they use the caribou or water buffalo, as it is called in the States, and the carts they ride in—well they don't quite come up to the automobile. They are built like a house on wheels and a whole family can ride in one without crowding.

I was with General Funston when Aguinaldo was captured and may be we didn't have a hot old time for awhile—bullets and bolos flying thicker than bees. It makes a fellow feel a little weak in the knees when the first two or three volleys are fired, but after that it is rather enjoyable.

We live like kings over here—beans sow belly three times a day. I would give a month's pay for a good home-made pie. The coffee we get is blacker than any negro you ever laid eyes on and hot as it can possibly be and you have to grab a cupful and drink it right down, hot or not, if you want to get any.

I got hold of a REPUBLICAN the other day and it seemed like home while I was reading it.

If you wish to publish this do so for perhaps it will prove of interest to some of your readers.

Well I will close. With best wishes for old Garrett county, I remain

Respectfully yours,
JAMES G. JARBOE,
Co. B, 27th Infantry,
Buhi, Camarrines, Luzon, P. I.

Mountain Lake Park Water Works.

The water works system at Mountain Lake Park has this year been very unsatisfactory, notwithstanding the additional supply of water promised by the management of the service, which is, we may state, entirely separate and distinct from the Mountain Lake Park Association, being owned and controlled by one man, L. D. Yoder, Esq., of Pittsburg.

Mr. Yoder last year secured control of a large spring up on the mountain east of Mountain Lake Park, and put a force of men to work digging a trench in which pipe was to be laid to lead the water to the Park. The system at first installed by the water company was a somewhat crude affair but gave general satisfaction, however. The water was pumped from Crystal spring to a water tower and from thence led through six inch mains to all parts of the Park. When the trenches for the new system were made ready these pipes were dug up and replaced with two-inch mains and they alone were supposed by the management to be able to supply all present needs. The result, however, has been otherwise and in a number of instances hotels and private houses have been without water service almost the entire season. The six-inch mains were carried to the head of the new system and laid. The quantity of pipe was insufficient to lay the entire distance and when it was exhausted terra cotta pipe was substituted with the result that when the water was turned on in full force the terra cotta pipe burst and flooded the fields of a number of farmers and left Mountain Lake dry. As a result of this a number of damage suits are threatened by property owners at the Park and the end is not yet.

Cure For Cholera Infantum—Never Known to Fail.

During last May an infant child of our neighbor was suffering from cholera infantum. The doctors had given up all hopes of recovery. I took a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy to the house, telling them I felt sure it would do good if used according to directions. In two days time the child had fully recovered. The child is now vigorous and healthy. I have recommended this remedy frequently and have never known it to fail.—Mrs. Curtis Baker, Bookwalter, Ohio. For sale by all dealers, Oakland; and J. W. Laughlin, Deer Park.

GERMAN SUPERSTITIONS.

Fancies Brought to Maryland From the Fatherland.

The old German settlers of Western Maryland were very superstitious. They brought their queer notions and fancies from the fatherland and instilled them into the minds of their children. Many of them still linger. They had signs for everything they did. Whilst they were a pious, God fearing people they consulted the almanac frequently. On no account would they plant vegetable seeds without consulting the almanac as to the sign. If they wanted to plant peas they would not plant them in the sign of the virgin or flower woman, as they would blossom too much and not bear. Corn beans must not be planted in the down going of the moon as they would not wind up the stalks. Sure death would follow if you transplanted a parsley stalk. Beets must not be planted in the sign of the lion. Cucumbers must be planted in the dark of the moon to escape the ravages of the bugs.

A roof on a barn or house must not be put on in the up going of the moon. Fence posts must not be planted in the down going of the moon. Hogs must not be slaughtered in the sign of the fish nor in the decrease of the moon because, first, a hog that is slaughtered in the sign of the fish the meat will taste fishy when cooked, and, second, if killed in the decrease of the moon the meat will not remain plump but will shrivel. It was always advisable to slaughter in the dark of the moon to prevent skippers from getting into the meat. A death was sure to happen in your family during the year if you carried a mattock or shovel through your dwelling. These are only a few of the many superstitions of these old German folk.

A quaint recipe copied from an old German day book belonging to one of the original settlers in 1765, called "A certain cure for sweeney in horses" is as follows:

Take a stone out of the chimney, the first Friday in the new moon before sunup, without talking to anybody; turn the horse's head toward sunrise. Keep the stone in your hand as you take it off the chimney; don't move it until you are done with it, then put it back to the same place as you took it first. Do this three times on Friday, Saturday and Sunday mornings. Then daub it over with mortar the last morning, observing the rules above each time. Operate with the stone as follows: If the sweeney is on the right side take the stone with the right hand. If the sweeney is on the left side take the stone with the left hand. Begin with the stone at the point of the horse's nose, stroke it clear over the head, neck, back to the end of the tail three times, repeating the following words: "Flaish und blut swine mark und bine ich fartraib dich dem stine die komst min nimmer more."

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, July 23.—Secretary Root has an elaborate scheme for the improvement of the army, and will ask Congress for large appropriations to carry it into effect. His recent trip to the West was to gather material for the presentation of the plan to Congress in his forthcoming annual report. He devoted special attention to the military posts at Forts Leavenworth and Riley, Kansas, for possible use in the project for the development of the army. According to statements made by Secretary Root since his return to this city, Fort Leavenworth will continue as the post at which infantry, cavalry and light artillery officers will receive theoretical training in the respective branches of their profession. Riley will serve as the scene of mimic battles in which infantry will deploy, cavalry charge and light artillery will support the arm to which it is temporarily attached.

"Fort Riley is a splendid site for military maneuvers," said Secretary Root. "The reservation upon which the post stands comprises thirty square miles, and this great stretch of country will permit the evolution of large bodies of men. The practice is bound to be beneficial to the whole service. It is proposed to station on the reservation a full regiment of cavalry and five batteries of artillery. From time to time additional troops will be ordered there to participate in the maneuvers. While on the reservation they will have to live in camp, and they will consequently be instructed both in camp routine and in field operations. The latter will simulate conditions of actual war.

"An extensive stretch of territory such as we have at Riley is necessary in modern military maneuvers. Soldier are now widely separated in battle, and as they advance they take advantage of every natural object which promises protection from the enemy. There is greater individuality and more independence in operations on the part of the men. We are returning to the methods used by our forefathers in fighting the Indians."

The general scheme for increasing the efficiency of the army also contemplates the establishment of a military war college, and the organization of a general staff similar to that branch of the principal continental armies.

The Italian consul at Vicksburg, Miss., telegraphed today to the Italian authorities here that he had forwarded affidavits fully establishing the Italian nationality of the men lynched at Erwin, Miss., a few days ago. He reports also that the chances are improving for the apprehension of the lynchers, for as a result of the awakened public feeling in the neighborhood of the crime clues have been secured by which it is expected that the guilty parties will be identified.

The acting secretary of state has sent a communication to Mr. Carignani, the charge of the Italian embassy, expressing the regret of this government at the lynching of two Italians recently in Mississippi, and informing him that the state authorities say efforts were making to bring the perpetrators of the crime to justice. Attention was directed to the fact that it had not been established officially that the men lynched were Italian subjects.

The same information as that contained in the note to the Italian charge has been forwarded to Mr. Iddings, the charge of the United States embassy at Rome, with instructions to lay it before the Italian foreign office. Governor Longino, of Mississippi, has advised the Italian consul at Vicksburg of the steps he has taken to apprehend the guilty persons.

The mysterious disapperance from New York, of General Uribe, chief promoter of the Columbian revolution, is receiving the attention of officials of the Columbian legation here, who have reason to believe General Uribe has gone to Nicaragua rather than to Costa Rica. The latter country is on most friendly terms with Colombia, so that it is not expected General Uribe could organize expeditions from that point. But in Nicaragua there is said to be a revolutionary junta, with representatives from Ecuador, Venezuela, Colombia and other South American counties, systematically propagating movements for the establishments of ultra-liberal regimes in these various governments. General Uribe was a member of that junta, and it is believed by the officials here that he has gone to enlist the support of that revolutionary body.

The delegates of the United States to the international conference of American states, to assemble in Mexico next October, John Barrett, Henry G. Davis, W. I. Buceanan, Volney W. Foster and Charles M. Pepper, will hold their first meeting in Buffalo Friday. While this will be an informal gathering, important preliminary work will be outlined and sub-committees named. It is known that it is the intention of the United States delegates to go to the conference in a spirit of co-operation with the delegates of South and Central America and Mexico and to leave to them largely the direction of the proceedings and the outlining of politics, but much preparation must be made in the matter of statistics and data covering commercial and kindred relations.

Woman's Foreign Missionary Society.

The anniversary exercises of the Mountain Lake Park Auxiliary of the Woman's Foreign Missionary Society will be held in the auditorium Sunday, July 28th, and Monday, July 29th.

The programme is unusually fine. Excellent speakers and singers have been secured. Miss Sue Gilbert, of Piedmont, will render a song. Rev. Dr. Oldham, born in India and a missionary of long service in that country, is also a most powerful and eloquent preacher and will address the meetings both morning and evening.

All are cordially invited and earnestly requested to be present at the Sunday services and those on Monday at 3 p. m. in Philosophy Hall.

ELIZA B. SWAN,
Cor. and Rec. Secretary.

Estray Notice.

Strayed, early the present spring, five ewes, four being yearlings and one older. The sheep each had the top of one ear off and also an undercrop. Information leading to their recovery will be rewarded by the undersigned.

I offer for sale my farm of 146 acres near the Bowers place. The improvements consist of 35 acres cleared, good house, barn and two orchards. Well watered. L. W. Clark, Oakland, Md.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

ONE LIFE AT A TIME.

If the dead came back—
If in some shadowy glen their forms might meet us,
Or from some wandering wind their voices greet us,
Or if, in all earth's strange or common places,
We might have hope to see their dear, dead faces,
Hope by keen eyes and hearing to discover
The father, sister, husband, wife or lover,
From death come back—

Life would be all a watching and a waiting,
A standing tiptoe at the mystic grating,
A pleading for the blessed shapes to linger,
Straining to touch them with a doubting finger,
Chattering wildly of the past (and sueing
Wildly for pardon of our evil doing
Before they died).

Their pardon, lacking God's, would still content us;
We should walk blindly in the way they sent us;
Follow no unseen Christ, nor seek the portal
Of that unseen, faith-conquered life immortal.
We should be serfs to sight, if out of Heaven
To our crude eyes so crude a boon were given—
Our dead come back.

And soon, distracted with this double showing,
Half earth, half Heaven, our doubtful senses knowing,
Labor would languish into dreams and fancies,
Duty be dazed by blinding sunward glances,
The world become less real, nor Heaven come nearer,
Our dear ones be no happier or dearer,
Should they come back.

No happier—ah no! How selfish hearted
Who wishes back the blessedly departed!
Back from their sunny peace and swift-winged power
Into our carts that clog and woes that lower,
Just that our faithless, fretful eyes may view them
A few brief years before we shall go to them,
When we are dead.

Ah, God knows best, one life at one time giving,
Sparing to fret us with a double living,
A clash of mysteries, two worlds, two missions,
Two stern and strange and masterful conditions.
My prayers I turn to praise, O God in Heaven,
That to my wail this boon Thou hast not given—
My dead come back.

—Amos R. Wells, in Endeavor World.

A Psychological Error

By William Foster Brown.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

IN A sort of veiled way Johnson was the butt of the "By Force of Arms" company. Why Crandall had taken him on was a question concerning which that reticent person offered no information, but it was generally conceded—with a possible exception—that as the new member showed very little talent as an actor, the nearly ended season and the minor part to be filled accounted for it.

The leading man treated him with lofty condescension; the soubrette poked open fun at his staid ways and labored efforts in acquiring the "business" of his part, and Ransom, the comedian, remarked facetiously one afternoon after Johnson had failed twice to respond to cues: "That fellow ought to be with Joe Jefferson as understudy; he could do the 20 years sleep in Rip out of sight." Miss Marvelle, the leading lady, alone failed to remark on any of Johnson's shortcomings—possibly because she was a kind-hearted girl and hated to hurt anyone's feelings.

"I'LL TRY," HE SAID.

If Johnson resented the ridicule and covert sarcasm of which he was the object he made no sign, but went blindly on, not doing the things he should have done, and doing with effusion those which he ought not to have done; standing on his dignity when common sense should have taught him to unbend, and, because of his lack of insight into the true inwardness of things theatrical, becoming familiar when it would have been to his advantage to have remained dignified.

To further complicate his relations with his fellow players, Johnson had fallen head over heels in love with Helen Marvelle and showed it, regarding her with a dog-like devotion in his eyes that proclaimed his secret, which redoubled the witticisms at his expense.

"She would as soon look at 'Props,' the kid," said Parker, disgustedly, who, by reason of his playing leads, felt himself something of a mentor. "Johnson's got nerve to even look at her the way he does. I don't believe Miss Marvelle remembers his two-by-twice existence half the time." Parker was not without interest in the handsome leading lady on his own account.

"By Force of Arms" was to close on the New England circuit, and one beautiful spring day as the company was making a long jump between cities, a washout in the hills delayed the train "at nowhere in particular," as Ransom put it, clambering out of the car to stretch his legs. "Come on, you people," he called back gayly to his companions, "I've found a little road out here that's lost and I'm going to explore it; the conductor says we shan't start for three hours."

An abrupt turn and the party was out of sight of the train—the fresh green country through which the road wound absolutely devoid of signs of human life. Parker and Miss Marvelle walked on ahead discussing chances for next season. Ransom, bringing up the rear, railed Johnson unmercifully regarding a letter the comedian had discovered him reading on the train. "From Frohman?" he inquired, with mock interest.

"No," responded Johnson, who appeared to be in unusually good spirits, "it isn't from a girl, either." Unconsciously Ransom's hand sought the inner pocket of his coat and at the other's quizzical laugh he began to study the landscape with a very red face.

The road—a mere cart track—swerved suddenly, and, without warning, the party found themselves entering a country graveyard, a primitive inclosure of straggling stones and a few huge pine trees. Under one of the latter was a small open grave—by the side of it, a somber blot on the bright sunshine, a tiny coffin.

Against it, her slender body shaking with sobs, lay a woman striving seemingly to clasp it in her arms, while about her stood perhaps a score of people, their uneasy glances and shifting movements showing plainly that the situation was beyond them.

"Let's get out of here," whispered Parker, turning hurriedly. "I don't care for any funerals in mine. I'm going back." Before he could carry out his intention, a man left his place among the mourners and hesitatingly approached. "Won't you wait a minute, mister," he said, awkwardly. "Mebbe there's some of your folks kin say a prayer, and I'd take it mighty kind if they would. Y' see," with a sudden choke, "my little boy is laying over there, and his mother is nigh distracted 'cos there ain't anybody to kinder ask God to look after him before we have to go and leave him all alone. We're just plain folks, without much book learning, and the minister couldn't get here; city folks, I take it?"

Miss Marvelle's troubled eyes veered swiftly from the speaker's anxious face to the pathetic group under the trees, and then back to her companions; and it came home to her with sudden force how completely the homely appeal had sounded the shallowness of their natures. Ransom, with an abstracted air, was making little holes in the ground with his cane, and Parker's countenance bore an expression of lofty boredom—she wondered, with swift half-scorn, why she had ever mistaken it for the sign manual of high breeding; the idol was nothing but clay, after all.

"For shame," she said, indignantly, after a silence. "Can't any of you men say something—anything—to comfort that poor mother; haven't you any feeling?" Parker turned away his head and Ransom shook his vigorously. The leading lady's eyes caught Johnson's and held them. Something in the mute question in them turned his face suddenly white: "I'll try," he said, simply, and walking over he dropped his hand on the little coffin.

"My friends," he said, quietly, and somehow the dignity he had always lacked seemed to fall on him all at once like a mantle. "I'm not a churchman, but, believe me, the little one lying here needs no minister to speak for him to the one who said: 'Suffer little children to come unto me.' I doubt not the one you love is looking down on us to-day, well and happy, from that land where there is no sorrow nor crying—waiting until that better day when, in the fullness of time, where he is, there you shall be also." Then, reverently, and in a voice that bertayed none of the hesitation of the footlights, Johnson repeated the Lord's prayer.

That night as Johnson was dressing for the first act Ransom came into his room. "Old man," he said in a curiously shaky voice, "forgive me for the nasty things I've said to you; you are a better man than I—than any of us—and I honor you."

"No, no," cried Johnson, grasping the proffered hand with a beaming face, "don't say a better one; besides, I knew you were only chaffing me and I don't blame you for it. I know well enough that I can't act like you or Parker, and I'm going home to-morrow. That letter you saw me reading was from my father; he's found out that he made a mistake about something that happened years ago, and he wrote asking me to forget and forgive. I shan't have to be the square peg in the round hole any more; and, by the way, Ransom, I want you to be the first to congratulate me. Miss Marvelle is going, too—she promised to marry me on the way back from the funeral this afternoon.'

Never Become Rusty.

Three things that never become rusty: The money of the benevolent, the nails in a collector's shoes and a woman's tongue.—Chicago Daily News.

The Pain of Parting.

The pain of parting is experienced by the small boy when his mother attempts to comb his hair.—Chicago Daily News.

THEY KNEW NO FEAR

How Five American Soldiers Defied an Army of Redskins.

Thrashed Them at Odds of Twenty-Five to One—A Scene of Cool Courage and Heroism That Has But Few Equals.

Probably nowhere in authentic history outside of the official records of the Sixth United States cavalry can there be found an account of a battle fought and won by an army with odds against it of 25 to 1. It wasn't much of an army, to be sure, that little contingent of American cavalry, but it fought hard for 15 hours and thrashed beautifully 25 times its number. Maj. W. H. Carter, of the Sixth, touches on the incident briefly in his history of the regiment, but he gives in full the letter of Gen. Miles, which is perhaps the most striking testimonial to the heroism of a handful of enlisted men that was ever penned by a general commanding a country's armies.

In August, 1874, says the Chicago Record-Herald, the Cheyennes, Kiowas and Comanches were dyeing the Kansas border red. An expedition against them was fitted out at Fort Dodge, with Gen. Nelson A. Miles in command. The Indians fled south to the Red river in Texas, pursued hotly by a detachment of the Sixth cavalry under Capts. Compton and Biddle. The braves of the allied tribes made a stand on the face of the bluffs of the Tule river. All told there were 600 warriors. The meager forces of the Sixth charged, routed the reds and drove them "over the bluffs and through the deep precipitous canyons, past their burning villages and out onto the Staked Plains."

It became necessary to send couriers to Camp Supply, Ind. T. The whole country was swarming with hostiles, and the trip was one that seemed almost certain death. Volunteers were asked for, and Sergt. Zacharia T. Woodall, troop I, of the Sixth, stepped forward and said he'd go. The whole outfit was ready for the service, as a matter of fact. The commanding officer picked out four men to go with Woodall, and the little contingent started out across the Indian-infested wilderness.

TIED TO HIS MOUNT.
(Wounded Indian Carried Out of Range by His Pony.)

The five cavalrymen rode northward under the starlight. At dawn they bivouacked, but before the morning cup of coffee was made they saw circling on the horizon a swarm of Cheyennes. The eye of the sergeant told him that to get through the circumference of that circle was beyond the power of any five men, even though they were old campaigners of the Sixth cavalry. With his four followers he made for a little depression which offered some natural advantages for purposes of defense. There the five dropped, and with carbines advanced waited the narrowing of the red cordon's limits. The Cheyennes charged, and charging sent a volley into that little prairie stronghold. There was a hot answer and five Cheyenne ponies carried dead or wounded riders out of range, for the braves were tied to their mounts. Behind the little natural rampart Sergt. Woodall was sorely wounded, and one man was dying. Let Gen. Miles' letter tell the rest of the tale:

"From early morning to dark, outnumbered 25 to 1, under an almost constant fire and at such short range that they sometimes used their pistols, retaining the last charge to prevent capture and torture, this little party of five defended their lives and the person of their dying comrade, without food and the only drink the rainwater that they collected in a pool, mingled with their own blood. There is no doubt that they killed more than double their number besides those that they wounded. The simple recital of the deeds of the five soldiers and the mention of the odds against which they fought, how the wounded defended the dying and the dying aided the wounded by exposure to fresh wounds after the power of action was gone—these alone present a scene of cool courage, heroism and self-sacrifice which duty as well as inclination prompt us to recognize but which we cannot fitly honor."

When dusk gathered on the prairie the Cheyennes literally fled, thrashed by the sturdy valor of five American soldiers.

Curious Botanical Experiment.

Some curious botanical experiments made at a zoological laboratory at Naples are reported by Hans Windler. A flowerless aquatic plant, that grows normally with its roots in the sand and its leaves in the water, was inverted, specimens being placed with the leaves buried in the sand and the roots floated in the water in strong light. The roots changed to stems and leaves the buried parts becoming roots.

PUNGENT PARAGRAPHS.

"That's a satisfied looking elevator boy." "Yes; the elevator is out of order and won't run." — Indianapolis News.

"Leather-head? Why, I thought her real bright." "Well, she is educated, to be sure! Say a patent-leather-head!"—Detroit Journal.

"In the nature of things summer engagements at the shore should be unstable." "Why so?" "Because they are generally built on sand."—Philadelphia Times.

A Reprobate.—"Aren't you ashamed to go away and leave your wife in tears?" asked the near relative. "Oh, I don't know," answered the brutal man; "that's the way she has a good time when she goes to the theater."—Washington Star.

"My, what an untidy man," exclaimed the fair visitor to our sanctum. "Who is the one with his desk in such a litter?" And then she was sure she was being jollied when her guide said it was the literary editor.—Philadelphia Press.

Old Bachelor (to his housekeeper)—"I don't think this is the usual kind of tea, Martha. What sort of packet did it come in?" Martha—"Faix, an' I think, now, the tay merchant said it came in a stame packet all the way from Ceylon."—Pick-Me-Up.

Fallen Angel.—"What's this, dearie?" said the young husband, as he tried to bite into it. "Why, that's angel-food, darling," replied the fair creature on the other side of the table. "Oh! Is it?" with contracted brows and set jaws. "I—I thought, perhaps, it was marble cake."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

WOMEN WHO ANSWER "ADS."

There Are Some Who Do It as a Pastime, According to This Man's Experience.

"I've actually got so that I dread to advertise for female employes," said the manager of an art store, to a New York Sun man. "If it was possible to get through the work myself I'd rather do it than to interview a mob of feminine callers.

"To select a good assistant didn't use to be such a big job as it is now. For one thing, there were not formerly so many triflers. You would be surprised to know how many women answer advertisements for help who do not want employment and neither could nor would take it if it was offered to them at a good salary. They are what I call professional advertisement answerers.

"I had occasion to advertise only last week for a clerk, and as a protection against these nuisances, I stated that no professional callers need apply. Yet they came, at least a dozen of them. Fortunately, I've got so I can spot them on short notice, and don't fool away much time on them.

"When the unqualified callers first began to besiege me in such numbers I was under the impression that the regular rounders were the representatives of agencies who wished to get us on their list and furnish their own applicant on commission, but I was mistaken in this, for while a few of the professionals are connected, most of them pursue the fad on their own accord. It is without doubt the craziest hobby womankind has ever ridden, and my only hope is that they will soon run down.

"A goodly percentage of these idlers are social reformers who are bent on writing books and tracts and things. Somewhere they have imbibed the idea that men who employ help are regular vampires, ever on the lookout for new victims, and their object in visiting us is to investigate our methods of securing clerks and afterward acquaint the public with our evil procedures.

"But I can stand even these troublesome spies with even more equanimity than the woman who, finding time hang heavily on their hands, tramp around from office to office for the fun of the thing."

ONLY ONE WHISTLE.

How the Rural Attorney Obtained Damages for His Client from the Railroad.

In the early days of the railroad in Michigan there was a farmer who owned two well-bred and useful dogs, named Major and Tige, says Golden Days. On a certain morning the dogs chased a stray hog down the main road, and on the return trip stopped to play at the railroad crossing. Heedless of the conspicuous warning to look out for the locomotive, Tige was struck by that engine of destruction and killed, Major escaping by sheer dog luck. Damage suits were a new thing at the time, so when the owner of the dogs commenced an action before a rural justice of the peace there was an immense crowd of neighbors present at the hearing. The engineer swore that he gave one sharp blast of the whistle as he approached the crossing. It looked as though the railroad company was to go scot free, but the attorney for the farmer knew his business—and also the justice. "Your honor" he said, "it is required by the statutes in such cases made and provided, that when any person or domestic animal is upon a railroad and seen by the engineer, he must sound his whistle. In this instance, your honor, there were two domestic animals innocently playing on the track, and the whistle was sounded but once, when it is a positive legal requirement that it should have been blown twice—once for each dog." So convincing was this argument that the country justice would not even give the railroad attorney a hearing, and awarded the plaintiff the full amount of damages sued for.

EXTINCTION OF THE POTATO

Threatened Through the Budding Process Carried On Through Many Generations.

If there should be no more sugar cane in the world, beets might be cultivated to take its place entirely, but if there were no longer any potatoes, the domestic economy of thousands of humble homes would be seriously deranged, and the deprivation would be considerable even on the most luxurious table. That the sugar cane and the potato are in danger of becoming degenerate and finally extinct has for some time been recognized in botanical laboratories all over the world. In this country the botanical department of Harvard university has gone into the matter with a good deal of thoroughness, and experiments have been undertaken to perpetuate these valuable species, says the Cincinnati Enquirer.

The danger lies in the fact that both have been propagated for so many generations from buds—the sugar cane from the joints of stalk, and the potato from the eyes of the tuber—that they have almost lost the power of producing fruitful seeds. For a century or more, during which reproduction from buds can be successfully continued, the fact that the seeds themselves become sterile or dwindle away and disappear, does not seem particularly important. Finally, however, there comes a time, like the present, when a whole species shows signs of the deterioration which precedes extinction, and it is then only by crossing one plant with another plant, or one variety with another variety, that the life of the species can be renewed. But if the plant has lost its seed-producing faculty, such crossing is evidently impossible, and the degeneration must continue to its logical result.

Sugar cane is, of course, one of the most valuable and important of agricultural products. It is at present grown in all warm countries, and the plants for 50 or 100 plant generations have been started from the buds which spring from the joints of the cane. A section of the stalk containing one of these generative joints is planted and a new stalk or group springs up, the plantation being thus maintained by a portion of its products. Meanwhile, as the plants mature, they put forth blossoms, which, though as beautiful as they ever were, perhaps, are meaningless and unfruitful. When it was discovered by the botanists that the sugar cane was losing its power to produce fruitful seeds, it was realized that such a loss meant inbreeding, as it would be called in the case of animals, and that, unless some artificial means of restoration could be employed, the species would eventually run out.

The potato is among the cheapest of all the cultivated foods, and while it is generally known that it is reproduced by budding, pieces of the tuber containing "eyes" being planted in the ground, most readers will be surprised to learn that potato seed is an almost unheard-of curiosity. In the museum of economic botany at Harvard there are models of potato plants including the pink and white blossoms and the grape-like fruit, but this seed-containing fruit has become so nearly extinct that few people, even from the agricultural districts of the country, have ever seen it. In the models, however, it is clearly shown that the potato is closely related to the tomato, and the two-celled arrangement of seeds is very similar in the original fruit of both plants.

The first year's crop of tubers from a planting of seed is generally too small for commercial use, so that the seeding process has of late years been almost entirely discontinued. The budding method of propagation has been carried on to such an extent that it is a rule for the blossoms to wither without fructification, and even in the exceptional cases where fruit appears it is generally seedless and barren. As a rule the small amount of seed which now survives the degeneration of the plant is likely to rot away immediately, so that the greatest care and skill are required to secure the growth of seed plants. However, as in the case of the sugar cane, as the common varieties are shown, by contrast with the hybrids, to be less valuable, the warning of the botanists is being heeded and science is being called upon to point out the means of relief.

A Woman's Invention.

When an alarm of fire is rung up in any of our large cities, and the engines of but one district are called out, there is an expense to the department for fuel and wear and tear of the apparatus estimated at $100 per alarm. The turning in of a false alarm is therefore no trifling matter, and the perpetrator of the "joke" merits condemnation. Miss Ellen E. Tyndale, a London woman, has patented an invention which is meant to check the false alarmist and put an end to his pernicious activity. The contrivance takes the form of an automatic alarm post which not only rings up the fire station, but also grips the wrist of the alarmist with a steel bracelet, blows a police whistle and presents the man with a shilling for his trouble. The prisoner cannot be released until a policeman arrives and the authenticity of the alarm can be verified. The invention is not likely to become popular in this country, where men would not be willing to be chained to a post in a public street, even for the magnificent compensation of 25 cents.—Scientific American.

Advantages of Hospitals.

A German professor declares that a poor man in a hospital is better off than a rich patient in his own house, and he hopes that this fact will help to overcome the prejudice against hospitals.—N. Y. Sun.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

Two hundred and ten tons of honey, worth £12,000, are the yearly produce of Ireland.

A new insect has appeared in California in time to devour the eggs of the countless red spiders that injure the orange groves.

In the Rhine vineyards one of the methods of protecting the vines against frosts in May is to put paper bags around them over night.

The trustees of the British museum have recently transmitted a beautifully illuminated address to Emperor Menelik expressing their thanks for the assistance and facilities which his majesty has accorded of late to British travelers who have undertaken journeys to Abyssinia for the purpose of scientific exploration.

One of the simplest, cheapest and best sterilizers is sunshine, and it is important to allow as much sun in a sick room as possible. The same rule is applicable to the rooms of healthy people. The good effects of "sun bathing" in the treatment of convalescents is ample proof of the utility of the rays of the sun for therapeutic purposes.

The Prussian government has advised the various communities in Prussia that they should erect, at their own risks, cheap dwellings for employes, the laboring population, and persons of relatively small income. It also urges electric lines for quicker suburban communication, and mentions a number of legal steps which will prevent excessive real estate speculation.

In the years 1649, 1665, 1678 and 1690 smallpox spread among the inhabitants of Boston with great destruction of life. In 1702 there were 313 persons who died under its power. In 1721, 5,759 persons had it in a natural way, and that number was a large half of the sole proportion of whom 844 died. In 1730 about 4,00 cases of smalpox occurred; vaccination with the virus, being the discovery of Dr. Jenner, of England, was introduced here about the year 1800 by Dr. Benjamin Waterhouse.

KING COTTON.

Louisiana's Magnificent Display and Striking Exhibits at the Pan-American Exposition.

In the Louisiana exhibit in the Agriculture building of the Pan-American exposition, King Cotton occupies the most conspicuous place. Forty varieties of seed and 60 of lint cotton are shown. The different varieties are displayed in miniature bales. Several full sized bales as they are prepared for shipment are also shown, says the exposition bulletin. Cotton seed is also shown in a large number of jars; cotton seed oil in tall glass bottles. The seed is also shown after undergoing different commercial processes. The cotton seed cake, which is a product after the oil is pressed out, is also exhibited. This cake, when ground, makes cotton seed meal, which is used as feed for cattle and as a fertilizer. Sulphur and rock salt are shown in the exhibit, the former of 99⅛ per cent. purity and the latter 98 per cent.. Both the rock salts are from the fields of Louisiana, which contain an inexhaustible amount of these products. An interesting feature is an illustration of the products of fat pine. A piece of the wood is shown together with its products, turpentine, tar, tar oil, creosote, pyroligneous acid, wood alcohol and charcoal. The charred remains of the wood after these products have been extracted is shown beside the natural wood.

A striking feature of the exhibit is a sweet potato weighing 122 pounds. Thirty-five varieties of sweet potatoes are seen. Extremely large pecan nuts in 11 varieties are displayed. Along one end of the exhibit bales of moss are piled, one bale showing the moss as taken from the tree and others showing the prepared product, and the finished moss ready for use by the upholsterer. Twenty-two kinds of hay, some of it being the famous alfalfa variety, are shown in model bales, 12 varieties of wheat in jars and five of oats. An exhibit that will be most interesting to smokers is one of perique tobacco and cigars. Raw tobacco, and cigars in boxes are shown in considerable quantities.

Divide the Wreckage.

The wreck of the great ship Tantallen Castle on the rocky shore of Robben island has attracted attention to the leper colony located on that speck of terra firma. The lepers, of whom there are several hundred, have a peculiar custom of dividing the foreshore of the island into portions, one portion being given to one leper. Whatever jetsam is cast upon that portion becomes the private property of the individual to whom it is assigned. This unwritten law is rigidly observed and causes no disputes. A more dreary existence it is hard to imagine than that on this cheerless spot of sand and rock, which is subject to great heat in the summer and very boisterous winds in the winter.—London News.

Philippine Ferry.

The natives of Mindanao, in the Philippine islands, have a novel way of crossing the river in the rainy season when it is in flood. Instead of working the ferry by means of a rope or sweep they harness it to a carribao, or water buffalo, and "drive" across the river. These water buffaloes are used as beasts of burden in the Philippines, and the wealth or otherwise of a native chief is gauged by his neighbors by the number of carribao he possesses. Resembling a cow in all but horns (which in the case of the carribao are from four to five feet apart), these animals are equally at home on land or in water.

THE AMERICAN NAVY

A History of Its Victories to Be Published Very Soon.

In One Day Yankee Ingenuity Revolutionized Naval Warfare—Momentous Results of the Duel in Hampton Roads.

[Special Washington Letter.]

IN the Army and Navy club one evening recently a veteran naval officer quoted Admiral Jouett as having said: "All of the navies of Great Britain, France, Spain, Russia, in fact of every nation on earth, were driven from the seas in one day by Yankee ingenuity and fighting. All of them, every battleship, man-of-war and cruiser, fell into helplessness in one day, and the Yankee nation ruled the seas."

The veteran then explained that he referred to the battles of March 8 and 9, 1862, when the ironclad Merrimac and the turreted Monitor fought at Hampton Roads, Va., and he added: "But for the fact that the Yankee nation was then divided into two hostile camps we could have swept the high seas and defied the world. When the Merrimac hammered and rammed the best men-of-war in the American navy the officers of foreign navies who witnessed the feat agreed in saying: 'We have not a real warship in our navies. The wooden ship is no longer a warship.'"

These remarks have been verified in every respect. The British navy, which had cost hundreds of millions of dollars, was as effectually destroyed on that fateful 8th of March as when the noble old Cumberland was sunk to her topsail yards by the Merrimac's ram. The 9th of March but emphasized the value and importance of iron-plated vessels, and illustrated two great principles in the construction of warships which must last for all time, the deflecting and turreted armors. The Monitor reached Hampton Roads on the night of the 8th, and the next day she and the Merrimac pounded each other, at a few yards distance, with the heaviest guns then known, from eight a. m. until one p. m., when they retired from the conflict, neither materially damaged, and each claiming to have gotten a little the best of it. Either of these vessels, with sufficient ammunition, could have destroyed the English, French and Spanish fleets combined in the greatest naval battle of former history, that of Trafalgar.

Another weapon developed by the war and destined to play a wonderful part in future naval conflicts was the torpedo. The confederates by the use of this terrible weapon destroyed more than 50 United States men-of-war. Although in its infancy, the destructiveness of the torpedo was assured, and its application almost infinite. Its improvements have about kept pace with those of guns and ships, neither of which would likely be understood or even recognized by an ante-bellum officer.

When the war with Spain was declared, Admiral Jouett, quoted above, said to the writer: "We will have no trouble with the Spanish navy. Give me the monitor Puritan and I will go out to meet any fleet that Spain can send over here. They could not see me and locate me with their range-finders until they were within two or three miles of me. I could see them seven miles off, and, with my big guns down close to the water's edge, I could sink them before they realized that the most powerful fighting machine on any water was doing the deadly work." The old veteran of the civil war also said: "George Dewey has a fleet which can take care of the business which he has in hand, if he can only get inside that harbor without danger from the torpedoes." The old sea fighter was correct, for Dewey did the business in hand, and took a rest in order to get breakfast for the men behind the guns. The foresight of the admiral, which now seems like prophecy, was further vindicated when Schley from the bridge of the Brooklyn, off Santiago, signaled to the captains of the fleet under his immediate command to "close in on the enemy."

BATTERIES AT VICKSBURG.

The history of our navy has never been officially published, but it is now well under way. Twenty years ago the congress authorized the publication of the records of the war of the rebellion, but that history related chiefly to the movements of the armies and not of our fleets. The preservation of the official records of the navy during the war, 1861-1865, was first broached by Secretary Chandler in 1884. Secretary Whitney heartily committed himself to it, and it was on his recommendation that an appropriation was made, which became available under Secretary Tracy, who also indorsed the measure with equally unstinted commendation. Under Secretary Chandler there were but one clerk and one copyist. Secretary Whitney strongly appealed to congress and the infant began to learn to walk. Prof. James R. Soley, of the naval academy, was placed in charge of the work, where he remained until appointed assistant secretary of the navy.

As generally acknowledged he was most admirably equipped for the work, and was devoting himself with enthusiasm and excellent results to the task of carrying the records of the navy up to an approximate standard of the merit and value of the records of the army, when he was called to another, if more eminent, no less honorable, field of labor. Lieut. Commander F. M. Wise was left in charge of the work, and under his regime of research and investigation most gratifying progress was made.

MERRIMAC RAMMING THE CUMBERLAND.

No history of the civil war, and no history of the war with Spain, could be complete or just without the stories of the brilliant exploits and heroic daring of the navy. During the civil war, on both sides, a genius and courage were displayed which must ever redound to the glory of American arms. The inspirations of the one were born of the necessities of the other. The Monitor was begotten of the Merrimac. And from that result, in an hour, the terrible armadas of Europe incumbered the seas as mere wooden merchantmen.

There were indeed many features in the operations of the navies in that war so unique and important as to astound and startle the old world. A glance at contemporaneous European publications shows how profound a sensation was created by the combat between the Monitor and the Merrimac. England, until then the boasted mistress of the seas, and France and Spain, and all the rest who could, hastened to build and equip vessels on the Yankee plan. It was the only war in which ironclads, rams, rifled ordnance and torpedoes had been employed, and in which a steam blockade had been kept up extending over thousands of miles of coast. In no war of modern times had naval operations been so extensively carried on, or with the achievement of so stupendous results.

At the outbreak of the war the union had a navy. The south had none, not even a shop in which the simplest marine engine could be built. Yet so great were the earnestness, the courage and the ingenuity of her people that the reverberation of her guns afloat, the prows of her rams, the wrecks caused by her torpedoes made indelible her claim to have been conspicuous in the revolutionizing and rebuilding of the navies of the world.

The naval war records will give to history all of these facts, in detail, with copies of official orders issued, as well as with statements of deeds accomplished. The work done by the navy in our recent war will also be portrayed officially, and then we will know all of the reasons which actuated the admirals and their efficient captains, and the men behind the guns. We are to be told all about the wise and swift work done to prepare ammunition and supplies for the war which we did not want, tried to avoid, and were compelled to undertake, because of the inhumanity of man to man, culminating in the destruction of our battleship and the assassination of our sailors in a supposedly friendly harbor, in time of profound peace with all the world.

The naval war records show many facts concerning which casual readers are not informed, particularly as to the work of the federal army during the civil war. Grant's army was aided in a manner not generally chronicled by the gunboats at Fort Donelson, Pittsburgh Landing and Vicksburg. McClellan could not have saved his army at Harrison's Landing but for the gunboats. Two years later, on the same river, Grant maintained his army on both banks of the James by aid of gunboats, in violation of the Napoleonic axiom: "No army can be maintained on both sides of a river." But Napoleon knew nothing of ironclad gunboats.

The naval war records will show that Grant's greatest campaign, resulting in the capture of Vicksburg, was planned with complete reliance upon the Mississippi fleet. We are all proud of our navy; but up to date we have had more army history than navy history, an unfairness which is being corrected none too soon.

SMITH D. FRY.

The Optimist.

To-day he has put the Lighted End of his cigar in his mouth, to say nothing of his Wife's Mother having come for a visit of Indefinite Duration.

Still the Optimist sees only the Bright Side.

"I have no doubt it will at least prove a Valuable and Lasting Lesson to me!" he exclaims, hopefully.

His neighbors earnestly solicit him to come off the Griddle, but quite ineffectually.—Detroit Journal.

BOLD FIRE FIGHTER.

William H. Musham, New Chief of Chicago Department.

Has Been in Hundreds of Tight Places, But Never Had a Bone Broken—Joined Force at the Age of Sixteen.

William H. Musham, the veteran fire fighter of more than 40 years, is Chicago's new chief of the fire department. Mayor Harrison appointed him D. J. Swenie's successor June 24, and the council speedily ratified the selection. The bond of $25,000 was accepted, and First Assistant Marshal Musham became "fire marshal and chief of brigade" immediately.

Simultaneously the resignation of Chief Swenie was read, his half a century of service acknowledged and the thanks of the city of Chicago tendered officially by the mayor as the representative of the people. That was Chief Swenie's formal "good-by" and the beginning of Chief Musham's term.

William Henry Musham was born of Scotch-Irish parents in Chicago, February 7, 1839, and is a carpenter by trade. At the age of 16 he became a volunteer fireman and ran to the fires with D. J. Swenie and others, many of whom are prominent in professional and commercial circles today. He worked at the great Lake street fire of 1857, where seven firemen and 16 citizens perished and Swenie recovered the bodies.

In 1861 he joined the paid fire department organized by Swenie in 1858. He became a member of No. 6, "the Little Giant," named after Stephen A. Douglas. The company's house was at Washington and Dearborn streets. After a time on the Atlantic company at State and Michigan streets he returned to No. 6. He went to Philadelphia and ran with the "Fairmount," but, like "Sandy" Shay and others, he soon returned and joined the T. B. Brown company, which was named for the president of the board of police and fire commissioners. In 1868 he became assistant foreman. Subsequently he was captain of No. 6, which moved to Maxwell and Canal streets. His company was the first to begin fighting the great fire of 1871.

WILLIAM H. MUSHAM.
(New Chief Fire Marshal of the City of Chicago.)

R. A. Williams was then chief, John Schnur first, Lorenz Walters second, and Matt Benner third assistant marshal, and the city had but 17 engines, three of which were out of service.

March 1, 1872, Musham was made third assistant marshal for his bravery during the great fire. In 1879, when Swenie was made chief, he was appointed first assistant.

Although the hero of countless close calls, Musham has never had a bone broken. From a height of 240 feet he fought the fire in the Manufactures building at the world's fair, and in the basement of the Edelweiss cafe, where "Big Tom," of truck No. 6, was stripped naked by an explosion. Musham's most brilliant bit of fire fighting was at the Manufactures building at the world's fair, and it was widely heralded at the time. But Musham generously gave the praise to Battalion Chief Kenyon, Capts. Foley, of No. 5; Lucy, of No. 72; Crapo, of No. 45; McKiernan, of No. 51, and Palmer, of truck No. 20.

At a fire in a commission house on South Water street in June, 1865, Musham stood between two firemen when they were killed instantly by falling debris. He was swept into the river by a strong wind at the S. K. Martin lumber yard fire in 1894, when Lieut. McGinn, of the fireboat, was blown on live coals and burned to death.

August 5, 1897, he was severely injured at the fire and explosion in the Northwestern elevator. Six were killed there—Tommy Monohan, Swenie's driver, Coogan, Schnur and Strumen, of No. 3, Conway, of No. 27, and Hanley, of No. 5. Fifty men were injured. Musham saved 30 lives by moving two fireboats in time to prevent them from being destroyed.

John Campion, who will succeed Musham as first assistant marshal, was born in Kilkenny in 1849, and came to Chicago in 1854. He joined the fire department April 1, 1870, threw first water on the big fire in 1871, was made a captain in 1873, commanded engines No. 2, 6, 17 and 1, was made a battalion chief in 1882, and third assistant marshal May 1, 1895. He has had many close calls, but was never seriously hurt.

He was an ardent supporter of Musham in the recent contest for Swenie's place.

CORREGIDOR'S TOMB.

Historical Spot in the Philippines Desecrated and Rifled by Greedy American Soldiers.

When Dewey's squadron entered Manila bay on the mission that was to change the destinies of the Philippines the first shot fired at him came from Corregidor island, at the entrance to the harbor. This island, because of its strategical position, has gone down in naval history, yet few people know how it got its name.

Recent unfortunate events which compelled the government to step in and prevent further desecration of the tomb of Corregidor, its discoverer, have brought its history into prominence. Corregidor, says the New York Herald, was a Spanish explorer and was buried on the island, where a handsome tomb had been erected to his memory.

CORREGIDOR'S TOMB.
(Located at the Entrance to the Harbor of Manila.)

When the Spanish surrendered Corregidor island to the Americans a company of soldiers and hospital men were sent there to establish a hospital. While in Manila the soldiers had heard many stories of the Corregidor tomb. One of the stories given out was that a vast amount of jewelry and money had been stored away in the tomb.

As soon as the American soldiers landed on the island they at once tore their way into the monument but failed to find anything of value. A rust-eaten sword and a few trinkets were all that was found.

The picture shows the hole that the American soldiers made in the tomb.

REV. CAMPBELL MORGAN.

English Preacher Who Will Carry Forward Moody's Work Has Just Arrived in America.

Rev. Dr. G. Campbell Morgan, of London, who has just arrived in America to take the place of Dwight L. Moody in the American field of evangelism, was until lately the pastor of the New Court Congregational church, one of the most successful churches in all the United Kingdom. Dr. Morgan is 38 years old. His father was a Baptist minister of Gloucestershire, and his mother the daughter of a Baptist deacon. The son thus came naturally into the ministry. He began to speak in religious meetings when he was 13 years old. In all, he has been preaching 25 years. His first pastorate was in Hull, and he served in various pulpits until in 1893 he was called to Birmingham to take charge of the Westminster Congregational church in that city. Here he met Dwight L. Moody, who induced him to pay a visit to the Moody schools at Northfield, Mass. Dr. Morgan was deeply impressed at that time with the work being done by the famous American, and he never forgot the lesson he then learned. In 1896 he went to the New Court church in London, where he has been very successful as pastor. He is very conservative in his views of the Bible, and is more orthodox than otherwise in his theology.

REV. G. CAMPBELL MORGAN.
(English Clergyman Who Is to Take Mr. Moody's Place.)

City Eagle That Fishes.

A handsome bald eagle spends two or three hours every morning catching fish at a place within the city limits of Portland, Ore., in plain view of the passengers on a trolley car line. He perches on an oak tree near the shore of a lake in which carp and catfish are plentiful. When his "eagle eye" espies a fish in the shallow water near the shore, down he swoops, and, seizing the fish in his talons, flies back to the tree, where he eats, and then watches for another victim. The bird of freedom has chosen the position well, as the tree is on the extreme end of a long peninsula, which no one can approach without being visible for half a mile.

Ostrich Dined on Prayer Book.

An ostrich which was lately dissected in London had in its stomach a small prayer book.

NEIGHBORS.

Jack and Janie live side by side;
They're neighbors close in a cozy way,
And oh, what pleasure they have indoors
Or out in the street at play!
Ah, deary me! If they'd always agree,
What fun they could have in their play!

For Jacky and Janie keep "house" and "school,"
And sometimes they set up a store and trade;
But once in awhile things don't go right,
And they quarrel then, I'm afraid.
Yes, deary me! These two disagree
And quarrel at times, I'm afraid.

Then they play apart for the morning through,
And never a neighborly word they say;
But they don't seem happy—I wonder why—
And it isn't a pleasant day.
Ah, deary me! Why can't they agree,
And make it a pleasant day?

But after luncheon they sidle out,
And Janie, perhaps, has a piece of cake,
And she stands close up to the garden fence,
So Jacky a bite can take.
For, deary me! They soon would agree
If Jacky a bite would take!

She holds it out with a sidelong glance,
And Jacky moves up and takes a bite.
And then—the trouble is past and gone;
They will play together till night.
Yes, deary me! They now can agree,
And they'll play together till night!
—Youth's Companion.

TRICKS WITH EGGS.

How Bright Boys and Girls Can Have Lots of Fun and Mystify Their Elders and Friends.

Procure three glass bottles, and fill them with liquids as follows:

A, fresh water.

B, well salted water.

C, salt water containing only half the quantity of salt used in B.

Now take your egg and place it into jar A, and you will find the egg will sink to the bottom.

Now take another egg and place it in jar B, and it will remain on the top of the liquid.

If a third egg be placed in jar C, it will sink into the center of the water and there remain.

To the ordinary onlooker this appears astonishing, but of course the varying densities of the liquids account for the erratic actions of the eggs.

THE ECCENTRIC EGG.

To make an obedient egg we require an egg which has previously been blown. Through the hole you pour a sufficient quantity of silver sand to fill a quarter of the egg, and then seal up the hole with wax. Having done this, your egg can be made to assume any position. You can perform the Columbus egg trick with the greatest ease, you can balance it on the flat part of a knife, on its sides or on its pointed end, the only care being taken each time to well shake the egg in order to allow all the sand to collect at the desired spot.

This is the obedient egg; now for the disobedient one—the egg which will only stand in one position, viz., on its pointed end, and which if subjected to any amount of shaking cannot be made to assume any other position.

Through the hole in the top pour some shot and add a small quantity of sealing wax. Then hold the egg over a gas flame, taking care not to crack it. The wax and shot will then melt, and when cooled, and the egg is placed on the table, it will assume an upright position and nothing will cause it to take any other; it can be knocked down, but it will immediately jump up again into its old position.—Golden Days.

HAS PET PORCUPINE.

Little Girl, Living at Amesbury, Mass., Tells About a Queer Creature Her Papa Gave Her.

My papa, in company with two other men and a boy, went into the Nova Scotia woods in the autumn for a vacation trip. When he went away he promised to bring me some kind of a pet for my eighth birthday, and a porcupine is what he brought. He seemed like an ugly-looking pet with so many sharp quills sticking out all over his back, and I wondered how papa ever caught him. He said when he was away out in the woods, seven miles from the nearest house, he saw him way up on the limb of a birch tree, getting a breakfast of birch leaves. The first thing papa did was to cut three forked sticks. Each one of the men took one of these sticks, and the boy took a hatchet and climbed the tree. When all was ready, the boy cut off the limb of the tree, and down came the porcupine. Papa and the two men caught him with the forked sticks.

HELEN'S PET PORCUPINE.

Then they took a bag they had with them, got him into that, tied a string to each end of the bag, put a pole through and papa and the boy carried him through the swamps and woods seven miles to the nearest house. There they hired a boy to take them in a team ten miles into Bridgetown. When they got there, papa took a box and put some wire over the top. "Bluenose," for that is what we call the porcupine, was then fixed to bring home. He lost a good many quills on the way home, for most all the people wanted one as a souvenir.

At first I wasn't very well pleased with my birthday present, but papa has fixed a neat little bedroom down underground for him to sleep in when it is cold. He told me to feed him, and take care of him, and I would soon learn to like him. Every morning Bluenose is up watching for me to come and feed him. He makes a little whining, crying noise that seems to say: "Do get me some breakfast." I give him birch leaves, apples and sweet corn. I do not know what I shall do when the birch leaves are all gone, for he seems to like those very much. Perhaps they make him think of his old home in Nova Scotia. When I give him an apple he sits up on his hind legs, takes it one of his paws and eats it, just as I have seen monkeys eat. He doesn't drink any water. Dogs don't seem to like him, but a great many have been up to his cage to see him; some stand and bark at him; others look and run away. Even if he isn't handsome, he is a gentle, kind old fellow, and I would feel very bad now to lose him.—Helen G. Fuller, in St. Nicholas.

Laziest People on Earth.

A traveler who visited the Sandwich islands claims to have discovered among the natives there the "laziest people on earth." He writes that during his visit to one of the islands none of the inhabitants did any work to speak of. They squatted, chatted, laughed, played, and acted in other ways more like a lot of little folks on a summer evening than the responsible heads of households. Nature gives them enough to eat without any considerable labor, and they seem contented with what they thus receive. At Honolulu and other points work is done, but altogether the people of the islands are as lazy as they are happy.

TARRED HIS SMALL TORMENTOR.

The other day a big Newfoundland dog, with a muzzle on him, was following a boy near the City Hall park in Pittsburgh, when a little bull terrier made a dash for him and got a death grip on one of the big fellow's ears. It was all done so quickly that the Newfoundland's ear was being well chewed before he hardly knew what struck him. He gave a howl and a snap at the little brute, but his muzzle would not allow him to open his jaws, and the bull terrier did not lose his grip, and went along, too. They dashed through the crowd, past the fountain and out on the plaza, where the big fellow nearly ran over a pail of smoking tar that was standing for a moment by the side of a workman who had stopped to light his pipe. Quick as a flash the big dog stopped and threw his head as high in the air as he could. This dragged the little terrier well off his feet and nearly tore the ear from the head of the Newfoundland, but when the little brute came down he lighted plump in the pail of tar. He let go quickly enough then, and as the big dog trotted away he left a sadder and wiser bull terrier behind.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address.

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, JULY 25, 1901.

Republican Nominations.

FOR STATE SENATOR:

ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

FOR HOUSE OF DELEGATES:

PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.

CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

FOR SHERIFF:

WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

FOR TREASURER:

JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONERS:

TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.

JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

FOR REGISTER OF WILLS:

EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY SURVEYOR:

FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

THE esteemed Hagerstown Mail, which knows a good thing when it sees it, in commenting upon a singer's effort says that "the audience was sympathetic and enrapt, hanging with dramatic fervor to the meticulous inspiration of the passionate verve of the sinuousye irresistibly direct and co-ordinate harmonies which passed oft the ivory gates and scored their triumphs in the very heart of music's capital." We are glad to hear it. A "meticulous inspiration" is something which the average Hagerstownian stands very much in need of, and a "passionate verve of the sinuousye" is just the thing to cause the inspiration.

CHICAGO is making extraordinary exertions to save the babies from death by the heat. People have contributed money liberally in order that infants in charge of mothers may be taken on short excursions on the lake and the health officials have followed the example of officials in other cities by issuing free booklets on the way to care for babies in hot weather. An original idea is the enlistment of the Board of Health of one hundred physicians for service in the tenement house sections of the city. These physicians will give their time exclusively to the care of infants and children during the heated term. The mortality among the little ones in all our large cities in the past few weeks has been appalling.

Schley Attacked Without Reason.

The people of the United States—that is, at least, nine-tenths of them—will continue to maintain that the credit of the victory at Santiago belongs first of all to Schley, who was in actual command at the time of the fight. Had Admiral Sampson, in his report of the engagement, been fair enough to mention Schley, and if he had been fair enough later on to give that officer the proper credit, the unseemly discussion would not have gone on for three years. But the fool friends of Sampson have seen fit to attack Schley without rhyme or reason, and they have indulged, in some instances, in the meanest sort of abuse. Sampson has kept quiet, thereby giving a tacit indorsement to the assaults upon his able assistant. Now comes the third volume of Maclay's history, in which the writer calls Schley a liar and indulges in some epithets of the same character.

The time to have investigated Schley's course was at once. Three years after the fight is too late to take the question up. It is gratifying, however, to find that Admiral Schley has many sturdy defenders, and any attempts to blacken his fine record will be fought with vigor.

Prepared for Summer.

In the late spring after the ground has settled the roads should be prepared for summer travel by being shaped with the "road machine" or "road grader." When this work is done the ground is comparatively dry, and consequently the heavier road scraper is required and can be handled on the roads. It is somewhat unfortunate that this tool is ordinarily called a road grader, since the name has possibly led to a misconception as to an important use of the machine. As an instrument of road construtions, this machine is used to give a crown to the road; but as an instrument of maintenance it should be used only to smooth the surface and restore the original crown. Apparently some operators assume that the machine is not to be used except to increase the crown of the road. Employed in this way the crown is made too great, and a big ridge of loose earth is left in the middle of the road which only slowly consolidates and which is likely to be washed into the side ditches to make trouble there. Since the introduction of the road machine there has developed a strong tendency to increase the crown of the road unduly. Doubtless the object is to secure better drainage of the road bed, but piling up the earth is an inadequate substitute for the drainage. Side slopes steeper than just enough to turn the water into the side ditches are a detriment. Other things being equal, the best road to travel on or to haul a load over is a perfectly flat one.

Bryan Turned Down.

Since the Ohio Democrats, at their State Convention, ignored Colonel Bryan in a way which displeased the friends of Democracy's leader—followed by a call for a convention by the adherents of the Nebraska statesman—prominent Democrats of other states are in something of a quandary.

To ignore the man twice nominated for the presidency they say will not do, for the Colonel's partisan friends are sure to resent anything of the sort.

On the other hand, if they openly espouse Bryanism, in the light of two defeats of the Chicago platform, it would plainly forecast another and worse beat for the Democracy.

Maryland's state leader, Mr. Gorman, it is said, will feel much better when the Democratic convention is over, for while not a full-fledged Bryan man at heart, he is too shrewd a politician to knowingly offend Colonel Bryan's supporters. Senator Gorman fears that it would kick up a row of large proportions to turn Bryan's picture to the wall, or in any manner openly declare against silver, to say nothing of other peculiar fads and notions so dear to Mr. Bryan.

Just how to avoid the breakers, at a time when everything looks so bright for the Republicans of this state, is a matter which now engages the serious attention of the shrewd leaders among Maryland Democrats.

The Gorman Census.

The work of counting the State by Mr. Gorman's little army of politicians has been completed. Forty thousand dollars has been taken from the taxpayers supposedly for the purpose of exposing superb fraud in the census, but actually to reduce the Republican representation in the State Legislature, and at the same time make a little Democratic poll of their own. This was to have been done with a great parade of virtue. All good politicians know that virtue is an excellent political asset, and Mr. Gorman's friends saw in the census agitation an opportunity to borrow a little of this rare element.

No self-respecting man would have the false census of St. Mary's and Charles counties remain uncorrected and its authors unpunished. These frauds have been denounced squarely from the first, but it was held that there was not the slightest excuse for spending $40,000 for a State census conducted by a party of partisan spoilsmen. The national authorities discovered the errors and corrected them. The men who betrayed their trust were prosecuted with a vigor that completely disarmed any suspicion of political bias from the party in power. The Gorman influence, however, wanted to use these frauds in their work, and they wanted some definite assurance of Republican legislative scalps.

It cost the State $40,000 to prove that this was literally correct, even from the Gorman point of view, when it denounced the State census as useless extravagance. The Gorman Democrats have apparently succeeded in taking Republican representatives from Kent, St. Mary's, Charles and Anne Arundel counties, but will have to add another Republican member to Dorchester county's list. It cost, therefore, the State $40,000 to hurt the feelings of the voters in four counties and bring joy to Dorchester. That is about all the Gorman census has accomplished.

THE result of the State census has been announced and very likely the object its promoters had in view has been accomplished. Certainly as far as giving a correct census of the State is concerned it is open to considerable criticism and doubt. The State census shows a difference of about 16,000 from the Federal census. The total amount given as the population of the State by the State census is 1,181,691 and the Federal census made it 1,190,050 a difference of 8,359. With this difference, Baltimore City has been given 8,017 more than by the Federal census, making the population of the counties therefore 16,376 less than last year. Baltimore City, which contains a little over one-third of the population of the State, shows a gain in one year according to the State census, of 8,359 and the balance of the State shows a loss in the same time of over 16,000. This is absurd on the face of it, but can be explained by the statement of Colonel Schley, Superintendent of the State census, who says: "I had a large number of enumerators to employ and only a limited time in which to ascertain the fitness of applicants. The pay was exceedingly meagre and that of course added to the difficulties." It is a fair inference to draw from this statement that the enumerators as a rule were inefficient, unfit and underpaid, and if the figures are incorrect it is not surprising.

While the State census is not strong on the question of population, it has gotten down to a fine point the number of persons who were registered but at the time of the State census were out of the district. It also tells exactly the number of voters and exactly the number not registered. To gather this information, of course, took considerable time and labor, and men working for an exceedingly meagre pay were not expected, in the short time allowed, to follow up every branch of the work as closely as the particular lines on which the Democratic managers were anxious to be clear. It is also stated that the State census bureau gathered much more information which it is unable to publish. This information includes a complete record of illiterates, their age, sex and color, location, and it is fair to presume, their politics also. The other information the State census bureau declined to publish are facts maybe, that will give the Democratic party workers the tip as to whom to note in order to have their names stricken off of the books long enough to allow the Democrats to carry the Legislature and return Mr. Gorman to the United States Senate. All this cost the State a mere bagatelle of $40,000, but it put the Democratic party in possession of an amount of useful information without any cost to the party. In fact a number of party workers were by it given a few extra dollars out of the public treasury. Indeed the Democrats have every reason to be satisfied.

GRANTSVILLE.

Sunday, July 21, was a red-letter day for old Grantsville. The occasion was the dedication of St. Mary's Catholic church. This fine building has been in course of construction for several years. It is substantially built, well finished and furnished. The sermon was delivered by Father Jas. D. Connell, of Oakland. The corner stone was laid by Father Stanton, of Lonaconing, assisted by Joseph Nolan, seminarian, of St. Mary's Seminary, Baltimore. Many persons were in attendance from Oakland, Lonaconing, Frostburg, Ocean Mines, Niverton and Salisbury. The day was perfect. Seldom have we seen a larger crowd of church people in Grantsville. Religious services have been held in the church for several days. We congratulate our Catholic friends upon their commodious and comfortable building completed.

The death of Mrs. Catharine O'Hanley Tuesday morning, though not unexpected, causes many expressions of sorrow and sympathy. She was one of our oldest and most respected citizens. This venerable lady is survived by four children—Mr. John O'Hanley and Mrs. James Bevans, of Grantsville; Mr. Daniel O'Hanley, of Niverton, Pa., and Mr. O'Hanley, of Nova Scotia. Her remains will be interred at Barton on Thursday.

The First National Bank of Grantsville will be organized here the 24th inst. The incorporators are Messrs. Watts and Hitchins, of Frostburg; Wm. Jennings, Uriah Stanton and Dr. Keller, of Grantsville. This fills a long felt want in this valley and no doubt will be successful from the start.

July 23, 1901. OCCASIONAL.

Wanted at Garthright's.

All the fresh butter, fresh eggs and chickens to be had. Twenty cents for butter; 16c for eggs, $2.00 to $2.50 and $3.00 per dozen for chickens—one half cash for all. Bring on your products and get the cash. Other trade wanted daily. 2t

THE MAN SHIRT WAIST.

A New Martinsville Editor Tells About Its Construction.

The editor of the New Martinsville Democrat prints the following interesting criticism of the shirt waist for men:

SISTERSVILLE, W. Va.—Please tell me in your paper about shirt waists for men. Do they have tails, and how do they differ from the ordinary shirts? Our crowds are going to get some if they are all right. GUY."

Some days ago our wife called us on the 'phone at the store, saying she would get us a couple of shirt waists. Thus it happens we can answer our Sistersville reader. The shirt waist has no tail. It would be better off if it had. It has a draw string which fastens it about the waist. There is one feature about this draw string which will forever prevent the men's shirt waist from becoming popular in Sistersville. It has a tendency to creep up the back, thus making the wearing of an undershirt a necessity to one who goes into society. Of course around home or at the office or store it don't make much difference but at a picnic, for instance even a a Sistersville picnic—it would not be nice for the men to show three or four inches of raw, bare back when bending or stooping over the dinner on the green grass or swinging the girls in the swing. It is not nice either when rowing a boat.

The shirt waist has a fullness in front which does not appear in the shirt, but why it is built that way we cannot say. In the ladies' shirt waists this fullness is a necessity, and its reason in most cases apparent, but worn by men it is a mockery concealing nothing but a vacuum and in our opinion the garment would be improved if they would take the stuff which makes the fullness in front and give it a tail.

Officers Elected at Mt. Lake Park.

On last Thursday the Mountain Lake Park Association at their annual meeting elected the followfng directors: C. W. Baldwin, of Baltimore; J. M. Davis, D. E. Offutt, of Oakland; George C. Sturgiss, of Morgantown, W. Va., and Charles W. Conner, of Wheeling, W. Va. The board of directors organized by the election of C. W. Baldwin president, J. M. Davis, secretary, and D. E. Offutt, treasurer.

The community of Mountain Lake Park, which is the municipal corporation, held its annual meeting also on Thursday and elected the following officers: Chairman of the annual meeting, Maj. J. M. Burns; secretary, L. A. Rudisill; annual committee, George C. Sturgiss, C. W. Conner, J. P. McKee, J. A. Hayden, L. A. Rudisill, L. Echard. These officials hold office one year and manage the affairs of the Park during that period.

On the Retired List.

Mr. William A. Hilleary, father of Mr. Charles E. Hilleary, of near Gorman, this county, one of the oldest engineers on the third division, has received his pension papers from the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad company and is therefore on the retired list. Mr. Hilleary entered the employ of the Baltimore and Ohio in the early fifties and for a number of years has been running a passenger engine. The aged railroad man is in possession of a gold medal presented to him by the company for faithful services. He values the medal very highly.

A Card.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Having noticed an appeal in your paper from the Fresh Air Society of Baltimore would say that any person who desires a child to take in their home for the space of two weeks will please communicate with me personally or by letter at once.

ALICE TASKER.

July 22, 1901.

Call for Your Letters.

Wm. Kending, Mrs. Joshua Horner, Miss Lizzie Miller, S. E. Kennedy, Mr. George W. Smith, Mr. Morris Schless, Mr. Norman Miller, Mr. George Bell.

Died.

GREASER.—On Sunday, July 21, after a short illness, a little child of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Greaser, of the Bradley farm, near Oakland. The funeral took place on Monday, interment being made in the Catholic cemetery at Oakland.

MARTIN.—Yesterday afternoon at the home of its parents, at Mountain Lake Park, after an illness of a few hours of intestinal trouble, Charles, aged about 4 years, son of Mr. and Mrs. Fred. Martin. Mr. Martin and family have their home at Fairmont and spend their summers at the Park. The remains of the little one will be taken to the former place to-morrow and interred. The bereaved parents have the sympathy of a large circle of friends in this community.

A Wreck Averted.

While No. 46 was going down the seventeen mile grade Sunday evening what might have proved a serious accident was averted by the failure of the airbrakes to work which necessitated running slow. Just after passing through the little tunnel, near Bloomington, the rim of one of the driving wheels of the engine rolled off, completely disabling the whole train, which was stopped, thus averting a serious accident, which would have surely resulted had the train been running at full speed.

Religious Services.

Mr. C. S. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., editor of Zion's Watch Tower and author of Millenial Dawn series, etc., will preach in the opera house, Oakland, on Sunday, Aug. 11, at 2.30 p. m. Subject, "The Resurrection;" text, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear his (Jesus) voice, and shall come forth—they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrectian of damnation." John 5: 28, 29.

This is a rare chance to hear one of the great Bible students of our times. Come and hear him. Seats free. No collection. All are welcome.

Also meetings at Weber's Floral Park on Saturday, Aug. 10, morning, afternoon and evening, and on Sunday at 8.30 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. A number of able speakers will be present and you are cordially invited to attend.

Crook Crest for Sale.

The undersigned offers all that beautiful summer home, known as Crook Crest, adjoining the town of Oakland, at private sale, and which will be sold on very reasonable terms. There are about thirty acres of land to go with this property, which is in a high state of cultivation and is surrounded with a splendid orchard, large shade trees and many other attractions. Possession will be given immediately if desired.

For terms apply to Capt. Matthew Markland at Crook Crest, or G. S. Hamill, Agent, Oakland, Md. 20 3

Eagles Guard Old Monument.

A pair of eagles that have their home on the crags of South mountain are the only guards of the old Washington monument, which is a mass of ruins on the summit of a peak east of Boonsboro. The monument was built in 1840 and repaired and practically rebuilt by the residents of Boonsboro in 1884.

Time and the elements reduced the monument by half, and a few years ago vandals wrecked the remaining portion with dynamite. The eagles can be seen soaring in the air over the ruins like sentinels, and no person has had the hardihood to disturb them.

A Monster Rattlesnake.

Passengers on the north-bound train of the Dry Fork railroad Wednesday, says a special telegram dated at Horton, W. Va., July 19th, to the Cumberland Times, had one of the most exciting experiences ever occurring in the history of mountain railroading in this State.

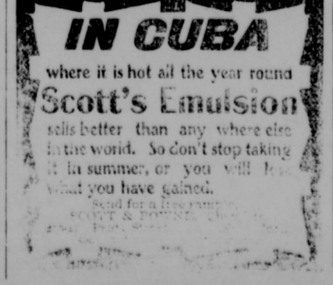
As the train was slowly making its way around a curve near an almost precipitous mountainside at Carr's Camp, between Harmon and Hendricks, a huge rattlesnake leaped through the window into the rear coach, badly frightening the women and children in the car while the men were about equally anxious to secure places of safety. A perfect panic reigned for several minutes until the train was stopped and Conductor Nickolson, assisted by members of his crew and some of the less panicky passengers, succeeded after a desperate fight in dispatching the reptile, which measured over thirteen feet in length and twenty-five inches in circumference, and had thirty-nine rattles.

It is supposed that the snake was coiled against the mountain, and angered by the passing train, sprang at it, landing through the open window more by accident than otherwise. Old mountaineers who have spent their lives within hearing of coyotes, wolves, panthers, bears and other wild animals which inhabit the section through which the Dry Fork railroad passes, say that the experience was one of the most unusual and thrilling they have ever known.

The enterprising reporter who penned the above forgot to say that besides the thirty-nine rattles there was also attached to his snakeship's tail a cow bell and a plow point, portions of a steel tooth harrow and a grain drill, but it is presumed that he excused himself with the thought that if the whole truth were told his veracity would be questioned and a good snake story spoiled.

Heartburn.

When the quantity of food taken is too large or the quality too rich, heartburn is likely to follow, and especially so if the digestion has been weakened by constipation. Eat slowly and not to freely of easily digested food. Masticate the food thoroughly. Let six hours elapse between meals and when you feel a fullness and weight in the region of the stomach after eating, indicating that you have eaten too much, take one of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets and the heartburn may be avoided. For sale by all dealers.



Double Wedding.

Miss E. Lucretia Clark, Bayard, W. Va., and C. E. Landacre, Hanging Rock, W. Va.; Miss Mattie H. Knotts, Bayard, W. Va., and C. N. Shobe, Petersburg, W. Va., were the participants in a double wedding at the Tremont House, Cumberland, yesterday, Rev. A. H. Zimmerman officiating. They will visit at Midland, Md., before returning to Bayard, where the grooms are employed.

"Buffalo Bill."

The fourth in the series of new silver certificates, of the "American" series, will soon be issued. It will be a ten dollar bill and has already been christened the "Buffalo," not after Col. Cody, but because its distinctive characteristic will be the figure of a gigantic buffalo.

Catholics in Maryland.

For the archdiocese of Baltimore, which includes the District of Columbia and all of Maryland except the Eastern Shore, the Catholic population is estimated to be about 245,000 as recorded in the Catholic directory. Rev. William T. Russell, of the cathedral, states that there are about 150,000 Catholics, divided among 41 churches, in Baltimore city. There are between 50,000 and 60,000 in the District of Columbia. For Maryland, including the Eastern Shore, an estimate of 250,000 Catholics appears to be a proportionate assumption.

NO. 5623.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF OAKLAND, AT OAKLAND, IN THE STATE OF MARYLAND, AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, JULY 15, 1901:

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$66,062 15
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation		27,200 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds		799 50
Stocks, securities, etc		5,980 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures		6,365 54
Due from National Banks (not Reserve Agents)		2,977 98
Due from State Banks and Bankers		174 99
Due from approved reserve agents		10,758 20
Internal-Revenue stamps		105 51
Checks and other cash items		313 00
Notes of other National Banks		360 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels and cents		47 84
Lawful Money Reserve in Bank, viz:
Specie	4,819 90
Legal-Tender notes	3,000 00	7,819 90
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent. of circulation)		1,260 00
Total		130,204 68

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$ 2,000 00
Surplus Fund	1,000 00
Undivided Profits, less expenses and taxes paid	152 73
National Bank notes outstanding	25,200 00
Due to other National Banks	148 20
Individual Deposits subject to check	42,067 99
Time certificates of deposit	29,578 10
Cashier's checks outstanding	57 68
Total	130,204 68

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss:

I, R. E. Sliger, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

R. E. SLIGER, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of July, 1901.

JOHN FELTY, JR.,
Notary Public.

CORRECT—Attest: F. A. THAYER,
ED. A. BROWNING,
E. E. SOLLARS,
Directors.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. McROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH McROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

SHERIFF'S SALE

Of Valuable

REAL ESTATE

In Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, at the suit of Philip T. Garthright against Alfred W. Dennett, the same being No. 7 Judicials to July Term, 1901, of said Court, and to the undersigned sheriff of Garrett county directed, I did in pursuance and by virtue of said writ actually enter upon the real estate hereinafter described, on the 24th day of June, 1901, and did seize and levy upon all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Alfred W. Dennett, both at law and in equity, in and to all the hereinafter described real estate, and I hereby give notice that I will sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash on the day of sale, in front of the storehouse of P. T. Garthright, in the town of Mountain Lake Park, Garrett county, on at the hour of two o'clock p. m. of said day, all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alfred W. Dennett in and to all that lot of ground situate, lying and being near Mountain Lake Park, in Garrett county, Maryland, and described as follows, to-wit:

Saturday, 3d day of August, 1901,

Beginning for the same at the southwest corner of A. C. Brooke's lot, on the road leading from Mountain Lake Park to Oakland, and running thence along said road 8 rods, 11 feet and 7 inches; thence by a parallel line to that of Jennie Smith and others, on the opposite side of the lot, 100 rods to the Park alley; thence by and with said alley, 34 rods to the aforesaid line between Jennie Smith and others and James R. Bishop, 74 rods, 11 feet, 7 inches to Brooke's lot; thence with the third line of said Brooke's lot reversed, 25 rods, 4 feet and 9 inches; thence with the second line of said Brookr's lot reversed, 25 rods, 4 feet, 9 inches to the place of beginning, containing more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed to the said Alfred W. Dennett by James R. Bishop and wife by deed dated October 7th, 1895, and recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 28, folio 340, one of the land records of Garrett county, Maryland.

17 1-4 Acres of Land,

The said property will be sold to satisfy the aforesaid writ of fieri facias and costs.

Terms of Sale:—Cash on the day of sale.

A. J. OESTER,
Sheriff of Garrett County, Maryland.

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

Dr. J. W. Laughlin, of Deer Park, was here on business Monday.

Fine walnut organ for sale at Cheap John's. A bargain. 18-3t

Ex-Sheriff Austin Brown came up to Oakland from his store at Piedmont on Saturday.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds, Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

Arthur White will leave in a few days for Grafton, where he will clerk for Loar & Poe, merchants.

Hon. Julius Scherr, of Eglon, was in Oakland a day or two last week on business and also visiting his daughter, Mrs. Julius C. Renninger.

Go to Townshend's and get 12½c. lawns and percales for 10c.; 10c. lawns for 8c.; 10c. ginghams for 8c. Cloth ing at almost your own price. 50c. shirt waists at 35c. to 45c. 18-4t

Sheriff-to-be W. A. Maffett and Mr. W. A. Smith, of District No. 6, were in Oakland on Saturday. Mr. Maffett is making friends whereyer he goes and his election by a handsome majority is assured.

We regret to note the very serious illness of Mrs. Brown, mother of William McCulloh Brown, Esq., of near Bayard. Yesterday the lady was in a precarious condition and her death was momentarily expected.

This morning an excursion from points east of Grafton was run to Harper's Ferry. A big crowd of people from Crellin and adjacent towns and also a number from Oakland took advantage of the reduced fare to visit the historic town.

A pony belonging to Mr. Watson, of Fairmont, who is summering at Deer Park, ran away Sunday while it was attached to a vehicle in which were two ladies and a driver. The ladies were slightly injured and the driver quite seriously bruised and shaken up.

Luther Brown's Wilkes colt attracts the attention of many admirers of horseflesh every time it is driven through town. Aside from being a a perfectly formed animal it is developing remarkable speed and with the proper handling it may make a record of which the owner can be justly proud.

Don't write your business letters on stationery furnished with a soap firm's or some other advertising device upon it. It gives the impression that you can't afford to use stationery of your own. If it pays firms to give it to you, don't you think it would pay you to advertise your own business? Think of it. It's a small matter, but may be of more consequence than you imagine.

The merchants of Oakland are this season enjoying an immense trade owing to the great influx of summer people to Oakland, Mountain Lake Park and adjoining resorts. There is a larger number of people on the mountains this year than have been here for a number of years. The merchants are not alone in having a big trade but the liverymen as well are kept busy.

A counterfeit five dollar greenback is in circulation. It is of the series of 1880, and is numbered A41002174. The scroll work is bad and the paper very thick. A bank cashier, commenting on the appearance of it, said the impression is from a wood instead of a steel engraving and the perspective bad. The back of the note appears much faded, but is otherwise good, and what is unusual in counterfeits, the numbers are not crooked.

People who work with horses and other dumb animals in hot weather should be very careful of them. They suffer greatly from heat such as we experienced last week and are liable to be overcome and die. They should be worked more moderately than in cooler weather and given rest and water occasionally. People should bear these things in mind and also remember that "a merciful man is merciful to his beasts."

Many deaths are being reported from lightning in various sections. And the majority of victims were people who took refuge under trees from storms. That trees are dangerous shelters from lightning ought to be generally known by this time, but it isn't and people will continue to be struck until they seek shelter in securer places, or are willing to submit to the uncomfortable but safer process of stand in the open and getting wet to the skin.

Sunday evening when train 55 had left the tunnel at Tunnelton, and had started down the grade, the engine in some manner became disconnected from the train and before the engineer noticed it he was several yards ahead. He was afraid to wait as it would likely knock the first car from the track, so he ran ahead and waited for the automatic air on the train to stop it. As the grade was very steep the air was unable to hold the train for a considerable distance but it finally stopped it. Had this air failed to work the train would have either ran into Grafton or would have been ditched.

Miss Daisy Grace is here visiting Mrs. Jos. E. Harned.

Mrs. Frank Byers, of Savage, W. Va., is in Oakland visiting relatives.

Miss Florence Fulmer will leave on Saturday for Thomas, to visit relatives.

A. D. Naylor has a few second-hand Buggies, Surreys, and a 3-seated Wagon for sale cheap.

Mr. W. H. Coughenour, of near Accident, was a subscribing visitor to this office on Saturday.

Heptasophs can hear something to their advantage by sending name and address. C. Heyer, 38 South St, Baltimore, Md. 4t*

Mrs. J. H. McRobie, of Deer Park, was in town yesterday, accompanied by her bright little son, both of whom were callers at this office.

Fall term CENTRAL COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Cumberland, Md., Winchester, Va., begins Sept. 2nd. Write for catalog and free lesson in Gregg Shorthand. Scholarship $45.00

Rev. S. W. Davis, of Pittsburg, of Pittsburg, spent a few days last and this week with relatives in Oakland and Mountain Lake Park.

When you want a modern up-to-date physic, try Chamberlain's Stom ach and Liver Tablets. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. Price, 25 cents. Samples free at all druggists.

Mr. Thomas L. Lincoln, of Carmichael, Pa., arrived in Oakland from his home on Saturday and from here went up to Joseph Conneway's, in District No. 8, where he will spend the summer.

Miss Lillian G. Snyder, of Cumberland, and Miss Blanche Rowark, of Martinsburg, who were members of the compositorial force in this office for several weeks, have returned to their respective homes.

Miss Annie Spedden arrived in Oakland yesterday evening and is the guest of her sister, Mrs. Silas E. Shirer, on Alder street. Miss Spedden has been in Southern Virginia for some months past.

One of our local gardeners this year disposed of nearly a hundred bushels of strawberries at handsome prices. Now he brings raspberries to town and has already sold fifty bushels at 50 cents per gallon and the demand is far greater than the supply.

Edward Raley, of Bittinger, who fell from a cherry tree some days ago and sustained injuries which at the time were thought to be fatal, was not hurt as seriously as reported. Although not entirely out of danger his condition is somewhat improved.

Service will be held Sunday, July 28th, in the new auditorium at Mt. Lake Park. Rev. W. H. Oldham, D. D., one of the missionary secretaries of the M. E. church, and a man of noted eloquence and power, will occupy the platform morning and evening. There will be special music.

The person who imagines himself on an iceberg, wading through mountains of snow, or snugly ensconced in a capacious ice house is likely to feel more comfortable than he who thinks and talks of nothing but the unpleasantness and discomforts of the torrid weather for weeks past.

Rev. Russell, editor of Zion's Watch Tower and author of a number of religious books, will deliver a lecture in the Opera House on Sunday, August 11th, at 2.30 o'clock. A two days convention in connection with this meeting will be held at the home of Mr. Henry Weber, adjoining town. A more extended notice of the meeting appears elsewhere in this issue.

Bass fishing now has the call and a large number of these fish are being caught in the river west of town. Tuesday Bowie Johnson was at the river for a few hours and brought home a nice string, the largest measuring about fourteen inches in length. Others who have the time and inclination to fish have been likewise fortunate and it is seldom anyone returns home empty handed.

The Morgantown orchestra which has been furnishing music this season at the Oakland will leave on August 5th. Col. Headley, the manager of the hotel, will not allow his guests to be without music and has completed arrangements with Mrs. J. W. Hartigan, of the Park, who has already formed an orchestra and will have charge of the music from August 5th until the close of the season.

The Oakland Concert Band came out upon the streets last night dressed in their white trousers, pink shirtwaists and white caps and played a number of fine selections which were highly appreciated by the large crowd which had gathered to hear them. The musicians present a fine appearance in their neat uniforms, which, by the way, is something quite new but nevertheless striking and tasteful.

Democratic primaries will be held throughout the county on Saturday. The brethren are divided into two camps this year and are known as the "insurgents" and the "organization" forces. The fight will be to oust the State Central Committee, now composed of organization men, and replace them by installing the "insurgents" in power. It will be a pretty fight with chances about equal.

R. T. Browning, Esq., of Lake Brown, was in Oakland yesterday.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

W. C. Dunnington, Esq., of Terra Alta, was in Oakland Monday night for a few hours.

Bargains at Cheap John's. Going out of the toy business. Wagons, Carts, Wheelbarrows, Games, etc. 3-

Mrs. Frank Thrasher, of Deer Park, was in Oakland Monday as the guest of friends.

Rev. George I. Uhler, the pastor, will preach at Deer Park in the Lutheran church on Sunday morning and evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Theodore Bush and family, of Grafton, W. Va., have a cottage at Mountain Lake Park where they are spending the summer.

Mrs. Alvin F. Getty left yesterday for Meyersdale, Pa., and Grantsville, Md., where she will visit relatives and friends for several weeks.—Cumb. News.

PEACHES. Dixon & Kelso having contracted with three of the largest growers in the East will make the peach business a specialty this season. Peaches will commence to arrive July 17 to 20. 2t

Attorneys Thayer and Sincell and M. N. Wilson returned on Saturday from Pocahontas county, W. Va., where they spent the week trout fishing.

Lieut. D. T. E. Casteel, of Morgantown, spent several days in and near Oakland last week visiting relatives and friends. He will soon be assigned to duty by the War Department, but at what point is not now known.

We have heard of a farmer down on Whitely who has discovered a most economical, simple mode of fattening hogs. He has a trough extending out into a hollow pool of water, which is always kept full from a small stream. The trough is so constructed that when buttermilk is poured into it the whole pool is discolored, and the unsuspicious swine consumes it with apparent relish. It is recommended especially for "market days."—Waynesburg Messenger.

Mr. E. P. Layman and wife, of Iowa, formerly of this county, were visiting friends and relatives at this place for two weeks and have gone to Kingston, Pa., to visit friends and from there they will go to Buffalo for a few days; they will then return to their home at Bunavista county, where Mr. Layman has been carrying on farming and auctioneering. Mr. Layman left here some six years ago a poor boy. He now owns a farm of 240 acres and some property in the town of Newell, Iowa.—Mt. Zion cor. Frostburg Journal.

The statement of the condition of the First National Bank of Oakland will be found in the advertising columns of this paper to-day. The volume of business transacted by the bank has made an appreciable increase since the last statement was published.

The virtues of that old-fashioned and easily procured drink, buttermilk, have not been half sung. Physicians say that its lactic acid is even more healthful than the citric acid of oranges and lemons. It is credited, too, by those who should know as being of value to a rheumatic patient. It has been found to be both nourishing and fattening as well as remarkably easy of assimilation. If liked at all it is undoubtedly a better drink in summer than many of the carbonated, artificially flavored drinks that are consumed in almost unlimited quantities.

The age of eggs may be approximately judged by taking advantage of the fact that as they grow old their density decreases through evaporation of moisture. According to Seibel a new laid egg placed in a vessel of brine made in the proportion of two ounces of salt to the pint of water, will at once sink to the bottom. An egg one day old will sink below the surface, but not to the bottom, while one three days old will swim just immersed in the liquid. If more than three days old the egg will float on the surface, the amount of shell exposed being increased with age. If two weeks old only a little of the shell will dip in the liquid.

Dr. W. L. Davidson and family arrived at the Park on Saturday last and after spending Sunday there the Doctor left for Kentucky where he will conduct a Chautauqua until the opening of the season at the Park. The Chautauqua this year at the latter place promises to far excell anything previously attempted. Arrangements are completed for the opening on August 1st. The program is full of instructive entertainment and the brains of the American lecture platform will be present this year at our very doors. The courses of lectures to be delivered may be of untold benefit to the people of our town and county and they should avail themselves of every opportunity to hear them. The prices of admission have not been increased, although the talent to be presented has been improved until now a single lecture to be delivered at the Park will be well worth the price of the ticket for the entire season.

Runaway Accident.

Sunday morning early a team drawing a heavy mountain wagon containing a number of Oakland's young people who were on their way to Grantsville to witness the dedication of the new Catholic church at that place, and driven by Will Browning, of Oakland, became unmanageable at the top of the mountain north of Bittinger and started to run away down the steep incline. The driver did all he could to check the horses, but the tongue was broken at the outset and added to this the parting of the lines left the driver and his companions in an almost helpless condition. After going down the mountain for some distance Mr. Browning was thrown out. Owen Treacy, another occupant of the wagon, then endeavored to stop the flight of the horses and he was likewise thrown out. Tommy Gonder met with a similar fate about the time the runaways collided with a wagon directly in front. The impact was so great that the latter team also ran away and continued to run for several miles before they were stopped. When the collision took place between the two teams the horses in the rear wagon broke from the vehicle which accounts for no one being seriously injured. One of the horses, however, was badly hurt by being pierced with a portion of the neck-yoke and necessitated that it be left behind for the rest of the journey, another animal having been secured from a farmer residing in the vicinity. The injured horse is the property of George Helbig and was brought home on Tuesday.

Will Be Detained Here.

William Dade, colored, who was until recently employed at Mountain Lake Park and who was arrested some days ago on a peace warrant and sent to jail, will be detained here until requisition papers have been received from the Governor of Ohio and the arrival of an officer from that state to take Dade in charge. He is wanted in the latter state for slashing his wife's throat with a razor, the deed having been committed some time ago, after which Dade left Ohio and came to Mt. Lake.

At the time Dade was arrested he was searched by the officer, who found a pair of brass knuckles upon his person.

Work on New Church Resumed.

Work on the masonry of the new Catholic church now in course of construction in Oakland has been delayed several days recently owing to the contractor not carrying out his agreement with his bondsmen, Messrs. D. E. Offutt and E. Z. Tower. The bondsmen on Tuesday took charge of the unfinished structure and put a large force of men to work upon it. A forsman has been employed who will have charge of the work for the bondsmen, who hope to have it completed within the specified time—September 1st.

Excursion to Mountain Lake Park.

The Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad Company will run a special excursion train from Mt. Savage and all points intermediate to Piedmont, connecting with the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, for Mountain Lake Park, on Tuesday, July 30. Special train will leave Mt. Savage 5.30 a. m., arriving at Piedmont 7.30 a. m., returning leave Mountain Lake Park 8 p. m. Eight hundred to a thousand excursionists are expected to take advantage of the proposed trip.

Death of An Aged Lady.

At the residence of her daughter, Mrs. Christina Blamble, of near Wilson, on July 19, 1901, Mrs. Margaret Kanepp, aged 96 years, 5 months and 26 days. Mrs. Kanepp united with the Lutheran church at the age of 14 years and led an exemplary life, beloved by all who knew her. Her motto was "Love to all; malice toward none."

She was laid to rest at the Red House cemetery and funeral services conducted in St. John's church by the Rev. M. L. Furst, of Solona, Pa., assisted by Rev. I. Abernathy.

Cow Killed.

Yesterday afternoon train No. 46 struck and killed a cow belonging to A. D. Naylor, Esq., which had wandered on the track from the pasture field near-by. A trainman who saw the cow struck by the train, which was going at a pretty lively gait, was fearful lest the train become wrecked, as the accident took place on a sharp curve just west of town.

From the "Preston Republican."

Dr. and Mrs. Sivey and Mr. and Mrs. W. S. Taylor are at Mt. Lake, where they expect to spend the season.

Miss Daisy Grace, of Baltimore, and Mrs. Delawder and Miss Mollie Peddicord, of Oakland, spent Wednesday with Miss Ellen Connell at the Terra Alta Hotel.

Miss Nora Sarsfield, of Oakland, was the charming guest of the Misses Welch Sunday.

Miss Laura Matthews, of Oakland, spent Tuesday in town the guest of Miss Maude Glover.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 4 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and instead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of [illegible]polis on the 12th day of June, in the ye[illegible] our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD
CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA
AND
RETURN $50.00 FROM CHICAGO.

Correspondingly Low Rates from Intermediate Points. Tickets on sale July 5th to 13th.

Personally Conducted Tour

to SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., account International Epworth League Convention.

(A limited number only will be accommodated on this Tour. Insuring perfect comfort to members of party.) Illustrated Itinerary and full particulars upon application.

Very Low Rates to COLORADO Points all Summer.

Quickest and best line to the Famous

BEAUMONT TEXAS OIL FIELDS.

Superior Service to OKLAHOMA and all points North, West and South.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER, T. P. A.
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Notice to Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, either in person or by deputy, will be in each of the Election Districts in Garrett county, Md., to collect and receive taxes at the time and place following:

July 5, E. A. Wimer's store, McHenry.
July 6, W. A. Smith's store, Hoyes.
July 8, R. A. Liston's store, Selbysport.
July 9 and 10, J. H. Cuppet's store, Friendsville.
July 11, J. L. Englehart's store, Accident.
July 12, W. M. Lohr's farm, Cove.
July 13, Harry Leathen's store, Keyser.
July 15, C. M. Livengood's Hotel, Grantsville.
July 16, Thomas Johnson's, District, No. 9.
July 17, P. E. Finzel's store, Finzel.
July 18, Thomas Layman's Farm.
July 19, R. E. Garlitz's store, Avilton.
July 20, J. H. Gregg's Mills, District No. 11.
July 22, C. J. Ott's, New Germany.
July 23 and 24, G. W. Engle's store, Bittinger.
July 25, Company store, Crellin.
July 26, U. G. Palmer's office, Hutton.
July 29, Merritt Wilson's, No. 8.
July 30, Mrs. Browning's, Gorman.
July 31 and August 1, J. H. Rafter's store, Kitzmillerville.
August 2 and 3, Wm. Moody's Bloomington.
August 5 and 6, Wade H. Lohr's, Swanton.
August 7 and 8, S. P. Special's store, Deer Park.
August 9, L. A. Rudisill's office, Mt. Lake Park.

The Treasurer's office in Oakland will be closed from July 3rd to August 10th, 1901, inclusive.

N. B.—By an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1890, being chapter 566, it is provided that all county taxes shall be due and payable on the 1st day of September next succeeding the date of levy thereof and on all county taxes paid on or before the said 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed; and after the 1st of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid; the Treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on all tax bills for county purposes regulating in the manner aforesaid and shall note same upon the receipts given for taxes so paid; but the discount allowed on county tax by this section shall not be made to any person or corporate institute unless the whole amount of State and county taxes due by such person or corporate institution for the current year be paid when the same is made.

WM. M. LOHR,
Treasurer of Garrett county, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands through which the following road is prayed to be changed, said road so prayed to be changed is the county road leading from Oakland to Crellin, said change to begin at or near where the run (that comes from Hesen's saw mill) crosses the road and running through the lands of John Bradley, to intersect the county road leading from Charles Shaffer's to Oakland at or near the bottom of the hill, a distance of about one-fourth mile, and examine whether the said county road should be changed, will meet on the 3rd day of August, 1901, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said change of said county road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

E. E. SOLLARS,
T. W. CASTEEL,
Examiners.

Your Best Fellow

Will like you better for having white, smooth hands, free from chaps and such like detracting things—

GIRLS GET LILY CREAM

An article that cures skin—soothes and feels good—dries instantly and is perfectly invisible.

LOGAN DRUG COMPANY
WHEELING, W. VA.
15 and 25 cents. At your Druggist.

GOD KNOWETH BEST.

The world is as we find it,
Whether for good or ill;
The path is oft-times stony,
Leads oft-times up the hill;
But when we reach the summit,
And find there peace and rest,
We, then, forget the journey
And feel, God knoweth best.

The world is as we take it,
Whether for ill or good;
The path lies through the brambles,
And often through the wood;
But if we look beyond it,
Where shines the light of day,
We'll bravely journey onward;
"God knoweth best"—we say.

The world is as we make it;
We reap both good and ill;
The seed we sow in passing,
Up-spring from wood and hill;
Before we reach the summit,
The flowers may be but weeds,
Unless we tread with gladness
God's path—He knows our needs.
—Mrs. D. F. Thompson, in N. Y. Observer.

A MAID OF THE MOUNTAINS

By Edgar Welton Cooley.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

NIGHT had settled over the mountains of Tennessee—night with the darkness intensified by the mountain mists. A lonely cabin nestled amid the rocks on Pine mountain and watched with its one window another cabin on Snake mountain, across the ravine, and from this window a light shone, like a star on the mountain. Below, in the valley, squatted the little village of Craig's Hollow. A horseman rode up and drew rein before the cabin.

"Halloa!" he shouted.

The door was opened and the light within revealed the form of a young man in the doorway. A pistol shot from the horseman was echoed by a volley of rifles from behind the surrounding rocks.

The man in the doorway fell upon his face with a groan, and the light within was immediately extinguished.

Leaning on the weather-beaten fence that surrounded the cabin on Snake mountain Blanche Burton stood. Bruno, her dog, lay sleeping at her feet. She had a good view of Pine mountain, and she could see the occasional flash of a rifle long before she could hear the report.

And after awhile the shooting ceased and all became quiet and dark, but still she stood by the fence, the dog at her feet and the night breeze tossing her raven hair.

Out of the darkness finally came the clatter of horses' hoofs, and her three brothers rode into the yard. The eldest, noticing her white face, leaped from his horse and threw his arms around her.

"We air all safe an' sound, sis," he said, "though I can't say as much for them Ransoms. Sam, like a fool, opened the door, and I—"

The girl recoiled.

"Did you kill him?" she demanded, almost fiercely. "Joe, did you kill him?"

"Why, sis," replied her brother, "what air the matter?"

"Oh, nothing," she replied, calmly; "I thought, maybe, you were hurt."

Near to the midnight hour, while her brothers slept with their rifles within easy reach, Blanche Burton opened the door of the cabin and stepped out into the darkness. No lights were visible on either mountain, and none in Craig's Hollow. Above, a solitary star shone through a rift in the clouds. Save for the lonely cry of an owl, no sound broke the solemn stillness of the night. She was alone on the mountain.

Slowly and with painful carefulness the girl picked her way through the dooryard, fearful lest some snapping twig should awaken the slumberers within and bring upon her indistinct form in the darkness, the contents of a deadly rifle.

She breathed more freely when she had passed the gate and was safely in the road, and drawing her shawl tightly about her she walked rapidly down the mountain side and across the ravine. Here she slackened her pace and finally stopped. How loud her heart beat and how warm her cheeks were! She sat down on a small bowlder to rest, but only for a moment, and then she was on her way again up Pine mountain toward the Ransom cabin.

Noiselessly, carefully, that not a whisper should give notice of her approach, she crept onward, trembling, feverish, anxious. Frequently she paused to listen for any sound emanating from the cabin, but nothing reached her ears, save the loud beating of her own heart.

When at last she reached the little yard that surrounded the cabin, she sank upon the ground and crept on her hands and knees to the window. She thought she heard a noise within. She heard it again—the low moan of a man.

"Thank God!" she whispered to herself. "Thank God, he is not dead." And she flattened her nose against the pane in a vain endeavor to pierce the darkness.

Suddenly a light flashed; some one had struck a match. In the faint, flickering light she made out the form of a man stretched upon the floor, with some one bending over him. His face was turned directly toward her. It was Sam Ransom, but how pale he looked, and what agony was painted upon his features!

"Oh, Joe, brother Joe!" she said to herself, "what have you done?"

The eyes of the man holding the match fell upon her face, pressed against the window. Instantly the match was extinguished, and Blanche, realizing her peril, dropped flat upon the ground, and a second later a charge of buckshot shattered the pane. A piece of the broken glass, falling upon her forehead, cut a deep gash, from which the blood flowed freely.

Crawling under the friendly shelter of a climatis vine, she stopped the flow of blood with its leaves. For hours she crouched there, under the threatening clouds, which ever and anon sent a spiteful shower to the earth—crouched there, listening to the cry of the owl and the low moaning of the wounded man.

Thrice, as she thought how much was needed a woman's tender touch to ease his feverish brow, did she start up as if to go to him, but each time she shook her head and said: "No, yet; not yet."

When the first light, shining from a window in Craig's Hollow, warned her of the approach of dawn, she crept stealthily away, crawling upon her hands and knees until she reached the road. And that morning Joe, going out to feed his horses, found her standing at the gate, gazing anxiously across the ravine towards the Ransom cabin on Pine mountain, and—weeping. He put his arms around her tenderly.

"What air the matter, sis?" he said. "Air you sick?"

"Yes," said she, "I air—sick o' the world."

"What be it you mean by that?" he asked, anxiously.

"I mean I air sick o' a world where two men, two brothers, you might say, kill each other 'counter what they choose to call revenge. No matter what former friendship there may have existed, or what ties may be broken—"

She paused suddenly. The excitement of the moment had paled her cheeks—paler in contrast to her raven hair. Her eyes shone like twin jewels, and Joe Burton, looking at his sister in the light of the rising sun, thought he never had seen a girl more beautiful.

"Oh, Joe," she continued, passionately, "do you not see; can you not understand?"

Then she turned suddenly and went into the house, leaving him alone with Bruno.

Her brother watched her retreating figure until it disappeared through the doorway. Then he sat down in the grass and gave himself up to thought. For a long time he sat there; then he shook his head.

"I give it up," he said. "I don't understand."

The summer passed, and Sam Ransom, in whose veins the life-giving, life-preserving tonic of the mountain air throbbed warmly, was again in the saddle, his trusty rifle in his hand, the brightness of a dauntless spirit in his eyes, the tan of outdoor life upon his face, and in his heart the ever-warring emotions of vengeance and of love.

Ever as the thought of revenge upon the "Burton gang" steeled his nerves and caused his fingers to angrily fondle the trigger of his rifle, the thought of Blanche stole into his heart and brought a gleam of tenderness to his eyes. She haunted his dreams; she was the central figure in all his hopes and plans and ambitions. He loved her, but he had no thought that she regarded him other than an enemy, until—

Down the winding road from his cabin on Pine mountain Sam Ransom rode one afternoon, the autumn sunshine in his face, the mountain breezes toying with his hair, and never a thought of death within him.

Turning a sharp bend in the road he came suddenly face to face with Blanche. She was on her pony; her bonnet had slipped from her head and hung down her back, suspended by its strings; her hair, tossed by the boisterous breeze, fell across her shoulders like the dark shadows of the pine trees across the mountain road; her face was pale; her eyes glistened like the stars on a winter's night. She raised her hand and he drew rein, his heart bounding within him.

"Sam," she said, timidly, "I have come to meet you, an' I want to ride beside you down the mounting. May I, or do you reckon me too great an enemy o' yourn?"

"Little gal," he replied, taking his hat from his head and awkwardly fumbling it in his hands, "little gal me an' you can't never be no enemies."

She smiled, the warm blood surging to her cheeks and a great gladness in her eyes. Then she held out her hand to him, and he took it in both his big brown ones, patting it as he would pat his horse's neck.

When they had come to a narrow passage between two dense thickets of underbrush Blanche grasped the bridle of Sam's horse suddenly and stopped both animals. Then, turning and peering into the thicket on her left, she commanded:

"Put up that gun o' yourn, Joe, an' come outen that bresh. Be a man; don't be a coward."

The bushes parted, and out of the dense foliage, his rifle in his hand, stepped her brother. Ransom quickly raised his weapon from the pommel of his saddle, but Blanche placed her hand softly upon his.

"No, Sam," she said, and he dropped his rifle in his lap.

"Joe," she said, turning to her brother, "come here."

Without a word he advanced to her side.

"Joe," she resumed, looking down into his face, "ef I hadn't been with Sam jest now, you'd a-killed him, an' I—God, Joe, that woulder broke my heart!"

She turned her head and glanced down the valley, with the crimson burning on her cheeks. A tear dropped on Joe's hand, and the two men looked into each other's eyes and understood. Then they clasped hands in a pressure that conquered when the rifle had failed.

And one day Blanche again walked up the road to the little cabin on Pine mountain. There was a smile on her face and a gleam of happiness in her eyes, for Sam was at her side and she called him "husband."

DEBT AND WEALTH.

Figures on the Former Are More Easily Obtainable Than on the Latter.

Increase in the national debts and the wealth of the world are keeping pace with each other, and each is increasing enormously, according to the recent figures given out by the bureau of statistics of the United States treasury. During the last 100 years the nations of the earth have increased their debts tenfold, and the wealth of the peoples of the nations has advanced to the same extent, says the New York Herald.

At the beginning of the nineteenth century the aggregated debts of the world were about $3,100,000,000, to which a cipher must be added to get the debts of to-day. These figures are more easily obtained than are those on wealth, for little is known of property statistics in most of the countries, and still less was known a hundred years ago. In 1800 the wealth of the United States, United Kingdom, France and Spain was estimated at $20,244,640,000, while Mulhall now places their wealth at about $195,900,000,000. With these increases in debts and wealth, population has increased 150 per cent., and gold and silver, which form the basis of the money with which payments are made, have increased 300 per cent.

The bureau of statistics charges these debts principally to wars, standing armies and works of public utility. Of the latter, canals, harbors, river improvements and railways are the principal. Of the railways, which cost $30,000,000,000, about one-third are owned by national governments.

Censor Destroys Rhyme and Reason.

A Constantinople correspondent says that the Turkish government has prohibited the performance of Rostand's play, "Cyrano de Bergerac," declaring it to be of a revolutionary character. The Turkish censor is very particular that no royalty is presented on the stage, and in all pieces the king is replaced by a prince or a duke. The comic effect of replacing a monosyllable by a longer word in Italian opera, which alone is performed in Constantinople, may readily be imagined. Most certainly no imputation of encouraging high treason can be brought against the Turkish censor.

Timber on Puget Sound.

Probably no place on earth will average acre for acre the timber that the Puget sound region can furnish. It is fir, cedar, spruce, hemlock and alder, as well as maple and other woods. Its Douglas fir—the most common variety—has been found superior to yellow pine and other woods heretofore used for car building.

THE EXPERTS IN WAR.

Military Training Alone Not Calculated to Develop Originality of Thought.

The truth is that military men in England did not show themselves one whit more competent to estimate the military problems of the Boer war than civilians. They relied, like civilians, on tradition, and laughed at the idea that any such changes had taken place in the art of war as were predicted by theorists, who declared, among other things, that offensive warfare was much more difficult than formerly, says Jean de Bloch, in National Review. The cause of military blindness is in no way obscure. Military training is itself antagonistic to original thought. It is no wonder, therefore, that nowadays when rifles and artillery are a hundred times more powerful than before, when armies are five to ten times larger, and when railways have changed the whole art of war, that we find the system of instruction differing very little from that employed in the days of Napoleon, or, for the matter of that, in the days of Gustavus Adolphus. Yet even among military men themselves the more enlightened feel as many doubts as Marshal Saxe. That the methods to be adopted in the future wars are a matter of grave doubt has been declared by writers as eminent as von Rhone, Janson, Muller, Pellet-Narbonne and Skugarewsky. It is expressed excellently in the words of Gen. Luzeux: "Let the instructors first agree among themselves." Nor can soldiers nowadays claim that experience has given them a right to dictate to civilians. Nine out of ten "experienced" soldiers have at most shot or hunted savages, and the majority have seen no fighting at all.

The First Canaries.

Canaries, which were originally green and gray in color, were native to the islands from which they take their name, and were first taken to England on ships plying between English ports and the south of France. From this stock have been derived a number of distinct varieties, such as the crested, the green, the lizard, which imitates the reptile in its variegated markings, and the Belgian, which has a strange, humpbacked appearance.

The Drum in Italy's Army.

The reason given for the substitution of the drum for the trumpet in the Italian army is that in these days of short service a young soldier learns to march to the drum far sooner than to the trumpet. Again, it is found that trumpeters are very subject to pulmonary affections.

THEODORE C. SEARCH.

Politicians seem to be unanimous in believing that at the next session of congress a bill will be passed creating a ninth place in the presidential cabinet, that of secretary of commerce and industry. It is rumored that the first incumbent of the prospective secretaryship will be Theodore C. Search, president of the National Association of Manufacturers and head of the J. B. Stetson Hat company. Mr. Search is an intimate friend of President McKinley, and the suggestion of giving him the new portfolio is regarded as a peculiarly fortunate one by the other members of the president's official family.

GROVER CLEVELAND'S SUMMER HOME.

The summer home of Mr. Cleveland, near Tryingham, Mass., was built in 1767. It was formerly a farmhouse, but has been remodeled for the convenience of summer occupants. The trout fishing is an attractive feature of the locality, and Mr. Cleveland will be made welcome to even the "posted" brooks. Tryingham is about ten miles from Lenox, and the cottagers will be able to drive over to call upon Mrs. Cleveland, who is very popular among them. The house has beeen occupied by many notable patrons since it has been conducted as a summer boarding house.

THE BRICKLAYER'S VISION.

Sees His Saviour's Face and from the Drunkard's Path Enters the Way of Sobriety and Righteousness.

When the best moral results follow an unusual or abnormal event, any discussion of its natural or supernatural agency cannot change the fact. Many believe that there are messages from Heaven more direct than the written revelation; and the believers are generally those whose experience answers for their faith.

Eighty years ago, in a country town of west New England, lived a drunkard locally known as "Distillery Struck Jacob." In his early manhood he had been thrifty, industrious and temperate, the husband and father of a happy family. Both he and his young wife had inherited some property. Jacob the bricklayer had a good home, and was looked upon as a rising man.

When he was about 25 years old the offer of a job on a distillery chimney came to him, with a promise of high wages, as a skilled workman was wanted. He accepted with some reluctance, being an abstainer himself, and disapproving the then almost universal use of strong drink. While at work on the job he acquired the taste for liquor, through the example and persuasions of his mates, and his downward career began.

Such is the story of the way he got his name. For 12 years "Distillery-Struck Jacob" was a sot. He did no work, but led a shiftless life, spending his time with the low and ribald company found at any tavern within 10 or 12 miles of his home.

HE READ ALL DAY.

Alcohol weakened his mind, and even partially paralyzed his body. No one believed that the drinking, swearing, staggering loafer could be far from the drunkard's end. No one but his wife. She prayed for him, and hoped and waited. He never abused his family. He only disgraced them. In his cups he often boasted of his "good, pious wife" and his smart children.

One August night he came home from a long spree, and went to bed and slept quietly. This was a grateful circumstance, for his nights at home were too often so noisy as to suggest incipient mania. In the morning he dressed, washed and sat down to breakfast with the family. Then, instead of his pipe, he found a pocket Bible and went out and sat under a tree to read. He read all day. He seemed to have forgotten his drink and his tobacco. His children wondered. His wife watched him, cried softly to herself, and whispered: "God help him!"

For six months Jacob spent most of his time reading and meditating—and gathering back his lost health and strength. By that time he had worn out one Bible and procured another.

Gradually and quietly he began to speak of his changed feeling, and to seek his old associates in dissipation that he might carry to them the message of redemption. They laughed and called him "loony." Church-members held aloof and distrusted him when he asked their fellowship. At last, modestly, he dated the revolution of his life, and told its cause—which to him never ceased to be a miracle. In a dream, that August night, he had seen the Saviour.

The behavior of the renewed man was evidence enough of his sincerity. It was not until 35 years later that he died, a beloved and humble old Christian, having outlived all his family and became totally blind.

If it was an imagined vision that changed the sot into a saint, the fancy was no less a Divine visit. It was such a dream as the Hebrew poet defines in the thirty-third chapter of the Book of Job.—Youth's Companion.

Rum and Tobacco Flesh.

Speaking of the recent killing and eating of two missionaries by cannibals of Fly river, Guinea, the Portland Oregonian says: "These savages do not eat missionaries because they have any religious hostility for them as preachers of a new faith; they only eat them because, as non-consumers of rum and tobacco, their flesh is far more palatable than that of any other type of white man. In the judgment of a cannibal, the meat of a missionary is better eating than anything else, except the flesh of a young child, another non-consumer of tobacco and ardent spirits. These cannibals not seldom spare the lives of American and European sailors for the simple reason that their flesh is so impregnated with the flavor of alcohol and tobacco as to be as unpalatable as we find that of crows, gulls, buzzards and other carrion-consuming birds."

ONE EMPLOYER'S PLAN.

How a Manufacturer at Washington, Ind., Has Worked Wholesome Reforms in Lives of His Employes.

In the little city of Washington, Ind., whose population is less than 10,000, there is a factory for the manufacture of bent wood products. Mr. L. H. Creagin, the proprietor, knew that many of the 100 men in his employ were men of intelligence and even refinement and capable of appreciating the truths of Scripture, yet he noticed that few them attended church. On inquiring of them the reason why, he learned that many of them stayed away from church because of the social distinctions which pervaded in that small town.

Mr. Creagin doubted this, and thought it a very insufficient excuse, but on further investigation he found that his men were nearly right.

How Mr. Creagin sought to change this state of things is interestingly told in the Christian Herald.

In a kind and brotherly way Mr. Creagin talked with his men, and said he would like to show them in a practical way what the truths of Christianity were. His plan was that for 15 minutes every morning there would be a talk on some practical Bible truth by a minister. The following Monday a well-known minister in the city took his place at seven o'clock in a long room of the factory where all the men were assembled and spoke upon the subject: "Things to Think About." Every man paid close attention. There was no exhortation, no pleading, only a plain Gospel talk. At a quarter past seven the factory wheels were set in motion and every man went to his place.

Every morning since then—and that was several months ago—at the blowing of the whistle, the men gather in the large room. The minister has never been late, and no employe has ever been late at the early service. Every man is paid at his regular wage rate for the time he puts in listening to the morning address. The minister, also, is on the factory payroll, and every week receives a check from Mr. Creagin for his services.

The experiment has been very successful. The object Mr. Creagin had in view has been accomplished, viz.: To clear the minds of the men from false premises, and set them thinking aright.

One thing more Mr. Creagin has established, that is, the total abstinence pledge. Almost every man in his employ has signed a pledge and has kept it. When it is taken, the "token dollar" is handed to the signer of the pledge, and that particular and identical dollar is kept in a safe place and regarded as a sign of the faith their employer reposes in his men. The pledge is as follows:

"My pledge, God helping me, I hereby solemnly promise to abstain from the use of all intoxicating liquors as a beverage. I also promise to refrain from visiting all places where such intoxicants are sold. When I feel justified in breaking the provision of this pledge, I hereby promise to return to Mr. L. H. Creagin the 'Token Dollar' received from him.
"Name..... Date....."

"THE FULL DINNER PAIL."

Some Facts Which Speak Eloquently to the Working Man of the Wisdom of Temperance.

The American people spent for drink last year $1,069,249,852. This money was an absolute loss to the men who spent it. They received no valuable thing in exchange for their cash.

It was not only a loss, but an actual damage. It impaired their wage-earning ability and reduced their productive power.

It caused a loss to every other industry by reducing the drinker's ability to buy other things.

Their drinking made harder times for the grocer, the butcher and baker, whom they did not pay or could not patronize.

The amount of last year's drink, if spent for the necessities of life, would give work in shop, factory and field to 1,649,586 men.

It gives work in producing raw material and in manufacturing drink to only 300,991 men.

Closed gin mills would mean a chance to earn a living for 1,348,685 of the men who are now hunting a job.

A vote to close the places where "booze" is sold is a vote for plenty of food in the dinner pail and upon the table of every workingman.—Christian Work.

TEMPERANCE GRIST.

I hardly know any more potent cause of disease than alcohol.—Sir W. Gull, M. D.

A cigarette fiend pays the penalty in the esteem in which he is held.—Washington (Ia.) Democrat.

The production of both gold and silver in the United States, including Alaska, $134,847,485, would be sufficient to pay the drink bill of the American people for only a month and a half.

An English law passed in 1774 providing that not more than five dollars can be recovered for liquor debts, was tested lately by a physician who owed over $250. The law was declared valid, and the liquor dealer is out $245.

A well-known temperance worker says: "I once examined the inmates of the Christian Home for Intemperate Men in New York city as to the way they reached the last ditch of drunkenness, and 80 per cent. told me that they began with beer."

The last was the century of effort in the cause of temperance, so that hundreds of thousands of abstainers, young and old, are doing what they can do to stand between the living and the dead, and to stay the terrible plague of intemperance.—Christian Work.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS

SILO CONSTRUCTION.

Observations and Experience of an Ohio Farmer Who Says He Has No Ax to Grind.

Before binding my silo I examined silos of different construction, some of stone, some of cement and others of wood; some round and some square. Then I built my silo of wood, square, with corners well rounded. I aimed to make my silo strong and cheap. There are many methods of construction, some complicated and costly. But I still think that the simplest, strongest, cheapest air-tight pit that will preserve the silage is the best.

I believe that for the best practical results the diameters should range from 12 to 16 feet, according to the amount of stock fed from the silo. I do not think it advisable or practical to build a silo smaller than 12 feet square or 12 feet in diameter. And rather than go above 16 or 18 feet in diameter I advise increasing the capacity by building more silos. The craze just now is for the round stave silos, but I think the average farmer who expects to build a silo would better build a square frame with rounded corners, for the following reasons:

FRAME FOR SILO.

A square wood silo with ribs or girts around it horizontally, lined up and down inside and weatherboarded outside, whether built in a barn or outside, whether tied to another building or standing alone, will always be firm and rigid, and will not suffer from the drying-out process that occurs during the hot weather, when the silo is empty. And this, I think, is a strong point in favor of the frame silo. I have learned of round silos that went to wreck, like an old barrel, in the dry weather. In the Wisconsin bulletin No. 83 the writer says he visited a number of stave silos that were badly damaged and wrecked in this drying-out process and by the wind. In my judgment this wrecking process would be worse in a silo where the staves had been spliced, for they must be made weaker in splicing the staves.

CORNER OF THE SILO.

As I am not a draughtsman, I inclose an illustration from the Wisconsin bulletin that exactly indicates the framework of my silo, except that my silo is 30 feet high and that the girts are closer than here indicated. The corner pieces or segments are not properly indicated in the cut, so I have drawn another sketch that more clearly indicates them. In Fig. 2 you will see that I have the corner well rounded. From the inside of the corner (A) to the face of the segment (B) is 12 inches, and we have no trouble in going around this corner with ordinary tongued and grooved flooring. We lined this framework with yellow pine flooring and gave it a coat of hot coal tar every year; one dollar's worth of tar and one dollar's worth of labor are ample for this work. It is air-tight and preserves the silage perfectly, and I believe if the tarring is not neglected the lining will last indefinitely. Some advocate a brick lining, but I do not think this practical, for the crevices would let in the air and the outside woodwork could not well be made air-tight. While in wood-lined silo, tongued and grooved, the moisture of the silage will at once swell it into an air-tight condition, and when the tarring is well done the drying out is reduced to the minimum and the wood protected against decay.

The next pit I will build will be of the same construction, but larger. I believe it is practical to build them firm enough and strong enough against any bulging, up to 16 feet square. I do not think cement at all practical in silo construction (except as a foundation), for the least swelling or contraction would crack and break the coating and let the air in.—M. C. Morris, in Ohio Farmer.

The hedgehog is of great value to farmers, and should be protected. He is always searching for worms and insects that are injurious to plants.

SOLID EARTH ROADS.

Under Favorable Conditions They Are the Most Pleasant for Driving and Best for Horses.

Prof. Charles H. Pettee, of the New Hampshire agricultural college, says: An earth road is one surfaced with a large per cent. of earth, which may be sand, clay, hardpan, loam, or a mixture of some of these. A very common idea of an earth road is one surfaced with the natural material where the road is built. This description, though generally characteristic, does not give the true distinction between these and gravel ones and may convey an entirely wrong impression. The true distinction lies in the predominance of earth over rock or the reverse in the surfacing material. Again, it will be seen that the gravel road is intermediate between the earth and the macadam and that there is no absolute line separating the earth from the gravel or the gravel from the macadam. The latter statement will appear evident if we consider that it makes no difference whether the stone for a macadam road has been prepared by a stone crusher or broken by the processes of nature and deposited in gravel banks during the glacial epoch.

The earth road, under favorable conditions of moisture and repair, is the smoothest, most elastic, and most pleasant for pleasure driving of any in existence. It is safest for horses' feet and, where the natural soil is favorable, is by far the cheapest both as regards construction and repair. On the other hand, if it is an ideal summer road, it is reasonably sure to be muddy and rough for perhaps two months in the spring as well as during the following heavy rains at other seasons. In short, its perfection for all seasons is apparently impossible and it depends upon constant, though inexpensive, attention to minute repairs for its favorable condition during a limited season.

It thus appears that, if we aim at durability, nothing less than a body of rock will keep us up out of the mud in the spring; that this will render the surface too dry for comfort and durability during the summer, and that the more expensive and more perfect the surface constructed upon this foundation, the more expensive and more difficult the matter of repair. In the city sprinkling has given greater durability and comfort to the macadam surface, and the heavy expense for construction and maintenance can often be easily borne. In the country these favorable conditions are usually absent. Some have attempted to find in the gravel road the safe middle course between the earth and the macadam. They do not, however, appear to have wholly succeeded. Smoothness, elasticity, freedom from dust, low cost and cheapness of maintenance seem to be thus far more or less incompatible with durability and constancy throughout the year.

SYPHON FROM WELL.

Saves Lots of Work in the Farm House Where There Is Very Little Strength to Spare.

Most farm houses could have a pipe from the well to the kitchen sink, saving an enormous amount of work. If the well is on higher ground than the house, the water will syphon into the cellar, requiring almost no effort to pump it up the few remaining feet.

SYPHON FROM WELL TO KITCHEN.

It is a shame to carry water year after year from the well to the house when the water will run itself. It is more important to save labor in housework than elsewhere on the farm, for there is less of strength indoors.—N. Y. Tribune.

WHEN THE BEES STING.

Simple Household Remedies That Are Helpful to Reduce Swelling and Relieve Pain.

As the sting of a bee is considered to be acid, an alkali should be employed to relieve it. Ammonia or soft soap would therefore be a good application.

In an emergency any of the following might be helpful to reduce swelling or to relieve pain: Vinegar, olive oil, raw onion, paste made of clay and water, or flour and water, or salt and water, tobacco juice, tincture of arnica, honey or laudanum.

If a person be not exceedingly nervous and excitable, cold water applied constantly to the wound will be a good remedy.

Bee stings are exceedingly dangerous to some people. A well known gentleman was stung by a bee near the base of the brain, and the poison killed him in a few minutes in spite of heroic remedies.

A bee sting about the face is liable to produce large swellings, and they have been known to fester and threaten blood poisoning in a few hours.

Little children are apt to wander about in the weeds where bee gums are located. It is well to keep in mind these and other household remedies in such instances of bee stinging.—N. Y. Farmer.

GIANT GOLD NUGGET FOUND.

Lump Valued at $264 Disclosed in Washing on American Hill in the Klondike.

A giant nugget, worth $264, was found in the recent wash-up on American hill, Klondike.

The reports from the north indicate exceptionally lively times on all the creeks. The clean-up of 1901 is in full swing. From all parts of the camp came reports of water running freely and claim-owners taking prompt advantage of the opportunity to wash up their dirt. Summer work is also beginning. Double shifts are being put in at many places.

Sulphur Creek reports a good flow of water all along the stream, and activity at all points on the Eldorado. Hunker and Gold bottom are alive with men engaged in sluicing, and Hunker is already sending gold to Dawson. Bonanza has also sent in some new-crop gold, and is working at nearly all points.

No reports are heard of scarcity of men, and some predict that there are more men in camp now than will be needed at the busiest season.

'Twas Her First Love.

On a corner stood a little barefoot girl in her rags. Her soiled, pudgy little hands hugged another bundle of rags caressingly to her stained, dimpled cheek, while she enjoyed all the joys of young motherhood. The bundle was her "baby." Tied with a string near one end, the rags formed into a head. Another string about the middle produced the effect of a waist line. A young man saw the happy little mother. "What's that?" he asked, resting a hand on the unkempt hair of the child.

"My dolly," she said, hugging the rags closer.

"Your dolly, eh? What a pretty dolly. And what do you call your baby?"

"I talls it—I talls it—I talls it Bum Annie."—N. Y. Times.

Do Your Feet Ache and Burn?

Shake into your shoes, Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It makes tight or New Shoes Feel Easy. Cures Corns, Itching, Swollen, Hot, Callous, Smarting, Sore and Sweating Feet. All Druggists and Shoe Stores sell it, 25c. Sample sent FREE. Address, Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y.

Not a Joke.

In a dispute one cuffed the other on the ear.

"Was that meant for a joke or in earnest?" asked the victim, hotly.

"In earnest."

"That's lucky for you. I don't take things of that kind for a joke."—Philadelphia Times.

Society Men.

"Mr. Woodby is very particular," said Mrs. Woodby, who was engaging a new servant; he's quite a prominent society man and entertains—"

"Is he so?" interrupted the applicant. "Faith, then, he ought to know me Uncle Mike. Divil the society ye ever heard tell of that he don't belong to."—Philadelphia Press.

Nailed Down.

Crawford—Why do you think he's the most henpecked man that ever lived?

Crabshaw—Because when his wife went away to the country for the summer she made him keep a diary of how he spent his time in town.—Puck.

Spotted!

First Shirt-Waist Man—There goes Mr. Schermerhorn in a new shirt waist!

Second Shirt-Waist Man—That is no new shirt waist! That's one of last summer's shirt waists—see how large the sleeves are! —Brooklyn Eagle.

False Doctrine.

School Examiner—What is the meaning of false doctrine?

Schoolboy—Please, sir, it's when the doctor gives the wrong stuff to people who are sick.—Tit-Bits.

Didn't Want Knowledge.—A gentleman one day saw a boy peeling the bark from one of his choice trees with a hatchet. The gentleman tried to catch the boy, but the latter was too quick for him, so the farmer changed his tactics. "Come here, my little son," he said, in a soft, flutelike voice, with counterfeited friendliness, "come here to me a minute. I want to tell you something." "Not yet," replied the recipient. "Little boys like me don't need to know everything."—Glasgow Evening Times.

Logic.—Maud—"When are they to be married?" Ethel—"Never." Maud—"Never? And why so?" Ethel—"She will not marry until he has paid his debts, and he cannot pay his debts until she marries him."—Fun.

ADVENTURES OF A QUEER BOY.

His Strange Visit to Buckingham Palace Early in Queen Victoria's Reign.

Amid the flood of anecdotes connected with the late queen and royal family that has been pouring through the columns of the press, I do not think anyone has called attention to the adventure of the "boy Jones," at Buckingham palace, a few years after the queen's marriage, says Edward Vizettelly, in London Free Lance. This young fellow was twice caught within the royal residence, without anyone being able to explain how he got there. On the first occasion he was surprised by a porter early in the morning leisurely surveying one of the apartments. On being searched, nothing of importance was found upon him, but he had made up a bundle containing a sword, a pot of bear's grease, and some old letters.

He was covered with soot, from head to foot, and looked like a sweep, but denied that such was his calling, pointing out that his sooty appearance was due to his having concealed himself in chimneys in the daytime. For awhile he had occupied the vacant bedroom of one of the equerries, and had left the sooty imprints of his frame on the sheets. He stoutly declared that his intrusion was not for the purpose of theft, but to find out how royalty and the "great swells" like royal footmen lived. His examination before the magistrate created great amusement. He admitted that he had been in the palace on previous occasions, and for days together. In fact, he had "put up there," he said. He had found it a very comfortable place. The apartment he liked best was the drawing-room. During the day he hid behind the furniture, when he was not up a chimney, but late at night, when everyone had gone to bed, he walked about, went into the kitchen, and got his food. Then he related that he had seen the queen and her ministers in council, and had listened to all they had to say. When asked if he had worn the same shirt all the time, he calmly replied: "Yes, when it was dirty I washed it in the kitchen." And then he volunteered the information that he knew his way all over the palace, and had been right through it—in the queen's apartments and all. He had found out that her majesty was very fond of politics, he said.

This lad revealed himself such a pleasant vagabond, with his amusing ways and astounding impudence, that no very serious punishment was inflicted on him. He was merely put away for a short term. Nor did he fare very badly when caught a second time. On this occasion he was caught crouching in a recess, and, being dragged out of it, was taken to the police station. He then told the magistrate that he had concealed himself under a safe in one of the queen's private apartments, and had overheard a long conversation between her majesty and Prince Albert. He was sent to the house of correction for a few months, in the hope of breaking him of the mania for intruding on the sovereign's privacy, as the offense was mildly termed. But soon after his release he was found prowling in the vicinity of the palace. Finally the authorities induced him to emigrate to Australia, where he eveidently blossomed into a well-to-do colonist. It was soon after these events that Baron Stockmar was brought over here to introduce order and discipline into the royal residence.

The Summer Hotel.

Young Guest—It seems to me that you don't object to the mosquitoes singing in your room.

Old Guest—You bet I don't! Why, when the mosquitoes are singing I can't hear the university glee club practicing on the piazzo.—Chicago Daily News.

Bitter-Sweet.

Ted—That girl of mine has the germ fad and won't even eat ice cream.

Ned—You're in luck.

"But she doesn't stop there. She won't kiss me for fear of microbes."

Misapplied Industry.

"Have I not been an earnest and conscientious worker?" asked the young man who was about to be "let out."

"Possibly, possibly," replied the practical politician. "Indeed, I may say that I have no fault to find with your industry, except that it is misapplied."

"In what way?"

"It has been devoted to the interests of the taxpayers instead of us. You are a good man in some ways, but you seem to lack judgment."—Chicago Post.

Terribly Burned.

"An ounce of prevention" may be thought a luxury, but it often turns out to be a necessity, as is proved by the following statement from Mr. J. H. Malkmus, of New York City, N. Y.: "On the 20th of June, I terribly burned one of my hands by grasping a dull red hot iron about three inches long and three-fourths of an inch thick, and now on this 26th day of June I am cured, nothing having been used but Palmer's Lotion." Everybody should have it. If you cannot get it, send to Solon Palmer, 347 Pearl St., New York, for samples of Palmer's Lotion and Lotion Soap.

Fairy Stories.

"I tell you your country is painfully new. Why, you haven't even any fairy tales."

"Haven't, eh? Well, you just come with me and look at the tablets on our best monuments."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Piso's Cure cannot be too highly spoken of as a cough cure.—J. W. O'Brien, 322 Third Ave., N., Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 6, 1900.

Some girls kill themselves jumping rope, some grow up and write problem stories, and some have fame thrust upon them.—Detroit Journal.

Check Coughs, Colds and Croup
With Hoxsie's Croup Cure. No opium. 50 cts.

Bibbs—"No man knows himself." Gibbs—"That's so. He would lose his best friend if he did."—Smart Set.

Women Must Sleep.

Avoid Nervous Prostration.

If you are dangerously sick what is the first duty of your physician? He quiets the nervous system, he deadens the pain, and you sleep well.

You ought to know that when you ceased to be regular in your courses, grow irritable without cause, and pass sleepless nights, there is serious trouble somewhere, and nervous prostration is sure to follow.

MRS. HARTLEY.

You ought to know that indigestion, exhaustion, womb displacements, fainting, dizziness, headache, and backache send the nerves wild with affright, and you cannot sleep.

Mrs. Hartley, of 221 W. Congress St., Chicago, Ill., whose portrait we publish, suffered all these agonies, and was entirely cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; her case should be a warning to others, and her cure carry conviction to the minds of every suffering woman of the unfailing efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 83 S. California Ave., Chicago.

PENSIONS on age, disability and Widowhood; P. L. or any U. S. Service. LAWS FREE. A. W. McCORMICK & SONS, Cincinnati, O.; Washington, D. C.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY.

Genuine

Carter's Little Liver Pills.

Must Bear Signature of

Brent Good

See Fac-Simile Wrapper Below.

Very small and as easy to take as sugar.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

FOR HEADACHE.
FOR DIZZINESS.
FOR BILIOUSNESS.
FOR TORPID LIVER.
FOR CONSTIPATION.
FOR SALLOW SKIN.
FOR THE COMPLEXION

GENUINE MUST HAVE SIGNATURE.

Price 25 Cents | Purely Vegetable. Brent Good

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

SPEED!

A high-grade tire, to be worthy of its name, should possess four virtues — speed, easy riding qualities, ability to wear, ease of repair.

G & J Tires have all these virtues. When punctured, take off the outer cover, repair the inner tube and go on your way in a jiffy.

So simple a child can do it. Catalogue free.

G & J TIRE COMPANY, Indianapolis, Ind.

FRAGRANT

SOZODONT

a perfect liquid dentifrice for the

Teeth and Mouth

New Size SOZODONT LIQUID, 25c
SOZODONT TOOTH POWDER, 25c
Large LIQUID and POWDER, 75c

25c

At all Stores, or by Mail for the price.

HALL & RUCKEL, New York.

In 3 or 4 Years an Independence Is Assured

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

If you take up your homes in Western Canada, the land of plenty. Illustrated pamphlets, giving experiences of farmers who have become wealthy in growing wheat, reports of delegates, etc., and full information as to reduced railway rates can be had on application to the Undersigned, who will mail you atlases, pamphlets, etc., free of cost. F. PEDLEY, Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada; M. V. McINNES, No. 2 Merrill Blk., Detroit, Mich.; E. T. HOLMES, Room 6, Big Four Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

25 CTS. PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

A. N. K.—C 1872

EDUCATIONAL.

LIMA COLLEGE. Eight Departments. Fine location and building. Strong faculty. Expenses low. Catalogs free. Rev. Carl Ackermann, Ph. D., Dean, LIMA, Ohio.

$100.00 Reward

To protect your health and our reputation, we will gladly pay this big reward to any one who will furnish us information on which we can secure conviction of a dealer who tries to sell worthless fake imitations, when CASCARETS are called for. When you're offered something "just as good", it's because there is a little more money in the fake. Buy CASCARETS from the honest dealer. They are always put up in blue metal boxes with long-tailed trade-marked C on the cover—every tablet stamped C. C. C., and they are never sold in bulk. Remember this and whenever fakes are offered when CASCARETS are called for, get all the details and write us on the subject at once.

SIX MILLION BOXES
SOLD LAST YEAR
OUR BEST TESTIMONIAL

Cascarets

BEST FOR BOWELS AND LIVER.

THEY WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

THIS IS CCC THE TABLET

10c. 25c. 50c.

NEVER SOLD IN BULK.

DRUGGISTS

GUARANTEED TO CURE all bowel troubles, appendicitis, biliousness, bad breath, bad blood, wind on the stomach, bloated bowels, foul mouth, headache, indigestion, pimples, pains after eating, liver trouble, sallow complexion and dizziness. When your bowels don't move regularly you are getting sick. Constipation kills more people than all other diseases together. It is a starter for the chronic ailments and long years of suffering that come afterwards. No matter what ails you, start taking CASCARETS today, for you will never get well and be well all the time until you put your bowels right. Take our advice; start with CASCARETS today, under an absolute guarantee to cure or money refunded.

451

GUARANTEED TO CURE: Five years ago the first box of CASCARETS was sold. Now it is over six million boxes a year, greater than any similar medicine in the world. This is absolute proof of great merit, and our best testimonial. We have faith, and will sell CASCARETS absolutely guaranteed to cure or money refunded. Go buy today, two 50c boxes, give them a fair, honest trial, as per simple directions, and if you are not satisfied after using one 50c box, return the unused 50c box and the empty box to us by mail, or the druggist from whom you purchased it, and get your money back for both boxes. Take our advice—no matter what ails you—start today. Health will quickly follow and you will bless the day you first started the use of CASCARETS. Book free by mail. Add: STERLING REMEDY CO., New York or Chicago.

SOME MEN GROW ON TREES.

This Is the Belief of an Indian and Some Other Tribes.

The Sioux Indians still share with the old Aryan and Semitic tribes in the belief that there are trees that bring forth human beings and others that bear various portions of the human body, and in the fourteenth century an Italian traveler, on arriving at Malabar, was told by the natives that the country abounded with a tree that bore men and women. The latter were attached to the limbs by the nether extremities and were full formed when the wind blew, but when the wind died out they soon withered. These specimens of humanity reached the length or height of three feet.

In the first book of the Mahadharata mention is made of forms of dwarfs that were to be found on a large fig tree. The Arabs are still strong in the belief that somewhere in the southern ocean there is a tree that bears a nut that resembles the face of a man and when in its fullness the mouth opens and gives voice to the cry: "Waki Waki!" The Chinese reverse the order of things and, instead of believing that the trees give birth to men, claim that in the beginning the herbs and grass sprang from the hair of the human family. They have preserved the tradition, too, that somewhere within the borders of the beautiful Flowery Kingdom there is a wonderful lake by whose margin grew trees whose leaves developed into birds and also that, if a jar be broken on the waters, birds of the most brilliant plumage will at once arise from the pieces and fly off.

In central India there is a tribe called Khatties that claim to have their origin from a stick of wood. When the five sons of Pandu, the heroes whose exploits are told in the Mahadharata, had become simple tenders of sheep, Karna, their illegitimate brother, wishing to deprive them of their last resource, prayed to be gods to assist him. He struck the earth with his staff, which opened, and from it sprang a man who was called Khat, meaning begotten of wood, and by this name have his descendants ever since been known.—St. Louis Republic.

LINCOLN WAS GRACIOUS.

Invited the Theater Usher to a Seat In His Box.

"I never was much of a Republican," said a gentleman who was born and reared in Washington, "but I loved Abraham Lincoln. He was one of the most lovable men I ever met. I was an usher at the National theater, and about two weeks before the assassination John Wilkes Booth and Susan Denin were playing there. Mrs. Lincoln having expressed a desire to see them in 'Romeo and Juliet,' I was sent to the president's house to say that a box had been reserved. In the evening, Mrs. Lincoln being indisposed, the president and little Tad Lincoln came, and I showed them to the box.

"As Tad entered he turned and said, 'Come in, Lew.' 'Oh, no,' I replied; 'that would not be right.' Tad then turned to his father and said, 'Pap, you have no objection to Lew coming in?' Mr. Lincoln, with a smile and motioning me to a seat, replied: 'No, Tad; certainly not for any of your friends. We will be glad to have your company.'

"I told Tad that my business would not allow me the privilege, and, thanking both father and son, I returned to my duties with a light heart and with an admiration for the president I have felt for but few men, and since that incident I have often recalled it and expressed my sorrow that he met with a death so untimely."—Washington Star.

Jupiter Warmer Than the Earth.

The gigantic mass of Jupiter has a much larger warmth than that of the earth. It is the result of the molecular movement produced by the compression of the strata and must be greater the more powerful the masses, and hence the larger the pressure of the strata is. Jupiter surpasses the earth in point of mass 307 times, and for this reason the inner temperature or individual warmth of the planet is probably high enough to evaporate the water upon the surface quickly, so that water vapor forms the principal substance of the atmosphere of Jupiter. Water vapor is an excellent reflector and readily accounts for the bright radiation of light emitted by the planet.—Professor Hughes in Chicago Tribune.

Awkward Compliment.

There is such a thing as being too persistently complimentary. A candid and well meaning professor who had witnessed the performance of a little play in a private house in which his hostess had taken the leading part met the lady as she came from behind the curtain.

"Madam," he said, rushing up to her, "you played excellently. That part fits you to perfection."

"Oh, no, professor," said the lady modestly. "A young and pretty woman is needed for that part."

"But, madam," persisted the professor, "you have positively proved the contrary!"—Pearson's Weekly.

In the Dumps.

There was once upon a time an Egyptian king, so it is said, who built a pyramid and died of melancholy. His name was Dumops, yet there are probably few persons who know that they are perpetuating the memory of his tragic history when they remark that they are "in the dumps."

Extraordinary Temerity.

"I told that Boston girl I didn't like Emerson."

"Was she displeased?"

"Displeased? She got nearly as mad as she did when I said that beans could be baked without salt pork."—Chicago Record.

West Virginia Notes.

The two items below were clipped from the Terra Alta correspondence of the Kingwood Journal:

Alexander Chambers departed Monday of this week for Chicago, Ill., and from there will go by the shortest route to Zion City to join forces with Prophet Elijah John Alexander Dowie. Mr. Chambers has been an adherent of "Dr." Dowie for some years past and is the same gentleman who, when Dowie placed the ban upon pork, went into the woods and shot several fine hogs, burying their carcasses in a swamp, and at a time when many of his neighbors would have been glad to receive the prohibited property as a gift or purchase. This action on the part of Mr. Chambers has gained for Dowie's belief the name in the community of "Dowie's Hog Religion."

Col. Nat Ward Fitz-Gerald, of Washington, arrived with the crowd the morning of the 4th, and an hour later read his poem on Memorial Day at the Soldiers' Reunion. On Saturday evening the Colonel gave a free lecture in Offutt and Lakin's Hall, his subject being his religion and his chief topic, why he is never going to die. About one hundred persons listened respectfully to the Colonel, but nearly all present remarked the fact that the speaker didn't say anything of Bryanism, free-silver or imperialism. But it wasn't a political discussion, so we won't abuse the Colonel. However, it is given as the opinion of many who have talked with the Colonel that he has radically changed his political views and that he would now like to get in the Republican band wagon and move with the procession headed by prosperity and happiness. We fear the gallant Colonel has "strayed too far from the fold."

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

Notice.

I beg to announce to the citizens of Garrett county that I have returned to Oakland to locate permanently to practice law, after an absence of several years, during which time I have been engaged in the practice of law in Washington, D. C. I solicit the patronage of clients of the late firm of Veitch & Townshend and that of other citizens as well.

Prompt attention will be given to all business placed in my care.

Offices in the McComas building, Oakland, Md.

PERCY H. VEITCH,
15 6t Attorney at Law.

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Battlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

The Best Remedy For Stomach and Bowel Troubles.

"I have been in the drug business for twenty years and have sold most all of the proprietary medicines of any note. Among the entire list I have never found anything to equal Chamberlain's Cholic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy for all stomach and bowel troubles," says O. W. Wakefield, of Columbus, Ga. This remedy cured two severe cases of cholera morbus in my family and I have recommended and sold hundreds of bottles of it to my customers to their entire satisfaction. It affords a quick and sure cure in a pleasant farm. No family should be without it. I keep it in my house at all times." For sale by all dealers.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the road prayed to be changed, known as the White and King road, and examine whether the said changed road should be located, will meet on the 15th day of July, 1901, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said changed location of said White and King road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

WILLIAM WHITE,
J. B. MEESE,
CHARLES THOMPSON,
Examiners.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.

OAKLAND, MD., July 8, 1901.

Chaddie Hager, appointed Democratic Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 28, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead James Bower is hereby appointed, to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

Turnbull's

China and Japan Mattings, all weaves and colorings.

Porch and Lawn Furniture,

Iron and Brass Bedsteads,

Linoleums and Oil Cloths,

Carpetings.

JOHN TURNBULL, JR., & COMPANY,

16, 18, 20 West Baltimore Street,

BALTIMORE

The Quaker Bath Cabinet.

Open—Ready For Use.

A 16-page descriptive catalogue sent free upon request. AGENTS WANTED. Write for terms. Address all letters to

QUEEN CITY NOVELTY CO.,
General Agents, OAKLAND, MD.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.

A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St.Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. WELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

The Garrett County Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank

OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE
SECOND NATIONAL BANK
of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital.....$100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits.. 250,000
Liability of Shareholders..... 100,000
Additional Security to Depositors...$450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart.
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

The Wilkes Stallion

EMPEROR WILKES

TIME, 2.28.

Will stand at the stables of the undersigned in Oakland on the following terms:

$10 to Insure a Mare With Foal.

Money to be paid when mare is known to be with foal. Persons parting with a mare or fails to attend forfeits insurance money. A lien will be retained on the colt until insurance is paid. We will not be responsible for accidents should any occur, but the best of care to prevent such will be exerted.

This horse has a record of 2.34. On a trial he trotted a mile in 2.28. He is a full brother of WILL KERR, 2.07¼, Champion Green Harness Horse of the World, and also of VINETTE, 2.09¼.

EMPEROR WILKES is a dark bay stallion, snip on nose, black points, height 15¾ hands. He was bred by Thompson & Bro., Cynthiana, Ky. He comes from the best trotting family of horses in this country and has a bright future. He is the sire of the fastest colts in Garrett county and is without doubt the best bred stallion and the fastest trotting animal in Western Maryland.

M. MARONEY & SON.

I HAVE PURCHASED
THE OAKLAND COAL YARD
of Mr. D. L. Conneway and will continue the business. I will keep constantly on hand a large supply of
HARD AND SOFT
COAL,
KINDLING WOOD, Etc.

All orders will receive prompt attention. Leave orders with the weighmaster or at my residence, the Giessman Hotel.

35-2 GEO. GIESSMAN

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars Cameras and Photo Supplies

TO CURE LAGRIPPE IN TWO DAY

Take LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE TABLETS. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. GROVE'S signature on every box. 25c.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for

ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO,
FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy

MONUMENTS HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the ullest extent of the law.

Call on or address:
C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.
Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

133⅝ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale. House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187½ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26½ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swauger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to

JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent,
OAKLAND, MD.

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,

Office 7 North Liberty St.

CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—Opera House,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MD
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. je14-1y

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 10 6

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice,
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

M. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 16-'99

H. W. McCOMAS, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 6 22 6m.

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J. HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md
Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26t*

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate.
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats, descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42	A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.35	A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01	A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52	P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07	P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50	A. M
No. 2—Daily	8.52	A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41	P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12	P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35	P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37	A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager.
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.
IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD		STATIONS	NORTHWARD
No. 3	No. 1		No. 2	No. 4
P. M.	A. M.		NOON	P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. June.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05	3 05
6 31	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 59	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 43	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 29
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv*7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.			A. M. A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager. G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1901. NUMBER 21.

HONOLULU AND HAWAII.

Wonders of the Beautiful Paradise of the Pacific.

GORGEOUS COLOR EFFECTS.

Experiences in a Volcanic Crater—The Pali and Mountain Tops in the Clouds. Chinese and Natives.

The Hawaiian Islands are called "The Paradise of the Pacific" and they well deserve the name. I have never seen anything so beautiful as their verdure-covered rugged mountains, and nothing so picturesque as the city of Honolulu, its suburbs and the country generally. No coloring that I ever saw in America can compare with the delicate gradations in tints of the distant Hawiian mountains and headlands, bathed in sunlight, darkened by shadows or half hidden by clouds.

The seashore and ocean form a perfect kaleidoscope of brilliant blues and greens, or soft purples, violets and grays. Many of the effects of light are wonderful. To say that both landscape, form and coloring are lovely hardly does it justice. It is a land "where every prospect pleases and only man is vile."

Stopping at Honolulu last February on the way to Sumatra some of the leading citizens gave our eclipse observation party a reception the evening after we arrived in Honolulu, and Professors Barnard and Skinner and Mr. Abbot gave talks about their work. I did not have the pleasure of attending the reception myself, being off on an excursion party to Diamond Head with Dr. Ormond Wall, who studied several years in Baltimore, and who saw to it that I had a fine, large time and visited the chief places of interest. The party to Diamond Head was mostly made up of the teachers from Kamehameha School, including one pure-blooded native teacher, a Miss Kahuna.

Diamond Head is a large extinct volcanic crater nearly 1,000 feet high, with a thin crater wall affording a precarious foothold difficult to walk along. The outer slopes are very steep and comparatively smooth, except where serrated by gorges. It is a steep, hard climb not devoid of more or less danger from slips and consequent falls, but the view from the top will repay one with interest. The crater basin is fairly deep and of immense extent, although somewhat less than a mile in diameter. There is a small, shallow lake within the basin. The scenery is different from anything I ever saw. The mountains are rugged and almost constantly cloud-capped. The clouds often come down very low and are sometimes in masses of immense cumli towering into the air to a great height, above the highest mountains. But the chief charm of the landscape is the vivid coloring or soft translucent tints in the distance. The shallow parts of the sea are in many places a strong bright green, inclining to emerald; in other places the coloring will be a cobalt blue or a violet, and there are all possible gradations between these colors. In the distance the colors are grayer and more inclined to a deep violet gray. I thought the coloring could hardly be surpassed, until I visited the Pali.

The view toward the city, with the sea to the left and the mountains to the right, is artistically perhaps the finest of all views which include the city. The composition is almost perfect, but was seen at a disadvantage, as the city was in a smokey haze, which also gave only faint glimpses of the other large islands to the east.

The party remained on top until sunset, then climbed down by twilight and moonlight and took a picnic supper at Waikiki beach.

The evening before we left Honolulu some of us went to Waikiki beach and took a moonlight swim in the Pacific ocean on the evening of February 27. The weather was delightful and the water warm. Excursions were taken to various other places, including the Punchbowl, another volcanic crater on the outskirts of the city, but it is much inferior to Diamond Head.

An interesting trip was taken on the Oahu railroad to the Ewa sugar plantation, where we saw the various sugar-making operations at the Ewa sugar mill. The most interest part of the trip, however, was the many picturesque pastoral scenes all along the road. The natives only work when they have to, and the farmers are mostly Chinese, who rank with the most skilled of all agriculturists. There are various kinds of trucking farms, but most of the men are engaged in planting and cultivating rice. The water buffalo, or cariboo, is the only domestic animal used for rice cultivatiion, and is a gentle and patient but strong and ungainly beast. Their horns are long, flat and curved backwards, but what possible use the animals make of them I have failed to discover.

Besides sugar cane and rice there are many banana fields and toro patches, the latter looking like fields of pond lilies, furnish the root from which the natives produce the "poi," the national dish of the Kanakas. Many walks were taken around through "Chinatown" and the native quarters, also to one of the native rice mills and the cultivated fields just outside the suburbs.

Honolulu itself is a beautiful city, with the houses set in a perfect forest of tropical trees and plants, flowers and vines. Some of the flowers are of the most brilliant color, particularly a magnenta or purplish pink flower, which at a short distance has the effect of a mass of vivid color. There are other varieties of the same flower which have a different color. These brilliantly colored flowers, however, when looked at more closely, give one the idea that they are made of tissue paper and when taken in hand look like the colored leaves of a plant instead of the petals of a flower.

The most beautiful views of all, however, and the loveliest and most exquisite effects of light and color I have ever seen were witnessed when visiting the Pali. The Pali is a steep precipice over which Kabehameha drove several thousand of his enemies when he conquered the island of Oahu. The view of mountain and lowland, seashore and ocean, as seen from the Pali, I can scarcely conceive it possible to surpass. The coloring was something truly wonderful. There were just enough clouds to giye continually changing effects of light and shade. The translucent blue and purple grays of the distant mountains and headlands had all the elements of the mysterious, that the artists love to rave over, in perfection. The distant mountainons headlands reminded me of nothing quite so much as the play of light and color in the opal.

All the elements of which dreams are made were there. A bold, rugged mountain range would appear to be blotted out by a change lighting caused by a different disposition of the clouds, and the next moment it would reappear with great distinctness. The northern slopes of the mountains, some of which rise to an elevation of 3,000 or 4,000 feet, are as precipitous as anything that could well be imagined. From their bases toward the sea there is a gently rolling country, and then a plain to the seashore, excepts where the cliffs of bold headlands jut out into the ocean.

Green fields of sugar cane and swamp-like fields of rice dot the landscape here and there near the seashore, and where the earth was bare it produced rich reddlsh and brownish color effects to which we are not accustomed in the States. Much of the effectiveness of these earthy colors was due to contrast with the varied greens of the foliage. The most vivid and the richest coloring, however, was in the sea and ocean. All of the colors of the emerald, the turquoise and the amythest were there. The peacock and indigo bird have no hues which were not visible in the ocean, and I never dreamed that it could reveal such colors to the eye. I have seen the Atlantic ocean in its varied moods, and also Long Island sound, Massachusetts bay, Chesapeake bay and many of our most beautiful inland seas and lakes, but nothing that I have seen on the water can approach the wonderful coloring of the ocean seen from the Pali.

The most picturesque of all things in Honolulu or the country surrounding it are, however, the Chinese babies and children. The Chinese children seen in "Chinatown," San Francisco, and other places are not to be compared to them. Even the photographs of the real thing taken in China itself entirely fail to do the genuine Chinese kid justice. He must be seen in Honolulu, where he seems to have acquired a humorous picturesqueness all his own or peculiar to Honolulu. When he is rigged out in his good clothes he is interesting, but let him be more or less ragged and especially if he has on what are to all appearances parts of different costumes one feels as if he could watch the youngster by the hour, or even all day and never tire.

The Chinese mothers all carry their babies in a little pouch in the back of their dress and even the little girls 6 years old or older carry their little baby brothers and sisters in the same way. But notwithstanding their queer appearance a little observation will easily show that the real Chinese kid is as intensely human as the American animal of the same species. They exhibit the same natural perversities and childish ways. They pout and sulk in the same way and raise the same sort of fuss when their little companions take too larger bite like a banana. I witnessed several instances showing how very much like American children the very small Chinese youngters are in many ways. They soon lose their natural child-like ways, however, and develop the stolid manner of the adult Chinaman.

The population of Honolulu is a heterogeneous mixture of Americans, Kanakas, Chinese, Japanese and Portugese. Besides this there are some other nationalities represented and all sorts of half-breeds.

The native population reminds me very much of the Indians and Mexicans of Western Texas. They average a little darker, perhaps, but have the same coppery or orange tinge to their complexions. They are usually extremely indolent, but very good natured and are said to be very affectionate in their family relations and among themselves. Although usually indolent, some of them are of large frame and athletic build and will work hard for a time. If the Kanaka has any one feature that is particularly attractive it is his eyes, which are sometimes remarkably fine. Unprejudiced persons who are well acquainted with them say that as long as they can get enough "poi" and a few other things to eat, without working, they are satisfied unless they are influenced by demagogues and adventurers. They are as a whole not very cleanly in their habits, but rather more so than many other races.

The native Hawaiian band was heard upon various occasions and also some of the native singing and instrumental music by the Quintette Club. Some of the Hawaiian music is beautiful and seems to breathe passion and poetry, to have a soul-stirring as well as a tuneful character. I was so charmed and surprised at the quality of the native music that I asked Dr. Wall why some of the native music was not translated and published. He first laughed, but finally answered by quoting one of their characteristic Hawaiian songs, called "The Maui Girl." The singer is supposed to be the lover of the girl in question, and gives a fervid description of her many charms. She has beautiful, soft eyes, into whose wondrful depths he fondly loves to gaze; she has pearly teeth, nut brown tresses, ruby lips and cheeks whose blushes bring to shame the bloom of some of their flowers, which take the place of our roses. So far the Hawaiian lover is getting along famously, with a fervid imagination like a civilized lover, but then comes a change as he sings of her chief charm, as being a maiden who is very fat, and the reason why their songs are not translated become evident. The language, also, was not always according to American ideas of polite literature. We all regretfully left Honolulu at daylight on the morning of February 28, after a stay of three days which were days of pleasure to all of us, but altogether too short and too few of them.

L. E. JEWELL.

Talmage Day, Tuesday Aug. 6, at the Park.

An opportunity to hear and see the great Dr. T. Dewitt Talmage, the best known preacher of the century, and the highest priced lecturer on the American platform. Those who have read and been helped by his sermons will be glad to see and hear this noted man. It is a day full of good things.

11.00 a. m., lecture, "America as Seen Through an Englishwoman's Eyes," by Mrs. L. Ormiston Chant, of London, England. The greatest woman in England and the most gifted woman talker in the world, brought over especially for the Chautauqua season. It will be a great delight to hear this notable woman.

1.30 p. m., grand concert, by the Royal Hungarian Gypsy Orchestra. Cornet solos by Anna Teresa Berger, the world's greatest cornetist.

2.30 p. m., lecture, "Big Blunders, by Dr. T. DeWitt Talmage.

7.15 p. m., grand concert, the Imperial Hand Bell Ringers, making unique and delightful music on 116 bells. Also instrumental music, with humorous descriptive selections on banjos, guitars, mandolins and harp. One of the most unique music organizations in the world.

8.15 p. m., lecture, "The Pueblo of Zuni and Its People," George Warton James, New York City. Illustrated by a multitude of beautiful stereopticon pictures.

A truly great day which you cannot afford to miss. Come to the mountains. See the great beautiful Auditorium. Special excursion trains, with low fare, from Cumberland, Clarksburg, Fairmont and all intermediate points. See your railroad agent for any other information you need.

A lame shoulder is usually caused by rheumatism of the muscles, and may be cured by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. For sale by all druggists.

INSURGENTS RECEIVE A SEVERE DRUBBING.

The Browning Wing of the Democracy Carry the Convention.

AN ORGANIZATION DELEGATION

Elected to the State Convention at Baltimore—Chairman R. T. Browning Tenders His Resignation in the Interest of Harmony—The Insurgents Have But Five Districts—The Resolutions.

Tuesday the county convention held in Oakland marked the first real knock down and drag out defeat of the insurgents in the Democratic ranks when the organization or Browning wing of the party was victorious in the convention and succeeded not only in naming the delegates to the State Convention to be held in Baltimore to-day but also in controlling the majority of the district delegations from start to finish.

The convention was called to order by County Chairman Richard T. Browning, who in a few brief words stated the object of the convention and then called for nominations for officers of the meeting. Mr. E. A. Browning, of District No. 6, was named for chairman and declared elected, he having been voted for by a viva voce vote, but the insurgents demanded a yea and nay vote. The result was 29 votes for Mr. Browning and 23 against, showing very plainly that the organization forces were in the majority. Mr. A. S. Teats was made secretary.

In the committee on credentials, consisting of one member from each district, except No. 9, from which a contesting delegation was present and therefore not represented in the committee, a pitched battle between the contending factions was narrowly averted. Mr. Samuel Johnson, of No. 9, who is credited as being an insurgent, went into the convention with his credentials. Another delegation, however, appeared favorable to the organization faction with credentials, etc. The majority of the committee was composed of organization men and of course Mr. Johnson was not seated, and this started the row. One of the insurgents from District No. 7 indulged in some language which was taken up by an organization member and a wrangle ensued. The matter was smoothed over only to break out again in the convention after the committee had made its report and a motion was pending to adopt it when Mr. William Miller, of Accident, offered an amendment seating Mr. Johnson. The chair would not entertain the amendment and consequently the contesting delegation from Mo. 9 was seated and allowed to participate.

The committee on resolutions introduced the following and the report was adopted:

Resolved, By the Democratic voters of Garrett county in convention assembled that regretting the great loss the State and the Nation has sustained in the retirement of the Hon. Arthur P. Gorman from the U. S. Senate, they take this means of expressing their hope that the next Legislature of Maryland will return him to the position he has so long and so ably filled and thus right a great wrong.

Resolved, That the Democrats of the county most heartily endorse the action of Governor Smith in calling an extra session of the Legislature which has resulted in a fair and correct enumeration of the population of the State and given to each county the representation in the Legislature to which they are entitled.

Resolved, That the thanks of the people of the State are due to Col. Buchanan Schley and his corps of enumerators and assistants for the prompt, efficient and economical manner in which they have discharged their duties in connection with the State census.

The delegates to the State Convention were elected as follows, all of whom are against the insurgents:

Charles Whitmore and Wm. G. Hinebaugh, of District No. 14, and J. C. Brydon, of District No. 4. The delegates were empowered to appoint their own alternates.

At this juncture Mr. Richard T. Browning tendered his resignation as chairman of the County Committee, stating that he did so in the interest of harmony. The delegates to the State convention will recommend the appointment of a member of the county committee in his place. Of course it is well to remember that the new committeeman will not be an insurgent.

The convention has left many sore spots which will require the application of much balm and soft words to heal over and the end is not yet.

Call for Your Letters.

Mrs. Zura Luman, Mrs. Annie Fountleroy, Mrs. Sallie Cunningham, Miss Fannie Russell (2), Miss Minnie Buckalew, Miss Blanche Rouark, W. E. Washington, W. S. Lantz, Frank Welsh, Daniel McRobie, Dick Ferold, J. W. Cunningham, P. A. Bowers, Master Lewis E. Payne.

Died.

MURPHY.—Mrs. Mary Murphy, aged 89 years, died on July 26th at the home of her son, Davis Murphy, in District No. 8. The funeral took place on Sunday, the 28th inst., and was conducted by Rev. John M. Davis, of Oakland. A large number of relatives and friends were in attendance at the funeral. The deceased was a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal church for a great many years.

MEEHAN.—At his residence in Oakland, on Friday morning last of general debility, James Meehan, aged about 85 years. The deceased was a resident of Garrett county for fifty years or more, coming to this coantry from Ireland. He was a member of the Catholic church. His funeral took place on Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock after service in St. Peter's church. The interment was made at Oakland.

HASKELL.—Mrs. Elizabeth Haskell, widow of the late Henry Haskell, died at her home in Oakland on Friday evening last of paralysis, she having been stricken the morning previous and from which she never rallied. Her funeral took place on Sunday afternoon from St. Peter's Catholic church, the interment being made in the Catholic cemetery.

Reward for Dynamiters.

Information having reached me that on or about July 26th violations occurred on Savage River against the law forbidding the use of dynamite in taking or destroying fish in any of the streams of this State, I have invoked the aid of the county officials of Garrett to enforce Sec. 108, P. L. L., and to assist me in bringing the guilty parties to justice, and I will pay a liberal reward for any information furnished the State's attorney, any of my deputy wardens or myself that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the dynamiters wherever they may be found.

JNO. W. AVERITT,
State Game Warden,
Cumberland.

Married.

TASKER—WHIRL.—July 25th., 1901, by Rev. William E. George at his residence in Deer Park, Daniel William Tasker and Nellie Whirl, both of Garrett county.

FOR SALE:—The Lutheran parson age, located on the corner of Fifth and Green streets, in Oakland, near the court house. Contains 8 rooms, hallway, cellar and porches; excellent well of water. Will be sold cheap. Apply to or address Rev. George I. Uhler, Oakland, Md.

IN COUNTRY LANES.

O country lanes! white-starred with bloom,
Where wild things nestle, shy and sweet,
And all your waving grasses laugh
And pass before my eager feet—
Could I forever dwell with you,
Letting the old, mad world rush by,
And just be glad of wind and sun,
Of rocking nest and brooding sky!

How often, in the crowded street,
I dream of you, sweet country lane,
And feel, once more, your soft breeze soothe
My weary heart and tired brain;
Always above the city's din,
Above the clink of yellow gold,
I hear a wild-bird's ringing note,
I catch the scent of leaf-stirred mold!

Your grasses kiss my fevered cheek,
Your hawthorn drops her fragrant rain,
I am a child once more, and dream
That Heaven bides here, O flower-starred lane!

—Florence A. Jones, in Chicago Advance.

Unc' Shucks and the Witches.

By E. E. Garnett.

"PEOPLE are so tired of charity concerts and teas and bores in general," Sue complained, lugubriously.

"But even tired people must help each other,' Mae insisted. "Let us ask Mrs. Brelle to suggest something."

The pretty widow was in a hammock, with Barnes in chatting distance on the piazza steps, and she did not welcome interruption.

"Will you?" called Joe, upon her silence.

"Will I what?" pouting.

"Help us to help Unc' Shucks?"

"And who," only half hiding a yawn, "is he?"

"He is old and poor and blind," explained Mae, making her climax with a most sweet compassion.

"And black," added practical Louise, "as the ace of spades."

The pretty widow looked bewitchingly reproachful. "No country poorhouse?" she murmured.

A rather chilled silence fell upon the piazza group. Mae's sensitive face flushed. Barnes went up the steps to her side.

"We cannot spare old Shucks to go there," he said, and enviously watched a fleck of moonlight bending to the ripples of her hair.

"Thank you"—shy, sweet eyes raised for an instant to his—"and will you help?"

He wanted to tell her that he would beg, dig, burn—do any outlandish dangerous deed she willed; but the words halted. He only got a bit red and nodded.

"Oh, if he's a pet," said Mrs. Brelle, sulkily, "we'd best take up a collection—that is the shortest way out of such annoyances."

"He's in the turn of the road, going out to the golf links," Louise put in, reflectively; she was housekeeper and found provisions an easier method of charity than cash. "When we go by for the big game next Tuesday we might give him a donation party."

There was a murmur of applause, to which Mrs. Brelle added a soft hand-clapping. The act displayed both hands and rings, and she smiled with pleasure over them.

"Very well," she assented, graciously; "I'll send a barrel of flour."

Mae threw a grateful kiss from her finger tips, but the widow was looking to Barnes and missed it.

Good nights were beginning. Getting from her hammock, the pretty widow gave a little start of alarm—such a shrill, weird call had rung out of the grove: "Who—who!"

"Screech owl," announced Joe. And Barnes added, in appropriately sepulchral tones, the old saw: "When a screech owl calls, witches answer."

"I hope he isn't calling his witches," said Mae, "to Unc' Shucks' donation."

"They're worse than witches," laughed Joe, "who have that business in hand. Just don't let them forget tobacco, and Unc' Shucks' luck is secure."

"I—he has tobacco."

"So like Mae," said Louise, "to take tobacco first."

"Well, a pipe," Joe protested, gravely, "puts heart into a man."

"And next in value," suggested Barnes, "shall we sprinkle him with a little silver?"

"Don't tell me any more," cried Mae; "I'm too happy."

The pretty widow was coming up the steps and noted the girl's face, and how Barnes sought the light of it. She followed to Mae's door.

"Can I come in, dear, for a minute?"

Mae drew up a cozy chair and waited absently beside it. Her eyes were still radiant, a dreamy look in them, happy and shy. The tone of Barnes' voice lingered with her and the look that said "good night." Hard to strike such a face frightened and white, but the pretty widow smiled and compassed it.

"You must forgive me, love, for hinting that your impulsive ways are liable to be misinterpreted."

"I beg pardon," growing attentive with a start. "What did you say?"

"Mr. Barnes is a man of the world," gently, "accustomed to a flirtation as to his wine at dinner. He—"

"Wait!" with unexpected dignity. "I do not care to hear you speak of Mr. Barnes. But of me—you were saying something of me?"

"Well," rising with an angry flush, "you are refusing a kindness. One would think that you mean—the way you look."

"The way I look?"

"My dear child," over a shoulder as she went to the door, "you look up at him as if you were kneeling before a shrine."

In those next days Barnes could not guess what the trouble was—how should he?—but he was quick to realize that Mae shunned him and, when she could not, was nervous and dumb and pale. Meeting her one morning in the shady lane that led toward the links, the look on her face grew suddenly unendurable to him.

"Mae," he cried, "what have I done? Are you offended with me?"

"No," cried Mae, startled and miserable. "No, of course not."

"Then why do you treat me like this?"

"This?" faltered Mae; then looking at him she suddenly flushed and with tears springing hurried away.

Passing on, puzzled and distressed, around a clump of hazel, he came upon the pretty widow; she had heard.

"I am sorry," she said; "oh, I wish I could help." Then, hesitatingly, "Perhaps it would be best to tell you."

"To tell me what?" sternly.

"Joe is jealous of you; see?"

"Joe? Joe!"

"You never guessed? Why, it is an old affair, since school days and pinafores."

"Joe!"

"He has been scolding the poor child, I suppose, and she is afraid to be seen with you; or, perhaps," gently, "she doesn't want to hurt you."

"Joe!"

"I am so sorry," holding out a plump, soft little hand, "so sorry!"

But poor Barnes could only say "Joe!" The idea, at first incredible under the bits of evidence that began to come in, grew past doubt. By the time he had reached home a mountain of proof was throbbing in his brain. He called himself a bat and hourly accumulated misery. Treachery, deliberate falsehood, never occurred to him.

A perfect day dawned for the golf play. Old Shucks sat out on his doorstone and gave smiles and blessings and smoked his pipe, while the gay groups came with their bundles and greetings. The old man listened keenly with head bent, identifying step or voice and giving a jolly comment or grunt all to himself as they passed on to their game.

"Dat ar stumble b'long ter Marse Joe; never could lift his feet, dat boy."

"Marse Barnes? ain' like hisself. Mighty down in de mouf fer Marse Barnes."

"Dar's de lil widder. Um; step like a cat. Um."

"Miss Louise, bossin' de earth. La, don' I know Miss Louise!"

"En Miss Sue, trottin' 'long b'hind, totin' de left-overs."

"Whar's Miss Mae?" suddenly louder. "Is I gwine miss dat chile? Whar's lil Miss Mae?"

"Here, Unc' Shucks."

"Somebody throwing bricks at yo', honey? You walk like yo' steppin' on yo' heart."

"She is quite happy, Shucks," said Barnes' voice beside them, "but she is afraid of hurting some one if she shows it."

Shucks turned his sightless eyes anxiously from one to the other.

"De truf bes', chile; better hurt 'em den fash 'em. What yo' happy 'bout, honey?"

"I—I don't know," faltered Mae.

"Um. What she happy 'bout, Marse Barnes?"

"It is her secret—and Joe's."

The old man leaned eagerly to catch her reply, but Mae's pretty head was tilted in indignant silence.

"Marse Barnes," turning a broad smile on him, "if yo' an' Miss Mae was to go ter de spring an' fetch me a drink I'd be mighty thankful; dat I would."

"I must speak to you," Barnes said as the girl would have turned away from him. "Let me at least have your forgiveness." So they went together down the pretty hill path, under the elm and hawthorn and winding through witch hazel to the old spring.

"Um," grunted Shucks, and filled his pipe, the smile still broad on his face.

Presently the pretty widow came to him.

"Have you seen," she began, anxiously. "I mean heard, anything of Mr. Barnes?"

"Marse Barnes gone on ter de links," shamelessly, "wid Miss Sue, marm. Yes; marm."

But he shook his grizzled head as she hurried away. "Dat how de cat jump," he mumbled. "Um. Old Shucks gwine feel a pain in his conscience 'bout dat falsifyin' an' dat barrel o' fine flour, um—uh—who dar? Marse Joe? Yo' late at de links, sar."

"I am not going to the links, Unc' Shucks. I am hanging about with my gun. Miss Mae is anxious about your chickens; she says a screech owl gets one every night."

"Dat he does, dat he does," indignantly; "an' I makes no doubt he's nappin' up one ob dem trees dis minute, dreamin' 'bout supper time, but," sotto voce, "yo wastin' shot firin' fer Miss Mae, chile, yo' shorely is."

Joe, all unconscious of this, went peering keenly along the edge of the wood, and the old man listened, his mind divided between chuckles for the spring and conscience-stricken grunts for the wood.

"Ah! here he is!" came triumphantly at last.

"Hit 'im 'fore he holler, Marse Joe!" Shucks advised, eagerly. "De ain't no luck in his screech."

So Joe took the owl silent and secured happy fortune to the donation party; at least that was the old man's verdict, but he shook his head dubiously when he considered Joe's share of it.

"But de biggest sort er luck," he grunted, philospohically, "'bleeged ter end somewhar."—Springfield Republican.

NEGROES IN WASHINGTON.

Commendable Progress in a Business Way Has Been Made by the Colored Citizens.

The Union league of Washington has just made an exhaustive inquiry into the status of the colored population there. It finds that commendable progress has been made in business, in spite of a good many drawbacks, there being over 83 varieties of business in which colored people are engaged, says the Star. There are more than 1,300 colored proprietors, one-fourth of whom have been in business more than ten years. They give employment to over 28,080 persons. They have $654,761 invested in business, and they do an aggregate of business yearly of $1,750,000. Barber shops, restaurants, cobbler shops, express delivery and similar callings constitute the larger portion, but there are 17 contractors, 75 fish dealers, 130 grocers and 49 market stand proprietors, and in all this lot only 11 poolroom keepers and nine saloon keepers. There are 53 physicians, 12 trained nurses, ten dentists and 33 lawyers. Among other conclusions reached by the investigation is that colored people are not disposed to patronize one another in these classes of business in which the whites seriously compete for trade. This is ascribed partly to lack of confidence, but partly to envy and jealousy.

Oldest Church in the Country.

The oldest Protestant church in the United States is St. Luke's, at Smithfield, Va., writes William E. Curtis, in the Chicago Record-Herald. St. Luke's was erected in 1632, and was restored in 1894 as nearly as possible to its original condition and appearance. It is a beautiful old structure, of early English Gothic, with mullioned windows and a stately tower, and has been used for public worship almost continuously for 2½ centuries. The original church erected on Jamestown island by the first English colonists in North America, under Capt. John Smith—the church in which Pocahontas was baptized and married—has all disappeared, except a picturesque, ivy-clad tower of black, surrounded by a grove of trees.

Carried Off the Mugs.

At the recent Commers, at Bonn, in honor of the German crown prince, at which the kaiser was present, an unpleasant incident arose. The guests thought that the beer mugs were keepsakes, and carried off 650 of them. The "Borussia" corps, which acted as host, instead of settling for the mugs, asked the guests who carried them away either to return them or to send 30 cents to the proprietor of the restaurant where the Commers was held.

ADVANTAGES OF THE DOCTOR.

He Is Not Under Restraints Such as Those by Which Preachers Are Environed.

Physicians, like clergymen, are concerned in trying to make their fellow men better, but they have a great advantage over the clerical brethren in being able to shape their lives according to their whims and necessities without undue criticism from their fellows. We prefer that our doctors should be good men. We insist that they shall have a high degree of professional honor. We expect them not to be unduly mercenary, and not to grudge a fair measure of their time to the public service. But we don't concern ourselves about what they eat, or drink, or smoke, or how they choose to have their share of fun, says a writer in Harper's Weekly. We don't even insist that they shall practice what they preach, and we should be disappointed if we did, for, though doctors spend their lives in efforts to induce people to take care of their health, it is unusual for a busy doctor to take even ordinary care of himself. His sleep is broken, his meals are irregular, he overworks himself; very likely he smokes too much. But as long as our confidence in his skill is unimpaired we don't criticise him.

Doctors are supposed to know what is good for themselves, and in their hands we leave the responsibility for their cases as well as for ours. To be sure, we scoff a great deal at the medical profession, carp at its contradictions and remark upon its limitations, but in the long run the good doctors get the credit that is their due, even though its arrears may not come in until after they are dead.

Our Varying Seasons.

The longest cold season is found in the Rocky mountain region, where it exceeds the warm by about ten days. The warm season in Texas and the lower Missouri valley opens about ten days earlier than in the region near the middle Atlantic coast, and from 20 to 25 days earlier than on the southern coast of California. In the northwest the warm season opens from 20 to 25 days earlier than in the lake region and from 15 to 20 days earlier than in the north Pacific coast region.

Light Without Heat.

A "cold light" has been produced by a woman, Mme. Currie, of the Municipal School of Physics, Paris. It is called radium and is due to the action of certain salts on uranium salts. When treated the substance becomes permanently luminous, without heat. Placed in gunpowder it creates a glow, but there is no explosion.

MGR. OTTAVIO CAGIANO DE AVEZEDO.

News comes from Rome that this talented young churchman, at present chamberlain in the pope's household, will be the successor of Cardinal Della Volpe in the post of major domo—the most important position in the vatican. He has the right to accompany the pope at all times, and eventually succeeds to the governorship of the conclave. He is also the chief of the singers of the papal chapel and has direction of religious ceremonies. Before 1870 the major domo was also the prefect of the Apostolica palaces, and united in himself the administrative and judiciary power over the household.

LONGFELLOW MANSION IN PORTLAND, ME.

This house, which was the first brick building erected in Portland, is in Congress street, in the heart of the business portion of the city. Here the poet passed many of his years and wrote a large number of his works. Several years ago Mrs. Anna Longfellow Pierce, a sister of the late poet, deeded the mansion to the Maine Historical society upon condition that the house be kept in its present form, as a memorial to the Longfellow and Wadsworth families, and a memorial hall be erected in connection therewith. Efforts are now being made to comply with the conditions of this deed.

CAUSES OF SUICIDE.

Dr. George F. Shrady on the Increase in Self-Destruction.

Declares That May, June and July Are Essentially the Suicide Months of the Year—How He Reaches His Conclusions.

George F. Shrady, of New York holds that civilization, education and communication are the three great factors in the increase of suicides. He further holds that the months of May, June and July are essentially the "suicide months" of the year. The fact that in the past three months there have been in New York city 117 suicides leads Dr. Shrady to scientifically discuss the prevalence of the mania for self-destruction. He says, in the St. Louis Republic:

"The study of suicide, its causes, its scientific aspect, the reasons for it, the study of the characteristics of those who take their own lives—in other words, the investigation of the inner details of suicide—have long engaged the attention and interest of anthropologists, sociologists and physicians.

"While many would suppose that winter, with its distressing cold and its hardships, especially in the case of the poor and needy, would yield the greater number of suicides, it is a strange fact that in the spring and summer the number of persons seeking death by their own hands is double what it is in winter.

"There are three months of the year which are especially notable for the number of suicides occurring in their terms. They are May, June and July.

"It has never been adequately determined why these three months are so productive of suicides. The heat may have something to do with it, as may the lassitude which always comes with the return of spring. Nevertheless, it is a fact that in May, June and July most of the suicides of the year are recorded.

"The study of suicide is intensely interesting. It embraces a close investigation of the human mind, what the mind will do under certain conditions in certain people, and how in other people, it will do something diametrically opposed to its action in still other people.

DR. GEORGE F. SHRADY.
(New York Physician Who Has Made Suicide a Special Study.)

"It is a study of morbidity, of suggestion, of reception, of impression, of determination. It is also a study of various conditions of life. A man living in one state of existence would kill himself if compelled to endure what a man in another state accepts as his lot in life.

"Suicide increases with the increase of civilization. That is a remarkable commentary upon civilization, but it is a just one.

"There are far more suicides in a large community than in a small one. This is not due to the fact that there are more people there—that is, not because there are more there to kill themselves—but because intercommunication increases suicide.

"It offers more suggestion to those inclined to self-destruction. And suggestion is one of the most potent factors in suicide. It is suggestion that makes a man turn to his revolver, a woman to the phial of carbolic acid. She has just read of some unfortunate woman escaping the cares and ills of life by swallowing a few pence worth of acid. This woman's case was something like hers. That is the suggestion, and the weak woman avails herself of it—ergo, another suicide.

"Education, many authoritative investigators contend, is another strong agent in the increased number of suicides.

"There is no doubt that this is in great measure true. Education reveals to the lower and the poorer classes the superior condition of those more favored with the goods of this world, and it breeds despondency, dejection, bitterness and hopelessness.

"Heredity is accountable for a large percentage of suicides. The tendency is not always manifested in the generation immediately following that of the suicide. It frequently skips a generation."

Of the 117 suicides since March 6, 83 were men and 34 women. The women, for the most part, used carbolic acid in taking their lives, although one of them shot herself. The men mainly used the revolver, knife or noose.

Thirty-two German men killed themselves, and 16 German women. Of native Americans there were 21 men and eight women, 14 Irishmen, five Irish women, five Frenchmen, five French women, four Austrian men, two Swedish women, and one man of nationality unknown.

A Formula for Kalsomine.

The following instructions for the preparation of kalsomine are found in a German scientific publication: Dissolve eight ounces of sodium carbonate in sufficient hot water (about half a pint), and to the solution, while still hot, add one quart of linseed oil, and soponify by heating and agitation. Put 12 ounces of white glue in a vessel, cover it with cold water and let it stand over night. In the morning pour off the residual water, then set the vessel in a pot of water and heat until the glue is dissolved. Add the saponified oil, mix thoroughly by agitation, then remove from the fire and stir in ten pounds of whiting, adding a little at a time, and under constant stirring, and adding hot water (not quite boiling, however, as a boiling temperature destroys the tenacity of the glue) from time to time, as the mixture grows thick. Finally add sufficient hot water, until the liquid flows freely from the brush. Liquid washbluing intensifies the white of the wash.—N. Y. Tribune.

He Stopped His Paper.

"Sir!" exclaimed the oldest citizen, as he walked into the business office of the daily paper, "I see in your sheet of to-day, sir, an article to which I take exceptions, and I want my paper stopped, sir! And when James F. Anderson says stop, sir, he means stop, sir!"

"Phil," wearily murmured the circulation manager, "go out and tell Bobt' stop th' press an' lock up; ol' man Anderson has quit us!"—Denver Times.

Paradoxical.

This is the way he wrote to her:

"Molly: I has not had a line from you in three weeks. Has you throwed me over?"

And this is the way she answered him:

"John: Hain't you hearn tell that I am on a sick bed, where I am slowly a-dyin', an' can't write a line to save my life, you fool, you?"—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Delays Are Dangerous.

Those who acquire the habit of never doing to-day anything that can be put off till to-morrow must suffer the consequences of their folly, even though unwilling to acknowledge their faults. Mr. John W. Danenhower, of Cincinnati, Ohio, wrote: "Palmer's Lotion has completely cured an eruption on my left arm of over five years' standing, which was caused by an injury and from which I could get no relief." This man lived in the city where Palmer's Lotion was first introduced and his suffering was due to his not using a remedy to be had for the asking. If you cannot procure it, send to Solon Palmer, 374 Pearl street, New York, for samples of Palmer's Lotion and Lotion Soap.

Her Lack.

The Illinois woman who called her husband a jackass and then got mad because he called her his better half does not seem to know such a thing as justice.—Denver Times.

Guide to Washington.

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad is the shortest route and the only line running solid trains of through coaches and sleeping cars from Chicago or Pittsburg to Washington. All other through trains of this line east and west run through the Capitol City. An artistic and practical Guide to Washington has been placed on sale at principal ticket offices of Baltimore & Ohio R. R., or will be mailed to any address on receipt of fifteen (15) cents in stamps. Address D. B. Martin, Manager Passenger Traffic, Baltimore & Ohio R. R., Baltimore, Md.

Equal to the Occasion.

Liveried Menial—Me lud, the carriage waits without.

His Lordship—Without what?

"Without horses, me lud; 'tis an automobile."—London Tit-Bits.

New Fast Train to Colorado via Missouri Pacific Railway.

The Missouri Pacific Railway is now operating double daily service from St. Louis and Kansas City to points in Colorado, Utah and the Pacific Coast. Trains leave St. Louis 9 a. m. and 10:10 p. m.; Kansas City 6 p. m. and 10 a. m., carrying through sleeping cars between St. Louis and San Francisco without change. Excursion tickets now on sale. For further information address company's agents. H. C. TOWNSEND, Gen. Pass. and Ticket Agent, St. Louis, Mo.

Both Murder and Suicide.

The after-dinner speaking mania at medical banquets is at its height. What a pity it is that men who have nothing to say, and who do not wish to say it, are compelled to say it to men who do not wish to hear it.—American Medicine.

Yellowstone Park.

Extended tour, leisurely itinerary with long stops in the Park. Private coaches for exclusive use on the drive. Pullman sleeping and dining cars. Established limit to number going. Escort of the American Tourist Association, Reau Campbell, General Manager, 1423 Marquette Building, Chicago. Colorado and Alaska tours also. Tickets include all Expenses Everywhere. Train leaves Chicago via Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul R'y, Tuesday, July 9, 10:00 p. m.

Thingless Things.

Somebody is now trying to add nicotineless tobacco to the list of thingless things.—Hartford Post.

Piso's Cure is the best medicine we ever used for all affections of the throat and lungs.—Wm. O. Endsley, Vanburen, Ind., Feb. 10, 1900.

Every man thinks he is already carrying a load that threatens to break his back. Don't ask him to carry a part of your load.—Atchison Globe.

Hoxsie's Croup Cure
Checks a cold in one hour. 50 cents.

Col. Bragg—"I've fought and bled for my country, sir; I've—" Alex Smart—"Yes, but did you ever help your wife hang pictures?"—Ohio State Journal.

In 3 or 4 Years an Independence Is Assured

If you take up your homes in Western Canada, the land of plenty. Illustrated pamphlets, giving experiences of farmers who have become wealthy in growing wheat, reports of delegates, etc., and full information as to reduced railway rates can be had on application to the Undersigned, who will mail you atlases, pamphlets, etc., free of cost. F. PEDLEY, Supt. of Immigration, Ottawa, Canada; M. V. McINNES, No. 2 Merrill Blk., Detroit, Mich.; E. T. HOLMES, Room 6, Big Four Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

ECONOMY
CREAM SEPARATOR
Pays for itself in a few days. Separates in 40 minutes automatically and gets all the cream. Only costs a trifle and lasts forever. AGENTS WANTED—Big tear—every farmer buys. Where we have no agent we will send a Separator at agents' prices, to introduce it. Write for catalogue, prices, etc., to ECONOMY SUPPLY CO.,
554 Main St., Kansas City, Mo

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION

THE CAKE THAT WAS BURNT.

There was a little cook, and she made a little cake,
She put it in the oven just to bake, bake, bake;
It was full of plums and spice,
And of everything that's nice,
And she said: "An hour, I reckon, it will take, take, take!"

And then that little cook went to have a little play,
With a very charming cat across the way, way, way;
She forgot the cake, alack!
It was burnt, well, almost black,
And I wondered what the cook's mamma would say, say, say!

The little cook ran off, and confessed her tale of woe,
For to find her cake a cinder was a blow, blow, blow;
"Cheer up," her mother said,
As she stroked the golden head,
"For accidents will happen, we all know, know, know!"

—Sheila, in Cassell's Little Folks.

AN ALLIGATOR HUNT.

It Is Great Sport and Far More Exciting Than Catching a Shark or Even a Tarpon.

Boys who have never seen an alligator in his haunts, much less participated in a chase after one, would be greatly interested in a Florida 'gator hunt. Pretty soon these affairs will be things of the past. The young Chicagoan who would like to pull a big fellow out of his lair must hurry or it will be too late, for the days of this species of the crocodile are growing short. To such an extent has the reptile been hunted for his hide and teeth that he has become a scarce product of the tropical gulf region.

Not only have the larger ones been caught, but nests have been robbed and the eggs sold as curiosities. The eggs are laid in the sand, where they hatch in six weeks if they escape the ravages of the egg hunter. But even then there is danger for the little fellow, for no sooner does he poke his nose through the shell than a human eye spies him, captures him and finally sells him to a tourist, who ships him away to some northern friend.

Alligators do not stay in salt water; they live in caves along the many creeks tributary to the river, feeding in the big stream only at night. Nowadays various distances must be traversed before a capture is effected. In past years they have been captured by the thousand.

Samuel Barfield, of Rockledge, Fla., is the Indian river genius of the 'gator hunt. He arranges hunting parties among the northerners to witness his prowess. He has a steam launch at his command and with a party of all the way from 20 to 40 persons he steams up or down the river on his exciting mission.

HOW THE ALLIGATOR IS CAUGHT.

One after another of the caves known as haunts of the game is visited. Barfield, who has an experience of 16 years as a 'gator hunter, has learned to imitate the peculiar bark of the animal. Approaching a cave he utters a succession of sounds which serve to coax the game out of the cave.

All is excitement among the onlookers about this time. Everyone is craning his neck to catch a first glimpse of the monster. No sooner does he poke his huge nose out of his den than Sam, who has remained out of sight, grabs the big fellow by the jaws and in a twinkling slips a rope muzzle over them. An experienced 'gator man has no fear of being bitten, though the vicious brute would chew him up did he get the chance.

The jaws being safely tied so that biting is impossible, the legs are manacled with ropes, and then the alligator is towed to Rockledge, where the visiting populace gather at the dock to see the captive and hear the details of the hunt.

Barfield is one of the most interesting characters about the resort. The visitors gather about his little palm thatched cabin to hear him tell of his various captures, for besides being an alligator hunter he has killed more rattlesnakes than any other hunter in Florida. In his cabin is imprisoned an alligator which he says is 150 years old. It is 12 feet long.

In a cage in the cabin is a gray eagle of huge size. The proud bird came near meeting his end the other day. The alligator had poked a hole in the wire screen covering the cage and had crawled half-way into the box when Barfield discovered the situation. The eagle had huddled up in one corner of the cage and was the most badly scared bird in Florida.—Chicago Record-Herald.

DOG TAMED BY CHILD.

Fierce St. Bernard, the Terror of an Eastern Community, as Wax in the Hands of a Baby.

A little boy, scarcely more than a baby, living at Roxbury, Mass., has succeeded in taming a fierce St. Bernard dog that has been a terror in the neighborhood for more than a year past. Grown people could do nothing with the animal. He was savage at all times and used to attack the children as they were passing his master's house. Mr. Miller, who owned the great brute, tried to get rid of him, but could not, for as often as he was given away he came back to the house where he was not welcome.

At last the fierce nature of this dog has been changed and it was a little babe who conquered it. He was brought over to Roxbury by Mr. Hauer, to whom Mr. Miller gave him, muzzled. He did not make friends with his new master or mistress, but was more ferocious than ever.

Even Mr. Hauer thought him now to be mad. The dog was unmuzzled and pushed into a room in the garret. While Mr. and Mrs. Hauer were discussing the question of asking the police to dispose of the dog Mrs. Hauer missed her only child, little Sammy. A horrible thought struck her. Could the dog have entered the nursery, which is adjoining the room in which they had kept the dog? All went up breathless and before the door heard the whining of the animal and cry of the baby!

SAMMY AND HIS FRIEND.

Mr. Hauer was first to recover. He opened the door and saw Dicky, the dog, and Sammy rolling over the floor, playing with each other in actual delight.

The grown-up people were speechless. The ferocious animal of five minutes ago had become a meek lamb in the hands of the baby, who had doubtless pushed open the door of the nursery and made friends with the dog.

Dicky is now perfectly changed. He is the pet of the family, obeys orders from his new masters, but allows no one to touch him except little Sammy, over whom he watches like a guardian angel.

HOW FISHES BREATHE.

They Need Very Little Oxygen to Keep the Blood Warm Enough to Sustain Life.

The gills of a fish are situated at the back part of the sides of the head, and consist of a number of vascular membranes, which are generally in double, fringe-like rows, fixed by the base only; sometimes these are featherlike, and sometimes they are mere folds of membrane attached at each end over the gill cavities. In general, there are four gills on each side, though in some fish there are more. In fishes that have bones the gills are attached to the outer edge of bony arches connected with the bone of the tongue and with the base of the skull, the connection at each end being by intervening small bones, while the cavity containing the gills on each side of the head is covered by a bony plate with two subordinate pieces. It is by the movement of these bony plates that the water is expelled which is taken in through the mouth, and which, after passing among the gills and supplying them with air, passes out by the gill openings at the back of the head.

The fish is a cold-blooded animal—that is, its temperature is very slightly above that of the water in which it lives, and it therefore needs but little oxygen to keep the blood warm enough to sustain its life.

This oxygen, supplied to the blood by the gills in respiration, is not obtained by decomposing the water, but by separating the air from it. It is, therefore, necessary that the water in which fish live should be supplied with air, and this is one of the direct benefits of the agitation of oceans and lakes by winds.

Fishes confined in aquariums often die for this very reason—because the water is not aerated. They consume all the oxygen in the closed vessel in which they are placed, and no more being supplied, they die, and may be said to be drowned, because they perish from the same cause that occasions death by drowning in lung breathing animals—that is, want of air.

How Duty Became Pleasure.

"Bobby is attending to his pianoforte lessons very faithfully of late," said the boy's uncle. "Yes," replied his mother; "I don't have any trouble with him about it now." "How did you manage it?" "Some of the neighbors complained of the noise his exercises made, and I told him about it. Now he thinks it's fun to practice."

True Love.

Briggs—Do you think he really loves her?

Griggs—Of course. How can he help but love a girl with as much money as that?—Detroit Free Press.

CORN FOR THE SILO.

Variety to Be Selected Should Be One That Shall Approach Maturity Before Frost.

The more corn there is put into the silo the greater will be the value of the product removed from the silo. There is a popular notion that the ensilaging of corn adds something to its value which is not contained in the original material. This notion is wrong, and the greater the feed value of the product put into the silo the greater the feed value of the ensilage will be. Corn should be planted for the silo but little, if any, thicker on the ground than it should be planted where the object is to produce grain. Corn is distinctively a sun plant, and if it is so thickly seeded that the sun cannot reach all parts of the growing plant there is produced a product which is lacking in digestibility and which is not relished by farm stock.

CORN PLANTED FOR THE SILO.

A few years ago some experiments were conducted by the Cornell experiment station, the object being to determine what method of planting corn produced greatest food value. Certain plats were drilled in thickly so that no ears would develop, others were planted with the rows 40 inches apart and with the plants close together in the row, and other plats were planted in hills from three to 3½ feet apart. While a larger quantity of produce was obtained per acre where the corn was drilled in thickly, yet it contained a higher per cent. of moisture and was deficient in protein and in fat.

While the money value of the broadcasted corn is not very different from the value of that grown on the other plat, this estimate does not take into account the digestibility of the various products.

The variety of corn which shall be planted must be determined somewhat by local conditions. In central New York the Pride of the North gives very satisfactory results. Whatever variety is selected, it should be one which shall approach maturity before frost. The man who plants so thickly that he cuts it with the reaper is surely failing to get best results, says Country Gentleman, in conclusion to the foregoing advice.

TALK WITH FARMERS.

The Man Who Wrote It Is Something of a Growler, But He Tells Nothing But the Truth.

One must own enough farm implements and animals to do his work rightly. A poor man cannot own horses valued at $100 each, but his poverty is no excuse for poor, emaciated, half-killed "stacks of bones." Make barns more for comfort than for style, but do not be afraid to fix up your outhouses—barns, sheds and chicken houses—so as to have the appearance that indicates that a well-to-do farmer dwells there. Build your barns with plenty of shed and implement room. Do all the fall breaking you can. If need be, hire a man with team and plow to assist you. Do not work your team to death. Do not make the boys do the work while you sit beneath the shade, idling away the hours, and don't make your girls get out in the field to the drudgery of farm work. Do not say: "Well I feed them for their work, and I'll just put them to raking stalks or hoeing corn." It is to be hoped young men will see them if you do, and take pity on the poor things. If they were manly they would marry them to relieve their father, and more especially to relieve the girls of their obnoxious parent. Give your sons and daughters a good school education if nothing more. Don't send them one day and stop them another; better keep them at home all the time. I would tell you not to maltreat dumb animals, but that story has grown old, ever so old, and yet the farmer mistreats his stock just the same. He feeds them little and beats them much; while we all know it should be vice versa.—M. Louis Mertins, in Prairie Farmer.

Eggs Wasted by Overfeeding.

The man who feeds three times a day, and gives the hens so much kindness that they will not scratch or work, but sit down and wait for him to come around at the regular hour, simply wastes time, labor and food. What is more, he wastes eggs, for such hens lay but few eggs, because they are in a fat condition. Of course, hens should not be poor in flesh, but there is no need of feeding hens more than they actually require. Eggs are costly luxuries when the hens do not lay regularly, and nine-tenths of the failures are due to overfeeding.—The Poultry Keeper.

RELIC HUNTERS HURT TREES.

Those Planted by Li Hung Chang at Tomb of Gen. Grant Are Having Hard Fight for Life.

Recent visitors to Grant's tomb, in Riverside drive, New York City, have noticed a tendency toward decay in the trees planted near the mausoleum by Li Hung Chang upon the occasion of that distinguished celestial statesman's visit to the final resting place of his friend, the general, several years ago.

Vandals and curiosity seekers have combined to arrest the growth of trees and destroy their life by tearing leaves and branches from their boughs, and although extra vigilance is maintained to guard against the desecration the trees continue to be despoiled.

A substantial fence, with extra guards, will probably be provided by the park commissioners. In contrast to the care taken of the Li Hung Chang trees, it is pointed out that the Japanese, ever since the visit of Gen. and Mrs. Grant to the kingdom of the mikado, have carefully protected and nourished the trees which the general and his wife planted on that occasion.

To Clean Ribbons.

For all ribbons but white or those that are badly soiled an excellent method is to put all kinds together into a fruit jar that is half-full of gasoline. Cover it tightly, shake a few times and allow it to stand over night. In the morning the dirt will be found at the bottom of the jar. The ribbons should be shaken, not squeezed or wrung, when they are removed from the fluid, and hung in the open air to dry. White ribbon is turned yellow by gasoline. Do not use the gasoline near a fire or light.—Detroit Free Press.

There are lots of people who will not take a dare to do anything except a dare to go to work.—Atchison Globe.

Just the Experience.

After looking in the show window of a dealer in sporting goods for a long ten minutes he entered the store and said:

"Sir, I have some thoughts of going a-fishing."

"Yes, people do have thoughts of it sometimes," was the reply.

"If I go, I shall want at least $50 worth of tackle."

"All of that, I should say."

"And, sir, after I have spent $50 for tackle and taken two weeks' vacation and paid out $100 for railroad fare and hotel bill, what then, sir—what then? Will I have caught any fish?"

"Not one," was the reply.

"But, sir—but—"

"But you will have had the experience. Come in any time you are ready, and we'll fit you out and tell you where the last man thought he had a nibble."—Philadelphia Press.

Her False Note.

At a local amusement resort the lecturer is accustomed to wax eloquent over the graces of a certain fat lady who gives many exhibitions a day on a stationary bicycle. One night lately there was a tear in the speaker's eye and a quiver in his voice as he told of mademoiselle's appearances before the crowned heads of Europe.

"Yes, there was the prince of Wales' friend," he sobbed, with an emotional wave of his hand. "He saw her, loved her and would have followed her to America but for the protestations of his mother, Queen Victoria."

"Yis," supplemented the fair object of the prince's affections. "Yis, he knowed a good thing whin he seen it." There wasn't a dry eye in the house.—Boston Record.

"I understand that Noitall says your new picture is a monstrosity." "I don't mind him," quietly remarked the artist; "he never had an opinion of his own. He merely repeats what others say."—Philadelphia Times.

He must needs run when the cycle comes.—Ally Sloper.

ONE LATIN FRIEND.

Ecuador's Progressive President Shows His Admiration for the United States.

"President Alfaro, of the Republic of Eucador, has recently shown his friendship for the United States in a new manner," observed Mr. Perry M. DeLeon, of Savannah, consul general at Guayaquil, reports the Washington Post. "He has brought into this country a considerable number of school teachers for the purpose of instructing his people in the English language. But in other ways he has made it plain that he desires friendly and intimate relations with the great republic to the north. His term of office expires in August, but Senor Plaza, his successor, is of the same party, and will undoubtedly pursue the same policy.

"The completion of the railroad from the seashore through the mountains and into Bogota will strike a death-knell to revolutions in Ecuador. Now an independente can raise a revolution and gain considerable headway before the government is able to secure any definite information about it, but when it becomes possible to transport troops in a few days by rail into the interior such rebellions against authority will be impractical. The road, an Anglo-American project, of which Mr. Archie Harmon, of Staunton, Va., was the promoter, will cost $12,500,000, and should be completed in about five years. The government assures the corporation the right to operate the road for 50 years, and also, for the same period, all mineral rights in the republic. Some 15 expert prospectors have been scouring the interior of Ecuador, searching for minerals, and are said to have made some valuable discoveries of gold. The company will probably build a branch railroad on its own account to develop a section of the country, particularly the rubber forests."

Mr. De Leon, who is now on his way back to Ecuador, says he is heartily in favor of a canal for the development of trade with South America, and that he is convinced the Panama route is the only feasible one. "The objections urged against a sea-level canal," said he, "are really not objections at all. Furthermore, we already have the right to control a canal across Panama, just as we protect the railroad property there."

Perils of the Poles.

Three expeditions are trying to locate the south pole, and six are after the one at the other end of the world. This means nine new faces on the lecture platform next year.—Baltimore American.

Do Your Feet Ache and Burn?

Shake into your shoes, Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It makes tight or New Shoes Feel Easy, Cures Corns, Itching, Swollen, Hot, Callous, Smarting, Sore and Sweating Feet. All Druggists and Shoe Stores sell it, 25c. Sample sent FREE. Address, Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y.

WHY MRS. PINKHAM

Is Able to Help Sick Women When Doctors Fail.

How gladly would men fly to woman's aid did they but understand a woman's feelings, trials, sensibilities, and peculiar organic disturbances.

Those things are known only to women, and the aid a man would give is not at his command.

To treat a case properly it is necessary to know all about it, and full information, many times, cannot be given by a woman to her family physician. She cannot bring herself to tell everything, and the physician is at a constant disadvantage. This is why, for the past twenty-five years, thousands of women have been confiding their troubles to Mrs. Pinkham, and whose advice has brought happiness and health to countless women in the United States.

MRS. G. H. CHAPPELL.

Mrs. Chappell, of Grant Park, Ill., whose portrait we publish, advises all suffering women to seek Mrs. Pinkham's advice and use Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as they cured her of inflammation of the ovaries and womb; she, therefore, speaks from knowledge, and her experience ought to give others confidence. Mrs. Pinkham's address is Lynn, Mass., and her advice is absolutely free.

READERS OF THIS PAPER DESIRING TO BUY ANYTHING ADVERTISED IN ITS COLUMNS SHOULD INSIST UPON HAVING WHAT THEY ASK FOR, REFUSING ALL SUBSTITUTES OR IMITATIONS.

PILES ANAKESIS gives instant relief and POSITIVELY CURES PILES. For free sample address "ANAKESIS," Tribune building, New York.

A. N. K.—C 1871

RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 88 S. California Ave., Chicago.

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER.
Send for our
BOOK OF HEALTH.
SENT FREE ON REQUEST.

It is brimfull of information regarding diseases of the Liver and Kidneys, Chronic Diarrhoea, Rheumatism, Bright's Disease, Nervous Dyspepsia, Gastritis, Constipation and other Digestive Disorders.

Persons suffering from these ailments cannot afford to be without it.

It teaches you HOW TO GET WELL, and being well, HOW TO REMAIN SO!

We have no Patent Medicines to sell. We have no fake scheme. We are simply a body of specialists who have united our forces to cure these diseases. Our Book of Health is sent absolutely free of cost upon application. Write for it. Address:

Interstate Physicians' League
CINCINNATI, OHIO, U.S.A.

Fragrant SOZODONT TOOTH POWDER 25c

He thinks he lives, but he's a dead one. No person is really alive whose liver is dead. During the winter most people spend nearly all their time in warm, stuffy houses or offices or workshops. Many don't get as much exercise as they ought, and everybody knows that people gain weight in winter. As a rule it is not sound weight, but means a lot of flabby fat and useless, rotting matter staying in the body when it ought to have been driven out. But the liver was overburdened, deadened—stopped work. There you are, with a dead liver, and right now is the time for resurrection. Wake up the dead! Get all the filth out of your system, and get ready for the summer's trials with clean, clear blood, body, brain free from bile. Force is dangerous and destructive unless used in a gentle persuasive way, and the right plan is to give new strength to the muscular walls of the bowels, and stir up the liver to new life and work with CASCARETS, the great spring cleaner, disinfectant and bowel tonic. Get a 50c box to-day—a whole month's treatment—and see how quickly you will be

BROUGHT BACK TO NEW LIFE BY

Cascarets
LIVER TONIC
BEST FOR THE BOWELS

10c. 25c. 50c.
ALL DRUGGISTS.

NEVER SOLD IN BULK.

CURE all bowel troubles, appendicitis, biliousness, bad breath, bad blood, wind on the stomach, bloated bowels, foul mouth, headache, indigestion, pimples, pains after eating, liver trouble, sallow complexion and dizziness. When your bowels don't move regularly you are getting sick. Constipation kills more people than all other diseases together. It is a starter for the chronic ailments and long years of suffering that come afterwards. No matter what ails you, start taking CASCARETS to-day, for you will never get well and be well all the time until you put your bowels right. Take our advice; start with CASCARETS to-day, under an absolute guarantee to cure or money refunded. 462

GUARANTEED TO CURE: Five years ago the first box of CASCARETS was sold. Now it is over six million boxes a year, greater than any similar medicine in the world. This is absolute proof of great merit, and our best testimonial. We have faith and will sell CASCARETS absolutely guaranteed to cure or money refunded. Go buy today, two 50c boxes, give them a fair, honest trial, as per simple directions, and if you are not satisfied, after using one 50c box, return the unused 50c box and the empty box to us by mail, or the druggist from whom you purchased it, and get your money back for both boxes. Take our advice—no matter what ails you—start today. Health will quickly follow and you will bless the day you first started the use of CASCARETS. Book free by mail. Address: STERLING REMEDY CO., NEW YORK or CHICAGO.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 1, 1901.

Republican Nominations.

FOR STATE SENATOR:
ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

FOR HOUSE OF DELEGATES:
PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.
CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

FOR SHERIFF:
WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

FOR TREASURER:
JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONERS:
TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.
JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

FOR REGISTER OF WILLS:
EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY SURVEYOR:
FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

They Resolved.

The resolutions adopted by the late lamented Democratic convention held Tuesday in Oakland are published elsewhere in today's REPUBLICAN.

According to these resolutions the nation as a whole and Maryland in particular has been plunged in despair by the retirement of the angelic Arthur P. Gorman from the United States Senate. That calamity befell the country some five or six years ago but the Democrats of Garrett county have just realized, to quote the language of the resolutions, "the great loss the state and nation has sustained in the retirement of the Hon. Arthur P. Gorman from the U. S. Senate." The Democrats of Garrett county have held numberless conventions since the state and nation sustained this great loss but up to the present time it has not been considered necessary to adopt a resolution lamenting this fact or in wearing a badge of mourning to show to the country at large "their hope," to again quote the language of the resolution, "that the next Legislature of Maryland will return him to the position he has so long and so ably filled and thus right a great wrong." It has been a terrible hardship to the nation to be bereft of Mr. Gorman's services during these few years, hasn't it? The wonder is that the wheels of the Government have not been clogged long ago and that justice has not been blinded. According to our Democratic friends the late unpleasantness between this country and Spain was as a drop of water in the ocean compared to the loss the country sustained by the bland and smiling Mr. Gorman being out of the United States Senate.

Verily Mr. Gorman remains the boss of affairs in Garrett county and his prophet is the framer of this resolution, whoever he may be.

The Governor, too, came in for a share of praise and endorsement in calling the extra session of the Legislature "which has resulted in a fair and correct enumeration of the population of the State."

No doubt the political information to the Democracy resulting from the State census was well worth the $40,000 or more expended in gathering it. The Democratic party of Maryland has always been noted for its economy in public affairs and the extra session is only another example of its economical policy.

Democracy vs. Republicanism.

The conditions confronting the Democratic party in Garrett county to-day are a fact and not a theory. The organization is rent and torn asunder by internal dissensions owing to the ambition of one man or a few select cohorts who are in the background and want to push themselves to the front.

The Republican party, on the other hand, is solidly cemented and everything is harmonious notwithstanding the talk of an independent Republican ticket being put in the field. This movement is not countenanced by anyone claiming to be a trne Republican but is being agitated mainly by a few insurgents of the Democratic party and backed by a newspaper claiming to be independent in its principles when in fact it is only awaiting a favorable opportunity to come out boldly and espouse the cause of Democracy and all the ills and evils following in the wake of that now wrecked party. Not only this but if an independent ticket were placed in the field as against the regular Republicen ticket the result of the election may be disastrous to the Republican party as a whole, but to the prime movers in the matter, be they Republicans or Democrats, they would forever rest under a stigma among their own party associates.

Gen. L. V. B. and His Bogey.

We trust that his friends in Frederick county are keeping close watch over our handsome friend, Gen. Louis Victor Baughman. We urge them to be unceasing in their vigilance, tireless in their attentions and most solicitous in the care with which they watch over and protect him. Of all her citizens, Maryland can least afford to lose Gen. Louis Victor Baughman. His handsome countenance, his debonair manner, his indomitable energy, his resourcefulness, his sunny disposition and his limitless hospitality make him "a thing of beauty and a joy forever." To take him from us, to let ill befall him, would be to deprive Maryland of her chief charm. The loss the state would sustain would be irreparable, would fill every heart with most poignant grief, and put the entire populace of Maryland in deepest mouning.

The casual reader may ask: "Why all this solicitude over General Baughman? Is he in danger?" To every such inquiry let us quickly make reply: Yes, General Baughman is in danger. A terrible shadow has fallen athwart his path, and now the gravest fears are entertained for his safety. When this direful thing happened we do not undertake to say. Like all terrible maladies, it may have been long in making known its presence. However that may be, the silly season of 1901 developed its existence. In this torrid weather the deplorable fact is made apparent that General Baughman, in the zeal of his partisanship, is suffering from an hallucination. There is hope that he may recover, and it is because we look forward with keenest anticipation to the day when he will be free from all his besetting demons and become once again our handsome, jovial, sweet-tempered and evenly balanced friend that we urge his neighbors to take care of him.

To be brief, General Baughman is being chased by that horryfying bogey, the threat of negro domination. He himself has told about it. Hear the wail that issues from his lips:

The voters of the state must decide this fall whether or not the white men who are actual residents of Maryland are to govern, or whether, on the other hand, the political control of the commonwealth is to be regulated by the passions, the prejudiced and the ignorance of the irresponsible, illiterate and lawless negroes, who have no settled abode in our midst and who have no interest in, and are not concerned with, the welfare or prosperity of the commonwealth.

And so forth for about five hundred words.

Now, we submit, Gen. Baughman would never think of such downright silliness except during the silly season. He is a man of too much common sense, too much intellectuality; a man too well versed in the statistics of Maryland's population to attempt in serious, sober earnestness to make the people of the state believe any such nonsense as the foregoing and what followed. It is the silly seasen. The intense heat and the oppressive humidity have affected the General. We see him now in our mind's eye running round in circles chased by a terrible big black bogey. We feel sorry for him, and, while abjuring his friends to take good care of him, offer the state, as some consolation in this hour of its affliction, the assurance that, when cool weather comes, the General will be himself again.

The Village Improvement Society Fair at Deer Park.

The date of the Fair at Deer Park has been fixed for Friday, August 16th, from four to seven o'clock and Mr. Burwell has kindly again allowed the use of the hotel grounds for the occasion.

The interest already manifested insures the success of the affair, as the donations and offers of assistance have been lavish and the articles which will be for sale are worth seeing, including some charming things sent all the way from Egypt by Mrs. Frick, whose personal aid we shall sadly miss this season.

Some childrens' dresses from New York have been donated; neckties and stocks after recent Paris fashions; all sorts of fancy articles, books, pictures and a charming collection of handsome silverware and jewelry from one of the best known firms.

The Japanese Tea Garden will again be one of the principal features; the Dairy will have innumerable attractions, and the refreshment tables will be supplied with the most delicious dainties from the private kitchens of the cottagers and members of the Society who have real talent for cookery and understand it as an art.

Two ponies, one in harness and the other under the saddle, will add greatly to the pleasure of the little ones.

A new feature, and one which has excited great interest, is the exhibits and competition for prizes which will be well worth winning. It has been made necessary to withdraw some of the classes proposed but those which remain and for the best of which handsome prizes will be given, are as follows:

1. Best chickens (cock and two hens, to be sent in proper box with wire top and front),
2. Basket of vegetables (variety and perfection of specimens to count).
3. Knitting and crochetting.
4. Drawn work.
5. Embroidery.
6. Basket of flowers (variety and variety of specimens to count).
7. Boy's work.
8. Cake.
9. Baby socks.
10. Hand sewed aprons.
11. Dressed chickens (dry picked, this season's chickens, heads and feet left on).
12. Rolls and biscuits.

Competition open to all living within ten miles of Deer Park, but the name, address and a statement of what the article to be tried for is, must be sent to Mrs. Lorenzo Thrasher, Deer Park, before Aug. 10th, after which date the classes will be finally closed.

Come one, come all; come early, stay late; bring little money or much money; if you don't want to buy, come and see the pretty things and have a pleasant afternoon.

Should the weather be bad the fair will be held in the ball room of the Deer Park hotel, west annex.

All exhibits must be brought to the grounds and delivered at the tables to Mrs. John K. Mitchell, Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, Mrs. Lashorn, Mrs. Orbello or Miss Ellen Hoye between 2 and 2.30 o'clock the day of the fair.

Judging of the classes from 3 to 4 o'clock.

Bazaar open to the public at 4 p. m.

Baskets for the flowers and vegetable competition will be given out at the Friendly Hall to all those desiring to compete in these classes on Tuesday afternoon, August 13, at 4 o'clock. Also the tags which will be required to be attached to each article exhibited with the name of the exhibitor clearly written upon it and the price to be charged if the article is for sale.

The half rate tickets for members of the society and exhibitors will also be sold at the Friendly Hall on Tuesday afternoon, August 13, at 4 o'clock.

The ladies in charge of the exhibit tables are asked to be on duty at 2 o'clock precisely and the judges to come at 3. Consequently it is necessary to urge upon the exhibitors an exact compliance with the directions herein given and any article not in its proper place by 3 o'clock will not be considered in the competition.

LAWYERS AT DEER PARK.

Members of the State Bar Association are Enjoying the Mountain Air.

The annual meeting of the Maryland State Bar Association began at Deer Park Hotel yesterday morning. State Senator Stevenson A. Williams, president, opening the session with an address, after which various committees reported, including that of legal reform, which reported the bribery resolution offered at the Cumberland meeting last year.

In the afternoon Alfred S. Niles, of Baltimore, read a paper entitled "Where the Law Fails," and at night James W. Owens, of Annapolis, read a paper on the subject, "Legislation; Its Errors and Needed Reforms." Today Henry C. Niles, of the York county bar, Pennsylvania, will deliver the annual address on "Priests of the Temple."

About 100 lawyers are in attendance.

The address of President Williams was entitled "A Glance at the Methods of Forming Corporations in Maryland From Colonial Times; Some Evils Which Have Grown Out of Them, With Suggestions for Their Remedy."

After making an historical detail of these evils he said:

"Now, as to the remedy for these evils. The power to furnish what corporate interests so frequently and regularly require, should be surrendered by the legislature and lodged in some office where the responsibility is single and the character is granted as of course upon payment of the required fees. This would be not merely a saving of the time now consumed in this way, but the removal of what is probably the chief source of corruption about the legislative halls."

Edwin L. Mitchell, Thomas J. Peddicord and Percy H. Veitch, of the Oakland bar, were admitted to membership in the State association.

The Census of Garrett County.

The Federal census of Maryland has just been published by Director General Merriam, of the Census Bureau, and the official figures giving the population of the state are quite interesting, showing as they do that the female population exceeds that of the male by 9,494. The percentage of negroes is 19.8 of the whole number.

Garrett county's population consists at 17,827. Of this number there are 9,011 native born males; 8,238 native born females; 266 foreign born males; 186 foreign born females; 63 colored males and 63 colored females.

OUR AUGUST WEATHER.

Heavy Thunder Storms and Hot Weather According to Rev. Hicks.

A Venus period of perturbation is central on July 31st, the moon is at full and near the equator on the same day with the reactionary storms due at the end of July still existing toward eastern parts of the country. Threatening, stormy weather may therefore be expected in many quarters as August comes in. As the moon does not pass over the equator until the 3rd and as its perigee does not fall until the 6th the chances are lessened for dangerous gulf storms.

A season of menacing storm conditions may hover over that region until after the Vulcan storm period central on the 6th and extending to the 9th. If all three of these Moon phases had fallen on the same date, at this time of the year and in a Jupiter period, it would have foreboded possible violence on and about the gulf. From about Tuesday, the 6th, to Friday, the 9th, look in all probability for a very warm wave to culminate in thunder storms, with heavy hail and some high winds. Following these storms no one need be surprised at a sudden and very marked fall of temperature. There should certainly be an abatement of summer heat, for a few days, between this Vulcan period and the reactionary disturbances central on 13th and 14th.

The temperature will rise very high in many places about the time of new Moon on the 14th, low barometic conditions will develop, and electrical, blustering storms will break out generally, the general tendency to which will continue until after the Moon moves south of the equator on the 16th.

A brief relaxation from high temperatures ought normally to appear between storms of the 13th and 14th, and the Vulcan period, 17th to 21st, in which case the rise of temperature, falling barometer and storms of the latter period will fall about Sunday, the 18th, to Tuesday, the 20th. We know no reasons why we should expect a decided change from very dry weather generally in August, but some startling downpours of rain and hail are quite probable in narrow localities, on the central storm days throughout the Venus period, which continues until after the middle of August, or until the effects of the Earth's September equinox begin to make themselves felt. These intense local storms will be preceded by very high temperatures, vicious thunder and lightning will result in the immediate storm paths, and phenomenal drops in the temperature will follow the sections covered by the storms, thence spreading into wider areas, cooling off the heated atmosphere generally.

On and touching the 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th many severe summer storms may be apprehended in various parts of the interior, and on the lakes and sea coasts. This is the mid-summer storm period, and it may be expected to result in decided disturbances and changes in weather conditions. One of the changes will very likely be to much cooler weather generally, running, with occasional brief changes to warmer, into September, which month we believe will not be so terribly warm as it has been the past few years.

On and touching the 24th and 25th reactionary storm conditions will develop, causing a rise of temperature, falling barometer and heavy, blustering thunder storms in paths progressive from west to east. The last four or five days in August, running into the opening days of September, storms of equinoctial origin are very probable along the islands adjacent to our south coasts and at exposed points in and around the gulf region. The Moon is on the celestial equator on the 30th, and in perigee on September 1st. The regular Vulcan storm period is central on the 30th, extending from the 28th to September 1st.

Only 50 Cents

to make your baby strong and well. A fifty cent bottle of

Scott's Emulsion

will change a sickly baby to a plump, romping child.

Only one cent a day, think of it. Its as nice as cream.

Send for a free sample, and try it.
SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists,
409-415 Pearl Street, New York.
50c. and $1.00; all druggists.

Dynamited Savage River.

On last Friday a party of West Virginians hailing from Grafton, Fairmont and Morgantown came to this county by rail and got off the train at Crabtree, a station a short distance below Swanton on the seventeen mile grade. They at once proceeded down the mountain side to the Savage river and dynamited that stream from Crabtree to its mouth at Bloomington. Nine distinct explosions of dynamite were heard and the result of the day's work on the part of these vandals was the capture of fifty-three pounds of black bass and an innumerable lot of other fish.

These men can lay no claim to being called sportsmen. They have violated the statutes of Maryland by dynamiting the river and should they be apprehended the law against such persons will no doubt be rigidly enforced.

Savage river has been plentifully stocked with fish this season at the expense of the people of Maryland and then to have non-residents come in and ruthlessly destroy fish by means that are denied our own citizens is an outrage that should not be allowed to go unpunished.

Books at the Park.

One of the attractions at Mountain Lake Park each year is the fine display of books and stationery which is made by one of the leading houses in Cincinnati. Room 2 of the old Auditorium building is a favorite resort for all residents and visitors of the Park.

All the magazines, new summer reading, standard books and every convenience in the stationery line are attractively displayed.

Every one is made welcome to look at the new books and no one is importuned to purchase.

Stops the Cough and Works off the Cold.

Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets cure a cold in one day. No Cure, no Pay. Price 5 cents.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. McROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH McROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

SHERIFF'S SALE

Of Valuable

REAL ESTATE

In Garrett County, Md.

Under and by virtue of a writ of fieri facias issued out of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, at the suit of Philip T. Garthright against Alfred W. Dennett, the same being No. 7 Judicials to July Term, 1900, of said Court, and to the undersigned sheriff of Garrett county directed, I did in pursuance and by virtue of said writ actually enter upon the real estate hereinafter described, on the 24th day of June, 1901, and did seize and levy upon all the right, title, interest and estate of the said Alfred W. Dennett, both at law and in equity, in and to all the hereinafter described real estate, and I hereby give notice that I will sell at public auction to the highest bidder for cash on the day of sale, in front of the storehouse of P. T. Garthright, in the town of Mountain Lake Park, Garrett county, on at the hour of two o'clock p. m. of said day, all the right, title, interest and estate, both at law and in equity, of the said Alfred W. Dennett in and to all that lot of ground situate, lying and being near Mountain Lake Park, in Garrett county, Maryland, and described as follows, to-wit:

Saturday, 3d day of August, 1901,

Beginning for the same at the southwest corner of A. C. Brooke's lot, on the road leading from Mountain Lake Park to Oakland, and running thence along said road 8 rods, 11 feet and 7 inches; thence by a parallel line to that of Jennie Smith and others, on the opposite side of the lot, 100 rods to the Park alley; thence by and with said alley, 34 rods to the aforesaid line between Jennie Smith and others and James R. Bishop, 74 rods, 11 feet, 7 inches to Brooke's lot; thence with the third line of said Brooke's lot reversed, 25 rods, 4 feet and 9 inches; thence with the second line of said Brookr's lot reversed, 25 rods, 4 feet, 9 inches to the place of beginning, containing more or less, and being the same property which was conveyed to the said Alfred W. Dennett by James R. Bishop and wife by deed dated October 7th, 1895 and recorded in Liber E. Z. T. No. 28, folio 340, one of the land records of Garrett county, Maryland.

17 1-4 Acres of Land,

The said property will be sold to satisfy the aforesaid writ of fieri facias and costs.

Terms of Sale:—Cash on the day of sale.

A. J. OESTER,
Sheriff of Garrett County, Maryland.

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

Miss Nettie Michaels is expected home from Baltimore on Saturday.

Mr. Luther Shaffer, of Baltimore, was here a few days recently visiting friends.

Mr. Eli McMillan, of Accident, is now at Glade, Fayette county, Pa., visiting friends.

Rev. R. B. Ward, of Cameron, was in Oakland Monday and Monday night as the guest of friends.

Miss Eleanor Paul, of Washington, D. C., was a guest at Judge Sloan's, near town, a few days laat week.

Miss Margaret Sloan, daughter of Judge and Mrs. David W. Sloan, has gone to St. Louis, Mo., to visit relatives.

Mr. and Mrs. Fred. G. Fox, of Friendsville, were here visiting the family of Mr. George Fulmer on Thursday last.

Mrs. Rebecca Firestone, of Frederick, will arrive in Oakland this evening and remain the guest of Mrs. Leah F. Sincell for some time.

Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Billmire, of Baltimore, arrived here on Saturday night last to visit Mrs. Billmire's parents, Mr. and Mrs. John O. Michaels.

Samuel J. Beachy, Esq., of Grantsville, came up to Oakland Sunday afternoon and remained here until Monday visiting his daughter, Mrs. David Durst, on Alder street.

Mr. Norman S. Heindel has removed his office from the Shartzer Opera House to THE REPUBLICAN building where he will be pleased to see all who may place any business in his hands.

Mr. and Mrs. D. Grant Smith and children, of Grafton, arrived in Oakland Saturday night. The former returned home on Monday morning. Mrs. Smith and children will remain here some days visiting relatives and friends.

The older inhabitants are now telling how much hotter the summers are than when they were boys, just as they lament over the increased coldness of the winters. There has undoubtedly been some change as to both seasons and the cutting down of the forests is largely responsible for it.

Mrs. Uhler, wife of Rev. George I. Uhler, of St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church, who has been quite ill for several weeks, has gone to her former home at Easton, Pa., to recuperate. A letter received by Mr. Uhler Tuesday morning states that Mrs. Uhler has improved to some extent.

The electrical storms this summer have been exceptionally severe in this section. Friday night the flashes of lightning and peals of thunder racked the nerves of many people. There was a high wind also which did considerable damage to growing crops, especially corn, a number of fields in this immediate community being almost ruined.

Here is a puzzle that puzzles everybody. Take the number of your living brothers, double the amount, add to it three, multiply the result by five, add to this the number of living sisters, multiply the result by ten, add the number of deaths of brothers and sisters, subtract 150 from the result. The right hand figure will be the number of deaths, the middle figure will be the number of living sisters and the left figure will show the numbed of living brothers.

The excursion from the George's Creek country to Mountain Lake Park Tuesday was liberally patronized. The crowd at the Park was variously estimated as numbering from a thousand to fifteen hundred. The excursionists were accompanied by the Frostburg band, and was given under the auspices of the Knights of the Golden Eagle, an organization numerically very strong in the mining region. The day was greatly enjoyed by the crowd and was spent in various ways. Many came to Oakland in wagons of which there were many in service that day.

Don H. Parsons, of Keyser, W. Va., spent Monday in Oakland the guest of friends.

Charles B. Barndollar, of Allegneny, Pa., spent a part of last and this week in Oakland.

Messrs. Geo. Parsons and Maurice Jones, of Keyser, spent Sunday in Oakland.

Miss Bertha Lear, of Cumberland, is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph E. Harned.

Miss Kelly, of Chicago, has been added to the corps of nurses on duty at the McComas Sanitarium.

Miss Sadie Offutt, of Cumberland, is here as the guest of her cousin, Miss Nellie Offutt, on Second street.

Mr. David T. Enlow lost a valuable heifer on Friday night, the animal having been struck by lightning as it lay in a field alongside a wire fence.

Miss Nan Horner, of Baltimore, is the guests of Col. Wood's family, who are occupying the Lawton residence near town this summer.

Miss Elsie Fay, of Washington, D. C., will arrive in Oakland today and be the guest of the Misses Jarboe at their home on Alder street.

We will this week mail to our subscribers statements showing their indebtedness on subscription. The total amount due us is quite large and we trust that there will be a hearty response.

George Geissman, who carries the mail between this point and Accident, using for the purpose a dayton wagon with a capacitp of four passengers, is building up a big trade in the passenger business.

We are pleased to note the improved condition of the mother of Mr. W. McCulloh Brown, whose serious illness was noted in these columns last week. A trained nurse who is a graduate of the Johns Hopkins Hospital, Baltimore, is in attendance upon the lady and her ultimate, and we trust, speedy, recovery may result.

Bonnets for horses are in evidence in Oakland now. Many equines have been decked out with this headgear which consists of a straw hat with holes cut through for the ears. The hats have high crowns and are tied on with red strings. These hot days the horses appreciate the hats, there is no doubt.

Physicians say that typhoid fever is a preventable disease, that bad water and filth are the principal causes of the attacks. There are cities and localities in this country where this sort of diseases are almost an impossibility because the inhabitants have adopted the most approved and scientific means of preventing the propogation of the germs which produce it.

Boys with hats on the back of their heads and long hair hanging down over their foreheads, with cigarettes and smutty stories in their mouths, are cheaper than old worn out horses. Nobody wants them at any price. Men will not employ them and girls will not marry them. They are not worth their keeping to anybody and they will never be able to keep themselves. If any boy happens to read this who answers this description let him take a good thoughtful look at himself and then do what conscience says is the best thing for him to do.

The newspapers of a town are its looking glasses. It is here you see yourselves as others see you. You smile on them, and they smile back at you; you frown on them, and you are repaid in kind. They are the reflex of a town. If the town is doing business the newspaper will show it in its advertising columns. If the merchants are spiritless fellows, whose stores are jumbles of junk and jam, the newspapers will show it by the lack of space they take. If you want the world to know that you have a live town you can only let it be known through its newspapers.

Dr. W. H. Bixler, of Baltimore, is in Oakland, the guest of Attorney Norman S. Heindel.

Chautauqua season at the Park opens to-night. Big crowds are expected.

Mr. John Morton, of Midland, was the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Henry P. Weber on Tuesday.

Hon. Julius Scherr, of Eglon, was in the city a day or two this week on business.

Mrs. Thaddeus Hinebaugh, of Washington, D. C., was here visiting relatives and friends a few days this week, having arrived Sunday.

Mr. Max Good, of St. Louis, whose family is at Mrs. Kepner's for the summer, arrived here Sunday night to remain a short time.

Miss Daisy Grace, of Baltimore, who spent some time in Oakland as the guest of Mrs. Jos. E. Harned, returned to Baltimore yesterday.

Rev. and Mrs. Wm. C. Davis and daughter, of Allegheny, Pa., arrived here Monday afternoon to remain some time as the guests of relatives.

Mrs. Renninger and daughter, of Cumberland, mother and sister of Attorney Julius C. Renninger, are in Oakland as the guests of that gentleman and his estimable wife.

Mrs. Elizabeth Kidd and Mrs. J. Herbert Beatson and little daughter, all of Baltimore, who have been in Oakland visiting Mrs. Leah F. Sincell and family, returned to their home on Sunday evening last.

One good advertisement is better than three or four poor ones. You might give a nail a thousand light taps and not get into the wood a sixteenth of an inch. You would be just about where you started when you got through. Two or three good, strong blows with a hammer would drive it clear home.

A man in North Carolina was selling standing timber—walnut trees. The man who was buying came to one very handsome tree. He told the owner he would pay as much as $50 for the tree. The owner did not sell but sent for experts. He got $1,500 for the tree (curled walnut) as it stood. The man who cut it down realized $3,000 for it on the cars. It was shipped to New York and veneering one sixth to half an inch was cut from it. The sales were watched. The tree brought $60,000.

Jesse Turner's orchestra will return from Oakland August 8th, its two months' engagement expiring at that time. The organization has given perfect satisfaction and was wanted longer, but a number of the boys have made engagements for the coming year and must go to meet them. John T. Hoffman goes with Al. G. Field's big minstrels, Archie Grimes with John W. Vogel, Dean Lazier with Haverly's minstrels, Jerome McMurphy goes to California, Earl Frost goes with Si Plunkard and Jesse Turner returns home. He will at once organize an opera house orchestra and be ready as soon as the season opens. The boys have made themselves famous this summer.—Morgantown Dominion.

News from Nome.

A number of letters have been received here by members of families whose relatives went up to Nome, Alaska, this spring for the purpose of prosecuting further their search for gold. The letters all speak favorably of the prospects for this season, notwithstanding the fact that on July 5th five or six feet of snow covered the ground in the creek country. There was no snow, however, along the beach and operations were begun there as soon as the party arrived.

Broke His Arm.

Carl Brown, son of ex-Sheriff Brown, fell in the bowling alley here one night last week and sustained a compound fracture of his left arm between the wrist and elbow.

E. W. Grove

This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets the remedy that cures a cold in one day

THOUGHT TO BE DROWNED.

A Well Kuown Young Resident of Oakland Believed to Be Dead.

Tuesday afternoon the sad intelligence of the untimely death of Percy Procter, Jr., son of Mr. and and Mrs. Percy Procter, of Oakland, was conveyed here by a telegram to his parents from the faculty of Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.

The details of the death of this most promising young man are unusually sad and necessarily meagre owing to the fact that no one, so far as known, witnessed the accident, but it is believed that he went bathing in Lake Cayuga and was taken with cramps. Being alone he was unable to save himself and was drowned.

So far as we can ascertain the young man, who is 19 years of age, left Ithaca on Saturday afternoon for Tanghannock Falls, N. Y., about 10 miles distant, on his wheel. At 5 o'clock he asked permission to leave his bicycle at the farmhouse of Samuel McElvoy, near Lake Cayuga, for awhile. As he did not return the farmer became alarmed and began a search along the lake shore. He found a bundle of clothes marked "Percy Procter" and reported the matter to the authorities. The clothing was found on Tuesday morning, three days after the disappearance of young Procter, near the town of Trumansburg, and immediately thereafter Mr. Procter was apprised of the fact by a telegram as stated above. He immediately left for Ithaca and expected to arrive there yesterday afternoon at four o'clock. So far as known at this time the body has not been recovered.

He had been a student at Cornell University for two years, where he was taking a special course in agriculture.

He was the only child of Mr. and Mrs. Procter, both of whom were devoted to him.

Fatally Injured at Keyser.

Clarence Billmeyer, who was well known to most of the people of Salisbury and vicinity, died about 8 o'clock p. m., Monday, July 22d. His death was caused by an accident that befell him last Saturday forenoon, and which occurred about as follows:

He was in the employ of Deeter & Kendall, who operate a sawmill on Keyser's Ridge, Garrett county, Md., and while unloading some logs from a log truck, a rolling log struck a canthook in his hands, causing the top end of the tool to strike him a heavy blow in the abdomen. He suffered terribly for several days, until death came to his relief.

On Tuesday the remains were brought to Salisbury, where they were prepared for burial by Undertakers McCulloh and Fair, and here shipped to Mslton, Pa., where the funeral was held.

The deceased was aged about 50 years. He was a practical lumberman, and came to this vicinity with the firm of Billmeyer & Balliet, from Montour county, Pa., about eleven years ago. Clarence, or "Buff," as he was commonly called by his fellow workmen, was an honest, hard-working, genial and whole-souled man. He was kind hearted and liberal, and his friends were many. Poor fellow! We regret exceedingly that his career was so suddenly cut off. His many friends will ever remember him with kindness and tender feelings.

The deceased was unmarried, and he is survived by a mother, one brother and one sister, who reside at Strawberry Point, Ill., where the brother is a practicing physician. The brother regretted exceedingly that he was unable to come east to the funeral, owing to the serious illness of the mother. —Salisbury Star.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 1 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and instead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD — CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA, COLORADO AND UTAH.

Special low Summer Excursion Rates to all points. Personally conducted Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Personally conducted tour to San Francisco, Cal., account General Convention Episcopal Cuhrch. Tickets on sale Sept. 22nd to 27th. Good returning until Nov. 5th, with stop-over privileges.

Quickest and best line to

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Only line with Double Daily Through Service. Dining Cars and Free Reclining Chair Cars. Fastest train service to the famous

BEAUMONT, TEXAS, OIL FIELDS.

Through sleeping car from Chicago without change and through sleeping car reservations from Cincinnati via Memphis, Tenn., to

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Special Homeseekers' Excursions to all points South, West and North West.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER,
Traveling Passenger Agent,
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Notice to Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, either in person or by deputy, will be in each of the Election Districts in Garrett county, Md., to collect and receive taxes at the time and place following:

July 5, E. A. Wimer's store, McHenry.
July 6, W. A. Smith's store, Hoyes.
July 8, R. A. Liston's store, Selbysport.
July 9 and 10, J. H. Cuppet's store, Friendsville.
July 11, J. L. Englehart's store, Accident.
July 12, W. M. Lohr's farm, Cove.
July 13, Harry Leathen's store, Keyser.
July 15, C. M. Livengood's Hotel, Grantsville.
July 16, Thomas Johnson's, District, No. 9.
July 17, P. E. Finzel's store, Finzel.
July 18, Thomas Layman's Farm.
July 19, R. E. Garlitz's store, Aviliton.
July 20, J. H. Gregg's Mills, District No. 11.
July 22, C. J. Otto's, New Germany.
July 23 and 24, G. W. Engle's store, Bittinger.
July 25, Company store, Crellin.
July 26, U. G. Palmer's office, Hutton.
July 29, Merritt Wilson's, No. 8.
July 30, Mrs. Browning's, Gorman.
July 31 and August 1, J. H. Rafter's store, Kitzmillerville.
August 2 and 3, Wm. Moody's Bloomington.
August 5 and 6, Wade H. Lohr's, Swanton.
August 7 and 8, S. P. Specht's store, Deer Park.
August 9, L. A. Rudisill's office, Mt. Lake Park.

The Treasurer's office in Oakland will be closed from July 3rd to August 10th, 1901, inclusive.

N. B.—By an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1890, being chapter 566, it is provided that all county texes shall be due and payable on the 1st day of September next succeeding the date of levy thereof and on all county taxes paid on or before the said 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed; and after the 1st of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid; the Treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on all tax bills for county purposes regulating in the manner aforesaid and shall note same upon the receipts given for taxes so paid; but the discount allowed on county tax by this section shall not be made to any person or corporate institute unless the whole amount of State and county taxes due by such person or corporate institution for the current year be paid when the same is made.

WM. M. LOHR,
Treasurer of Garrett county, Md.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given, that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the lands through which the following road is prayed to be changed, said road so prayed to be changed is the county road leading from Oakland to Crellin, said change to begin at or near where the run (that comes from Hesen's saw mill) crosses the road and running through the lands of John Bradley, to intersect the county road leading from Charles Shaffer's to Oakland at or near the bottom of the hill, a distance of about one-fourth mile, and examine whether the said county road should be changed, will meet on the 3rd day of August, 1901, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said change of said county road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

E. E. SOLLARS,
T. W. CASTEEL,
Examiners.

Go to Townshend's and get 12½c. lawns and percales for 10c.; 10c. lawns for 8c.; 10c. ginghams for 8c. Clothing at almost your own price. 50c. shirt waists at 35c. to 45c. 18-4t

Fall term CENTRAL COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Cumberland, Md., Winchester, Va., begins Sept. 2nd. Write for catalog and free lesson in Gregg Shorthand. Scholarship $45.00

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

Enough for One Night.

He Thought It Too Bad to Disturb the Police Just for Two Burglars.

THE great merchant looked up from his desk. A boy had entered the office. He was a stout boy of perhaps 19. A plainly dressed boy, with big shoes and a soft wool hat.

"Lookin' for a place," said the boy.

The merchant shook his head.

"Willin' to do anythin' that's honorable—except sand the sugar," said the boy.

The merchant slightly smiled.

"Sand is quite too expensive an ingredient," he said with a little chuckle. "You'd be safe from any such temptation here. At the same time, we have no place for you. Good night."

And he turned back to his writing.

"No objection to my sittin' here an' restin'?" inquired the boy.

"No," replied the merchant.

The boy dropped into a chair and pulled a paper from his pocket. Presently he gave a low whistle.

"Well, I swan!" he said.

"Eh?" said the merchant, looking up.

"I didn't mean to disturb you," said the boy, "but I was just readin' here how the police had a couple o' burglars penned up in a vacant house an' then let 'em get away. Poor lot o' shoats, I guess."

"A vacant house?" the merchant repeated.

"Yes," said the boy. "Family gone off to the seaside. Burglars had it all to themselves. Lot o' empty houses entered lately. Here's one place where they even carried off the water pipes an' the chandyliers."

"Don't go away until I finish this letter," said the merchant. "I've got something to say to you."

"All right," said the boy. "My time's yours."

In a few moments the letter was finished and ready for posting. The merchant looked at the big office clock. It was 6:30. All the employes had gone save the porter, who was waiting at the office door to lock up. The merchant closed his desk and turned to the boy.

"Well," he said, abruptly, "who are you and where are you from?"

"Name's Joshua Griscom," replied the boy. "J. Griscom, Perrysburg. Josh for short."

"And what brings you here?"

"Came up as freight," replied the boy. "Got tired of the farm, an' wanted to make my fortune. Hung on to a freight train and come to town. Been at it for a week. If somethin' don't turn up to-night I'm goin' back to the farm to-morrow."

"Have you any references?" inquired the merchant.

"Nop," replied the boy.

"Know anybody in town?"

"Not a soul."

The merchant looked the boy over.

"I think you are an honest lad," he said.

"I have the advantage of you there," laughed the boy. "I know it."

The merchant chuckled softly.

"You evidently don't lack for strong recommendations from a strictly personal source," he said. "But come with me. Patrick, you may lock up."

As they passed through the outer door the merchant suddenly stopped.

"Had any supper?" he asked.

"Yes," replied the boy. "It was my farewell meal. It took my last cent."

"All right," said the merchant, "come along. Now, listen. I want a care-taker for my house. My wife and daughters have gone to the seaside and taken all the servants with them. As you have just been reading, a good many unoccupied houses have been robbed lately. I occasionally sleep at home myself, but there are nights when I want to stay downtown and meet some of my business associates at the hotels. I feel that I need a care-taker at the home—a man to watch the premises day as well as night, and make himself generally useful. You seem to have a strong arm and a stout heart, my lad. What do you say to taking the job?"

"Guess I wouldn't fancy it for a steady job," replied the lad. "But I'll do the best I can, just the same."

The big house looked gloomy as the merchant and the boy entered it. "I want you to sleep downstairs," the former said. "You can make up a bed on this broad couch in the library. Now come with me and I will show you about the house."

The boy followed the merchant as the latter lighted the gas from room to room.

"Everything seems to be in order," remarked the owner. "If they find out somebody is in the house they will leave it alone. You are not afraid to sleep here, are you?"

"No," said the boy. "I ain't. I was afraid a little while ago that I wouldn't have any place to sleep. This don't scare me a mite."

"Good," said the merchant. "You will find all the bed clothing you require in the front chamber. And, here—look at this room off the dining-room. This is where my wife has stored her choicest bric-a-brac and her fine china and linen. This is the room that burglars would seek out first of all. I've left it unlocked because if it were locked the thieves would be sure to ruin the door in an effort to get it open. There, you see what it is. Just a big closet with a ventilating slit in the outer wall instead of a window. My wife had a spring put on the door as a warning to the servants to keep it closed. It locks with a spring lock, too. Don't get caught inside it."

He paused and looked intently at the boy. "You may wonder why I trust you in this way. But I fancy I know an honest face when I see it—and, besides, you look like a friendless boy I knew a good many years ago."

"I'm not doing any wondering about that," laughed the boy, "but there is one thing I'd like to know."

"And what is that?"

"The name of the man I'm working for."

"My name is Richard Carter," said the merchant, "and this house is 71 East Monroe street."

"One more thing," said the boy, "does your trust in me go so far as a quarter in advance on my wages? I may want breakfast, you know."

"Here's a dollar and a latchkey," laughed the merchant, as he turned to go. "I sleep at the club to-night. If anything should happen ring up the police at the central station. The telephone is in the corner over there. You can use it, can't you?"

"I've seen it used," replied the boy.

"Good night."

It was midnight when the boy closed his eyes in the darkness. His improvised couch was restful and soothing one. In a moment he was fast asleep.

He awoke with a sudden start at the sound of voices close by. He lay very still and listened.

"This is a cinch, Bill," said one voice, "Nobody at home and all the time we need to work the prize. Steady with that lantern, old man."

"That's all right," said another voice. "I'm hunting for the big closet off the dining-room that the girl told us to look for. Ah, here it is."

"Good stuff," said the man who had spoken last. "Easy to find a market for it. Come on and we'll see what we want."

The boy's breath came in little gasps as he crept forward. He heard the confused murmurs of the men in closet as they disputed about the value of the plunder. He crept a little closer. He reached out to grasp the door.

A sudden turn of the lantern threw the strong rays on his white face. There was an oath, a sudden rush, and then the heavy oak door slammed shut with a crash and a sharp click.

The boy, panting a little, stood by the door for a moment or two and listened as the trapped rascals vainly threw themselves against the panels.

HE CREPT A LITTLE CLOSER.

"Guess they'll keep for awhile," he dryly muttered. "And now for that telephone." He lighted a gas jet in the library and approached the 'phone. He paused as his hand touched the receiver.

"No, dum it all, I won't," he said, as he drew back. "It would be a shame to wake up those police fellers for a little thing like this. The burglars will keep all right. I'll wait for daylight before I disturb the police."

Before he laid himself down he rapped sharply on one of the panels.

"Good night," he said.

A confused growl came from the interior.

"Don't mention it," drawled the boy.

It was ten o'clock the next morning when the merchant looked up and discovered Joshua Griscom intently regarding him.

"Mornin'," said the boy.

"Good morning," said the merchant.

"Came in to report," said the boy.

"Good," said the merchant.

"Everything's quiet," said the boy. "Swept off the porch and sidewalk, got my breakfast, and here I am."

"Good again," exclaimed the merchant. "Be on hand to-morrow with your next report. Good morning."

The boy hesitated.

"Mornin'," he said. Then he slowly added: "I've got two of 'em."

"Two what?"

"Two of them burglars pried open a window an' got in last night. They ain't much. One o' them's a little skinny feller, an' t'other one's lame an' has gray hair."

"What are you talking about?" cried the merchant.

"About your burglars," said the boy. "They are yours, you know, an' when I'd called the police and they'd come in a two-hoss wagon, I made the boss policeman give me a receipt for the fellers. Here it is."

The merchant took the paper and read it aloud:

"This is to certify that J. Griscom has placed in our hands for safekeeping two burglars in first-class condition. Signed, T. J. Dolan, sergeant."

The merchant stared at the note and then back at the boy. He put out his hand to the lad.

"Joshua," he said, "you are good stuff. There's no keepin' a boy like you down."—Cleveland Plain Dealer

SOME BEAUTY HINTS.

A Timely Little Sermon on "Epidermal Ethics; or How Not to Wash the Face."

There are three dont's involved in the first lesson in face washing: 1. Don't use a sponge. 2. Don't use a crash wash-cloth. And the third and greatest of these is: Don't use very cold water. The first because it is almost constantly wet, is full of germs insidiously poisonous to the skin. The second irritates and is not permeative enough to cleanse thoroughly. Keep your washcloth for the soles of your feet, if you must use one, for tradition's sake. Cold water shocks the skin and roughens it by closing the pores.

The face should be washed in tepid water if one is going immediately out, and at other times in water as hot as one can stand it. Hot water is stimulating and cleansing. Bathing the face in it will remove the lines from a tired woman's face as effectually as a half-hour's sleep.

Rub the face with antiseptic gauze—a fresh piece frequently—and if blackhead's exist, a fine camel's hair complexion-brush used vigorously with some pure vegetable soap every night will do a great deal toward routing them. In washing the face always rub from the chin up, from the eyes in and from the forehead toward the temples. The face should be washed with soap at night only, then rubbed with a pure cold cream or some lanoline preparation. This little attention given to the face every night is absolutely essential to a clean skin and healthy pores.

Hot milk is an excellent tonic for the face and continued application of it will render the skin as smooth and velvety as a baby's cheek. In the morning immerse the face in warm water to which have been added a few drops of benzoin. Dry the face with a soft linen towel. Don't rub. Just pat. You are not employes of a Turkish bath wielding the "crash," and the soil is not glued to your face. It will come off without taking the skin with it if you will use intelligence and hot water in persuading it.—Adele O. Lehr, in Chicago American.

MADE A BAD BREAK.

Yet Algernon Cannot Understand Why He Is No Longer Liked by the Elliott Family.

Algernon wonders why the Elliott family seems to dislike him. He has been in love with Miss Elliott for more than a year. When he first fell in love with her he decided that it would be a wise thing to "make up" to her mother. Mrs. Elliott was a comparatively young woman, whose ambition it was to appear even more youthful than she really was.

"HOW INTERESTING! AN ANTIQUE!"

When Mrs. Elliott asked Algernon to dinner one day he felt that he was really getting along. The appointment was for Wednesday of the succeeding week. Several days before the appointed time he happened to meet Mrs. Elliott on the street.

"I'm sorry," she said to him, "but little Johnny is quite ill and I'll have to ask you to postpone dining with us for a few days. I'll write and let you know."

"Don't speak of it," said Algernon, with what was intended to be elaborate politeness. "One enjoys that sort of thing so much more in anticipation, Mrs. Elliott, that this postponement will only prolong my pleasure."

A few weeks later he went to call. Miss Elliott and her mother were both in the drawing-room. The younger woman, to whom it was not easy to entertain Algernon, was exhibiting for his diversion some household treasures

"And here," she said, handing him a dog-eared copybook, "is a book which my mother used when she was at boarding school as a young girl."

"How interesting," said Algernon, with a coquettish smile at Mrs. Elliott. "How interesting! An antique!"

And Algernon can't understand yet why the Elliott family seems to dislike him.—Chicago Tribune.

A Good Stayer.

"I can tell you one thing, Maria. If Johnny is like me he will have good staying qualities, anyhow."

"He has them now, John. He'd stay in bed till noon every day if I'd let him."—Chicago Tribune.

A KLONDIKE ROMANCE.

Poor Dressmaker Seeks Fortune in the Far North and Finds It and a Husband.

Only a few years have passed since Mrs. Joseph Beck, wife of a Klondike gold king, was a poor dressmaker in San Francisco.

Early in life she married one Nowell, who died leaving her penniless with one small son. Mrs. Nowell took in sewing as a means of earning her living and worked until the fall of 1897, when she decided to seek her fortune in the gold fields.

Her friends encouraged her in the venture. So, late in the fall, Mrs. Nowall, leaving her son in good care, sailed for the gold fields.

It was a rough journey and filled with many hardships which would cause a fainter heart to weaken and turn back, but Mrs. Nowell was made of sterner stuff and traveled on undaunted toward Dawson City.

HOW THE ROMANCE BEGAN.

On her arrival at Dawson she decided to earn her living as a dressmaker, and began to apply herself to her old business in the new field. She had not been long there, however, when she heard that Joseph Beck, a wealthy mine owner, was in need of a bookkeeper. She secured the position. Entering the office, she applied the same energy that had characterized her as a dressmaker.

The eyes of Mr. Beck were not closed to all this. Her character and disposition had won his heart, and he saw in her now not only the elements which make a loving wife but those of a splendid partner. So, after a short courtship he proposed, was accepted, and the two returned to San Francisco in the fall of 1898, where they were married.

After the wedding Mr. Beck, with his wife and stepson, Walter S. Nowell, returned to Dawson, where, by judicious investments, Beck increased his fortune until to-day he is one of the richest men in the gold fields. He owned the Old Dominion claim, which he sold at a high price, and bought up claim No. 11 on Gold Run, for which he was offered $90,000. At present Mr. and Mrs. Beck own a claim neighbor to one which worked $40,000 in four days, and both expect a great income from their new "digging."

Mrs. Beck recently visited in San Francisco, returning to Dawson February 25. She took sleighs at White Horse and traveled 400 miles in the severest season of the year back to her husband and son in the capital of the gold fields.

Mrs. Beck's recent trip was for the purpose of buying a country place for herself and husband, who intends selling out in about two years and again becoming a resident of California. Mrs. Beck bought a large tract of 7,000 acres of land near Red Bluff, which will be conducted as a stock range, a large number of cattle already having been bought.

On the return of the Becks they will occupy a palatial residence in course of construction at Red Bluff.

Mrs. Beck has over $2,000 worth of gold nuggets made into necklaces and bracelets as souvenirs from the Old Dominion claim.

The San Francisco Call is authority for this narrative.

MIRROR IS DECEPTIVE.

Every Woman Who Depends Upon the Shining Glass Is a Victim of Misplaced Confidence.

One's reflection in a mirror never does one justice. Comfortable thought for the plain and pretty alike! Complexion, expression and color are all really better than the shining glass makes them appear. Let not her to whom nature has been sparing of her charms despair. If she would see herself in the deceptive mirror as others see her with the eye, or as nearly as possible, let her hasten to a draper's shop and buy a quantity of soft, pure white material—gauze, if possible; if not, swiss or india muslin will answer very well.

Be sure to have it pure white, and, after polishing the surface of the mirror, gather the material at the center of the top and bring it down softly at either side, framing the glass in folds of pure white. When this is done to artistic satisfaction, peep in and see what a transformation, suggests an exchange. The true tints of the complexion, the expression of the countenance and the eyes, the correct color of the hair will be very accurately reflected. This is one of the milliner's oldest secrets. Many of the most artful of them drape the glasses in the softest drapery of pure white. It is done with the view of giving their fair patronesses the best view of themselves possible, administering in this way a little subtle flattery.

Alcohol Spots on Tables.

If alcohol falls on a polished table pour on olive oil or any bland oil at once. Then "sop" up with a soft towel, taking care not to extend the spot

HUMOURS

Complete External and Internal Treatment

Cuticura

THE SET

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle, CUTICURA OINTMENT to instantly allay itching, irritation, and inflammation, and soothe and heal, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT to cool and cleanse the blood, and expel humour germs. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring skin, scalp, and blood humours, rashes, itchings, and irritations, with loss of hair, when the best physicians, and all other remedies fail.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Millions of Women use CUTICURA SOAP in the form of baths for annoying irritations, inflammations, and excoriations, for too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many sanative, antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women and mothers. No amount of persuasion can induce those who have once used these great skin purifiers and beautifiers to use any others. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. No other medicated soap is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the best skin and complexion soap, and the BEST toilet and baby soap in the world.

Complete External and Internal Treatment for Every Humour,

Cuticura THE SET Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humours, rashes, itchings, and irritations, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. British Depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 27 Charterhouse Sq., London, E. C. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

ENGINEER'S LICENSE. MECHANICS, ENGINEERS, FIREMEN, ELECTRICIANS, Etc.
40-page pamphlet containing questions asked by Examining Board of Engineers.
SENT FREE. GEORGE A. ZELLER, Publisher, Room 546, 18 South Fourth St., St. Louis, Mo.

THAT HATEFUL SCAR.

Story of How It Came Upon a Little Girl's Cheek and the Reformation It Wrought.

"O father, don't; please, don't. O my father?" Shaking himself loose from his daughter the intoxicated father raised his arm and brought down his clenched fist with terrible force upon his child's upturned, tear-stained face, knocking her senseless on the ground, and causing the blood in large quantity to ooze from her mouth and nose.

"There, now," he remarked, addressing his daughter, "that will teach you a lesson," and without further notice he hurried out of the house, banged the door after him, and hied him to the nearest public house to obtain more of the poison that had already inflamed and impassioned him, and which alone was responsible for the cowardly and contemptible act he had just committed.

For half an hour Mabel Williams lay in a weak and fainting condition, almost unconscious, when her mother arrived, and, to her great amazement and grief, found her 12-year-old daughter lying on the floor in an emaciated condition.

"My child, my child, what is the matter? Whose hand hath done this?" The poor mother shrieked in anguish. Then she bathed and washed her daughter's face, applied restoratives, and gently placed her on the mass of straw and rags that did duty as a bed.

In a little while Mabel returned to consciousness, and related to her mother the story of her father's terrible sin. Mrs. Williams listened with much heartburn to the story of her husband's cruelty, and secretly prayed for strength and grace to do the right.

KNOCKED HER SENSELESS ON THE FLOOR.

John Williams was a drunkard who had fallen from a good position, and now his home was a one-roomed cellar dwelling, almost barren of furniture, and a great contrast to the well-furnished villa to which 14 years ago he had taken his bride. The exodus from villa to slum life was occasioned by drink. For drink, one after another article of furniture found its way to the pawnshop, and drink alone was responsible for the degradation and squalor in which we now find him.

It had not always been so. The first six years of their wedded life had been very happy and comfortable. The birth of their only child, Mabel, was a source of great joy to her parents, and for a time all was peace and contentment, with never a thought or sign of the bitterness and sorrow that loomed in the distance. The story of Williams' downfall—which finds its counterpart daily in the lives of many people—is soon told.

John Williams was a master blacksmith in a village just outside a northern city. He was well known in the district, and his business was a good one. He also was highly respected by his neighbors, was a sober and religious man, and even held office in the little Wesleyan chapel. Some eight years before our story commences, a political club had been founded in the village, and Williams, being an ardent politician, was appointed its secretary. The committee determined upon the sale of intoxicating liquors, and Williams occasionally drank with the members. The habit grew upon him, and before it he seemed powerless. He passed quickly from an occasional to an inveterate drinker, and his downfall was quick and sure. First, he was removed from office at the little chapel, and soon after a new secretary in his stead was appointed for the club. He got behindhand with his rent, and contracted a number of debts in the town, and was eventually sold up. Then he migrated to Manchester, and amid new surroundings and company resolved and promised to reform. But he had reckoned without his host. The devil had got a firm grip of him, and as Williams stoically refused to sign the temperance pledge and give up the drink altogether, his efforts at reform were only short-lived. Now, he was too idle to work, and his wife had to go out charing in order to raise bread for herself, her child, and even him. On the occasion of our story he returned home, expecting to find his wife, and as she had not returned and Mabel had not got the tea prepared—there was no bread in the house—he commenced loudly to upbraid both Mabel and her mother. Thinking to pacify him the little one advanced towards her father, and taking hold of his hand and looking intently in his face, she said, with tears in her eyes: "Father, dear, we have no bread, and mother has not come." Poor Mabel! better not have spoken. Instead of pacifying her father, it had called forth in him rage and fury, and led him to commit the terrible crime with which our story commences.

Mrs. Williams was greatly troubled at her husband's base and cowardly attack upon their innocent child. It was the first time he had struck his daughter, and it registered another step in his drunken career. Her cup was indeed a very bitter one. Now that she had attended to the wants of her little one, she dropped upon her knees and prayed earnestly that God would make her faithful and help her to bear patiently the sorrow and shame which her husband, by his sins, was bringing upon her. The prayer issuing from that broken-hearted drunkard's wife went straight to the Mercy Seat of Jehovah, and He who answers prayers, regarded the petition of His handmaid. Then she rose from her knees, tidied the room, and took from her basket a loaf of bread which she had brought with her and prepared tea. Just as this was ready, the door opened and her husband staggered into the room.

Mrs. Williams poured some tea for her husband and handed it to him. She did not even refer to what had happened, and as he did not allude to it, not one word was said on the subject. Indeed, the meal was partaken in silence, the child lying asleep on the bed. Williams ate but little—his appetite had gone, and well it might, for he had been drinking very heavily of late—and when the meal was over he again went out. For once he had not asked his wife for money to get drink, and as he had none of his own, instead of returning to the public house he walked about the streets. By nine o'clock he returned home practically sober. Just as he entered the door, Mrs. Williams was bathing Mabel's face, and the knowledge of what he had done with lightning-like rapidity pierced his soul like a two-edged sword. The sight that greeted him was one that will live in his mind so long as his memory retains her seat. Tears glistened in the eyes of his wife, and Mabel flashed upon him a look of such tenderness and pity that he fairly quailed before her. As he gazed upon the child, her face deathly pale, minus several front teeth, her nose swollen beyond all proportion, and with a terrible scar upon her cheek which can never be erased, it completely unmanned him. Falling down before her he burst into tears, and for a long time sat with his face in his hands, sobbing like a child. His wife, seizing the opportunity, gently placed Mabel upon his knee and quietly withdrew from the room.

Twining her arms around his neck and kissing the tears from his face, Mabel said: "Don't cry, father, don't cry. It wasn't you that did it, but the nasty drink. You won't drink any more, father, will you?" John Williams pressed his child to his bosom, and with terrible anguish of mind, exclaimed: "God help me, God help me, I never thought it would come to this." He then placed her gently upon the bed and commenced pacing to and fro in the room. A great struggle was going on in his mind. Angels and devils alike watched that struggle, which lasted several minutes. At length came the decision. Stooping and kissing his child, John Williams fell upon his knees and prayed for deliverance. He begged, he pleaded, he promised; and while still praying his wife returned. A sudden bound of joy filled her soul, and, instantly kneeling beside her husband, she mingled her prayers with his. Half an hour passed, and still they prayed, and then came the victory. There was joy in the presence of the angels over one sinner that had repented. John Williams rose from his knees a changed man, and in that humble cellar dwelling that evening there was born a new creature. The foundation of a useful career was laid, and from that time to the present John Williams has "gone about doing good."

To-day he is a very busy and happy man. Prosperity has rewarded many years of hard work to regain his former position, and now he has a splendid home. His wife and daughter are very happy, and scores of men point their conversion to his earnest and manly appeal. The scar upon his daughter's face is ever an incentive to her father to work for the reclamation of drink victims, and "That Hateful Scar" has formed the theme of many an eloquent appeal which has resulted in many signing the temperance pledge.—Fred Rodger, in National Advocate.

POINTED PARAGRAPHS.

A Louisville judge says he has never seen a young criminal whose fingers were not stained yellow. This merely corroborates.—Chicago Tribune.

Cocaine sniffing is on the increase in the south among the negroes. The drug is sniffed up the nose and the results produced are somewhat the same as those obtained by smoking an opium pipe.

Hoax—"Look at the beastly condition Lushley is in. Well, well, some men are born fools!" Joax—"Yes; and some achieve foolishness, while others have a foolish thirst upon them. Lushley comes under all those heads."—Philadelphia Record.

In a public address the other day the archbishop of Canterbury remarked that only three years ago he was an "odd" man who did not indulge in intoxicating liquors, but that public opinion in England was so rapidly changing that it seemed likely that before long the "odd" man would be he who did thus indulge.

Nature No Distiller.

Five months ago the Bible Temperance association offered 100 guineas to any chemist who would before a competent committee extract a single ounce of alcohol from any quantity of grain, grapes or other vegetable substance in its organic state as produced by nature. So far no response has been received to the offer.

A LOVER'S REVENGE.

Legend of the Origin of Two Rocks in Grand Canyon.

Poetic Story Told by the Havasupai Indians of How "Those Above" Reproved the Yielding to Temptation.

[Special Arizona Letter.]

WHILE the Indian is not the emotionless, stolid, soulless individual so many people think he is, it must not be thought that he has a refinement of culture and passion possessed by those who rank as "civilized." True, he may not really be more cruel than his civilized brother or sister, but he is ruder, more simple and direct in his cruelties and vengeance.

According to the traditions of the Havasupai Indians, of Havasu canyon in northern Arizona, they have long been at enmity with the fierce and warlike Apaches, who now live in southern Arizona. In the early days of their history the Apaches and Havasupais are all said to have lived in peace in the quiet seclusion of this wonderful canyon home. The Havasu (Blue Water) flows meandering along between the willows in the tiny patches of arable land formed in the canyon, and on one side of this stream lived the Apaches and on the other the Havasupais.

One of the Havasupai young women was gifted by Those Above with great beauty, and many were the lovers she had of her own people. Though the Apache youths looked upon the beautiful maiden with eyes of delight and favor, they knew the direct commands of the gods prohibited any marriage between the two peoples. Hence their souls were filled with longing which they knew could never be satisfied, and it was no comfort to them to see and know that the Havasupai youths had a free field in which to win the dusky girl's favors. Most of them, however, were too much afraid of the anger of Those Above to dare more than lift their eyes upon the attractive maiden, but one youth, in whose heart the fire of Cupid burned with fierce ardor, resolved to dare everything, if only he might win her for his bride. Night after night would he hide in the willows by the side of the bubbling Havasu and tell it of his love to Pana-ma-hi-ta. He would climb the steep walls that shut in the small tribe, that he might overlook the "hawa" of the object of his adorations. But, alas, he could never tell her how much he loved her. The days and weeks went by, and he was driven to a fury of jealous despair, when he learned that in six more sleeps she was to marry one of the favored Havasupai suitors. In his fierce anger he climbed the cliffs and rushed hither and thither on the plateaux above. He wandered through the Kohonino forest and out into the wild wastes of the Painted desert. Even the coyotes and hawks saw something strange and amiss in him, and the gentle doves flew away in terror as he cried aloud in the anguish of his jealousy and despair. Then he wandered back to the "ruin" of the Grand canyon and went down the secret trail to Hue-tha-wa-li—the white rock mountain—and thence to the roaring river—Hack-a-tai-a—and as he stood looking on the wild, surging, swirling waters of the rapids and heard their fierce roar in his ears he shouted and yelled and shrieked in sympathy with their madness and told that he himself was torn and rent with agony at the thought that now, in two more sleeps, his adored one would be the bride of another.

THE WIG-LI-I-WA IN HAVASU CANYON.

Then, suddenly, he became supernaturally calm. A glad light came into his eyes, but a keen observer would have seen in the steely glint of them a desperate resolution, and his firmly set lips and clenched fists did not belie this appearance of firm resolve. He would dare as no man born of woman had ever before dared.

The father of the girl soon appeared and the transfer of buckskins, as the purchase price of his daughter, was duly made, and then the hunt for the maiden began. For, according to their custom, as soon as her father began the trading for her, she was secretly to steal away and hide, and all the young fellows were to hunt for her and then convey her with laughter and jest to the new home she was to occupy.

They say love lends wings to his votaries, and no eyes are so keen as those of a bridegroom. But on this occasion the Cloud People seemed to have put mist in the eyes of the bridegroom, and the Wind People must have whispered to the Apache lover, for he, and not the bridegroom, found the maiden's trail and with the speed of the wind itself followed her. She had crossed the Havasu and was hidden in the willows on the Apache side of the stream, and when her Apache adorer came up with her, she doubtless began to think, as even Indian maidens will, that she must profess an unwillingness to be taken to the arms of her lover.

Anyhow, it was easy for the Apache to persuade her to go stealthily with him around a great arm of rocky wall thrust out into the canyon, and there steal up a precarious trail, which, like a cobweb, seemed to cross the face of the cliff. When they had reached a good height he bade the maiden pause and rest, and then, darting back a few steps to a place where the trail made a dangerous zigzag, he loosened two heavy rocks which had long ago been prepared for an emergency that might arise. These rocks fell with a crash, utterly cutting off every hope and possibility of pursuit, and then, with a shrill yell of triumph, the daring Apache returned to the now frightened maiden and informed her that it was in his arms, and not in those of her Havasupai lover she was to rest that night. His yell and her echoing shriek of despair attracted the attention of the youths below, and to their surprise and anger, as they looked up, they beheld the Apache carrying away the bride of their friend, and they stood helpless to prevent it.

"To the trail!" one shouted. "Bring bows and arrows!" cried another. But they soon saw that neither was of use. The trail was blocked, and who could send an arrow into the heart of a man who held a maiden in his arms.

Suffice it to say the young Apache, with many a taunting word and shriek of defiance, slowly climbed out of the canyon, and he and the maiden disappeared, never to be seen or heard of for many a day.

Then the Apaches and the Havasupais began to argue about the matter, the former declaring that "All was fair in love and war," and the other condemning the sacrilege and disobedience to the commands of Those Above, who had directed that there should be no intermarriage. The result was words; these grew to blows, and blows to open warfare, and, at length, the Havasupais drove the Apaches out from their canyon home, and ever since there has been the most mortal hatred and enmity existent between them.

But the bereaved bridegroom cared little for anything that transpired. He wanted the woman he had lost, and even more than for his bride he longed for revenge. This was what he longed for and dreamed of, and finally resolutely set about to gain. He craftily laid his plans, changed his appearance as far as possible, taught his face new tricks of expression and compelled his voice to use new tones, and then, going off to the desert, began his hunt for his lost bride. He wandered in the forests and over the high mountains. He camped in the deep canyons and ravines, and got lost in the fearful mazes of the gorges of the Tonto Basin. Several times he was nearly captured by hostile Indian foes, and it required all his skill and craft to protect himself. Finally his search was rewarded. He found his foe. Putting on a friendly guise he wormed himself into his confidence and became his companion. After weeks of planning he got his enemy to go away into the northern desert with him. There, while the Apache was asleep, he fell upon him and bound him hand and foot. Then as his prisoner he marched him back to the canyon of the Havasu. There all the people came to gloat over his capture and the wise men were asked to devise a horrible and fearful death. They decided to take him to the steepest wall of the Grand canyon, where there is a precipice 2,000 feet high. Here, one man taking the wretched prisoner by the hair and another by the feet, he was swung to and fro over the abyss until he gave visible signs of the dread and fear he felt within, and then, with a yell, he was allowed to drop and fall, crushed out of all human semblance, upon the cruel rocks beneath.

And, said my informant, "to warn my people forever against having anything to do with the Apaches, Those Above placed upon the wall where the trail was up which the Apache went with the Havasupai man's bride, two great figures, here shown. One is of the stolen woman and the other is of the thief." These are objects of great reverence to the Havasupais, who name them the "Wig-li-i-wa," and in them they read the danger of man's yielding to the desires and lusts of the flesh and intermarrying with those forbidden.

G. WHARTON JAMES.

SETTLING A DAMAGE SUIT.

The Enterprising Lawyer Reached a Ready Compromise with the Injured Strangers.

"When I first put out my shingle," said a New Orleans lawyer to a Times-Democrat reporter, putting his heels on the desk for a little chat, "I made up my mind firmly that I would allow no opportunity to pass me by on account of diffidence. No matter where I saw a chance to improve the situation, I promised myself that I would nail it on the spot—or as near the spot as possible. Well, I was still full of this youthful and very admirable enthusiasm when something—it wasn't business—called me to Washington, and on the way up our train met with an accident. It happened just about dusk, and was not very extensive, confined, in fact, to the derailing and upsetting of one empty day coach, but, as bad luck would have it, two men were crossing the platform at the time, and both were rather painfully hurt. One had his hip sprained and received several cuts, and the other got some ugly contusions and a four-inch scalp wound. They were taken into the sleeper and made as comfortable as possible, while some of the train crew started off with the engine to get help. One could see at a glance," continued the lawyer, reflectively, "that the victims of the accident were men in well-to-do circumstances. The one with the sprained hip was middle-aged and gray and the other was considerably younger, but they both had the air of business men or upper class employes. Sitting near by in the sleeper, it suddenly flashed into my mind that here was the chance of my life to get solid with a big corporation. I remembered, as by inspiration, a story I had once read of a young station agent who was one of the first people at a great railroad wreck and who had gone immediately among the injured and secured written agreements of compromise from all of them at cut rates. He acted solely on his own responsibility, but he saved the road so much money that he was made receiver or sixteenth vice president or something else equally good and fat, and lived happily ever after. Providence seemed to have chucked a similar opportunity on a small scale at my own head. Here were two well dressed men injured plenty for jury purposes! As soon as they reached town damage suit shysters would undoubtedly take them in hand, and the road would have a couple of mighty dangerous actions to defend. Suppose I nipped the thing in the bud by securing a favorable agreement to compromise!

"I had to admit," the lawyer went on, "that it seemed pretty nervy to tackle the sufferers before their wounds were dressed, but I remembered my resolution, dashed off a brief agreement in blank in my notebook and walked over to where they were lying. 'Excuse me, sir,' I said to the elder man, 'I know you are in pain and I am going to waste no words, but come straight to the point. Such mishaps as yours usually mean damage suits, with endless litigation, in which the lawyers get all the money. How would you like to avoid all that, right now, by agreeing on a mutually satisfactory figure of compromise?' As I made my talk both men stared at me in evident amazement, but that gave me no surprise, for my proposition was certainly unusual. 'Are you authorized to make us this offer?' said the middle-aged man, finally. 'Well—er—yes,' I replied, giving my conscience a severe wrench; 'any terms you make with me will be ratified.' He reflected a few moments and then turned to his companion. 'What d'y' think about it?' he asked. 'I don't feel very vindictive; do you?' 'No,' replied the young man, 'I'm not especially hostile. I'd settle for considerably less than the bonded indebtedness.' 'Suppose you mention a figure?' said I, blandly. 'All right,' replied the older man; 'what do you think of $15 and a new suit of clothes?' I could hardly believe my ears, because I had expected him to demand $500 at the very least, and, needless to say, I snapped at the proposition. 'I think I can assure you positively,' said I, 'that your offer will be accepted and carried out as soon as it reaches the general offices. Kindly sign this agreement and I'll forward it at once.' He put his signature at the foot of my penciled memoranda, and I turned to the younger man. 'Oh, well,' said he, anticipating my question, 'I don't want to be hoggish about this thing. If agreeable to you, just put me down for the same—$15 and a suit of clothes; nothing ready-made, by the way, but a good, ordinary business suit.' 'You shall have it!' I assured him, overjoyed at the extraordinary success of my play, and he also signed the agreement. Then I slipped away, so they wouldn't have a chance to make other conditions, and waited anxiously for the relief train. It arrived in a couple of hours, and with it was the division superintendent. I rushed up the track to meet him. 'I want to notify you to pay no attention to damage suit lawyers when we get to town,' I exclaimed, excitedly, 'because I have already secured an agreement from both men to settle for $15 and a suit of clothes!' 'The dickens you have!' he bellowed; 'why, you confounded gibbering idiot, that's our new general manager and his secretary!'"

Sure Signs of Style.

Hanrahan—Maggy, an' phwin yez go shoppin' buy me a toothbrush fer me teeth.

His Wife—Shure, Moike, yez do be gittin' a regular dude.—Judge.

Either a Deadly Insult.

"How that woman glared at you."

"Yes; I've either bowed to her when I don't know her, or else I know her and haven't bowed to her."—Stray Stories.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

The largest city park in the United States is that of Philadelphia—Fairmount park—which contains 2,791 acres.

The most expensive chair in existence belongs to the pope. It is made of solid silver and cost $90,000. An American banker presented it to the pontiff.

Read in round figures, 200 through passenger trains come into the six passenger stations of Chicago every day, leaving 40,000 strangers in the city.

A statistician has discovered that the average business walk in New York is a mile in 20 minutes, and the church-going walk a mile in 25 minutes. The fastest walk is that of the homeward-bound Brooklynites, a mile in 18 minutes.

Traveling by coach has, indeed, been facilitated, now that it is possible for an American going to Europe to order six months in advance the coach with which he wishes to travel between two different points in his journey. The organization of an international coaching company has recently made that possible.

A "cold light" has been produced by a woman, Mme. Currie, of the Municipal School of Physics, Paris. It is called radium and is due to the action of certain salts on uranium salts. When treated the substance becomes permanently luminous, without heat. Placed in gunpowder it creates a glow, but there is no explosion.

A new metal composition has been made that is proving very valuable in the manufacture of bicycles, automobiles and carriages. It is known as partinium, and is composed of wolframium and aluminum. It is said that the addition of wolframiam to aluminum greatly strengthens the latter metal without increasing its weight. It is a French discovery, and is principally used in that country.

DICTATES OF FASHION.

Latest Items on Woman's Dress for the Summer Days—A Stunning Wrap.

A pale fawn cashmere has the bodice laced across with pale blue ribbon and the white fichu fastened with a bunch of forget-me-nots, says the Chicago Daily News.

For a summer sensation we are promised muslin gowns painted in fresco, "modern art style." Soft pastel shades are used in these paintings and metallic tints, recalling the pottery de Juan.

Hemstitching has by no means worn its welcome out. A number of brides have ordered their lingerie trimmed only with the sheerest hemstitched frills and the new driving veil is made of very crisp, clear silk muslin with a deep hemstitched border.

Summer toilets show one feature of unanimity and that is in respect to the flounce. This is arranged to drop low in front, even if it rises at the sides so as to be high in the back. The drop in front helps to preserve the fiction that all women are tall. The shaped flounce is extremely popular this spring. It is often quite deep in the back and tapers away to extreme narrowness at the sides of the front gore. The flounce rarely crosses the front panel of the skirt.

Dame Fashion's latest cry is dress and coat trimming made of ordinary twine, not the lacelike macrame of former days, but rough kitchen string netted or knotted. This new garniture is frequently studded with gems and is consequently made as costly as any delicate silk or embroidered passementerie. A mixture of quite common garniture with expensive garnishings has now captured the fickle fancy of the Parisienne for a time. Expensive simplicity is the password of the season and the knowledge that only the initiated appreciate it at its full value adds to its charm.

One of the most stunning things in wraps that have been seen is of white cloth, heavy and long. It encircles the figure and has one end, which is thrown over the shoulder. Being heavy, the wrap hangs beautifully, but the most attractive part of the garment, or the noticeable feature which makes it attractive, is a sort of Indian decoration on the inside; it suggests immediately Indian work. There is a band of pale blue on the edge encircling the wrap and also of cloth; combined with this is a line of bright yellow and one of black. In the corners of the wrap the cloth in the colors is carried into sharp points or rays.

Visible Asset.

"You people down here spent $5,000 boring a hole in the ground for coal, didn't you?" asked the passenger who was walking up and down the station platform to stretch his legs while the engine was taking in a feed of coal and water.

"Yes, sir," returned the hump-shouldered native sitting on a nail-keg. "That's about the size of it."

"And what have you got to show for it?"

"Well, mister," said the native, taking a fresh chew of Missouri plug, "we've still got the hole."—Chicago Tribune.

Just So.

Mrs. Hoon—Why are people who get married often called the "contracting parties?"

Mr. Hoon—I don't know about the bride, but think how small the groom usually looks!—Puck.

His Discouraging View.

He—A man should marry a woman of about his own age.

She—You—a—really think so?

"Yes; but he ought to do it when he's young or not at all."—Puck.

Cattle Killed by Lightning.

During the severe storm of Friday night lightning struck a tree on the farm of ex-County Treasurer Mahlon Glotfelty, near McHenry, under which six three year old fat cattle were standing. Every animal was killed, involving a loss of $250 to $300.

Religious Services.

Mr. C. S. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., editor of Zion's Watch Tower and author of Millenial Dawn series, etc., will preach in the opera house, Oakland, on Sunday, Aug. 11, at 2.30 p. m. Subject, "The Resurrection;" text, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear his (Jesus) voice, and shall come forth—they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation. John 5: 28, 29.

This is a rare chance to hear one of the great Bible students of our times. Come and hear him. Seats free. No collection. All are welcome.

Also meetings at Weber's Floral Park on Saturday, Aug. 10, morning, afternoon and evening, and on Sunday at 8.30 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. A number of able speakers will be present and you are cordially invited to attend.

It Saved His Baby.

"My baby was terribly sick with the diarrhoea, we were unable to cure him with the doctor's assistance, and as a last resort we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mr. J. H. Doak, of Williams, Ore. "I am happy to say it gave immediate relief and a complete cure." For sale by all druggists.

Estray Notice.

Strayed, early the present spring, five ewes, four being yearlings and one older. The sheep each had the top of one ear off and also an undercrop. Information leading to their recovery will be rewarded by the undersigned.

I offer for sale my farm of 146 acres near the Bowers place. The improvements consist of 35 acres cleared, good house, barn and two orchards. Well watered. L. W. Clark, Oakland, Md.

Crook Crest for Sale.

The undersigned offers all that beautiful summer home, known as Crook Crest, adjoining the town of Oakland, at private sale, and which will be sold on very reasonable terms. There are about thirty acres of land to go with this property, which is in a high state of cultivation and is surrounded with a splendid orchard, large shade trees and many other attractions. Possession will be given immediately if desired.

For terms apply to Capt. Matthew Markland at Crook Crest, or G. S. Hamill, Agent, Oakland, Md. 20 3

Money to Loan.

$4,000 to loan on first mortgage in n sums to suit upon town property or nearby farms.

EDWARD H. SINCELL.

The laws of health require that the bowels move once each day and one of the penalties for violating this law is piles. Keep your bowels regular by taking a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets when necessary and you will never have that severe punishment inflicted upon you. Price, 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

Heptasophs can hear something to their advantage by sending name and address. C. Heyer, 38 South St, Baltimore, Md. 4t*

NO. 5623.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF OAKLAND, AT OAKLAND, IN THE STATE OF MARYLAND, AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, JULY 15, 1901:

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$96,062 13
U. S. Bonds to secure circulation	27,200 00
Premiums on U. S. Bonds	799 50
Stocks, securities, etc.	5,980 00
Banking house, furniture and fixtures		6,365 54
Due from National Banks (not Reserve Agents)		2,977 98
Due from State Banks and Bankers		174 99
Due from approved reserve agents	10,738 29
Internal-Revenue stamps	105 51
Checks and other cash items	313 00
Notes of other National Banks	390 00
Fractional paper currency, nickels and cents	47 84
Lawful Money Reserve in Bank, viz:
Specie	4,819 90
Legal-Tender notes	3,000 00	7,819 90
Redemption fund with U. S. Treasurer (5 per cent. of circulation)		1,260 00
Total		$130,204 68

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in		$ 32,000 00
Surplus Fund		1,000 00
Undivided Profits, less expenses and taxes paid		152 71
National Bank notes outstanding		25,200 00
Due to other National Banks		148 20
Individual Deposits subject to check		42,067 99
Time certificates of deposit		29,578 10
Cashier's checks outstanding		57 68
Total		$130,204 68

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss:

I, R. E. Sliger, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

R. E. SLIGER, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 25th day of July, 1901.

JOHN FELTY, JR., Notary Public.

CORRECT—Attest: F. A. THAYER, ED. A. BROWNING, E. E. SOLLARS, Directors.

What it Cures

COUGHS. BRONCHITIS, RAWNESS,
COLDS, LOSS OF VOICE, SORENESS
HOARSENESS, LARYNGITIS, TICKLING.

PINE AND TERPIN COUGH SYRUP

Is the new remedy that is astounding the medical world with the rapidity and permanency of its cures—it never fails—one dose relieves while a few more cures—price, 25 cents a bottle.

LOGAN DRUG COMPANY,
At all Druggists. WHEELING, W. VA.

A Minister's Good Work.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and he said 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured. I think it is the best medicine I have ever tried." For sale by all druggists.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

If you have a baby in the house you will wish to know the best way to check any unusual looseness of the bowels, or diarrhoea so common to small children. O. P. M. Holliday, of Daming, Ind., who has an eleven months' old child, says: "Through the months of June and July our baby was teething and took a running off of the bowels and sickness of the stomach. His bowels would move from five to eight times a day. I had a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in the house and gave him four drops in a teaspoonful of water and he got better at once." For sale by all druggists.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

Notice.

I beg to announce to the citizens of Garrett county that I have returned to Oakland to locate permanently to practice law, after an absence of several years, during which time I have been engaged in the practice of law in Washington, D. C. I solicit the patronage of clients of the late firm of Veitch & Townshend and that of other citizens as well.

Prompt attention will be given to all business placed in my care.

Offices in the McComas building, Oakland, Md.

PERCY H. VEITCH, Attorney at Law.
15 6t

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad. Battlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

AUDITOR'S NOTICE.

Lorilla F. Bullard vs. Minnie Hinebaugh et al.

No. 1047 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County.

Under and by virtue of an order of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, dated the 27th day of July, 1901, notice is hereby given to the creditors of Elizabeth Phillips, deceased, to file their claims, duly authenticated, with the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county in the above entitled cause, on or before the 16th day of August, 1901, as I will on that day proceed to state an account distributing the funds in the hands of Gilmor S. Hamill, trustee.

EDWARD H. SINCELL, Auditor.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the road prayed to be changed, known as the White and King road, and examine whether the said changed road should be located, will meet on the 15th day of July, 1901, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said changed location of said White and King road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

WILLIAM WHITE,
J. B. MEESE,
CHARLES THOMPSON,
Examiners.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS FOR GARRETT COUNTY.

OAKLAND, MD., July 8, 1901.

Chaddie Hager, appointed Democratic Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 29, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead James Bower is hereby appointed, to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

On Jellies
preserves and pickles, spread a thin coating of refined
PARAFFINE WAX
Will keep them absolutely moisture and acid proof. Paraffine Wax is also useful in a dozen other ways about the house. Full directions in each pound package.
Sold everywhere.
STANDARD OIL CO.

Turnbull's
China and Japan Mattings, all weaves and colorings.
Porch and Lawn Furniture,
Iron and Brass Bedsteads,
Linoleums and Oil Cloths,
Carpetings.
JOHN TURNBULL, JR., & COMPANY,
16, 18, 20 West Baltimore Street,
BALTIMORE

The Quaker Bath Cabinet.

Open—Ready For Use.

A 16-page descriptive catalogue sent free upon request. AGENTS WANTED. Write for terms. Address all letters to QUEEN CITY NOVELTY CO.,
General Agents, OAKLAND, MD.

CONSTIPATION CURED!
Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.
Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.
OUR NATIVE HERBS cures Constipation quietly and permanently.
No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.
A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.
A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.
A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

The Garrett County Bank
OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:
DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank
OF OAKLAND, MD.
Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.
WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE SECOND NATIONAL BANK of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital	$100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits	250,000
Liability of Shareholders	100,000
Additional Security to Depositors	$450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:
Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart,
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

The Wilkes Stallion

EMPEROR WILKES
TIME, 2.28.

Will stand at the stables of the undersigned in Oakland on the following terms:

$10 to Insure a Mare With Foal.

Money to be paid when mare is known to be with foal. Persons parting with a mare or fails to attend forfeits insurance money. A lien will be retained on the colt until insurance is paid. We will not be responsible for accidents should any occur, but the best of care to prevent such will be exerted.

This horse has a record of 2.34. On a trial he trotted a mile in 2.28. He is a full brother of WILL KERR, 2.07¼, Champion Green Harness Horse of the World, and also of VINETTE, 2.09¼.

EMPEROR WILKES is a dark bay stallion, snip on nose, black points, height 15¾ hands. He was bred by Thompson & Bro., Cynthiana, Ky. He comes from the best trotting family of horses in this country and has a bright future. He is the sire of the fastest colts in Garrett county and is without doubt the best bred stallion and the fastest trotting animal in Western Maryland.

M. MARONEY & SON.

I HAVE PURCHASED
THE OAKLAND COAL YARD
of Mr. D. L. Conneway and will continue the business. I will keep constantly on hand a large supply of
HARD AND SOFT
COAL,
KINDLING WOOD, Etc.

All orders will receive prompt attention. Leave orders with the weighmaster or at my residence, the Giessman Hotel.

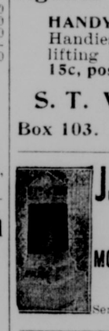
35-2 GEO. GIESSMAN

Oakland Pharmacy
JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.
Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars Cameras and Photo Supplies

TO CURE LAGRIPPE IN TWO DAY
Take LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE TABLETS. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. GROVE'S signature on every box. 25c.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for
ONLY 50 CENTS.
Agents Wanted.
HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER.
Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.
S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.



J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.
Cheapest place to buy
MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING
Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the ullest extent of the law.

Call on or address:
C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.
Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

133⅓ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale.

House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187⅞ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26⅜ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swauger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to
JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent,
OAKLAND, MD

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,
Office 7 North Liberty St.
CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL, ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—Opera House,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER, ATTORNEY AT LAW, OAKLAND, MD
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL, ATTORNEY AT LAW AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. je14-1y

JULIUS C. RENNINGER, ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL, ATTORNEY AT LAW, OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 10 6

DR. R. F. BARTLETT, DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST, Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice, OAKLAND, MD.
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

DR. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

DR. W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE, PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 16-99

DR. W. H. McCOMAS, M. D., PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON, OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to 9 p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY, RESIDENT DENTIST, SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county, Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 6 22 6m

E. J. FRANTZ, LICENSED AUCTIONEER, Residence and P. O. Address, SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J. HARNE, AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md.
Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN, SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER, LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by anerold barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26t*

JONAS C. BEACHY, LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate.
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON, PRACTICAL SURVEYOR, OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties, Plats, descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42	A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.35	A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01	A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52	P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07	P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50	A. M
No. 2—Daily	6.52	A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41	P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12	P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35	P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37	A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager.
D. B. MARTIN, Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO. IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3 P. M.	SOUTHWARD No. 1 A. M.	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2 NOON	NORTHWARD No. 4 P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. Junc.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05	3 05
6 31	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 59	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 43	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 39
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON			P. M.
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv*7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
M. P.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.		A. M.	A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager. G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1901. NUMBER 22.

ANTI-GORMAN THE ISSUE.

Republican State Convention Arraigns the Democratic Leader and Raisin, His Chief.

Herman S. Platt Nominated For Comptroller and Thomas Parran For Clerk of the Court of Appeals—Colonel Geo. A. Pearre Presided—Text of Platform.

Anti-Gorman and anti-Rasin were the keynotes at the Republican State Convention which met at Ford's Opera House in Baltimore Tuesday, and nominated Mr. Herman S. Platt for State Comptroller and Mr. Thomas Parran for Clerk of the Court of Appeals. Chairman Goldsborough started the ball rolling in his opening speech, and the platform, when adopted, clinched the fight as the issue of the campaign. The heavy rains during the forenoon dampened the clothes but not the ardor of the delegates. Across the first balcony was spread a banner incribed "Prosperity Universal," while large banner pictures of McKinley and Roosevelt were suspended from the third tier boxes on each side of the house. Farson's orchestra played popular airs before the convention met and during the lulls.

Mr. Goldsborough spoke in sonorous tones in calling the convention together at 12.30 o'clock. After he had finished his speech he called for nominations for temporary chairman and Mr. Ashley M. Gould, of Montgomery county, placed in nomination Congressman George A. Pearre, of Allegany, who was escorted to the stage by Mr. Gould, Congressman William B. Baker and Dr. Washington G. Tuck, of Anne Arundel. Mr. Charles H. Linville, of Baltimore city, was named as temporary secretary. Credentials of the various counties were turned in and the counties then named their representatives on the committees on resolutions and credentials.

The convention at 1.15 o'clock took a recess for half an hour while the committees retired. Ex-Senator David E. Dick represented Allegany and Dr. J. W. Laughlin Garrett county on the credentials committee, and C. H. Holtzman, Allegany, and U. G. Palmer, Garrett, on the resolutions committee.

The convention reassembled shortly after 2 o'clock. Mr. Adrain Posey, of Charles county, chairman of the committee on credentials, reported that there were no contests, either in Baltimore city or throughout the counties, and recommended that the temporary officers be made permanent. This was unanimously agreed to.

Mr. Ashley M. Gould, the chairman of the committee on resolutions, made the report of that committee.

The reading of the party platform was liberally applauded. At one stage a delegate from Howard county interrupted to propose three cheers for the American flag.

The platform is probably the best ever enunciated by any party in Maryland, and in brief is as follows:

After a strong eulogy of the administration of President McKinley it says regarding State affairs: After a generation of fraud and violence at the polls, Republicans gave our people peaceful, fair and free elections, reassessed property and equalized the burden of taxation; in ease of the laborer and farmer, assessed sixty millions additional stock and bonds; gave free school books to our children; gave Baltimore a modern city charter; refunded the public debt at lower interest and so reduced the debt that it would have been wiped out in four more years of Republican rule.

The Republican party compelled officials of the Gorman-Raisin administration to disgorge public moneys, and collected public dues from long-exempted corporations. Republicans first gave, in counties and cities, minority representation in the administration of our schools. In four years a Republican State administration redeemed every pledge whereupon it was elected.

In two years the present Democratic administration has broken every pledge whereby Democracy regained power. It promised to pass the laws to repress the great and growing evil of trusts. The Democratic legislature defeated a bill to redeem this pledge, which the Democratic convention was ashamed even to repeat in this year's platform. It pledged a non-partisan administration of the police department of Baltimore and to emancipate the force from partisan control. Instead, the administration of the police law is a sham and a fraud. It pledged reduction of State taxes, yet in the regular session the legislature was extravagant and corrupt beyond precedent, and in extraordinary session wasted money on a partisan census, useless to the State, but valuable to the Democratic campaign workers, at the tax payers' expense perpetrated a most unfair gerrymander of Baltimore city districts and made itself infamous by its unconstitutional disfranchising election law.

It twice defeated the corrupt practices act which it promised to enact. It promised a non-partisan administration of the public schools, and yet promptly so empowered a partisan governor that he forthwith turned out non-partisan boards and put the public schools in every county upon a political basis.

The Republican party which redeemed all its pledges to the people of our State, now gives these new promises, which it will assuredly perform.

In the words of our own declaration of rights, we reaffirm that "the right of the people to participate in the legislature is the best security of liberty and the foundation of all free government. * * * And every male citizen having the qualifications prescribed by the constitution ought to have the right of ruffrage." Therefore a Republican legislature will repeal our unconstitutional election law and enact the bill prepared by the same association that formulated the election law of 1896, and restore manhood suffrage in Maryland.

It will enact the corrupt practices bill prepared by the same organization, and thereby decrease or prevent the bribery of voters.

It will take out of politics the police of Baltimore city, secure appointments by the merit system, and put an end to promotions and dismissals for political reasons. It will pass a new police bill prepared by the same organization.

It will regulate primary elections. It will adopt a compulsory primary election law, and make the primaries as fair as it has made our general elections.

It will bring the local control of the schools in the counties near to the school districts, and yet remove it further from partisan politics.

It never legislates in reckless disregard of business interests, but it is ready by law to curb and defeat organized trusts which stifle competition in trade and to suppress all combinations which create a monopoly. It passed the only Federal laws against trusts, and in this State will handle these problems with conservatism and courage.

In regard to ex-Senator Gorman it says: We appeal to all good citizens to unite in defeating the selfish political bosses in their conspiracy, begun with the extra session, to perpetuate themselves and their methods, by one-sided elections, and to thwart the first purpose of that conspiracy by defeating the election to the United States Senate of the Democratic leader who dictated the disfranchising election law to a servile assembly. Their victory would again fasten upon our State the reign of corruption and violence overthrown in 1895, and enable them to entrench themselves for a generation behind a far worse disfranchising election law than the un-American law we are pledged to repeal.

If we succeed, we will defeat the election to the United States Senate of a man whose views on tariff and finance fluctuate with political exigencies, who is stable only in unvarying control of the Democratic party machine. If we succeed, we will forever destroy the power of that Democratic city boss, who, beyond the average span of human life, has tolled legislation and controlled Baltimore politics for revenue only.

The Number Increases.

At the Oakland Hotel on Sunday night the names of 314 guests appeared on the register. At the Deer Park Hotel, six miles east of Oakland, which is operated by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, there were 210 guests. This indicates that a prosperous season is being enjoyed by all the summer resorts on this mountain top. The number here and at all other towns in this community is being augmented by new arrivals on every train. Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn Heights are also entertaining a great many people. The hotel people at Mountain Lake Park especially are being taxed to their utmost to provide accommodations for strangers within her gates.

A lame shoulder is usually caused by rheumatism of the muscles, and may be cured by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. For sale by all druggists.

'TWAS SCHLEY'S VICTORY

Says One Who Stood on the Deck of the Brooklyn and Saw the Fight.

In connection with the controversy over Admiral Schley's actions during the naval battle off Santiago, opened afresh by the charges of cowardice made by Maclay, author of the Naval Academy text book, and the consequent demand of Admiral Schley for a court of inquiry to investigate his conduct of the Santiago naval conflict, the Cincinnati Enquirer asked George E. Graham to furnish an unbiased account of the battle. During the Santiago naval campaign Mr. Graham was correspondent of the Associated Press, noted for its impartiality and faithfulness in giving the facts. When Admiral Sampson, on the New York, left the squadron Mr. Graham hastened to the Brooklyn. During the battle he stood on the bridge beside Captain Cook and Admiral Schley, and was the only civilian spectator to witness every movement and know every order issued by the admiral. His account of the battle and the preceding and consequent events sent the Associated Press were widely distributed at the time and were not questioned. Mr. Graham's version is as follows:

"It has been and is still hard for me to believe that Historian Maclay wrote his attack upon Rear Admiral Schley except by instigation and at the urging of the navy department clique. He is in close touch with those who have provided the press and the civilian head of the department with the material that has been intended, dire failure as it has been, to change the public view of Admiral Schley's character as an officer and man.

"At least Maclay is honest in one thing. He has dared to do openly what these sneaks of the naval clique have not had the moral courage to do. When has Captain Chadwick, Sampson's flag officer, dared to assert that Schley was a coward? When has he dared to do otherwise than convey the material to a New York journal for publication? Did Robley Evans, he of the fighting cognomen, first person the autobiography he wrote? Did Sigsbee dare to do it except to stultify himself by denying conditions which he had previously detailed in his reports to the department?

Maclay, it is asserted, wrote his criticism from naval reports. What naval reports? The expurgated things that have been foisted upon the public, or the real reports of commanding officers? I have in my possession the report of the battle of Santiago written by two officers of the converted yacht called the Vixen. It is signed by Lieutenant Alexander Sharpe and it was his account of the fight as he saw it at short range, the only naval eyewitness not engaged in fighting. I placed it alongside the navy department's book purporting to print it, and I find it has been expurgated so as to give but little credit to the Brooklyn, and so as not to disclose the real position of Sampson's ship, the New York. Is that the way history is made, and is Maclay to be blessed for boldly following the example set him? Let me be as bold as Maclay. If 'coward' is to be the word let us draw the line sharply. I have supreme confidence in our navy. I don't believe a coward would stay in it a year. There are none in it now. There are men with unearned fighting sobriquets. There was one with us. His name was Evans. His ship was never closer to the enemy than one mile. It was not hit, but "Fighting Bob" crawled into the conning tower and watched the fight from a six-inch by one-inch slit.

"Schley was on the deck of the Brooklyn, Captain Cook was near. A man's life blood splashed their clothes. The ship quivered under fire. Still they stood there. Captain Clark, on the Oregon, was on his bridge. Captain Phillips, of the Texas, stayed on his bridge until part of it was shot away. And when it was over Evans had the largest story to tell, a story he would not like to see now because of its great inaccuracy. And pray who was the coward?

"The history of the battle of Santiago told exactly as it occurred, it seems to me, is an absolute condemnation of Admiral Sampson's vaunted ability and a tribute to Schley and his officers. The happenings of the 24 hours preceding the battle will go far, I think, to demonstrate that Sampson was reprehensible for deliberately weakening the line of battle and deserting the line himself when he knew that for the first time in several weeks, or since the establishment of the blockade, extremely suspicious movements were going on the harbor.

"On the afternoon of July 2 it was noticed from all the ships that movements were occurring in the harbor, there being visible distinct columns of smoke, conceded by practical men to be from warships.

"That Sampson himself recognized this is evident from the fact that he sent the Vixen around to the different ships of the squadron to announce to them that he considered the movements inside to be suspicious, and that he desired a close watch kept.

"The next morning at daybreak the columns of smoke were seen again, and it was noticed by the officer on watch on the Brooklyn that they were nearer the entrance, and it was therefore surprising to everybody when, acting under orders, the Massachusetts, one of the heaviest battleships of the line, and the Newark, a protected cruiser, carrying Commodore Watson's flag, left the line for Guantanamo for coal.

"But decidedly more surprising were the future events. At 9 o'clock, while Captain Phillip and Admiral Schley were discussing the suspicious movements, through the medium of signal flags Sampson suddenly signalled 'Disregard the movements of the commander-in-chief,' and moved away from the line with the New York. The New York was the only other ship, besides the Brooklyn, in the line with the accredited speed of the Spanish ships, and there were present the Gloucester and the Vixen, two converted yachts, either one of which would have made a special dispatch boat, without weakening the line. When the battle call was sounded Admiral Schley made the signal, 'The enemy is escaping,' and then, determining that the New York was out of sight, made the signal, 'Ships close in.'

"With a good, strong pair of field glasses, and standing upon the exceptionally high bridge of the Brooklyn, I looked for Sampson and the New York, but he was out of sight. We never saw him again until one long hour after the surrender of the Colon.

"It is claimed that the Brooklyn ran from the enemy during the fight, and in that movement Schley displayed cowardice. At the outset let me say that the movement of the ship showed the greatest good judgment, and probably saved the cruiser from being sunk or disabled. When the enemy was sighted coming out the Brooklyn moved straight for the entrance at the rate of about seven knots an hour and continually increasing her speed.

"The ships of the enemy were moving out toward us at the rate of about 11 knots an hour, and the distance to traverse was only five miles. We had opened fire with our port battery, the guns being trained almost directly forward. The turning circle of the Brooklyn is 1,000 yards, and if we had turned in toward the shore that would have allowed the Vizcaya to have gone between us and the Texas, and would have opened our unprotected side to the concentrated fire of the Spanish vessels, and also have intercepted the fire of our own ships. I stood on the top of the forward 8-inch turret looking directly over the bow, and I know that we were never near enough to the Texas to hurt her, and we did not block her fire for an instant.

"If Captain Phillip backed his engines when he saw us turning it was because through the smoke he could not quite tell how we were moving, and he knew that he had to follow the motions of our ship and not do as he pleased. The flagship always has the right of way. Up to the time we turned we had been hit only twice. After we turned we were hit 27 times by projectiles and 15 times by flying pieces, and after we turned we left the marks of 5-inch shells upon every Spanish ship.

"To those who criticise Schley's turn, on the ground of cowardice, I commend the statement of Captain Eulate, of the Vizcaya: 'If the Brooklyn had not made that beautiful maneuver in turning I could have rammed and sunk her.'

"To those who criticise upon the ground that the Texas was stopped for a minute or so, let me say that a little later the Oregon crossed the bow of the Texas and blanked her fire for 10 minutes, but certainly no one will say that the Oregon, in view of her splendid fight and chase, was not justified.

"When the battle was over Schley thanked his men and signaled his thanks to every man under him. When Sampson arrived he offered no congratulations to any man or officer, although he did condescend to offer congratulations to the public for the splendid manner in which the fight that he did not take part in was conducted.

"Let me close with, perhaps, a new statement. The men who are responsible for these vicious attacks are Captain F. E. Chadwick, who commanded the New York the day of the fight she failed to get in; Rear Admiral Robley D. Evans, the only captain the fight who hid in the conning tower; Rear Admiral Crowninshield, of the bureau of navigation, and indirectly because he dare not come in the open; Rear Admiral William P. Sampson, who should be court-martialed for his action before Santiago July 2, 1898, in weakening our battle line."

Communicated.

To the Voters of Garrett County.

It is amusing to listen to some of the ghost hunters who here and there have bobbed up since the convention, for such must be the object of their search as it seems to have no definite form or shape. But if the pursuers and those who might through sport join them in the hunt should suddenly be confronted by the object of their search they would cower before it like the Witch of Endor when she was permitted to call up the spirit of Samuel the Prophet. The object, if found, would be hideous and frightful.

Nothing is independent except that which is capable of adopting itself to all circumstances and conditions arising and in no other condition in this life is there absolute independence, and a solution of the problem may be found by nominating your adjustable politicians and guaranteeing them your hearty support. Let us suppose they are elected, dependent upon no one, independent of all partisan taint, they dare not ask a member of either party to support a measure for anything; they must stand alone exposed to the storm of voluminous wrath or become tools applicable to the use of either party in emergencies and dangerous to our own interests when the occasions are whetted to a keen edge by a little financial oil.

No, gentlemen, this is not the way out of difficulty. I admit that it may become a future alternative for the common people to unite in one general move for reform, but this is neither the time nor course to be pursued. We must stand by our own present nominees and should give them the largest vote ever polled in our county so that when a rebuke is necessary it can be soundly administered. So let us give them our heartiest support and let them feel that they are a part of our social and christian system and of our number who pledge our lives for our liberties. And while the offices to be filled were not enough to go around or represent each district, the personnel of the ticket is without doubt equal to any previous ticket in our county and reflects great credit upon the delegates who nominated it, and we are certainly fortunate in the nomination of our representative ticket, of whom Hons. Ravenscroft and Finzel have large parliamentary experience and knowledge of the work done during their previous terms, much of which the people of Garrett county and the State of Maryland who prize the liberties bequeathed by their ancestors and the rights guaranteed to American citizens under the constitution of the United States, desire to have repealed, especially that part which disfranchises between forty and fifty thousand voters, thousands of whom are large tax payers, honest, enterprising and possessed of high mental faculty, whose past ability to vote intelligently has never before been questioned or thought dangerous to the interests and well being of the public. A large number also are old soldiers whose ability to read and write was not questioned when they presented themselves to the recruiting officer but were accepted, went to the front, discharged their whole duty, came home, settled down to honest toil in the different routines of life and whose steadfast, moral and christian habits and lives have been one of the strong mediums in the preservation of law and order. These any many other fully as worthy citizens of Maryland are by this notorious law placed on a lower level than the pardoned felon who can read or the mental imbecile. Young men of both political parties, this reckless thrust at the honor and integrity of your fathers reflects on you, notwithstanding the fact that they have given you all the educational advantages of the day, and the gravity of the situation will grow wider as the truth dawns clearer on the minds of the ambitious young men and youths of this proud and boasted old home and herald of Jeffersonian Democracy. And this law if allowed to exist will yet at no distant day be a menace to civil government and the moral institutions of Maryland.

Hon. Robert A. Ravenscroft, in his speech in the Senate at the extra session in his effort to stay the passage or modify the effect of the bill, most forcibly elaborated on its baneful influence upon society, the disgrace to disfranchised men and the stigma permanently fastened on their offspring, and especially of disfranchising the soldiers who saved and handed the old State back into the glorious union of states, with her freedom and liberties untarnished until this act in the beginning of the 20th century robbed her of one of her most prized and precious jewels; and no grave faults are chargeable to the Doctor as far as I am able to learn from the records of his public acts that I have been able to see. No Senator or Legislator from Garrett county has made greater efforts and accomplished more than he has and no man in Garrett county today is better able to secure the needed legislation than the Doctor. And in order to lend impetus to his efforts and labors let us give him the largest Republican vote at the November election that has ever been polled, and with a wall like a Garrett Republican majority for our honorable Senator to lean, coupled with his intuition and executive ability, we may reasonably expect a proud record of his work; and with Hon. P. E. Finzel, who exhibited a considerable amount of tact and ability in his single term and the extra session, together with Mr. Charlss A. Ashby, we will be represented by a trio whose combined force must and will be potent for good.

More anon.

Respectfully,
S. E. FLOWERS, SR.

Mt. Lake Park, Aug. 2.

The Republican Ticket vs. the Democrats.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Will you please find room in your columns for a few thoughts on the present political situation in Garrett county.

The Republican nominating convention met with full delegations present from every district who presented their candidates for the various offices and from the various names thus presented a full ticket was placed before the voters for their suffrages. Every name on the ticket received a majority vote of all the districts in the county.

It is to be presumed that there is some disappointment among the defeated candidates for nomination and their friends, but if those who failed had received the nomination, then the other fellows would have been disappointed.

We as Republicans have always believed that the majority should rule and any other practice carried out would destroy all party organization.

From our point of view the county ticket is a good one and should command the respect and support of every Republican voter in Garrett county.

The cry of "ring rule" and "bossism" as it relates to Republican politics in Garrett county is as absurd as it is false and contemptible. We recognize no such conditions and any talk of an independent movement among Republicans is unworthy even of our contempt. If the Democracy of this county is dissatisfied with its party organization let the independent element in that party do as they please in regard to a people's ticket—it is none of our funeral and it is none of our business. If we were allowed a suggestion, however, we could point a better way: let them vote for the eminent gentlemen already nominated by the Republican convention and thereby do their State and county a real service.

If there are any Republicans so disappointed with the nominations of their party that they are willing to join any man or set of men with the object of injuring the Republican nominees let them be warned in time: they bring upon themselves disappointment, shame and contempt without endangering in the least the triumphant election of any of the gentlemen composing the Republican ticket. JAMES W. WHITE.

Gormania, W. Va., Aug. 6.

Died.

JOHNSON.—Mrs. Johnson, widow of the late James Johnson, and an old resident of Oakland, died at her home here this morning at 5.30 o'clock after an illess of several months of dropsy.

Call for Your Letters.

Mrs. Hattie Williams, Mrs. M. B. Whine, Mrs. Martha Thompson, Mrs. J. O. Smith, Mrs. Matilda Smith, Miss Beulah Jackson, Miss Ellen Brown, H. B. Jackson (2), J. M. Crouch, W. B. Dent, M. D.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD

THE HEART OF THE WOODS.

I hear it beat in morning still
When April skies have lost their gloom,
And through the woods there runs a thrill
That wakes Arbutus into bloom.

I hear it throb in sprouting May—
A muffled murmur on the breeze,
Like mellow thunder leagues away,
A booming voice of distant seas.

In daisied June I catch its roll,
Pulsing through the leafy shade;
And fain I am to reach its goal,
And see the drummer unafraid.

Or when the autumn leaves are shed,
And frosts attend the fading year,
Like secret mine sprung by my tread
A covey bursts from hiding near.

I feel its pulse 'mid winter snows,
And feel my own with added force,
When red ruff drops his cautious pose,
And forward takes his humming course.

The startled birches shake their curls,
A withered leaf leaps in the breeze—
Some hidden mortar speaks, and hurls
Its feathered missile through the trees.

Compact of life, of fervent wing,
A dynamo of feathered power,
Thy drum is music in the spring,
Thy flight is music every hour.
—John Burroughs, in Atlantic.

The Girl of the Saratoga

By J. P. Coughlan.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

THE last warning shout had been given and already the gang plank was being pulled away, when I dashed down it, a bag in either hand and the tails of my mackintosh flying in the air. I landed on the deck with a jump, and down at my heels almost banged my large Gladstone, hurled by the mighty arms of the Liverpool cab driver who had taken me to catch the tender for the American boat. The heavy bag did not stop where it landed, but ricochetted along the smooth deck until it bumped upon a respectable Saratoga upon which was sitting a girl with her back turned to the direction of the missile that disturbed her so unceremoniously. She jumped up with a scream. It was useless for me to attempt dissimulation, for the eyes of the entire deckfull of passengers were upon me. The offended young woman, a tall, straight, handsome girl I noticed even then, glared full upon me.

I stammered something foolish, but the brown eyes were unrelenting. In despair, I threw up my hands. "I'm awfully sorry, but I'm not guilty; there is the criminal on the dock." And I pointed to the jehu, who stood on the landing grinning at the mischief he had worked.

A sweeping glance of indignation, and I had leisure to study the back of the fair enemy my too athletic driver had made for me. It was worth studying, too. There is a vast deal of character in a back; it is the foundation on which the body is built. As I rescued my errant bag I noticed the mass of dark hair that surmounted the back. Dark hair and brown eyes are always a dangerous combination.

IT WAS SUNDAY MORNING WHEN WE SAILED UP THE DELAWARE.

After a brief sail down the Mersey, we reached the liner waiting to take us to Philadelphia. Those solid old boats, making no pretence of speed or fashion, were always my favorite Atlantic ferry. The rest and comfort of their ten days' trip make a sea spell enjoyable.

I dodged the young lady of the Saratoga as we made the transfer to the Waterland, and for the first few hours of the trip was too busy fixing up my stateroom to go on deck and take a glance at my fellow-passengers. When the dinner-bell rang I was ready with an acute appetite.

I found my plate, as an old traveler, beside that of the captain. As luck would have it, on the other side of our official host was seated my girl of the Saratoga. Fortunately, the table was full, as was indeed the entire saloon, for we had not yet reached the open sea, and our maiden travelers had their first waves to experience.

Good Capt. Ebers was busy recognizing a friend here and there and in becoming pleasantly acquainted with those at his table, left my vis-a-vis and myself to the silent occupation of eating. Now and then I dared a look at those brown eyes, but they never met mine except with a frigid glare. For the most part they roved over the chattering saloon, and in them lurked a smile at the reckless exhilaration of the first-time-out passengers.

Next morning the girl of the Saratoga and myself entered the saloon at the same moment.

"Ah! here come the veterans," called out the hearty old captain. Except for ourselves the saloon was deserted of passengers. "Wonderful how a little sea will keep our folk to their cabins," as we seated ourselves at the table with an amused glance at the deserted board.

Capt. Ebers is a tactful man. He was quick to see the constraint between my fellow "veteran" and myself, and he laughingly said:

"Two such hardy travelers should have a formal introduction, though it is usually a superfluous formality on shipboard. Miss Gray, permit me, Mr. James Fisher, our most steady patron; we are thinking of giving him a pension when he gets too old to travel any more. Curious that you never met, for you have both crossed with me many times." The captain rattled on determined to put us at our ease once and for all.

Shipboard friendships, especially between hardened travelers, progress rapidly, and once forgiven for the assault the Gladstone made on the Saratoga, Miss Gray and myself became friendly, even to the extent of chumminess. That is her word. I disclaim responsibility.

In six days at sea two people will have exhausted all ordinary topics of conversation. Then they begin on affairs that on land would be sacred after a decade's acquaintance.

We had the deck to ourselves, and were sitting behind the protection of a deck cabin. I had been, as if I were still a boy, retailing much matter concerning myself and my doings.

"And now," I said, as I came to the end of the chapter, "I am actually running away back to America for fear of a marriage happening to me."

"You are becoming interesting. Please go on."

I ignored the badinage, which, indeed, was unworthy of her. "Yes, it is a fact. My dear Aunt Eliza was planning a descent upon my bachelorhood, with a 'dear girl' in her train; and, knowing auntie's propensities, I just skipped. I shall probably go to the Philippines via San Francisco."

"How funny. Just my case, too. Not about going to the Philippines; but I am also running away from a prospective matrimonial alliance. Such things have happened, but wouldn't it be curious if it were we who were running away from one another?"

"That would be curious," I assented.

"Speak for yourself, please. But, seriously, we must investigate and settle the matter."

"That is easily done," I replied. "Do you know my Aunt Lizzie?"

"I haven't the pleasure."

"Then you don't know my Aunt Lizzie, for if you did you would not think of knowing her was a pleasure. That sounds very like a bull, but I think it will stand the test. However, if you do not know my Aunt Lizzie, you certainly can't be the 'dear girl' she was bringing to bear upon me, and, therefore, it is evident that I am not running away from you. Q. E D., as they say in Euclid."

"Well, I suppose it is equally sure that you were not the particular man I was running away from."

It was Sunday morning when we sailed up the grand old Delaware. Miss Gray and I were leaning over the rail watching the green and gold of the shore as it slowly unfolded before us.

A puffing little tug was coming to meet us, and we knew that it contained the health officer and the advance guard of customs men.

My companion was unusually silent, and indeed I was in no mood for light conversation. Two people thrown closely together for 11 days find much in common, and then to wrench off that friendship suddenly on entering port when they each go their separate ways, gives pause to the most careless heart. There is something in the companionship formed on the ocean that binds closely. I felt the coming separation, and vaguely, but none the less bitterly, resented it.

"Does the sight of home again make you sad? I thought you were a much traveled young lady?"

I had no warning of the words that were to come.

"I deceived you in a trifling matter, and though the thing is of no consequence, I felt like telling you the truth. I told you in jest that I was in the same boat as yourself, that I, too, was running away from a mate. On the contrary, I am running to meet one. No, not one of my choosing, but one ready found for me. I know you will think it strange that I should speak of this at all to you, but I felt that I must tell someone. And then we did discuss one another's affairs so freely that it isn't as if I were telling it to a stranger."

The snorting little tug was lying at our feet. We were both watching the white-duck sailors making fast.

Her hand was in mine.

"Soon neither of us will have to run away," I whispered.

Teaching the Mosquito.

It is possible to accomplish not only more than one expects, but much more than one desires. "I understand Brown went to New Jersey last summer to study the mosquito," said one man to another, referring to a well-known entomologist. "So I heard," said the second man, "but when I met him the other day he said he felt that instead of studying entomology he'd been engaged in teaching anthropology most of the time!"—Youth's Companion.

Peek-a-Boo!

"Now," said the teacher, "we come to transparent subjects. Give us an instance, Miss Sophie."

"A pane of glass."

"Very good. Now another?"

"A-a-keyhole, sir." — Philadelphi Times.

HEARD IN PASSING.

A Word Dropped Between Two Dissipated Young Men Showed They Were Not Past Feeling.

They were walking with heads bent, and hands behind them, as if in thoughtful frame of mind, and as I drew near, I heard one say, in a rueful tone:

"Oh, if we could only forget, it would not be so unbearable; but sometimes, when haunted by the memory of the wasted years, it seems to me I shall go mad."

"My case exactly," said his companion, with a half-suppressed oath. "My memory is a curse to me, for it nags me like a fiend."

Glancing at the speakers, as they passed, I noted that, although they walked as if the weights of time were dragging at their feet. They were comparatively youthful; but the bloated faces and bloodshot eyes, were in evidence of the why of the nagging memories.

A moment later I was overtaken by one who had from childhood lived in our city, and to her I put the query:

"Do you know anything of the men you just passed?"

"I know nothing good of them," was the quick retort, adding: "We were once classmates, but it is years since I have so much as given them a nod in passing. To tell the truth I often, when not in too great a hurry, as now, go a block out of my way to avoid meeting them, they have fallen so low."

"Tell me something of their history, as we walk on," urged I, "for some

"OH, IF WE COULD ONLY FORGET."

words I heard, in passing, aroused my curiosity to know something concerning their past."

"It seems a waste of time to even talk of such creatures," said my companion, with a shudder of disgust, "but I will tell you as much of them as you will care to know.

"They were always chums," continued she; "even when they were little fellows, it was a common saying: 'Find Ned, and you will be sure to see Fred.' This friendship, which still exists, is the only redeeming feature about either of them. They are only 35 years old, but they are fearfully old in sin.

"They belong to two of the first families in the city, both as to culture and wealth. But in spite of everything done to lead them upward and Godward, by patient and loving friends, they seemed bent on going to the bad. Yet they are both well educated. One chose the profession of law, the other that of medicine; but I doubt if patient or client has come to either. They are care-free, however, seemingly, and content to live a life of sinful pleasure.

"Fred, as I once called him, married one of the sweetest girls in the world—as such creatures so often do—she was one of the loving, clinging sort of women, made to be love-shielded, but lacking in will power, and after two years of untold misery, she died of a broken heart. If Fred mourned her early death, it failed to influence him. He continued to drink and gamble as before.

"Ned never married, thank fortune, but he has well-nigh ruined his old father; while his mother, whose idol he was, rested from her tears and vigils long years ago.

"But they care nothing for broken hearts and untimely graves, for they have not one spark of feeling left."

She misjudged them, however, in one respect, for I, who, in passing, had caught those remorseful words, knew that they suffered keenly, as all must, the sowing of "wild oats."—Mrs. Helena H Thomas, in N. Y. Observer.

Beer Prevents a Wedding.

"I can never marry a man who buys beer for his father-in-law," declared pretty Rosa Shoemaker, of Allentown, Pa., who had jilted her lover, Charles F. Clewell, an hour before their intended wedding, because the young man had "set 'em up" to her father. Clewell and the girl had been sweethearts for nearly a year, and several months ago their engagement was announced. The young man went to the courthouse to get a marriage license, accompanied by the father of the girl. On the way home the young man bought two glasses of beer for his prospective father-in-law. The girl saw them come out of the saloon, and when Clewell called at the house in the evening to escort his bride to the clergyman's house she jilted him, in spite of the fact that she had bought her wedding trousseau. She would give no other reason for her action than that she would not marry a man who treated his father-in-law.

DEMENTIA FROM ALCOHOL.

Continued Use of the Latter, Even in Small Quantities, Produces an Unbalanced Mind.

The fact becomes more and more prominent that the continuous use of spirits, even in small quantities, is followed by dementia. This may not always be recognized, but measurement of the senses and functional activities by instruments of precision uniformly indicates depression, diminished and lowered vitality. The heart's action is changed, the nutrition and assimilation is disturbed, and the operations of the mind show a wide deviation from the normal state. Where there is hereditary predisposition to use spirits, or the person is a psychopath, or suffers from neurosis, inherited or acquired, dementia is a most natural sequel. The constant anaesthesia which follows from the use of alcohol, together with the chemical disturbances of assimilation and nutrition, after a time are followed by permanent organic changes. The action of alcohol on the heart can be traced, but its effect on the nervous centers is more obscure. The steady drinker suffers from the toxins of alcohol and poisons which are produced by this agent circulating through the blood, which finally act on the nerve centers, producing, first, functional, then organic, disturbances, and finally extend to dementia. It is an error to suppose that intoxication is the only indication of damage from alcohol. In reality, such toxic states are only incidents from which recovery follows. The most serious injury comes from the continuous use of spirits and the constant depresssion of the nerve centers, and the persistent derangement of assimilation and elimination. The periodic drinker has free intervals of sobriety during which nature makes an effort to restore the damage, but the continuous drinker is subject to the constant, uniform action of depressing toxins. Stages of dementia are started, and, although at first slight and obscure, they become more and more apparent. Thus, in one case, a constant drinker after a time shows egotism and superior confidence in his strength, unnoticed before. In another case, stupidity and dullness are the early and later characteristics. In another, the higher brain centers suffer, and the character and pride of appearance is changed. In another, unusual parsimony or generosity indicates a change. Often these mental states appear prominent for some time before organic symptoms are apparent. While each case differs from others in a degree, there can be no doubt that a uniform, progressive degeneration follows in all instances where alcohol is used constantly. Illustrative examples are very numerous, and an occasional so-called exception in which the constant drinker appears to be free from organic disease has sometimes been found. Careful inquiry into these cases with measurements by instruments of precision reveal changes unmistakable. While dementia is the most common form of mental defect, other disease states are noticeable in these cases, and death often follows from acute inflammation of the lungs or kidneys. A general paretic condition may exist in all the organs, while the higher brain functions show marks of dementia. Recent studies in this direction reveal a new field of facts which contradict all assertion of the possibility of a harmless use of small quantities of alcohol daily.—Journal of Inebriety.

PROGRESS OF REFORM.

Libby, McNeill & Libby, one of the largest packing firms in Chicago, have posted a notice absolutely prohibiting the use of tobacco by their 3,000 employes while on duty.

The report of the commissioner of internal revenue shows that our army of liquor dealers numbers 238,683, or nearly four times the number in the United States army under the new law.

Japan, with practically the same poor laws as Great Britain, has only 24,000 paupers, while Great Britain has 100,000. A Japanese statesman, being asked to explain, replied: "The Japanese drink tea; the British drink alcohol."

A national purity convention will be held in the First Methodist church, Chicago, October 8-10, under the auspices of four national purity organizations having headquarters respectively in New York, Philadelphia, Chicago and La Crosse, Wis.

Fifteen hundred temperance pledges have been distributed among the Christian Endeavor societies of north Pennsylvania by President H. L. Pound, who asks the members to use them as bookmarks, as reminders of their undying antagonism to the saloon and as a means of helping to save others.

One of the largest life insurance companies in the country has just established a total abstinance class of policy holders. Mortuary statistics prove that the death rate is considerably lower among total abstainers, and they will be given a correspondingly lower rate on premiums hereafter.

Troubling the Doctors.

The drink question continues to trouble medical authorities not a little. The Lancet, in an article on the drinking habits of the nation, points out that since the days of Todd—a generation ago—no medical leader has sanctioned the reckless use of alcohol. In an address recently delivered, Dr. Carter, of Liverpool, points out that, while the mortality from almost every disease has fallen, that from alcohol is an exception. The deaths have risen from 45 per 1,000,000 of those living in 1878 to 77 per 1,000,000 in 1897. Dr. Carter is impatient with such matters, and calls for "legislative or other action."

NEW FASHION IN DUELS.

At Paris Ladies are Among the Spectators and Police are Present to Preserve Order.

A new departure in French duels has been taken. In the famous fight between an Italian maitre d'armes, Signor Pini, and M. Thomegeux, a well-known Paris amateur, they first set the fashion of a duel with a gallery. In the duel between Prince de Sagan and Abbe Hermant the photographer first came on the scene.

But it was reserved for the sensational duel between M. Max Regis and M. Labardesque to bring half a dozen ladies on the scene, and to have a score of police keeping order outside the cycle track, where the duel was fought, and many inside inspecting the cards of the privileged spectators.

The duel, however, was not "pour rire." Of the half dozen encounters recently seen it was the one in which the two men meant business, and it was with a sigh of relief that the spectators saw the slight wound, inflicted by pure accident which put an end to the encounter.

The Bright Side.

"It is said that lobsters will be extinct in 25 years," remarked Hiland.

"Oh, well," replied Halket, who is very fond of lobster, "let us not worry about it. Let us look on the bright side. We may all die before that time."—Pittsburgh Chronicle Telegraph.

To Identify Her Picture.

She pictured his room with her photograph smiling down at him from over the mantel, while another of her pictures looked demurely at him from a leather case on the dresser.

She could see him often standing in front of her mirrored likeness and making vows of constancy and fidelity. She knew he would rather part with anything he had than those pictures. But they had quarreled and she felt she must ask him to return her photographs, and she wrote to him accordingly.

When she received his reply she nearly fainted. Here is what the wretch wrote:

"Dear Mabel: I would like awfully much to return your pictures, but honestly you girls all dress and pose so much alike for pictures that I can't tell any two of you apart. If you like, I will send you over 300 or 400 pictures that I have of miscellaneous girls, and you can pick yours out. Hoping this will be satisfactory, I am, sincerely, etc, etc."—Chicago Tribune.

A Ready Reply.

The wit of the tenement district urchin is irresistible, sitting at naught the dignity of the most dignified among his visitors. Some workers who are interested in boys' clubs recently met on the ground floor of a tenement on the lower East side and spent an evening discussing "ways and means;" at the end of the evening the presiding officer, a schoolman of great repute, and a thinker of precise and logical mind, undertook to sum up the results. He did it with wonderful clearness, and his peroration was a work of art; but just as he reached his climax, with his audience listening raptly, a small boy peeking through a hole in the window shouted: "You're a lobster!"—and the speaker never finished his sentence.—N. Y. Post.

"What is your husband's favorite fiction?" asked the inquisitive person. "I can hardly say at a moment's notice," said the patient wife, "whether he prefers the invalid-friend story or the detained-at-the-office-on-business narrative."—London Tit-Bits.

One of Dinah's Surprises.

A Baltimore woman recently secured an old and typical southern cook named Dinah, whose unfamiliarity with city ways and her questions were a constant source of amusement to the family.

One morning shortly after she arrived the door bell rang and Dinah answered it as usual. In a minute she came back with a surprised expression. "Missus," she exclaimed, "der am a man dere what wants 24 cents for de Sun." Mrs. Justi gave her the money and she returned to the door.

After the man had gone Dinah asked: "Does you hab to pay for de sunshine here, missus? In Virginia we don't hab to pay for de sun. It's just as free as de air of hebben."—Baltimore Sun.

Cruel Girl.

"Your conversation, Mr. Hevviman," said Miss Peppery, suppressing a yawn, "reminds me of some champagne."

"Ah!" exclaimed Hevviman, much pleased, "so sparkling as that?"

"No, but it's extra dry."—Philadelphia Press.

A Preferred Caller.

"It is always customary for the family to sit on the back porch when the daughter has a beau, but an Atchison girl has such a Good Thing calling on her that the family leave the premises and go and sit in a vacant lot across the alley."—Atchison Globe.

Nell—"Cholly tells me he belongs to the 'smart set.'" Belle—"I don't doubt it. He's certainly stupid enough to be eligible."—Philadelphia Record.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY.

Genuine

Carter's

Little Liver Pills.

Must Bear Signature of

Brent Good

See Fac-Simile Wrapper Below.

Very small and as easy to take as sugar.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

FOR HEADACHE.
FOR DIZZINESS.
FOR BILIOUSNESS.
FOR TORPID LIVER.
FOR CONSTIPATION.
FOR SALLOW SKIN.
FOR THE COMPLEXION

GENUINE MUST HAVE SIGNATURE.

Price 25 Cents | Purely Vegetable. Brent Good

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

WANTED LADY or GENTLEMAN AGENT, only one in each town, to SELL TEA at importer's prices. WRITE QUICKLY to HOME TEA CO., 28 Pearl Street, New York.

A. N. K.—C 1874

PENSIONS on age, disability and Widowhood; P. I. or any U. S. Service. LAWS FREE. A. W. McCORMICK & SONS, Cincinnati, O.; Washington, D. C.

A Commission Large Enough to Produce Heart-Failure

Is within the reach of Agents capable of promoting the sale and use of the best ANTI-RUST ROOF PAINT on the market. Ten years success. An excellent opportunity for young men to create a good business for themselves. Exclusive sale given in counties not already taken. Address, MANUFACTURER, P. O. BOX 153, COVINGTON, KY.

Thousands of Women Praise Dr. Greene's NERVURA For Restored Health:

"WHERE AM I DRIFTING?"

"Are these horrible aches and pains natural? Am I doomed to lose my health and good looks through suffering I can't prevent? Shall I be nervous and cross at twenty-five, thin and sickly at thirty and full of wrinkles in my prime?"

Are you asking these questions of yourself, young woman? Do you look at the women around you and wonder if you must grow nervous and wretched like them? Turn now, right away, to the medicine that will take all such apprehension out of your life and make you well and strong. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy will preserve your beauty and keep back the marks of time. It will help you at once.

Mrs. May Clark, formerly of Buffalo, N. Y., who now lives at Crowland, Ont., says:

"For two years I was unable to do any hard work of any kind. I was so miserable and no one can imagine what hours I put in. I felt so sad and down hearted all the time, and sometimes felt as if I would be glad if I could die, for it was misery to live and feel as I did. I sometimes thought I should lose my mind. I had the headache and could not sleep at times. I tried many medicines but they did me no good. At last I decided to try Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy and after taking two bottles I could sleep well, and my mind did not trouble me any more. I am now able to do all my own housework, which I have not done for two years before. I am very thankful for what Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy has done for me and I gladly recommend it to all who suffer as I have suffered."

The pity of beauty sacrificed to pain and nervousness! Realize it now and prevent the inroads upon your happiness and health. Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy always helps women. You will understand this if you try it. When you need medical advice call or write to Dr. Greene, 35 W. 14th St., New York City. He will advise you free of charge. No one can advise you so well, because no one understands your case so well. There are grateful women in almost every household who have been cured of serious troubles by Dr. Greene.

Are your nerves unstrung? TAKE Dr. Greene's NERVURA BLOOD and NERVE REMEDY

RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 848 S. California Ave., Chicago.

EDUCATIONAL.

LIMA COLLEGE. Eight Departments. Fine location and building. Strong faculty. Expenses low. Catalogs free. Rev. Carl Ackermann, Ph. D., Dean, LIMA, Ohio.

STARK TREES best by Test—77 YEARS Largest Nursery. Fruit Book free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION

FORWARD MOVEMENT

A Philanthropic Enterprise of Truly Universal Interest.

Its Purpose Is the Foundation of a Well-Balanced Character in Children Who Have No Real Home Life.

[Special Chicago Letter.]

A GREAT deal has been written and said about the grand work being done among the foreign residents of the congested districts of Chicago, but too much can hardly be added in praise of the "Forward Movement" which, during the last seven years, has been brightening and enlarging the lives of the inhabitants of the northern portion of the crowded Nineteenth ward, the population of which is largely American, poor but respectable and unfortunate, to which the saloon formerly offered the only social meeting place. The scope of the work is such that its influence must gradually extend all over the country. If arrangements could be made for city children to go to the country in summer and country children enjoy the advantages of city life in winter, the benefit would be mutual. When our churches all open every day in the week, and and all, rich and poor alike, can feel an equal right to enter and enjoy the spiritual and social advantages which must, in time, be provided, then the work of Dr. George W. Gray and many others whose efforts are in unison will be more generally understood and appreciated. During the vacation season the only playground for the children of the poorer classes is the street, and while that furnishes the fresh air impossible to obtain in the one room occupied, perhaps, by an entire family, they become precocious, educated in the way of sin, and with a predominating idea of making all they can out of everybody. A poor woman was obliged to change her home to another portion of the city and said: "Yes, I should like to be near a school, but I would rather be near a settlement. The children want to join the clubs and I couldn't live without a mothers' meeting. It gives me something to think about when I am washing. I know where the children are when they are at a club, and it gives them something to talk about. They don't fight half as much as they did. If they go to a settlement, nothing will keep them from school."

PROPOSED BUILDINGS FOR THE CHICAGO FORWARD MOVEMENT.

The help given by the forward movement is not so much in the nature of charity as in giving hope and impetus to the discouraged and opportunity to all. Dr. Gray says that "every child should have an opportunity to meet its obligations to society." It is impossible for the mothers, burdened and environed as they are, to train their children properly. Perhaps they lack the necessary knowledge. The doctor found so many homeless, untaught, lawless children on the West side, that he persuaded two of them to live with him for awhile, and induce others to come and pass a few hours in a natural, boyish manner. He was so encouraged by their grateful response that the house at 221 South Sangamon street was secured, which has, since that time, been the home of his work, which he hopes will extend indefinitely. He has been aided, both by money and personal effort, by many of the best-known people of this city and the work has so grown that a lot of over 400 feet frontage has been practically secured on West Van Buren street, upon which it is proposed to erect a fine set of buildings, the cost not to exceed $75,000. The Daughters of the Revolution are to help. An Episcopalian lady has promised $15,000 for a chapel to be erected in the center of the grounds, in which religious services of all denominations may be held, the only restriction being that no sect speak against the beliefs of any other. The church will be strictly non-sectarian. It is believed that the spiritual side of the people to be benefited is especially in need of development. The chapel will set back about 180 feet, leaving a park in front for the children. In one wing of the building it is planned to have an entertainment hall, gymnasium, bowling alley, baths, swimming pool, club and class rooms and apartments for industrial training for boys, and in the other wing corresponding rooms for girls. There are to be a kindergarten and many other necessary apartments. The building is designed to accommodate from 5,000 to 10,000 weekly in the various lines of work. Dr. Gray said the other day that he had planned little souvenirs to be sold at one dollar each. He lectured in a small Illinois town the other Sunday, and at the close of his address over 80 people came up and gave their names and dollars, requesting him to send souvenirs when printed. He hopes to obtain $10,000 in this manner.

DR. GEORGE W. GRAY.

A great feature of the work is the summer house near Saugatuck, Mich. A park of about 300 acres has been secured, with a frontage on Lake Michigan. Of this 200 acres has been set aside, which is to be divided into lots for summer cottages, the rental of which, it is expected, will furnish an endowment fund sufficient for all expenses. The management agrees with Mr. Armour, who once said: "No one has a right to foist upon society an institution that will mortgage the future for its support." The settlement and park are organized as a "Republic of Self-Control." Their senate is composed of two members from each of the boys' clubs, and the house of two representatives from each of the girls' clubs; the president, Dr. Gray, having the power to veto, which he has never yet been called upon to exercise. The children make their own laws, and have courts in which offenders are regularly tried and sentenced to make good, either in money or labor, any damage they may have done. A savings bank receives the pennies saved by the children. Regular attendance at club entitles them to merit marks, a certain number of which pays for a week's board at the park. Fathers are especially encouraged to attend the settlement meetings. Here they see their families in a new light, and learn to take pride in the progress of their children, who are perfectly at home in the freedom of their surroundings. Some method is always provided by means of which destitute mothers and children may go to the park without expense, but it has been found to the advantage of those who can do so to charge small sums for board.

Dr. Gray personally paid for the outing of several poor women last summer, and one day learned that two of them had telephoned, ordering a carriage for which they paid three dollars, in order to enjoy a ride around the country. They could have paid their own way, either in money or labor. At the Settlement it was found that gifts of free clothing were making beggars of the women.

Miss Dix, who has charge of that department, called them together and publicly explained this to them. Now they all pay a few cents or do a little work around the house for what they receive and are rather proud to wear the garments, telling each other what bargains they have secured. The janitor service of the building was paid for by this money last winter, and the women had the satisfaction of feeling that they were not "objects of charity." To encourage this same feeling of self-respect a small weekly sum will be charged at the park. If a child goes for two weeks, on the first he is a visitor, on the second he pays $1.50, or works not to exceed 2½ hours daily. Entertainment is provided for every waking hour. The park movement was largely brought about by a perception that sending children to tents in the suburbs made them too much an object of public attention. They were remarkable for their poverty. Occupants of carriages would drive up to the camps and select nice-looking children to drive with them, and some were encouraged to sing and dance, being paid in fruit or pennies. All this, while helpful in a way, did not give them the quiet and example of home life, the pleasure of doing for others without expectation of reward, which life at the park furnishes. This is intended to be strictly private and in accordance with usage in that of the families of more fortunate children. The little ones are often found ignorant of the simplest of table customs, being accustomed to have food by the "piece" and carry it in their hands until eaten.

The Forward Movement is divided into social, civic, educational, recreative and spiritual work. Its purpose is the foundation of a well-balanced character.

EDWARD JULIAN.

MACHINE-MADE STATUES.

A Process That Now Renders the Services of a High-Priced Sculptor Unnecessary.

If you want a bust or statue of yourself you need no longer feel obliged to go to a high-priced sculptor and contract for it regardless of expense. You can have the thing done by mechanical process, says the Saturday Evening Post.

The machine-sculptor will place you on a pedestal which revolves, and will turn you slowly around while he takes a series of photographs of you with a fixed camera. As a result he will have views of yourself from every standpoint, and then it only remains to convert these pictures into the portrait in marble that is desired.

There is no preliminary model in clay. A piece of marble of the necessary size is provided, and the outlines of the first photograph, with suitable enlargement, are traced upon the stone, a process being used that makes accuracy certain. Then the stone is revolved a certain distance, so as to correspond mathematically with the view taken in the second photograph, and the operation is repeated. This is done with all the photographs successively, the chisel doing its work meanwhile, until a replica of yourself is produced in the marble.

Though the process is in the main mechanical, some artistic skill is required. The outlines are well reproduced in the manner described, but such details as the ears and the hair must have treatment with the chisel.

Importation of Precious Stones.

A report received at the treasury department from George W. Mindil, the government expert at the New York custom house on precious stones, shows that during the fiscal year ended June 30 last the aggregate value of precious stones and pearls passed through his office was $21,919,053. This amount largely exceeds the total of any other year in the history of the country and exceeds by over $3,000,000 the entire importations of the four years ended in March, 1896. Mr. Mindil states that the placing of precious stones in their rough or native state upon the free list has established a new mechanical industry in America, and now nearly one-half of the precious stones sold in this country are cut and polished here.

King Edward's Maces.

The king of England has ten maces, which are kept in the Tower of London. They are all of different degrees and will be used at the coronation. The lords have their own mace, and will not allow the house of commons' mace to enter their house. It accompanies the commons to the door of their lordships' house, but it is always left outside.

USES OF LIQUID AIR.

There Is But Little Hope That It Will Ever Prove to Be More Than a Curiosity.

As there is reason to believe that a syndicate has been formed for the purpose of floating a limited company ostensibly for the commercial utilization of liquid air, one or two observations on this interesting substance may be timely, says the London Express.

In the judgment of the most prominent authorities on the subject, the commercial use of liquid air is not an economic possibility. It is true that a large number of suggestions have been made pointing to its adaptability for different purposes. It has been proposed as an explosive, and liquid air cartridges have actually been used (with indifferent results) for blasting. Mr. Tesla has been credited with its employment for increasing electrical conductivity, and thereby transporting electric energy for thousands of miles without loss. Liquid air, too, has been suggested as a motive power, a preservative, a caustic for medical purposes and for a variety of other singular employments.

It has to be borne in mind, however, that liquid air for power purposes costs 200 times as much as steam, requiring 200 degrees (Fahrenheit) of frost for its production, and that in any case it is expensive to make and most difficult of preservation. No doubt it excited great hopes on its entry into the world as a manufactured product, but the better informed now regard it as destined to relapse into the position of a mere scientific curiosity.

Quaint English Customs.

Everybody may not know that in royal households it is not the custom to relight a candle, says the London Onlooker. For however short a time it has been burning, if once extinguished, it is never used again—at least not in the precincts of the palace. Another quaint monarchical custom is that there are always two sets of servants, to insure better service. The one set goes on duty for three weeks, and when that time has expired another set will take their place, so that in the sovereign's palace there is always one complete retinue at work while their duplicates are resting until their three weeks of service come round again.

The American Cotton Crop.

For many generations after the first bale of cotton raised in the United States was sent to market most of the cotton plantations of the country were east of the Mississippi. But now nearly one-half of the entire American crop of cotton comes from the territory west of the river.

MINISTER CONGER'S DAUGHTER IN A ROMANCE.

The engagement of Miss Laura Conger, daughter of the minister to China, to Lieut. Fred T. Buchan, of the Third cavalry, was announced a few days ago from the home of the Congers in Des Moines, Ia. The announcement is a development of a romance that began in Peking at the relief of the legations, in which Lieut. Buchan participated. The lieutenant laid siege to the hand of Miss Conger promptly after making her acquaintance, and is said to have secured a promise before she left China. He is a son of W. S. Buchan, a prominent lawyer of Kansas City, Mo.

AGUINALDO ON THE PORTICO OF HIS MANILA PALACE.

The photograph from which the above picture was made was taken at Malacanan palace, Manila, by Lieut. Youngsberg, who had charge of the former leader of the insurrection at the time. It was furnished to the Philadelphia Press through the courtesy of Sergt. Mylott, of the coast artillery. From late Philippine reports it is learned that while Aguinaldo has not yet developed into an enthusiastic American he is nevertheless advising his friends to make the best of existing conditions and to submit gracefully to American rule. His advice is being followed in good faith.

WHAT TRADE-MARKS COST.

They Are Cheaper in America Than in Many Other Countries of the World.

The registration of trade-marks has become a necessity of late years, for unless an article of merit is protected by such means or by letters patent it is sure to be imitated by some unscrupulous person. It is only within a few years, however, that the question of protecting trade-marks has assumed grave importance, says a trade paper. This is due to the enormous increase in advertising of health foods, cereals, patent medicines and athletic novelties. The tariff of charges for registering trade-marks in the various countries seems in some instances to be based upon the idea that authorized labels and the like are as much a luxury as a coach and four. In Zululand, Peru, Uruguay, Hong-Kong and Granada the tariff fixed by law for each trade-mark is $145 in gold, the highest on the entire list.

In this country trade-marks are filed with the patent office and the price for registering one is $55, which is the lowest rate charged anywhere. Canada charges $60 for a general or a special trade-mark. There are some countries of Europe that demand $100 for registering a trade-mark, but in Great Britain, Germany, Austria, France and Spain the fee in each case is $75. This is the rate asked in the majority of the English colonies, including New South Wales and New Zealand, but in Cape Colony it is $115 and in South Africa $135. The latter price is also demanded in Costa Rica. Some of the bargain counter sales of registry for trade-marks are obtainable in the Leeward islands, Jamaica, British Guiana, Mauritius, Argentine republic, Bolivia, Chili, Guatemala, Sierra Leone and Bulgaria, each of which charges $115. Little Venezuela is content with $100 for the privilege of recording the existence of a patent label.

There are thousands of trade-marks that are never heard of by the great masses, because they are not properly advertised. The majority of trade-mark lawyers realize big profits fighting infringements of private marks rather than in registering new ones. One of them has just settled a case that was in the courts for four years. The single word "favorite" was at issue and the courts have decided that there is no exclusive proprietary right in the word as a trade-mark. One of the most successful lawyers, who represents the interests of a big cereal firm and a cracker establishment as well, says that it costs more than $15,000 annually to protect his clients from those who twist the names of brands in every conceivable way.

GOAT IS WORTH A BIG SUM.

Two Thousand Dollars Is Asked for Rocky Mountain Specimen—The Only One in Captivity.

Mr. Pugh, of Vancouver, B. C., has the only Rocky mountain goat ever captured alive, and he wants $2,000 for it. It is the opinion of many that the animal is well worth that sum, says a Portland (Ore.) paper.

Mr. Pugh is a hunter, trapper and taxidermist, and when, two years ago, the Vancouver "zoo" offered $2,000 for a live specimen of the Rocky mountain goat he resolved to win the prize. Others had spent thousands of dollars in trying to fill the zoo's order, but in vain. The mountain goat, the shyest, but among the most beautiful of animals, resisted all attempts at capture. Finally a kid was secured and nursed for a month on a bottle just where it was caught, at a very high altitude. It grew lusty and was safely landed in England. Then came Mr. Pugh's successful attempt, from which he has just returned.

His plan was a novel one. He and two companions traveled into a land of eternal snows, 40 miles up Squamish river, British Columbia, where no white man has ever been. As anticipated, he found that the wild animals—goats, bears, wolves, marten, fisher, etc.—did not fear man as much as each other. He soon caught seven kids, but the beautiful creatures all died when they struck the lower atmosphere. His only hope was to capture a yearling.

At last, after stalking one for three days, he drove it onto a ledge two feet wide running along a perpendicular cliff. His companions then tied a rope around his waist and lowered him to the ledge, 500 feet below. The goat trotted along until the ledge pinched out. Then, standing on its hind legs, it clawed the air like a waltzing horse. Below the beast was a drop of 1,500 feet, with nothing even for a mountain goat to cling to. On one side was vacant space, on the other side a man. Mr. Pugh allowed the creature to tire itself out pawing the air and the side of the cliff above, when it deliberately crouched down at his feet, and, looking pleadingly into his eyes, waited to be devoured.

Mr. Pugh held the goat unresisting in his arms and goat and man were hauled to the top of the cliff. A dozen other unsuccessful attempts were made. In some cases the goats leaped 100 feet and escaped from their pursuers. The kids captured leaped 30 or 40 feet in their attempts to get away, but in their youthful folly landed in the deep snow. The goat captured became tame before reaching the valley and ate out of its captor's hand.

A Plausible Explanation.

Little Ruby—I wonder what made old Sukey kick over the pail when pa was milkin' her, last night?

Little Ezra—I'll bet she missed her cud and bit her tongue.—Puck.

CORONETS IN ENGLAND.

Different Designs and Cost of Those of Titled Families and Royalty Itself.

A story is told of one workman of pronounced socialistic and democratic tendencies who, in the temporary absence of his foreman delivered an address to his colleagues on the advantages which he claimed would follow the abolition of the house of lords—and he wore the rim of a well-known earl's coronet while he spoke, says the London Mail.

"More than one case has come to my knowledge," remarked the manager of a famous jewelry establishment, "where a peer has lately rummaged among the family heirlooms in search of the coronet and has failed to find it. In several instances parts of the coronets have disappeared—a gold strawberry leaf here, a silver ball there, and so on.

"A young viscount who succeeded to the title only a year or two ago drove up the other day with little of the family coronet left. All of the 14 silver balls had gone. After explaining the situation to me he added, humorously: 'I never suspected the old man was so hard up!'

"Excluding those of the royal family, there are five different designs of coronets—the duke's, with eight strawberry leaves; the marquis', with four silver balls, and strawberry leaves between; the earl's, with eight silver balls and strawberry leaves; the viscount's, with 14 silver balls, and the baron's, with six.

"Coronets are by no means as expensive as people imagine. In fact, from an economical point of view, there is no reason why those entitled to wear them should not do so in the street—as our American cousins believe they do. We can turn out a very presentable coronet for 15 guineas. I know an American millionaire who pays more for his silk hats.

"No coronet, unless worn by a member of the royal family, is jeweled. In the coronet of a duke, a marquis and an earl the jewels are represented by differently shaped pieces of gold, while the silver balls represent pearls. 'Chased as jeweled' is the technical phrase."

The manager of the Goldsmiths and Silversmiths' company informed a representative of the Daily Mail that the new coronets are being made from the designs of those worn at the coronation of Queen Victoria. The king, however, is entitled, if he wishes, to change the designs, in which case all the new coronets would have to be made over again.

His majesty has not yet issued any commands respecting the crown he will wear. If he desires an entirely new one, it is understood that it will be made by a well-known firm in the Haymarket.

From a reliable source however, our representative learned that the present intention is to have the crown of her late majesty "rearranged," and most of the old stones will be retained. They number no fewer than 3,193, including 1,363 brilliant diamonds and 1,273 rose diamonds.

The most famous of its jewels will, no doubt, continue to appear in the British crown, for it is associated with past Edwards. This is the large ruby presented Edward, prince of Wales, son of Edward III., called the Black Prince, by the kings of Castile after the battle of Najera, in 1367. The ruby was worn in the helmet of Henry V. at the battle of Agincourt in 1415.

FRENCH GIRL LIFE.

Precise Rules Which Have to Be Followed by All Young Ladies of Good Family.

The programme of what a French girl may or may not do is drawn up very precisely, declares Th. Bentzon (Mme. Blanc), in Ladies' Home Journal. Unless she is poor and has to earn her own living she never goes out alone. The company of a friend of her own age would not be sufficient to chaperone her. It is an established rule that novel-reading is a rare exception. She is entirely subject to her parents' will in the matter of reading. And if she asks to see anything at the theater except a classical masterpiece, or an opera, they will tell her that such a thing is not considered proper, feeling sure of her silent submission. After she is 15 years old she is generally allowed to be in the drawing-room on her mother's reception days, but must keep to the modest and secondary place assigned her, pouring the tea and presenting it, courtesying to her elders, answering when spoken to—in short, undergoing her apprenticeship. She has but few jewels, and under no pretext any diamonds. Custom does not permit her to wear costly things; nor does it give her the right, in general, to have a money allowance worth speaking of for her personal use. She receives a trifling sum for charity, her books and gloves. A young girl never takes the lead in conversation, but always allows the married lady the precedence, and she finds it quite natural to occupy the background.

Music in Japan.

Japan has no music and the first melodies the people ever heard, aside from the birds, were hymns sung by Christian missionaries. Notwithstanding this, many Japanese have of late years become expert musicians and charming vocalists.—N. Y. Sun.

Valuable Bird.

Strutting about on a Colorado Springs ostrich farm is a big bird that is valued at $1,100, $100 for himself and $1,000 for his owner's diamond stud, which the ostrich swallowed the other day.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 8, 1901.

Republican Nominations.

FOR STATE SENATOR:

ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

FOR HOUSE OF DELEGATES:

PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.

CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

FOR SHERIFF:

WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

FOR TREASURER:

JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY COMMISSIONERS:

TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.

JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

FOR REGISTER OF WILLS:

EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

FOR COUNTY SURVEYOR:

FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

HUNDREDS, perhaps thousands, of honest white men who unfortunately, for one reason or another, failed to obtain even the rudiments of an education in their earlier years and who solely for that reason have been disfranchised by the new election law, will have a good opportunity to even up things by doing all in their power to help the Republican party in Maryland this fall, and they will do it, too.

The Republican Convention.

The Republicans, in their state convention Tuesday, did good work in behalf of the party. The candidates nominated are of exceptional strength and the personnel of the ticket should contribute materially to its success at the November election. The general nature of the gathering was most auspicious. The harmony prevalent was not of the manufactured kind, but seemed to spring naturally from a healthy party condition, in which there is nothing of discord or dissension apparent.

The party platform is in striking contrast to that adopted a few days ago by the Democrats. Whereas that was platitudinous in its nature and negative in its character, the Republican declaration of principles is vigorously aggressive and bold in tone. The issues are defined with such explicitness that there is nothing left to be desired, the lines being drawn sharply on every question before the people. The promises made are explicit, and the record of the party is a sufficient guarantee that if the people entrust it with power they will be redeemed to the fullest extent. The platform as a whole gives the party an opportunity to make an aggressive fight for the control of the State, and the temper of the public is such that it will join heartily in such an effort to oust the Democrats.

It was plainly manifested Tuesday that the Republicans feel deeply the attempt of the Democrats to retrict he suffrage in defiance of the time-honored precedents in the State and the mandate of the Federal Constitution. This was shown by the vigor with which every reference to the work of the extra session of the legislature was applauded. If this means anything, it means that the Republicans are exceedingly anxious to meet the issues. Having been given such a good start, the party leaders should now take hold and see that the Republicans all over the State push the fighting to the utmost of their ability. Let the opposition be assailed at every point with grim determination and such enthusiasm as was displayed Tuesday, and there will be nothing to regret on election day.

The Democratic Platform.

The platform adopted by the Democratic State Convention last Thursday was not especially striking in any of its features, nor did it provide very interesting reading. The party is to be congratulated upon the fact that it emulated Ohio in breaking away from Bryan for good and all and flatly and finally rejecting Bryanism. While it might have been advantageous to the Republican party to have seen the Democrats pursue a different course in this respect, public interest is paramount to any consideration of partisan advantage, and public interest demands that these two most obnoxious elements—Bryan and Bryanism—be forever eliminated from our political system. In this respect, then, the Democrats of Maryland did good work Thursday.

In all its other features the platform is weak. The attempted defense of the work of the extra session of the legislature is very lame. For a proceeding so essentially outrageous, so opposed to all the precedents to be found in the State, so extravagantly expensive and so absolutely useless, it was expected that those responsible for it would find more to say in its behalf than was spoken Thursday. The State census was, as all men know, a lamentable failure. It achieved absolutely nothing. In view of this, the fulsome flattery bestowed upon it in the Democratic platform is quite likely to prove nauseating to the people of the State. They have counted the cost and the benefits, and find that the former far outweigh the latter. Nor will they soon forget that fact.

The plank in which the amendments made to the ballot law are defended is the weakest portion of the platform. It starts out on a false premise in asserting that "intimidation, bribery and fraud" were easy of perpetration and common in practice under the old law. The statement is wilfully false. It if well known that the law of 1896 was the most perfect in existence, and that in the six elections held under its provisions no charges of fraud, intimidation or bribery were ever leveled at it by the Democrats. It was not until they sought, by an exercise of legislative power, to manipulate the election machinery to their partisan advantage, that the Democrats ever thought of impugning the efficacy of the old law. This fact is well known: nor do the people forget that whatever virtues the new law contains were wrung from a reluctant Democracy by indignant public sentiment. Praise for the law, which they did not want and which they were compelled to pass instead of the rankly partisan measure originally proposed, comes, therefore, with very bad grace from the Democracy. Neither on this subject nor on that of the census will the people accept what is declared in this platform.

As for the other and minor planks of the platform little need be said. Certain promises are made with reference to the oyster industry, the public school system and the primary election law proposition. These promises sound very well. But it should be remembered that they are Democratic promises, which habitually are more honored in the breach than in the observance.

The "negro domination" plank is rather amusing. Somebody seems to have squelched Gen. Louis Victor Baughman quite effectually. Instead of a rant and a roar against the "black peril," we have quite a mild exhortation, in which the people of the State are urged to keep its government in the hands of the while people. As has been pointed out, this will be the case just so long as the whites continue to outnumber the blacks by four to one, and it needs no interference by the Democracy to insure the ascendancy of white government. However, we are gratified to see that the convention was sensible on this point. It presages a campaign conducted on cleaner and better lines than would have been the case had the old hue and cry of negro domination been raised. As it is, there is a prospect that the issues may be fought out on their merits, in which event it will be found that the Democrats have placed themselves on the defensive and materially promoted Republican chances of success.

As Seen By the "Sun."

An editorial writer in the New York Sun has the following comment to make of the recent Maryland Democratic convention:

"The Democratic State convention in Maryland was held in Baltimore on Thursday for the nomination of a State Comptroller in place of the Democratic incumbent of that office, chosen by 13,000 majority in 1899, and a clerk of the Court Appeals, to which post a Republican was elected by 6,000 majority in 1897. The convention concerned itself, of course, as Maryland conventions do, with some matters of interest to Maryland like the oyster and crab law, the number of oyster culls, the ancient right of crabbing in tide waters, the claim of the Eastern Shore counties to representation, and the conservation of the State's monetary interests in railroads and canals. But the underlying question to be settled by the voters of Maryland in November is what verdict they will record upon the new Maryland electoral law, adopted by the Annapolis Legislature in special session in March, and designed by educational tests and mechanical devices, but without formal constitutional amendment, to deprive the colored voters of their electoral rights. The same question of disfranchisement, in various forms, underlie other contests in many of the southern states at present, but the form in which it comes in Maryland is different, for while in other states the voters are or are about to be arbitrarily disfranchised, in Maryland under the new law they are expected to disfranchise themselves through inability to comply with the conditions of the law.

"At the May election in Baltimore with 4,000 illiterate white and 6,000 illiterate colored voters, the former, supposed to be educationally immune, lost more votes by blunders in voting than did the colored men, and a like result in other divisions of the State would turn Maryland from a doubtful State into one as strongly Republican as West Virginia.

A Voice from Montgomery.

The wail of State Senator Bouic, who faithfully swallowed his bitter extra session pill only to lose his renomination and not the bad aftertaste in Montgomery, is significant. Mr. Bouic admits that he supported the extra session measure against his judgment, lured on by the promise of the Gorman machine "to look after him" when the time came for renomination. Now he denounces his former colleagues. Few tears will be shed over the misfortunes of the Senator from Montgomery. The man who smothers his conscience for Mr. Gorman's personal ends ought to know what to expect.

But there are Democratic gentlemen in high places who will shudder at this little incident in Montgomery as a warning of what may happen to them. To Governor John Walter Smith Mr. Bouic's wail comes as a voice from the same political graveyard that is to claim him in the near future. The truth must be dawning upon the Governor that the Herald's warning of last winter has been too true. The call for the Gorman session sealed Governor Smith's political downfall.

A little backbone and the Governor of Maryland might have gone on the pages of history as a leader. Now he must face the same truth as the unfortunate gentleman from Montgomery, who thought that for "this once" he might stifle his independence and regain his reputation in his next term. But for those who put their trust in Gorman there is no next term.

The ex-Senator is playing a desperate game and he staked his all on the disfranchisement of Maryland voters. To put this through he was willing if necessary to sacrifice every political friend. He gained his point, or believes he has, and now in his arrogance is riding roughshod over those who helped him. Mr. Gorman can perhaps afford to spurn his former henchmen, but the revolt in his own lines, fierce as it will be, is but a small factor in that great wave of public protest that will meet him at the polls next November.—Balto. Herald.

BAUGHMAN, "Slick Vic," the pride of the Gorman gang, is reported to have lost much of his political sagacity and recent events would seem to confirm that statement. Not long ago he insisted that a special session of the legislature be held to disfranchise all illiterates in the Republican party. He made himself the issue and volunteered to assume the responsibility of the move. Just how that law has been received throughout the State is well knon. The indignation of every right thinking citizen at the shame put upon the fair name of the State is great and at every opportunity the action of Baughman and his servile legislature has been repudiated. He wanted to disfranchise illiterates and framed a law with that object in view. It was aimed at the colored voter and all Republicans unable to read and write. The law passed was supposed to be sufficient for the purposes of its promoters else they would have passed another, the servile legislature and pliant governor standing ready to do their bidding. With the law on the books they went before the people and despite their hopes and desires the people repudiated the work of the conspiritors against the people's rights. Now Mr. Baughman comes to the front with another insult to the intelligence of the State and endeavors to frighten the citizens by a bugaboo into doing the very thing they refused to do.

The transparency of Mr. Baughman's scheme is only equaled by the desperation of his cause, and the fact that the Gorman gang resorts to a bugaboo is unmistakable indications that they believe their ballot law is futile and therefore their cause is hopeless.

BLOOMINGTON.

Piedmont Independent.

A rumor has been current for the past few days that the mines in this section would be closed down on August 1st for an indefinite period. The work has been duller lately than has been known in the region for the past five years, and many of our people are apprehensive lest the report turn out to be true.

Adam Richter, of Accident, spent a few days last week visiting his friend, Harvey Matthews. The latter's vacation expired last Saturday and he returned to his place of business on Sunday last.

Russell Pattison, pitcher, and Wohn Raley, catcher, aided very materially in the victory of the Lonaconing base ball club over the Mt. Lake nine Tuesday by a score of five to two. The game was played at Mt. Lake in the afternoon, and was one of the features of the George's Creek excursion.

Misses Olie Bartlett and Fannie Kight are at Atlantic City trying to find out "what the wild waves are saying."

Mrs. Andrew Mullen entertained on last Tuesday her two cousins, Misses Fannie and Adelaide Phillips, of Keyser, and other guests, Misses Helen Graham, of Piedmont; Alma Kemp, of this place; Clemmie Rowe, of Pruntytown; Messrs. Lucian Brum, of Baltimore, and Klein Graham, of Luke. A delightful luncheon was served at noon, an elegant repart in the evening and a very pleasant day spent by all at the old family homestead.

H. K. Martin, a prominent business man of Pennsboro, was in town Wednesday.

Miss Lucy O'Neill is visiting her sister at Mt. Savage.

Rev. Howard officiated at the funeral of Widow McFadden, at Frankville, on Wednesday.

Master Leo Roe, of Pruntytown, is a guest of relatives.

Arrangements are being completed for the M. E. Sunday school picnic to be held early in this month.

The insurance companies interested the Flynn fire have adjusted the damages.

Mrs. Sarah Fuller, of Cumberland, is visiting the Harshbarger family.

Mr. G. C. Pattion is on a business trip to Baltimore and other eastern cities this week.

The six year old boy of Mr. Baldwin, of Hampshire hill, fell and broke his arm last Wednesday.

Rev. Ballingee, of Piedmont, spent Thursday in town.

Will Price is carrying his arm in splints on account of a broken arm sustained a few weeks ago in a fall while hurrying across the railroad tracks at Keyser.

James Tichenell, the tallest man in District No. 4, is sojourning in town for a few days, after a very pleasant visit to Morgantown, Fairmont and other places in the western part of the State.

Gilbert Warnick, a prominent farmer living within three miles of this place, died last Sunday morning. Mr. Warnick had undergone an operation for appendicitis about six weeks ago and had so far improved as to be able to sit up in bed. A few days before his death he was taken suddenly ill and soon passed away. He was not only well known in his own district but throughout the entire county, where he has lived during his lifetime. He was an upright, Christian gentleman, with not an enemy in the world. His remains were interred in the Barnard graveyard, the funeral being one of the largest ever witnessed in the Chestnut Grove settlement. He leaves a wife and six children. The oldest boy is under surgical treatment at the Maryland General Hospital, Baltimore, and was unable to attend his father's funeral.

Religious Services.

Mr. C. S. Russell, of Allegheny, Pa., editor of Zion's Watch Tower and author of Millenial Dawn series, etc., will preach in the opera house, Oakland, on Sunday, Aug. 11, at 2.30 p. m. Subject, "The Resurrection;" text, "Marvel not at this, for the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear his (Jesus) voice, and shall come forth—they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation. John 5: 28, 29.

This is a rare chance to hear one of the great Bible students of our times. Come and hear him. Seats free. No collection. All are welcome.

Also meetings at Weber's Floral Park on Saturday, Aug. 10, morning, afternoon and evening, and on Sunday at 8.30 a. m. and 7.30 p. m. A number of able speakers will be present and you are cordially invited to attend.

Money to Loan.

$4,000 to loan on first mortgage in n sums to suit upon town property or nearby farms.

EDWARD H. SINCELL.

DOCTORS.

What An Editor Thinks of Them and Their Ways.

The doctors are all friends of ours. We expect them to stay with us until death. Yet at the risk of incurring their displeasure we reproduce the following. We don't know where it came from any more than we know whose rainspout the doctor's medicine comes from. We find it in a paper credited to "Ex." If we knew the author we would gladly give his name, because the article is really good. Here it is:

"The doctors from Algona said that newspapers are run for revenue only. What in thunder do doctors run for, anyway? Do they run for glory? One good, healthy doctor's bill would run this office for six months.

"An editor works a half-day for $3, with an investment of $3,000; a doctor looks wise and works ten minutes for $300, with an investment of three cents for catnip and pill box that cost $1.37 per gross.

"A doctor goes to college for two or three years and gets a diploma and a string of words the devil himself cannot pronounce, cultivates a look of gravity that he pawns off for wisdom, gets a box of pills, a cayuse and a meat saw and sticks his shingle out a fullfledged doctor. He will then doctor you until you die at a stipulated price per visit and puts them in as thick as your pocketbook will permit.

"An editor never gets his education finished. He learns as long as he lives and studies all his life. He eats bran mash and liver, he takes his pay in turnips and hay, and keeps the doctor in town by refraining from printing the truth about him.

"We would like to live in Algona and run a newspaper six months and see if the doctor would change his mind about running a newspaper for revenue only.

"If we didn't get some glory out of it we would agree to take one of his pills, after first saying our prayers. If the editor makes a mistake he has to apologise for it, but if the doctor makes a mistake he buries it.

"If we make one there is a lawsuit, tall swearing and a smell of sulphur, but if the doctor make one there is a funeral, cut flowers and a smell of varnish. The doctor can use a word a foot long, but if the editor uses it he has to spell it.

"If the doctor goes to see another man's wife he will charge the man for the visit. If the editor calls on another man's wife he gets a charge of buckshot. Any medical college can make a doctor. You can't make an editor. He has to be born one.

"The editor works to keep from starving, while the doctor works to ward off the gout. The editor helps the man to live better, and the doctor assists them to die easy.

"The doctor pulls a sick man's leg, the editor is glad if he can collect his bills at all. Revenue only? We are living for fun and to spite the doctors.

Communicated.

To the Editor of The Republican.

"The window is dark, the night is cold
And the story forever told."

The curtain has fallen, the tragedy is over!

Those who read the accounts of an affecting incident, coming under my especial observation in the South, display interest to know the finis, therefore I give it.

Last summer the faithful, loving mother whose unselfishness no pen can portray, took her son (effected with so sad and strange a malady) travelling, but months of change brought no healing balm, for alas! "Who can minister to a mind diseased?"

He daily grew worse and she brought him back to their home on the bay. Growing violent she was forced to seek refuge with a friend. His doom was sealed! Strong men bore him away and within the dread walls of an insane asyluim a tall, dark, handsome man, the fires of insanity blazing in his eyes, paces his cell, or in impotent rage shakes the iron bars of the windows which deprive him of his liberty.

In her beautiful home overlooking the sunshiny bay, flecked with white sailed boats, sits a broken hearted mother, moaning the old pathetic Bible cry: "Have pity upon me; have pity upon me, oh ye, my friends for the hand of God has touched me. Behold, is there any sorrow like unto my sorrow."

Dear friends in distant cities cannot tempt her to leave the scenes endeared to her by the thoughts of her only son taken from her in the vigor of a young and splendid manhood by a fate worse than death. There is the piano where, like King Saul, he strove to exorcise the evil spirits that tormented him, with strains of sweetest music, the curios, collected in years of travel, the books he loved.

Ah, mothers! you who have passed through a like sad experience, you will understand.

"We women cannot choose our lot,
And life indeed is not what we planned out
Ere hope was dead."

T.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

Village Improvement Society Fair.

The fair under the auspices of the Deer Park Village Improvement Society will be held on Friday, August 16th, in the grove behind the Deer Park Hotel. Among the many attractions will be the following:

In the Tea Garden besides all sorts of fancy Japanese articles and fans for sale, there will be tea and sandwiches served, the ladies in charge all being in Chinese costume.

At the Dairy, where the ladies will be in Peasant costume, milk and sponge cakes can be had, besides cream cheeses, eggs, vegetables and flowers and a great variety of choice fruits.

In another department all sorts and kinds of salable articles and novelties will be found, while yet another is devoted to ice cream, cake, candy and lemonade.

The services of two ponies have also been offered for the pleasure of the little ones and a "sand pile" in which they may dig for "treasures."

Great interest and pleasure is expected from the competition for prizes. Such articles as handsome table lamps, vases, sleeve buttons and studs, large framed picture, silk umbrella with Dresden handle, etc., have been offered for the—

Best trio of chickens (cock and two hens to be sent in proper box with wire top and front).
Best basket of vegetables.
Best basket of flowers.
Best piece of knitting or crotchetting.
Best piece of drawn or lace work.
Best piece of boy's work.
Best rolls or biscuits.
Best cakes.
Best pair baby's socks.
Best hand sewed apron.
Best pair this year's dressed chickens (must be dry picked).

All exhibits must be taken to the grounds and delivered at the tables to Mrs. John K. Mitchell, Miss Baird, Mrs. L. D. Thrasher, Mrs. Lashorn, Mrs. Orbello or Miss Ellen Hoye between 2 and 2.30 o'clock the day of the Fair.

Judging of the classes from 3 to 4 o'clock.

Bazaar open to the public at 4 p. m.

Baskets for the flower and vegetable competition will be given out at the Friendly Hall to all those desiring to compete in these classes on Tuesday afternoon, Aug. 13th, at four o'clock. Also the tags which will be required to be attached to each article exhibited with the name of the exhibitor clearly written upon it and the price to be charged if the article is for sale.

The half rate tickets for members of the society and exhibitors will also be sold at the Friendly Hall on Tuesday afternoon, August 13 at 4 o'clock.

The ladies in charge of the exhibit tables are asked to be on duty at two o'clock precisely and the judges to come at three, consequently it is necessary to urge upon the exhibitors an exact compliance with the directions herein given, and any article not in its proper place by 3 o'clock will not be considered in the competition.

Engage your places early in Martin's busses which will start from the brick pavement, Oakland, and from the Allegheny House, Mountain Lake Park, at 3.30 o'clock on Aug. 16th. The fare for the round trip will be 50 cents.

A Gruesome Photograph.

Hundreds of photographs were taken of the negro murderer of Officer Lilly at Elkins last week. One picture was taken after the negro had been hanging to the tree for several hours and is very clear, showing the distorted features and ghastly expression of the face. It also shows how the clothing was torn from the fellow as he was dragged to his execution. A large number of pictures of the negro have been sold to curiosity seekers as mementoes of the whole terrible tragedy.

$50.00 Reward.

The above reward will be paid for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the party or parties who on the night of July 31, 1901, entered the livery stable of Cora V. Savage, at Deer Park, and maliciously cut and destroyed certain vehicles, harness, bridles, etc.

FRED. A. THAYER,
State's Attorney for Garrett Co.

E. W. Grove

This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets the remedy that cures a cold in one day

Stops the Cough and Works off the Cold.

Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets cure a cold in one day. No Cure, no Pay. Price 5 cents.

LOSING FLESH

In summer can be prevented by taking

Scott's Emulsion

It is as beneficial in summer as in winter. If you are weak or run down, it will build you up.

Send for free sample.
SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists,
Pearl Street, New York
50c. and $1.00; all druggists.

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

Judge Sloan was at Cumberland on business Saturday.

Dr. H. A. Jarrett, of Grafton, was an Oakland visitor on Monday.

Mr. Chas. Brown, ex-postmaster of Cincinnati, is in Oakland visiting his sister, Mrs. D. I. Totten.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds. Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

Miss Nettie Michaels arrived home from Baltimore Tuesday morning on train No. 3.

Rev. T. D. Richards, of Germantown, Montgomery county, formerly owner of the Hotel Chautauqua, was in Oakland Tuesday.

LOST—On the Deer Park road, a cut steel side satchel, with initials "S. H. R." on the mounting. A liberal reward will be paid for its return to the Oakland Hotel. 1*

Clark Pickenpaugh, of Morgantown, drove over to Oakland Monday from his home to spend a few days visiting his uncle, Col. Sturgiss and family.

Miss Ruth Perdew, of North Lee street, who has been quite ill for several weeks, has recovered and left yesterday afternoon for Oakland, Garrett county, where she will visit friends.—Cumberland News.

Prof. J. G. Robinson, of Baltimore, will arriver in Oakland on train 55 this afternoon, accompanied by Mrs. Robinson and a daughter. They will remain here as guests of relatives for two or three weeks.

Major J. M. Burns, of Mountain Lake Park, is having a very pleasant time this summer. He was bothered very little by the accidental shooting some time ago and has completely recovered from it.

If you gave some fellows a talent wrapped in a napkin to start with in business, they would swap the talent for a gold brick and lose the napkin; and there are others that you could start out with just a napkin who would set up with it in the dry goods business in a small way and then coax the other fellow's talent into it.

The real estate belonging to Alfred W. Dennett at Mountain Lake Park which was sold on Saturday last by Sheriff Oester under an execution issued out of the Circuit Court, was purchased by William E. Walsh, Esq., of Cumberland, for a sum aggregating $1500. The land comprises 17¼ acres and contains some choice building sites.

The statement of the condition of the Garrett County Bank will be found elsewhere in this issue. The showing made by the bank at the time the statement was called for, July 15th, is highly gratifying to the management of the institution and by the public generally it should be taken as an indication of the stability and soundness of the bank which enjoys every confidence placed in it.

Talmage Day—Tuesday—at the Park was a great disappointment to the management of the Chautauqua as well as a great number of people from all sections of the country who had planned to be present on that day to hear the great preacher deliver his lecture entitled "Big Blunders," but owing to the disagreeable weather prevailing very few availed themselves of the opportunity to hear and see the lecturer.

Saturday night last members of the Pittsburg freight committee arrived at Deer Park for a brief sojourn. The party was composed of representatives of the Pennsylvania, Baltimore and Ohio and other roads, and came to Deer Park in a private car. On Monday the party was conveyed to Swallow Falls and from that point they were taken to Krug as the guest of Mr. Henry Krug, the president of the Manor Lands and Oakland Railroad, which is a continuation of the Confluence and Oakland Railroad.

The old court house at Philippi, one of the oldest landmarks in West Virginia, is to come down to give way to a new and modern court house that will cost about $75,000. The question of voting on issuing bonds will be voted on September 3. Barbour county needs a court house very badly and the only reason why one has not been erected before was the recollections that surrounded the old building. The first battle of the civil war was fought at Philippi, and the court house was used as a hospital. The court rooms are about as ancient as one can imagine, but the historic old building must go.

On Monday afternoon Mrs. Rosenheim and her two daughters, Mrs. Frank and Mrs. Markis, all of Parkersburg, W. Va., entertained a few of their friends at progressive euchre at the Oakland Hotel, where they are spending the summer. Among those present were Mrs. Robbins, of Ohio, who is also spending the summer at the Oakland; Misses Margaret and Gertrude Sincell and others. Miss Margaret Sincell took first prize and Mrs. Robbins second, both of which were very handsome. After a number of games had been played an elegant luncheon was served.

Miss Katharine Kingsley, of Hagerstown, is here visiting Miss Legge.

Mr. Frank W. Watts, of Baltimore, was in town last week for a few days.

Mr. Harry Buxton, of Keyser, W. Va., spent a part of last and this week at the Oakland Hotel.

The Board of County Commissioners will meet in regular session here on Monday, September 9th.

Mrs. T. Pickenpaugh and Mrs. J. T. Wagner, of Morgantown, are here as guests of Col. and Mrs. A. G. Sturgiss.

Rev. George I. Uhler left this morning for Easton, Pa., his former home, where he will spend a vacation of two weeks visiting relatives and friends.

Dr. J. W. Laughlin, of Deer Park, and Mr. U. G. Palmer, of Hutton, attended the Republican State Convention at Baltimore Tuesday.

Jones Bros' show was in Oakland yesterday and gave two performances one in the afternoon and one at night both being well patronized.

Miss Marian Gordon, of Washington street, left for Oakland yesterday afternoon to enjoy a brief respite from the heated term.—Cumberland News.

The dry weather which prevailed for some time was broken on Tuesday morning. A rain from the east accompanied by a cold wind made things extremely disagreeable.

Some fine strings of fish have been caught recently in the river. The fishermen are out in force and they expect to let no hungry nibble escape if they can help it.

Prof. J. G. Robinson, of Baltimore, an expert musician, will devote a portion of his time while in Oakland to repairing and tuning organs and pianos. All work entrusted to him will have prompt attention.

What most people want is something mild and gentle when in need of a physic. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets fill the bill to a dot. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. For sale by all druggists.

Peaches are expected to yield the largest crop this year that has ever been known. It is estimated that the crop for the whole country will be uniformly large and fine. The stories of the destruction of the peach crop have not been circulated yet this year and they are not going to be according to the reports made by those who are engaged in raising this fruit.

President Loree and General Manager Potter, of the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company, and the party which accompanied these two officials on their trip over this section of the road, stopped in Oakland a few minutes on last Saturday afternoon to examine the property of the company here, after which they went on to Deer Park where Sunday was spent by the party.

The religious services to be conducted in the opera house here on Sunday, the 11th inst., by Rev. C. T. Russell, of Pittsburg, promises to be well attended. A great many of the members of Mr. Russell's congregation at Pittsburg and Allegany City will accompany him to Oakland and while here will be entertained at the handsome and commodious residence of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Weber adjoining Oakland.

Most all advertising nowadays tells the truth. Most all business men have learned the lesson that even slight misrepresentation in their advertisements causes a loss of confidence, which more than offsets any transient gain that may be made by exaggeration. In the past there has been more or less over statement in advertising. It has made a great many people doubt everything that they see in an advertisement which is in anyway out of the ordinary. This feeling is not right. Probably ninety-nine out of every hundred advertisements of reputable business men are absolutely true.

B. W. Wright, of Clarksburg, is in Oakland, having come down here yesterday for the purpose of superintending the moving of some of his household goods to the former place which he left stored here in the Edwards house when he moved to Clarksburg, but during the time intervening the goods have very mysteriously disappeared from the room in which they were stored. Mr. Wright is making a search for his property. The goods consisted of many articles of value, among them being a set of dishes given him many years ago by his mother, since dead, which he prizes very highly. He has no idea what has become of his property, but declares that he will recover possession of it wherever found.

Percy Procter's Body Found.

The body of Percy Procter, J., son of Mr. and Mrs. Percy Procter, of Oakland, who was drowned in Cayuga Lake, New York, on Saturday, July 27, was found on last Friday a few yards from the shore lying alongside a rock which was submerged.

The remains were taken to Cincinnati and interred on Sunday, Mrs. Procter having gone to that city Friday evening.

Both Mr. and Mrs. Procter returned to Oakland Monday morning.

Work of Vandals.

The livery stable of C. R. Savage at Deer Park was entered on Wednesday night by some person or persons unknown who damaged his property to the amount of four or five hundred dollars, by cutting his harness to pieces and slashing the tops and upholstery of buggies, carriages, etc.

Entrance to the stable was made easy owing to the insecurity of the fastening on the door and the wanton destruction of the property was done between the hours of ten and two o'clock Wednesday night. The deproperty consisted of a set of new draft harness, several sets of buggy and carriage harness. The tops of buggies and carriages were ripped into ribbons and the cushions were slashed beyond repair.

The act is one which has no parallel in this community and indignation is freely expressed by all over the deed. The perpetrators of the outrage are not known at this time, but it is the wish freely indulged in by all that the guilty parties may be apprehended and brought to jussice.

A subscription paper is now being signed offering a reward for the arrest and evidence sufficient to convict the perpetrators of the deed.

The Deer Park Village Improvement Society.

Tuesday's Baltimore Sun contained the following concerning the organization and work of the Deer Park Village Improvement Society and the fair to be held next week under its auspices:

"The Deer Park Village Improvement Society is an institution formed for the purpose of interesting the people of the village of Deer Park and surrounding country in the beautifying of their homes, and it has been very successful. Mrs. John W. Williams, Dr. and Mrs. Mitchell and Mr. J. Swan Frick have been foremost in the movement and much has been accomplished. Prizes of various kinds were distributed last summer for the prettiest display of flowers in front yards for improvements of like character, and at the close of the year it was determined to hold a fair in August of this year in Deer Park under the auspices of the society. The 16th instant has been fixed as the day for holding the fair, and besides refreshments and various articles to be offered for sale, there will be a competitive exhibition of a number of homemade articles, for the best of which prizes are to be given. Competition is to be open to all persons residing within 10 miles of Deer Park, subject, of course, to the payment of a moderate exhibition fee.

"Prizes will be given for the best pair of chickens, cock and hen; basket of vegetables, bread, biscuits, rolls, cake, for the best dressed chicken, for the best and prettiest basket of flowers, best pair of baby's socks, best piece of handwork by boy under 15.

"At the close of last season one of the active members of the society supplied funds to pay the expenses of the village public school after the county funds furnished for the purpose had been exhausted, and the children of the town were thus enabled to continue at school for a longer period than schools elsewhere in Garrett county."

A Novel Accident.

A singular accident happend at Elk Garden Thursday which came near resulting in the death of Jos. Dixon, Jr., a prominent young man of near that town. Mr. Dixon, in company with James W. Swinabart and Frank Junkins, was coming to the town on horseback with loads of produce, when in passing a large cow Mr. Dixon nudged her with his foot. The cow switched her tail, which wrapped around Mr. Dixon's foot and fastened securely onto his spur, frightening the animal so badly that she ran, jerking Dixon roughly onto the rocky road and dragged him nearly a hundred yards before the tail's hold broke, leaving him in an unconscious condition upon the ground. The young man is badly bruised, but his injuries will not prove fatal.

Heating Contract Awarded.

A meeting of the School Board was held on Tuesday for the purpose of awarding the contract for heating the Oakland public school building.

Three bids were submitted for the work as follows:

A. D. Naylor & Co., Oakland, $1417.98.

Alex. Zeck, Grafton, W. Va. Bid rejected owing to some unauthorized changes being made in the specifications by the contractor.

Thomas Tibbetts, Grafton, $1578.

The contract was awarded to the Oakland firm, work upon which will be commenced at once.

The system to be installed will consist of a boiler which will furnish the necessary amount of steam to heat the building throughout.

The present system has been unsatisfactory from the time it was installed and represents a dead loss to the county of nearly $2500.

Go to Townshend's and get 12½c. lawns and percales for 10c.; 10c. lawns for 8c.; 10c. ginghams for 8c. Cloth ing at almost your own price. 50c. shirt waists at 35c. to 45c. 18-4t

Wanted.

One hundred men for general woods work and grading railroad.

PRESTON LUMBER & COAL CO.,
22 tf Oakland, Md.

"Salisbury Star" Clippings.

Miss Olive Gnagey and her youngest sister passed through town Monday en route to Salisbury, Md., where their father, Mr. Jonas Gnagey, resides. They formerly resided at Grantsville, and the two aforesaid young ladies were returning home after a visit to the old native town.

Mr. Jacob Fresh, of Garrett county, Md., who some time ago had been dangeroasly ill, came to town yesterday looking hale and hearty. His many friends here are all glad to see him looking so well.

Mr. Cortez H. Jennings, who has had his headquarters at the Valley House in Salisbury all summer, this week moved his base of operations to Bevansville, Md., near which place he is now erecting a small town and the largest lumber mill ever operated in this locality. His railroad that connects with the Salisbury branch at Niverton Junction is nearly completed, and it will not be long before he will be making old Garrett county boom as she never boomed before. Mr. Jennings is a most affable and courteous gentleman, and he will be missed here in Salisbury, where he has made a host of warm friends.

A Great Day at Mountain Lake Park.

In the nineteen years of its history the Mountain Chautauqua has never presented a stronger program than will be given on August 15th. Gen. Fitzhugh Lee, the idol of the South, will lecture in the afternoon. Capt. Richmond Pearson Hobson, whose heroic act in the sinking of the Merrimac at the mouth of Santiago harbor is one of the immortal acts of the Spanish-American war, will lecture in the morning. The desire to see and hear these two wonderful men, presented in a single day at a greater expense than has ever been incurred in a single day at the Mountain Chautauqua, is certain to bring enormous crowds. The Royal Hungarian Gypsy Orchestra will play during the day; also the famous Hawthorne Musical Club, of Boston, in many humorous selections in costume, playing on sixteen different instruments.

Excursion trains with cheap fare and plenty of car room will be run by the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. This will be a splendid day to visit Mountain Lake Park. Great multitudes are certain to be present, and the chance to see and hear Hobson and Lee in a single day is an event which will hardly ever again happen.

Jurors To Be Drawn.

His Honor Judge David W. Sloan will on Monday draw the names of jurors who will serve as such at the September term of the Circuit Court for this county.

Interstate Trust Election.

The board of directors of the Interstate Trust and Guaranty company, incorporated during the last session of the legislature, and in which there is interested considerable Garrett county capital, elected on Tuesday the following officers: President, DeWarren H. Reynolds; vice president and solicitor, Benj. A. Richmond; secretary, David P. Miller, and treasurer, A. H. Amick. The company expects to erect a handsome building in the near future.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE GARRETT COUNTY BANK, AT OAKLAND, IN THE STATE OF MARYLAND, AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, JULY 15th, 1901.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$152,667 11
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured		35 80
Stocks, securities, etc		60,317 87
Banking-house, furniture and fixtures		12,782 46
Other real estate and mortgages owned		1,597 66
Due from National Banks		30,020 65
Due from State Banks		5,409 21
Checks and other cash items		169 07
Fractional paper currency, nickles and cents		157 20
Internal-Revenue stamps		60 00
MONEY IN BANK, VIZ:
Specie	$8,763 35
Legal-tender notes	10,075 00	18,838 35
Total		$320,956 85

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus fund	10,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	3,713 12
Due to National Banks	2,432 89
Due to State Banks	1,077 59
Individual deposits subject to check	170,639 93
Time certificates of deposit	107,860 13
Cashier's checks outstanding	233 19
Total	$320,956 85

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss.:

I, S. T. Jones, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 8th day of August, 1901.

G. A. FRALEY, Notary Public.

CORRECT—Attest:
D. E. OFFUTT
G. S. HAMILL
J. M. DAVIS,
Directors.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. McROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH McROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 4 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is nereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and instead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD — CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA, COLORADO AND UTAH.

Special low Summer Excursion Rates to all points. Personally conducted Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Personally conducted tour to San Francisco, Cal., account General Convention Episcopal Cuhrch. Tickets on sale Sept. 22nd to 27th. Good returning until Nov. 5th, with stop-over privileges.

Quickest and best line to

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Only line with Double Daily Through Service. Dining Cars and Free Reclining Chair Cars. Fastest train service to the famous

BEAUMONT, TEXAS, OIL FIELDS.

Through sleeping car from Chicago without change and through sleeping car reservations from Cincinnati via Memphis, Tenn., to

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Special Homeseekers' Excursions to all points South, West and North West.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER,
Traveling Passenger Agent,
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Notice to Taxpayers.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, either in person or by deputy, will be in each of the Election Districts in Garrett county, Md., to collect and receive taxes at the time and place following:

July 5, E. A. Wiser's store, McHenry.
July 6, W. A. Smith's store, Hoyes.
July 8, R. A. Liston's store, Selbysport.
July 9 and 10, J. H. Cuppett's store, Friendsville.
July 11, J. L. Englehart's store, Accident.
July 12, W. M. Lohr's farm, Cove.
July 13, Harry Leathen's store, Keyser.
July 15, C. M. Livengood's Hotel, Grantsville.
July 16, Thomas Johnson's, District, No. 9.
July 17, P. E. Finzel's store, Finzel.
July 18, Thomas Layman's Farm.
July 19, R. E. Garlitz's store, Avilton.
July 20, J. H. Gregg's Mills, District No. 11.
July 22, C. J. Otto's, New Germany.
July 23 and 24, G. W. Engle's store, Bittinger.
July 25, Company store, Crellin.
July 26, U. G. Palmer's office, Hutton.
July 29, Merritt Wilson's, No. 8.
July 30, Mrs. Browning's, Gorman.
July 31 and August 1, J. H. Rafter's store, Kitzmillerville.
August 2 and 3, Wm. Moody's Bloomington.
August 5 and 6, Wade H. Lohr's, Swanton.
August 7 and 8, S. P. Specht's store, Deer Park.
August 9, L. A. Rudisill's office, Mt. Lake Park.

The Treasurer's office in Oakland will be closed from July 3rd to August 10th, 1901, inclusive.

N. B.—By an Act of the General Assembly of Maryland, passed at the January session, 1890, being chapter 560, it is provided that all county taxes shall be due and payable on the 1st day of September next succeeding the date of levy thereof and on all county taxes paid on or before the said 1st day of September a discount of 3 per cent. shall be allowed; and after the 1st of January all taxes shall bear interest at the rate of 6 per cent. per annum until paid; the Treasurer shall take the discount from and charge interest on all tax bills for county purposes regulating in the manner aforesaid and shall note same upon the receipts given for taxes so paid; but the discount allowed on county tax by this section shall not be made to any person or corporate institute unless the whole amount of State and county taxes due by such person or corporate institution for the current year be paid when the same is made.

WM. M. LOHR,
Treasurer of Garrett county, Md.

Reward for Dynamiters.

Information having reached me that on or about July 26th violations occurred on Savage River against the law forbidding the use of dynamite in taking or destroying fish in any of the streams of this State, I have invoked the aid of the county officials of Garrett to enforce Sec. 108, P. L. L., and to assist me in bringing the guilty parties to justice, and I will pay a liberal reward for any information furnished the State's attorney, any of my deputy wardens or myself that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the dynamiters wherever they may be found.

JNO. W. AVERITT,
State Game Warden,
Cumberland.

THE GREATEST GIFT.

One man would give his soul for wealth
And one craves manly grace;
One sighs for strength and perfect health,
One for a handsome face;
One longs to have the gift of song,
And one would hear the cheers
Of people as he strides along;
But oh that I might be as he
That puffs himself up foolishly,
Supposing all men stop to see
How splendid he appears.

One risks his life pursuing fame,
One burns the midnight oil
To make his name a deathless name,
And one for love may toil;
One tries to be supreme in art
And one wastes precious years
For power in the busy mart,
But none has gladness such as he
Has in his heart who blissfully
Boasts of himself and cannot see
How foolish he appears.
—S. E. Kiser, in Chicago Record-Herald.

AN OLD SONG

By Mrs. Moses P. Handy.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

ALICE FRAZIER was 22 years of age when she married Silas Hopkins; she was 27 when he died, leaving her sole heir to all his wealth. Strictly speaking, it would be more correct to say that he had married her; she had small volition in the matter.

It had never occurred to her to regard Mr. Hopkins as a possible suitor. Almost as old as her father, his hair nearly as gray, he had been the familiar friend of the family ever since she could remember. As a child she sat on his knee, and he brought her toys and candy; as a young lady he kept her supplied with flowers and matinee tickets.

The Fraziers were well off enough to have all the necessaries and many of the luxuries of life, but they could not afford superfluities. Mr. Frazier was a director of the Bull Dog Security bank, in which also his moderate fortune was invested; having implicit confidence in the bank, he had not hesitated to trust all his eggs therein.

It was the old story of a bank president and treasurer speculating with the money of the depositors, and when the consequent crash came Mr. Frazier was overwhelmed, not only because of his personal loss, but by a crushing sense of responsibility for the losses sustained by others. He argued that as a director he should have detected and prevented dishonesty before it entailed ruin.

This was why the shock killed him; not instantly, since he lingered for days afterwards, but the news brought on a paralytic stroke from which he never entirely rallied.

Alice was away, visiting a wealthy relative at a fashionable seaside resort, when the calamity befell. It was Mr. Hopkins who sent the dispatch announcing her father's illness; Mr. Hopkins who with his coupe met her at the railway station when she hurried home.

Alice found her father tormented by anxiety, which amounted to anguish, about his wife and daughter. His life was insured for a trifling sum, so small that it was impossible they could live on it even after his death; meanwhile he was helpless and bankrupt.

Then it was that Mr. Hopkins asked Alice to be his wife, saying, simply, that he had loved her for years, but never thought to tell her so. Now he ventured to beg that in her time of need she would give him the right to provide for her and hers. And, without waiting for Alice to answer, he assured her father that to do so would be the greatest happiness which he could ask.

Oh, the look of ineffable relief which came into the face of the dying man! He did not ask if his daughter were willing, but, bracing himself to a final effort, took her hand and laid it in that of his friend. "God bless you both," he murmured, and then, with a smile on his lips, went out into the Great Hereafter.

After this it was more than ever Mr. Hopkins who did everything. Alice felt herself bound hand and foot; although the bonds were of softest silk, they were strong as steel.

How could she tell them about Dick? Dick, who loved her, and whom she loved dearly, but who had nothing but his youth and strength, his manly beauty and his pay as ensign in the United States navy? Dick, for whom she had promised to wait a lifetime, if need be, and who had sailed away on a three-years' cruise the day before Mr. Hopkins' telegram came.

There was a naval station near the watering place where Alice was visiting, and the officers of the man-o'-war in port were coming and going continually. As one of the prettiest girls at the Cape, Alice had been one of the belles of the season. She and Richard Harvie had fallen in love with each other, after the inconsequent manner of young things who take no thought of the future. They had settled it that they were to be married when Dick got his "step;" meanwhile he was to perform prodigies of valor, and it would be happiness to be engaged.

There were moments when Alice felt impelled to tell Mr. Hopkins the story and throw herself upon his magnanimity, which she felt sure would not fail, but refrained for the sake of her mother. Crushed and broken-hearted, Mrs. Frazier had but one joy left, the satisfaction which she took in her daughter's engagement to Mr. Hopkins. When it came to the point, Alice felt that she must suffer anything rather than deprive her of that.

She wrote to Dick and waited feverishly for an answer, her letter being scarcely more than an incoherent appeal for advice. Weeks passed, bringing no reply, and Alice bethought herself bitterly that it had been generally understood at the Cape that Miss Frazier was the only child of well-to-do parents.

She let Mr. Hopkins and her mother fix the wedding day, and resigned herself to the inevitable. It was on her marriage morn that the expected letter came:

"I am deeply grieved to hear of your loss and sympathize with you and your mother. In justice to yourself, since you ask my counsel, I must advise you to accept your wealthy suitor; a poor devil like me cannot expect to count.

"May you have all the happiness you deserve.

"Sincerely yours,
"R. S. HARVIE."

Alice read the note twice, seeing only the sarcasm, and not the pain between the lines. It stung her to the quick, yet she felt relief that he had accepted the situation so quietly. Then she burned the note and set herself steadfastly to forget the writer.

The majority of women are like cats, in that they purr to the hand which strokes them gently and accept life's cream graciously.

Mr. Hopkins adored his young wife and rejoiced to gratify her every whim. Moreover, Alice had always been fond of him, and to her surprise she found herself by no means unhappy. It would be too much to say that she ceased to remember Dick, but that young man was thousands of miles away, and the thinking did no harm, even though, during the Spanish war, she searched the newspapers for news of him, and felt a little thrill of pride and pleasure when she saw that Ensign Richard Scott Harvie had been promoted to a lieutenantcy for distinguished gallantry in action. She could not guess that Dick, pierced to the core by what he considered her mercenary course, had made up his mind to let her see that the loss had been hers.

That was shortly before Mr. Hopkins was taken ill—a long and serious illness—and Alice's wifely anxiety drove everything else out of her mind. Her husband's death was a genuine grief to her, all the greater because she felt that in return for his whole heart she had given him so little of her own. She missed him even more than she had done her father, and fell into a sort of apathy which lasted until she was roused by the discovery that her mother's health was failing.

"It is nothing serious," the doctors told her. "She needs change of air rather than medicine. Take her to Old Point Comfort. This climate is deadly at this time of year."

The change did good to both mother and daughter. Alice soon found herself taking more than a languid interest in life. The proximity of Portsmouth, with its navy yard, made naval uniforms a frequent sight, and revived old memories.

It was scarcely a surprise to her when, as she entered the hotel parlor one evening after dinner, she found herself face to face with Dick Harvie. Involuntarily she extended both hands.

"Oh, Dick!" she exclaimed, and recovered her self-possession almost instantly, feeling the chill of his manner.

Mr. Harvie barely touched her hand with one of his; the other arm rested in a sling. "Mrs. Hopkins?" he said, coolly. "This is an unexpected pleasure."

Alice shrank into herself, like a sea anemone, but she managed to ask, politely: "You have been wounded?"

"Only a trifle. My ship and I are both in dock for repairs. Excuse me," and he left her to join a group at the further end of the room.

Thereafter, although they saw each other almost every day, their intercourse was of the scantiest. Alice was persuaded that Dick wished to avoid her, and kept carefully out of his way. This was not difficult. All the other women lionized him as a hero, and Alice, as befitted her widow's weeds, held herself aloof from gay company. She had no idea that the old wound rankled still in her lover's heart, that he shunned her as a burnt child dreads the fire.

"He despises me too much to notice me," she told herself, bitterly, and devoted herself more tenderly to her mother.

A week went by thus; then fate led Dick Harvie past the door of the music room, where he heard a well-remembered voice in song. He paused behind the heavy portiere in time to hear Alice sing the last line of "Annie Laurie." "How beautifully you sing those Scotch ballads," said one admiring voice.

"Pray don't stop," cooed another.

"You know 'Auld Robin Gray,' do you not, Mrs. Hopkins?" asked the accompanist, a musician in the pay of the hotel. "Pray sing it for us; it is so admirably adapted to your voice," and she played the prelude without waiting for yea or nay.

There was a little tremor in Alice's voice as she began, or at least Dick fancied so, but as she sang it disappeared, and she held her little audience spellbound. Dick, listening behind the curtain, scarcely breathed while the thrilling tones rehearsed the pathetic tale of filial self-sacrifice. It moved him to the depths, and his eyes were moist as she sang the last verse:

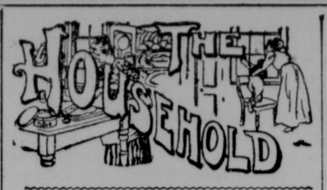
"I gang like a ghaist, and I carena to spin;
I daurna think o' Jamie, for that wad be a sin;
But I'll do my best a gude wife to be,
For auld Robin Gray is a kind man to me."

As the song ended, with a half sob which was the perfection of artistic finish, there was a murmur of applause and earnest requests for more. But Alice excused herself, smilingly; she had already left her mother too long.

As she passed through the portiere, on her way out, her eyes cast down to hide the tears which were ready to start, a hand was laid on her arm, and she lifted her lashes to meet Dick's eyes with the old love-look in them which she knew so well.

"Was that really and truly the way of it, Alice?" he whispered.

And Alice could only sob, under her breath: "Oh, Dick!"

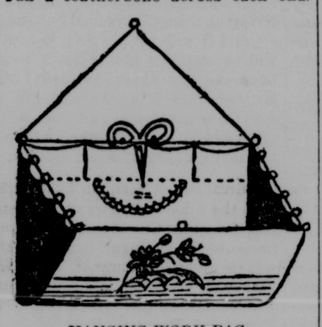


HANGING WORK BAG.

A Great Convenience for a Small Sitting Room When Every Inch of Space Counts.

This work bag was devised for use in a small sitting-room, where space was precious. Hung low enough to be within easy reach of the seamstress' chair, it can be swung wide open for use, or the cord drawn up and slipped over the nail, instantly closing it.

For the foundation cut a piece of dress canvas 16½ inches long by 10 inches wide. Cover with silk and paint or embroider a spray of flowers on the front. Cover inside with silesia of a contrasting shade, and run a featherbone across each end.



HANGING WORK BAG.

For sides, cut two wedge-shaped pieces of silk nine inches wide across top and seven inches deep after rounding off point by a circle two inches in diameter. Line with silesia, but omit stiff interlining. Join to straight portion, having seams outside. Bind seams and all round top with narrow ribbon, stitching on the machine.

Set four pockets across back, slightly fulled, the top drawn with an elastic cord; below them stitch three pinked flannel leaves for needles. Fasten two cloak hooks close together at top, on which to hang scissors. With colored tidy cotton crochet a strip in open chain stitch two inches wide by ten inches long; sew this along its longer edge across front side of bag, half-way up, and run several divisions. Each division forms a pocket for a spool of thread; put end of thread through meshes and a length can be taken off without removing the spool. Make a long, narrow pin cushion and stuff thinly with curled hair; fasten just above spool pockets.

Leave upper part of front plain, so it will close flat. Sew small brass rings along upper edge of sides and at each upper corner. Run one and one-half yards of picture cord through all the rings, slipping on an extra ring at back and front and join. Stretch bag open its full width and tack cord securely to rings at two back corners. Hang up and try if front and back cords are of equal length when bag is closed; if not, lengthen or shorten back cord.—Orange Judd Farmer.

TALK ABOUT FRECKLES.

The Least Offensive of All Skin Blemishes, But the Most Obstinate to Eradicate.

The fact that freckles are the usual penalty exacted by nature for the bestowal of a delicate complexion in no way compensates any daughter of Eve for their unwelcome presence. The poet may call them "the kisses of Apollo," but she prefers to dispense with the attentions of the sun god. Probably the least offensive and disfiguring of all skin blemishes, they are the most obstinate to remove. Dermatologists have tried in vain to compound a remedy which should be a permanent cure. It has yet to be found. True, they may be faded, even removed in many cases, after persistent treatment, but with the advent of the warm spring days and summer winds they are very apt to reappear. The summer girl inclined to freckle who yet justly refuses to be housed when sun, sky and sea woo her, has on hand a perpetual problem.

Freckles are divided into two classes, cold or constitutional freckles, and summer or light freckles. The latter fade gradually, or yield for a time, at least, to mild lotions. The former require almost heroic treatment, which then frequently brings disappointment. It is impossible truthfully to "guarantee" a freckle cure. The very situation of the freckle—below the surface—offers an obstacle. One difficulty in the way of their removal lies in the wide difference in the texture of different skins. A freckle lotion that will have no effect upon one's complexion will irritate and blister that of another.

The chief ingredient which enters into many freckle lotions is acid. An acid will bleach the spots when it reaches them. It must usually have something to draw them nearer to the surface. Ordinary massage of the face will do this gradually, and, by promoting the activity of the skin, in a manner prevent the small deposits of iron. Good facial circulation is a foe to most facial blemishes. The commonest acid and the most effective is lemon juice, pure or diluted, as the skin dictates.—Ledger Monthly.

How to Darken Woodwork.

Ammonia painted over woodwork will darken it.

ODORS OF THE KITCHEN.

By the Exercise of Care and the Adoption of Ventilator the Housewife Can Control Them.

Odors are subtle, withal searching. In dealing with those in the kitchen an ounce of prevention is worth at least a ton of cure. The heavy smell of stale grease, most clinging and most offensive of all, comes more than anything else from slopping or sputtering over, which a very little care in range management prevents. The acrid smell of burnt or scorched things is positively painful—so much so that a cook's first lesson ought to be that fire was given for cooking, not burning. Leaving unwashed pots and stewpans to dry and simmer on the range is a fruitful source of ill odors easily remedied. Dissolve two pounds of washing soda in a gallon of boiling water and keep a bottle of it handy. As you empty cooking vessels pour in soda water an inch deep, shake it well all around the sides and leave until washing time. If the pots and pans keep warm, so much the better—the soda will do its work more perfectly.

Onions, turnips and all the cabbage tribe, which smell to heaven, may have their scent somewhat abated by a little care in the boiling. The odor comes from their essential oils, which volatilize. If the vegetables are prepared some hours before they are wanted and left to soak in weak, cold water, rinsed and put over the fire in fresh, cold water, they throw up this essential oil largely in the form of a scum. Let them come to a boil before putting in the salt, and skim very clean. After the salt is in add a dash of cold water—it will throw up a second scum, which must be removed at once. Cook all such vegetables uncovered. A lid strengthens the odor tenfold and makes it more offensive.

Another preventive is a bread crust, very hard and very stale. Drop it into the water just as it strikes a boil and let it stay ten minutes, then skim it out. Most of the oil will come with it; further, the spongy crust will have kept it from vaporizing. Cauliflower not quite fresh always smells tremendously. The best thing for it is a scald in weak salt water, boiling hot, before the cold soaking. If the heads are big cut them into pieces so as to make sure of removing every bit of discolored curd.

Even when summer heat puts an open fireplace out of commission, a quick fire, as of straw, excelsior, light shavings, even newspapers, will set up a purifying draught and help to free the kitchen of unpleasant odors. Failing an open fireplace the kitchen ought to have a range hood. There are hoods and hoods—at almost any price you choose, from the big burnished copper affairs, in the great hotels, to the modest sheet iron contrivance, which is an integral part of so many among the newest stoves. There is a movable hood, working up and down like the shutter of rolltop desk, that is in theory all a hood ought to be—with something to spare—but in practice has proved much less satisfactory than the stationary ones.

TRUMPET VENTILATOR.

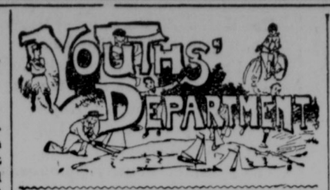
No mechanical contrivance can wholly make up for the lack of care and intelligence in the cook—notwithstanding it is a fact that a hood, well set, in a large measure carries away the fumes of food. The manner of setting wil depend on the size and location of the flue. The lower edge ought to be high enough to be quite out of the way, yet not so high as to either miss or defeat the ascending hot air column. It may seem at first a costly betterment, for no direct material benefit, but a year's use will show the money to have been well spent.

Not to name present and everyday comfort, all things keep much better in a well-aired house. Smells are ner of setting will depend on the size but the cognizable signs of air conditions that breed mold, rust and must. Metal tarnishes and fabrics decay twice as quickly in heavy and musty air as in that which is clean and bracing.

A kitchen with neither hood nor fireplace should at least have a trumpet ventilator. This is only a tin tube with a widely flaring mouth, crooked body and narrow upper end. It should be set in the wall above the range, with the flaring mouth, which curves over and downward, against the ceiling. The narrow end goes inside the flue, projecting just enough to secure a good draught. The efficacy of this device, a makeshift at best, depends mainly upon the size and smoothness of the flaring mouth and the tightness of the setting in the flue.—Chicago Record-Herald.

A Bit of Good Advice.

"What would you say," began the voluble prophet of woe, "if I were to tell you that in a very short space of time all the rivers in this country would dry up?" "I would say," replied the patient man: "Go thou and do likewise."



MUD PIES.

Of all the enjoyments under the skies,
There's nothing so jolly as making mud pies.
Prepare a nice shingle, or short, narrow plank.
Lay it carefully down on a bright, sunny bank.
Take the freshest of earth and the cleanest of sand,
And mix them up thoroughly well with your hand.
Add a cupful of water, then stir with a stick—
A little more water if it seems too thick.
Now take up a lump of this beautiful dough,
About just enough for a mud pie, you know;
Roll it softly around and give it a pat,
Don't have it too humpy and yet not too flat.
Lay it down on the board to bake in the sun—
Then make all the others just like this one.
Then sprinkle white sand over each little cake,
And leave them about fifteen minutes to bake.
And when they are done, you'll certainly say:
"That's the most fun I've had for many a day."
—Carolyn Wells, in Youth's Companion.

THIS CAT LIKES WATER.

Pennsylvania Pussy Defies Feline Tradition by Taking a Bath Whenever Possible.

The well-known aversion of the feline race for water has an odd exception in the pet of a family on Friends avenue, above Cooper street, Camden, Pa. This puss is so fond of playing in water that it is sometimes difficult to keep it out of the way. One of the favorite pastimes of this funny little cat is to jump on the kitchen sink when the water is running from the spigots and bat at the stream with its paws. Sometimes it gets in the way and must be pushed down, but at the first opportunity it is back again, seeming to find great sport in watching the spray it makes with its paws. A day or two ago this amphibious pussy came upon a tub partly filled with water in the back yard, and in it jumped, frollicking about with the utmost glee. The owners of the cat can only account for its strange conduct by the fact that when it was very young it fell into a tub of water, and finding it rather pleasant, grew to like it.

PLAYING IN THE WATER.

BRAVE LITTLE JAP.

He Performed One of the Most Thrilling Deeds of Unselfish Heroism Ever Recorded.

All the war correspondents are one in their enthusiastic praise of the Jap as a soldier, especially in the war with China. Thomas F. Millard recently related a thrilling anecdote regarding the bravery of the Japanese. The force sent to relieve the Christians who were being besieged in Peking had arrived, and it developed on the Japanese contingent to blow in a certain gate. The artillery did some damage, but the breach was not sufficient to admit of a charge upon the enemy. These massive wooden gates, which are sunk deep in the thick 12-foot high walls, are approached by means of a little bridge across the moat that encircles the city. The Jap general decided that a breach would have to be effected by means of dynamite. For this dangerous mission he called for volunteers. A little corporal about four feet six inches in height was picked out. As with utter unconcern he marched briskly over the bridge the enemy potted at him from the top of the wall until he was out of sight in the recess occupied by the gate. Lighting the fuse, he quickly made his way back to his own lines without sustaining a wound. No sooner had he gotten out of the way than a small door set in the large gate was cautiously opened and an almond-eyed face peered out. With his sandaled foot the Chinaman stamped out the lighted fuse. Then he went back and closed the door.

Defying almost certain death, the little corporal bravely started out again, and once more lit the fuse. On the way back he was hit on the shoulder and stumbled to the ground. Then he picked himself up and managed to reach safety. Once more, however, the foxy Chinaman was too quick for the slow fuse. Then the little corporal went pattering back to the half demolished gate, lit the fuse, drew his short bayonet-sword and waited. There was a moment of breathless suspense, then with a frightful roar the old gate was blown to the heavens, and with it went the poor little corporal. It is one thing to risk one's life in the heat of battle, but quite another to face the certain and horrible death from which this subject of the mikado never flinched.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

STEPPED UP, NOT DOWN.

Wonderful Career of Andrew Carnegie Teaches a Lesson Which No Boy Should Ever Forget.

When Andrew Carnegie was ten years old he left his native Scotch town of Dumferline and came alone to America. Reaching New York with one sovereign in his pocket he walked the streets for days trying to get work, and at last went to Pittsburgh, where he found a chance to fire a small stationary engine in a factory cellar.

What do you suppose he thought about, down in that cellar? About the libraries he was going to give away or the gifts to universities he intended to make one of these fine days? My idea, says a writer in the Little Chronicle, is that he thought about firing that engine and did it with all his might until working hours were over. Then he went out and studied the geography of the Smoky city, and it wasn't very long before he knew it well enough so that he could move up out of the cellar into a telegraph office. Only a messenger boy, to be sure, but he could hardly have been the lazy kind we generally read about or the manager would not have taken a fancy to him and begun to teach him telegraphy within a month.

ANDREW CARNEGIE.

That was about 45 years ago and the dingy little office where he was working at two dollars and a half a week belonged to the Atlantic & Ohio Telegraph company. Andrew Carnegie spent all his spare time in practicing telegraphy, and when he could do as well as the operator at the key (which was surprisingly soon, by the way) he took a place in the telegraph service of the Pennsylvania railroad, then a comparatively humble system, boasting only single track lines.

Here he suggested a method of train dispatching that increased the capacity of the road and shortly after this Thomas A. Scott, whose remarkable career in railroad management was just beginning, took notice of that bright young operator and made him his private secretary. When Mr. Scott was promoted to his vice presidency of the Pennsylvania road, Carnegie became a division superintendent.

Some of his savings were successfully invested in oil lands and in the manufacture of sleeping cars, and now he began to accumulate money. The next door that opened to him, or rather that he opened by being a boy who did, was the opportunity to establish the steel works to which Edgar Thompson, then president of the Pennsylvania, gave his name and much of the capital. Carnegie's ability showed itself at once in building up the mammoth industry which finally became the largest enterprise of its kind in the world. The great factories founded by him, or founded by others and absorbed by him, are scattered through the district of which Pittsburgh is the center and were all finally united under the one corporate ownership, the Carnegie Steel company, which Mr. Carnegie has recently sold to the great combination known as the United States Steel company. During his active years his profits rolled up at a rate that no manufacturer ever equaled before. His business was not only splendidly managed, but was aided by great natural advantages as well as all the forces of invention. To-day he is a multimillionaire, retired from business, and scarcely a month passes without the announcement of a magnificent gift offered some good cause by Andrew Carnegie. He has a handsome house in New York, although of late years he has spent most of his time at his beautiful castle in Scotland, and his own key to the problems he has met through life is engraved above the mantel of his library:

"He that cannot reason is a fool,
He that will not a bigot,
He then does not slave."

Parrots Taught by Phonograph.

The teaching of parrots nowadays is made comparatively easy by the use of the modern marvel, the phonograph. There is a man in London who educates on an average 40 birds a month, and does it entirely by means of the talking machines. The parrots' classroom is divided up into little compartments, which are kept shrouded in darkness. Each bird is placed in a separate "cell," and two or three times a day a phonograph is left with it. The machine is automatic, and when wound up and let loose will grind out and repeat a sentence or a number of sentences over and over again, for hours at a time. It is said the birds very soon are able to imitate the weird mechanical voice which comes out of the darkness. Perhaps they learn quickly in order to be relieved the sooner of the necessity of hearing the same thing over again for hours at a stretch.

Divers Find Rare Statuary.

A number of exceedingly valuable Greek statues have been found by a party of sponge divers off the Island Anticythera. Evidently a ship carrying art treasures from Athens to Rome during the first century foundered there.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

WATERING ROUGH LAND.

Simple System of Irrigation Successfully Introduced in the Arid States of the Far West.

Along the line of many irrigation canals, large tracts of land are often found which have a decided fall, or are rolling. Where this occurs in large tracts, the expense of terracing is generally too great for the average farmer, and a system whereby the distribution of water can be assured which is suited to the contour of the ground must be devised. On land sloping similarly as shown by the plan herewith, the water enters the distributing ditches at the upper left-hand corner, and dividing, flows through these into the still smaller ditches, from which it is turned laterally into furrows. Little dams or temporary obstructions of earth check its flow from point to point.

After water flows out upon a field, any surplus is caught by small trenches shown in the figure as trending diagonally toward the right-hand lower corner. From these trenches the water can be turned upon the lower fields so that the excess or seepage is not wasted, but is employed on the less elevated tracts.

SIMPLE SYSTEM OF IRRIGATION.

Canvas dams are generally employed in checking the waters over the field, as they are most convenient. The following description will enable anyone to construct them, and will also explain their use. The materials used in the construction of a canvas dam are a piece of timber, usually a two by four scantling, long enough to reach across the top of the ditch from bank to bank; a small stick varying in length according to the width of the ditch to be dammed, but no longer than will lie across the bottom of the ditch without leaving any considerable space between the stick and the bottom; a brace or stick about one-third longer than the depth of the ditch and a piece of canvas about one-third wider than the depth of the ditch and as long as the width of the ditch at the upper edge. The canvas is cut into a trapezoidal shape, somewhat resembling but larger than a section of the ditch. The long edge of the canvas is fastened to the scantling first described and the short edge to the small stick. It is well to have a little margin of the canvas below this short stick.

The dam is placed by throwing the scantling across the ditch just below the point at which it is desired to divert the water. The canvas rests in the ditch, with the short stick lying across the bottom, far enough up stream from the location of the scantling to make the canvas nearly tight. The brace is placed with one end against the scantling and the other against the short stick, thus preventing the canvas from being washed back under the scantling.

A little earth is thrown upon the loose edges of the canvas, where it rests against the banks and against the bottom of the ditch, and the water is turned in. The weight of the water presses the canvas against the banks, so that there is scarcely any leakage. In some cases permanent dams with head gates are placed in the ditches, and this is often done where ditches branch and it is desirable to divert the water to one or the other branch.—W. J. Blanchard, in Farm and Home.

Much Depends on Packing.

The package will sell the goods in any market, even if the goods are not of the best, as appearances in market convey the idea of quality. Buyers are not always capable of discriminating between the best and the inferior; hence much depends upon the packing. It is claimed that Danish butter is no better than that produced in American and Canadian dairies; yet Danish butter holds the highest place in the English market because the Danish dairymen use extra care in shipping their butter to market in a manner to attract attention and impress upon the buyer that it is of the best quality.

Only Good Cows Pay Profit.

It is a common error among the unthinking cow owners to try to feed poor cows into a state of profitableness. The writer has known men with a herd of poor cows to try to feed them so as to increase their capacities, but he has never known one to succeed in doing so. It pays to start only with good cows, whether raised or purchased. The good cow begins to pay a profit at once, and she continues it for a long period each year. As a breeder she presents possibilities not discoverable in the poor cow.—Farmers' Review.

Shrubs that bear flowers early in the spring should have the wood of last year's growth pruned before they start to grow in the spring.

WASHING OF BUTTER.

A Delicate Dairy Operation Which Calls for the Exercise of Individual Judgment.

Not many years ago it was generally supposed by dairymen that to make fine butter they must allow but little, if any, water to come in contact with it, but since that time we have learned to wash it in one or more waters, to remove the buttermilk. The question now is, how much washing should be done. There is a great difference of opinion on this matter. Some claim that it should be thoroughly washed, while others say that in doing this the flavor is injured. The latter, no doubt, is correct, while the first may be in a measure. To what extent butter should be washed, I believe, depends on what way it is to be handled in the market, whether consumed at once or to be held in storage. The advocate of thorough washing claims that in no other way can butter be made to keep.

It is my opinion that butter which is thoroughly washed will keep better than if only lightly washed, but I believe that either extreme should be avoided. To wash butter until the water runs off clear, will give us an article that will not decay or turn strong as soon as that not washed so much. But, by tasting of the wash water as it comes from the churn, it will be found to contain a strong flavor of the butter, so it is plain to be seen, that by thorough washing we lose considerable flavor. Then again, while the flavor is enhanced by not washing so much, the buttermilk left in will tend to putrefaction, for, as we all know very well, buttermilk spoils quickly and becomes ill smelling. Then if we undertake to remove all the buttermilk by working, we are apt to work the butter too much, thereby breaking the grain and making it salvy.

My plan of working the butter is to use two or three waters, depending upon quantity of water, temperature of butter and the market. If a nice flavored cream and butter, wash it very little for a high, quick flavor, especially if to be consumed soon. When the flavor is poor I would wash, say in three waters, and whether the flavor is good or bad, I would use a little salt in each washing, and only allow the water to remain on the butter just long enough to give the churn a few revolutions. If the butter is quite soft when it comes, it may be necessary to leave the water on a little time, to harden it. In summer season I prefer to churn at a temperature close down to 50 degrees—say about 52 degrees—and then if other things are favorable the butter will be in good condition to wash at once, with water at about the same temperature as the buttermilk drawn off. There can be no set rules for washing butter, any more than in ripening the cream or working the butter. In this work we have to rely on our judgment. —Ohio Farmer.

TEN VALUABLE HINTS.

If They Are Carried Out Conscientiously by Patrons, Creamery Success Is Assured.

Here is what the buttermaker at the Glenville (Minn.) creamery sent out to his patrons: The following suggestions are sent to all patrons for mutual benefit. If we are to make the best grade of butter that will sell at the highest price we must have only pure, sweet milk; hence it is for your interest that we make a fancy article, and with your cooperation this can be accomplished. Trusting that every patron will unite with us in this effort, we beg to offer the following suggestions:

First—Thoroughly brush the cow's flank and udder before milking.

Second—Strain carefully through wire and cloth strainers.

Third—Don't allow cans to remain in the stable.

Fourth—Don't mix night's and morning's milk before cooling.

Fifth—Keep milk in cold water.

Sixth—Leave covers up until the milk is cooled, then stir and close the covers.

Seventh—Don't leave skim milk standing in cans.

Eighth—Use brush and warm water for washing cans, then rinse with scalding water and stand in the sun.

Ninth—Don't use wooden milkpails.

Tenth—If you know of any patron that is violating the rules of common cleanliness in caring for his milk it is your duty to yourself and your fellow patrons to report the same at the creamery, and such information will be held in the strictest confidence.—Colman's Rural World.

EXERCISE FOR DOGS.

A Trolley Contrivance for Rover That Can Be Used Also for Calves, Colts and Sheep.

Set two posts (a a) of convenient height with braces below the ground to strengthen them. A three-inch ring (c) is slipped over a wire (b) which is stretched from post to post. To the ring a bar and chain is attached and the chain then made of the right length to reach the dog's collar. The kennel should be very near, or the trolley placed close to kennel. If buildings are handy they can be used instead of setting posts. This plan can be used with the bull, calves, colt and sheep.—B. G. Black, in Farm and Home.

EXERCISE IN CONFINEMENT.

SET PRECEDENTS AT NAUGHT.

Business Women Refuse to be Governed by Axioms and Customs of Trade.

A critic of the new woman—the woman in business—declares that one-half of the members of the class indorse their checks on the wrong end. Some of them, he says, are just as fatally ignorant of laws that the most ignorant man knows as are their sisters who are tenderly kept from contact with this wicked world, says the Chicago Chronicle.

The business woman denies this and pronounces such stories as that one going the rounds of the press about the girl who drew a check on a certain bank to cover the amount that her account was overdrawn in that bank the most preposterous of fakes. It is nevertheless true that a stamp very rarely accompanies the check with which a woman pays a bill; that she is invariably surprised that she has to put one on an express package and not a little indignant at the government for putting her to this trouble and expense.

It is related of one young woman who considers herself quite a person of affairs that when called upon to register at a hotel on a certain occasion she wrote herself down in big black letters as Miss "Pussy" Brown, that being her pet home name. And she moreover invariably hid the key of her room under the carpet in the corridor when she went out, instead of taking it to the office, as the average indivdiual does.

Another woman, this one with a bank account, is strangely averse to paying by check, but will travel all the way into town, a distance of 25 miles, to draw the money for her debts, and will then mail the bank notes to the firms which she wishes to pay. Asked her reason for this vagary, she replies that it would be such a disappointment to people who expect money to open an envelope and find only a slip of paper. Yet she is a clever woman and conducts a poultry farm with marked success.

There are women who never keep a receipt for money they've paid and who have to settle many a bill twice in consequence, and there are those who deem receipts themselves wholly unnecessary and troublesome and are willing to trust to the honesty of human nature. Yet all of these call themselves business women and would be highly indignant if anyone cast an aspersion upon their ability to take care of themselves.

Our Character Shown in Traveling.

Quite without our suspecting it, we show the stuff that is in us when we turn our backs upon home and take the road. Our revelations are entirely unconscious. We display our familiarity with social usages or the reverse, but that is the lesser matter. A novice or a globe-trotter alike lets down the mask which hides the inner self, when fretting over delays, careless of others' comfort, and selfishly monopolizing conveniences intended for the many rather than the one.—Ladies' Home Journal.

Mamma—"How did you know that the lady was not the little boy's mamma, Johnny?" Johnny—"She gave him a second piece of pie, and he did not ask for it, either."—Boston Transcript.

The Teacher Snubbed Miss Corelli.

A good story is being told about Miss Marie Corelli and the proprietress of a seminary for young ladies at Stratford-on-Avon. It is said that when staying on one occasion at Shakespeare's native town Miss Corelli happened to be residing just opposite to the school and found the continual piano practice of the pupils jar on her nerves and interfere with her work. Accordingly she decided to write to the principal and penned a polite note asking that lady if she would kindly order the windows closed when the young ladies were playing, as the music was rather distracting and disturbed her in her composition. It so happened, however, that the good lady was no admirer of Miss Corelli's work and immediately sent a curt reply, saying that if she thought the practicing would stop the composition of another work like "The Sorrows of Satan" she would at once order 20 more pianos.—International Courier.

His Economic Difficulty.

"Did you ever notice how Wabsley hesitated and seemed to grope for the right expression when he is talking?"

"Yes; his supply of words is never equal to his demand.—Chicago Tribune.

An Emphatic Touch.

The man who lives in a flat and is often annoyed by the violent piano playing of his otherwise agreeable neighbor of the floor below remarked to his wife the other day:

"That Smith downstairs would make an elegant carpet beater."

"Why?" asked his wife.

"Oh, he has the regular carpet beater's touch," replied her husband.—N. Y. Times.

Supreme Court Sustains the Foot-Ease Trade-Mark.

Justice Laughlin, in the supreme court, Buffalo, has ordered a permanent injunction, with costs and a full accounting of sales, to issue against Paul B. Hudson, the manufacturer of the foot powder called "Dr. Clark's Foot Powder," and also against a retail dealer of Brooklyn, restraining them from making or selling the Dr. Clark's Foot Powder, which is declared, in the injunction of the court, an imitation and infringement of "Foot-Ease," the powder to shake into your shoes, now so largely advertised and sold over the country. Allen S. Olmsted, of Leroy, N. Y., is the owner of the trade-mark "Foot-Ease," and he is the first individual who ever advertised a foot powder extensively over the country. The decision in this case upholds his trade-mark and renders all parties liable who fraudulently attempt to profit by the extensive "Foot-Ease" advertising, in placing upon the market a spurious and similar appearing preparation, labeled and put up in envelopes and boxes like Foot-Ease. Similar suits will be brought against others who are now infringing on the Foot-Ease trademark and common law rights.

It is an easy step from gossip to lying.—Atchison Globe.

I am sure Piso's Cure for Consumption saved my life three years ago.—Mrs. Thos. Robbins, Maple Street, Norwich, N. Y., Feb 17, 1900.

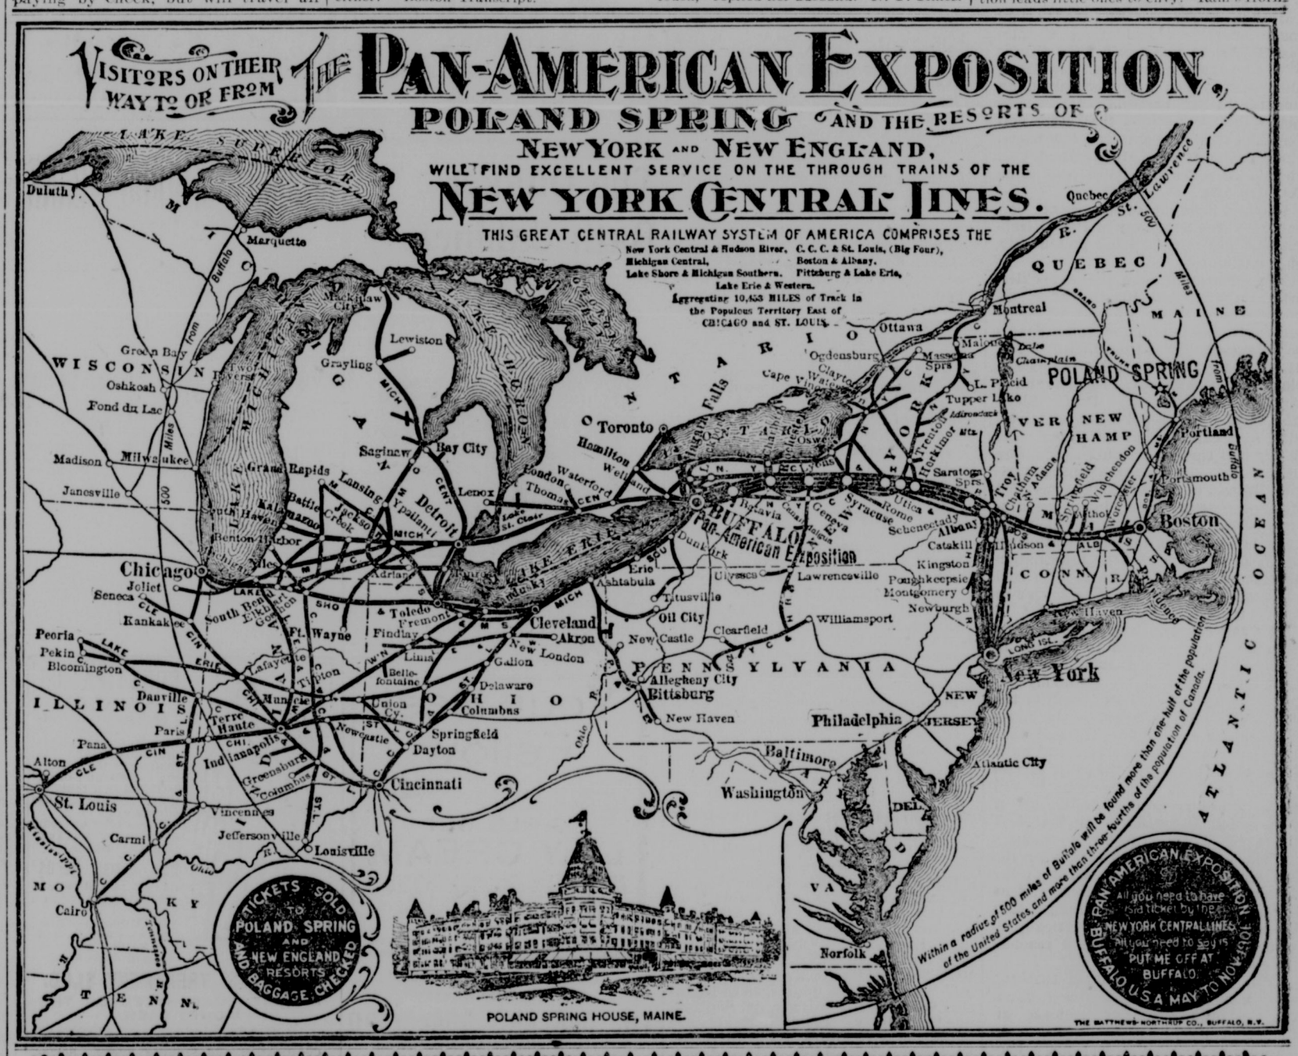
"When was it you first noticed your father's deafness had disappeared?" "Last night. I was singing away when suddenly he clapped his hands on his ears and rushed from the room."—Philadelphia Times.

Hoxsie's Croup Cure

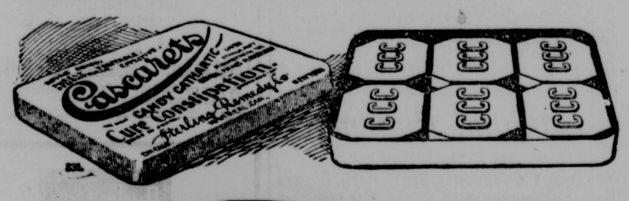
The life saver of children. No opium. 50 cts.

It is wortnier to be honored by the wise few than to be flattered by the foolish many.—Wellspring.

The merit that leads great souls to emulation leads little ones to envy.—Ram's Horn.



Get What You Ask For



CASCARETS Candy Cathartic, they are always put up in blue metal box, our trade-marked, long-tailed C on the cover—each tablet stamped C. C. C. Never sold in bulk! Imitations and substitutes are sometimes offered by dealers who "cut prices" and try and palm off fakes when CASCARETS are called for, because the fake pays a little more profit. Get the genuine CASCARETS and with it satisfaction or money refunded—read guarantee below.

SIX MILLION BOXES
SOLD LAST YEAR
OUR BEST TESTIMONIAL

Cascarets

BEST FOR BOWELS AND LIVER.

THEY WORK WHILE YOU SLEEP

THIS IS CCC THE TABLET

10c. 25c. 50c.

NEVER SOLD IN BULK.

DRUGGISTS

GUARANTEED TO CURE all bowel troubles, appendicitis, biliousness, bad breath, bad blood, wind on the stomach, bloated bowels, foul mouth, headache, indigestion, pimples, pains after eating, liver trouble, sallow complexion and dizziness. When your bowels don't move regularly you are getting sick. Constipation kills more people than all other diseases together. It is a starter for the chronic ailments and long years of suffering that come afterwards. No matter what ails you, start taking CASCARETS today, for you will never get well and be well all the time until you put your bowels right. Take our advice; start with CASCARETS today, under an absolute guarantee to cure or money refunded.

463

GUARANTEED TO CURE: Five years ago the first box of CASCARETS was sold. Now it is over six million boxes a year, greater than any similar medicine in the world. This is absolute proof of great merit, and our best testimonial. We have faith, and will sell CASCARETS absolutely guaranteed to cure or money refunded. Go buy today, two 50c boxes, give them a fair, honest trial, as per simple directions, and if you are not satisfied after using one 50c box, return the unused 50c box and the empty box to us by mail, or the druggist from whom you purchased it, and get your money back for both boxes. Take our advice—no matter what ails you—start today. Health will quickly follow and you will bless the day you first started the use of CASCARETS. Book free by mail. Add: STERLING REMEDY CO., New York or Chicago.

ADULTERATED COFFEE.

GROCER WHITE FOUND GUILTY OF VIOLATING OHIO'S PURE FOOD LAWS.

Interesting Facts Concerning the Roasting of Coffee Brought Out by Scientific Experts—Presence of Bacteria.

TOLEDO, O., Aug. 3.—The jury in Judge Meck's court in this city has found James White, a local grocer, guilty of selling adulterated coffee. The prosecution was based on a package of Arbuckles Ariosa coffee.

The State of Ohio, through the Pure Food Commission, prosecuted White. The case was on trial for nearly a month and attracted national attention.

The manufacturers of Ariosa coffee conducted the defense for Grocer White. The best attorneys in the country were retained to defend him, but, after a short consultation, a verdict of guilty was returned by the jury. The State of Ohio considers this a big victory. Pure Food Commissioner Blackburn has been waging a warfare on spurious food articles and the department has been successful.

The complaint of the State of Ohio was that Ariosa coffee was coated with a substance which concealed defects in the coffee and made it appear better than it is. The State charged this coating or glazing was a favorable medium for the propagation of bacteria.

Prof. G. A. Kirchmaler, of this city, a well known chemist, was the principal witness for the State. He had made scientific examinations of samples of Ariosa purchased from Grocer White in the open market. He found that each Ariosa berry contained an average of 300 bacteria. Mr. Kirchmaler further testified that other coffees he examined contained few bacteria or none at all. He declared that the glazed coffee was not a wholesome food product.

Chemist Schmidt, of Cincinnati, corroborated the testimony of Prof. Kirchmaler. The State did not present further testimony.

The defense through the Arbuckles, who prepared this glazed coffee, secured some of the most eminent chemists and scientists in the United States to give testimony in their behalf. Prof. H. W. Wiley, of the United States Agricultural Department; Prof. Vaughn of Ann Arbor University; Profs. Bleile and Webber, of the Ohio State University, were called to defend Ariosa. Dr. Wiley had made a careful examination of the method of manufacturing Ariosa. He told of the 19,000,000 eggs used by the Arbuckles yearly in the preparation of this glazing. On this point in cross examination, the State's attorney deftly drew from him the information that these eggs might be kept in cold storage by the Arbuckles for a year or two at a time.

The experts who heard Dr. Wiley's testimony were pleased to be able to "catch" so famous a chemist. The doctor at one point in his testimony explained very clearly how it is that the egg put into the coffee pot by the house wife settles the coffee. He said that the heat coagulates the egg, and as it sinks to the bottom of the pot it carries the fine particles of coffee with it, and thus clarifies the drink. It is the act of coagulation in the coffee pot that does the work. Later on in his cross examination, he had to admit that when the egg was put on Ariosa coffee at the factory it became coagulated, and as egg cannot be coagulated but once, that the coating on coffee was practically no value, as a "settler" when it reached the coffee pot.

Prof. Wiley acknowledged that the glazing might be a favorable medium for the propagation of bacteria, although he would not testify positively either way because he was not a bacteriologist.

Prof. Vaughn, of Ann Arbor, also a witness for the Arbuckles, said he found bacteria on Ariosa coffee.

Prof. Bleile, another witness for the defense, found any number of lively bacteria on Ariosa coffee he examined, and he agreed that glazed coffee surely was a more favorable medium for the propagation of bacteria than unglazed coffee.

Pure Food Commissioner Blackburn says: "The State is very much elated over its victory against this corporation. We are now considering the advisability of informing every grocer in the State of Ohio that it is an infraction of the laws to sell Ariosa, and at the same time give warning to consumers that the coffee is an adulterated food article."

The verdict of the jury in this case is of national importance because a great many other States have pure food laws like that of Ohio, and it is natural to suppose that similar action will be taken by other Pure Food Commissioners to prevent the sale of glazed coffees.

Washington's Fastidious Kinsman.

Lawrence, earl of Ferrers, a distant relative of George Washington, had a most tyrannical temper, and one day in a fit of passion he cut down with his sword his steward, an old gentleman named Johnson. The latter had given no provocation for the deed, and the crime was an act of brutality inexcusable save that the earl may not have been well balanced mentally. He was brought to trial for killing Johnson and demanded and received the privilege of being tried by his peers.

The house of lords was thronged during the hearing. The evidence proved to be conclusive, and Ferrers was sentenced to be hanged at Tyburn. Appeals were made to the king for clemency, but in vain. Ferrers met his fate with considerable bravado. He was carefully attired for the occasion and insisted on providing a silken cord for the ceremony. To this whim the executioner agreed, and the earl was turned off otherwise like any other felon.

A Minister's Good Work.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev. A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and he said 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured. I think it is the best medicine I have ever tried." For sale by all druggists.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

If you have a baby in the house you will wish to know the best way to check any unusual looseness of the bowels, or diarrhoea so common to small children. O. P. M. Holliday, of Daming, Ind., who has an eleven months' old child, says: "Through the months of June and July our baby was teething and took a running off of the bowels and sickness of the stomach. His bowels would move from five to eight times a day. I had a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in the house and gave him four drops in a teaspoonful of water and he got better at once." For sale by all druggists.

Notice.

I beg to announce to the citizens of Garrett county that I have returned to Oakland to locate permanently to practice law, after an absence of several years, during which time I have been engaged in the practice of law in Washington, D. C. I solicit the patronage of clients of the late firm of Veitch & Townshend and that of other citizens as well.

Prompt attention will be given to all business placed in my care.

Offices in the McComas building, Oakland, Md.

PERCY H. VEITCH,
15 6t Attorney at Law.

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Battlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

Special Rates to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition, Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Excursion tickets from Oakland, Md., to Buffalo and return via Pittsburg account Pan-American Exposition now on sale at ticket offices Baltimore & Ohio Railroad:

SEVEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

FIFTEEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

SEASON TICKETS—On sale daily, good returning until Nov. 30th, 1901, $19.20.

For full details, time of trains, etc., call on Agent Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. til nov 1

AUDITOR'S NOTICE.

Lorilla F. Bullard vs. Minnie Hinebaugh et al.

No. 1047 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County.

Under and by virtue of an order of the Circuit Court for Garrett county, dated the 27th day of July, 1901, notice is hereby given to the creditors of Elizabeth Phillips, deceased, to file their claims, duly authenticated, with the Clerk of the Circuit Court for Garrett county in the above entitled cause, on or before the 16th day of August, 1901, as I will on that day proceed to state an account distributing the funds in the hands of Gilmor S. Hamill, trustee.

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
Auditor.

ROAD PETITION.

This is to give notice that thirty days after the first publication of this notice application will be made to the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county, Maryland, for the appointment of viewers to view and locate a new road beginning for the same at the south end of Garrett V. Moon's lane and running thence down Laurel Creek and through the lands of the Manor Mining and Manufacturing Company, James L. Harvey and J. B. Lipscomb and along the lines of said Lipscomb and Chas. Cooper and through the lands of the said Mining and Manufacturing Company to the town of Schell, a distance of about three miles.

J. L. HARVEY,
J. O. O'HAVRE,
J. B. LIPSCOMB and others,
22&5t* Petitioners.

In every town and village may be had the

Mica Axle Grease

that makes your horses glad.

Made by Standard Oil Co.

Turnbull's

China and Japan Mattings, all weaves and colorings.

Porch and Lawn Furniture.

Iron and Brass Bedsteads,

Linoleums and Oil Cloths,

Carpetings.

JOHN TURNBULL, JR., & COMPANY,

16, 18, 20 West Baltimore Street,

BALTIMORE

The Quaker Bath Cabinet.

Open—Ready For Use.

A 16-page descriptive catalogue sent free upon request. AGENTS WANTED. Write for terms. Address all letters to

QUEEN CITY NOVELTY CO.,
General Agents, OAKLAND, MD.

Your Best Fellow

Will like you better for having white, smooth hands, free from chaps and such like detracting things—

GIRLS GET LILY CREAM

An article that cures skin—soothes and feels good—dries instantly and is perfectly invisible.

A LOGAN DRUG COMPANY
WHEELING, W. VA.
15 and 25 cents. At your Druggist.

I HAVE PURCHASED

THE OAKLAND COAL YARD

of Mr. D. F. Conneway and will continue the business. I will keep constantly on hand a large supply of

HARD AND SOFT

COAL,

KINDLING WOOD, Etc.

All orders will receive prompt attention. Leave orders with the weighmaster or at my residence, the Giessman Hotel.

35-2 GEO. GIESSMAN

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars Cameras and Photo Supplies

TO CURE LAGRIPPE IN TWO DAY

Take LAXATIVE BROMO QUININE TABLETS. All druggists refund the money if it fails to cure. E. W. GROVE'S signature on every box. 25c.

Examiners' Notice.

Notice is hereby given that the undersigned, appointed by the County Commissioners of Garrett county, to view the road prayed to be changed, known as the White and King road, and examine whether the said changed road should be located, will meet on the 15th day of July, 1901, for such purpose, and to determine whether the public convenience requires the said changed location of said White and King road, and if so, to locate the same, and perform their duty in the premises.

WILLIAM WHITE,
J. B. MEESE,
CHARLES THOMPSON,
Examiners.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., July 8, 1901.

Chaddie Hager, appointed Democratic Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 29, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead James Bower is hereby appointed, to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

The Garrett County Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank

OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE

SECOND NATIONAL BANK

of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital.....$100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits.. 250,000
Liability of Shareholders..... 100,000
Additional Security to Depositors. $450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart.
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Storm.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS

cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.

A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St. Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Midget Harness Riveter.

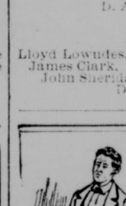
Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for

ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.



J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy

MONUMENTS HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the utmost extent of the law.

Call on or address:

C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.

Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

153⅝ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale.

House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187⅜ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26⅝ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swauger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to

JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent,
OAKLAND, MD

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,

Office 7 North Liberty St.

CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—REPUBLICAN Building.
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
OAKLAND, MD
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. fe14-1y

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 1y

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice.
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 30-97

M. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 18-'99

H. W. McCOMAS, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to 9 p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county, Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 6 22 6m

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J. HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county and Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26t*

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate.
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats, descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily		3.42 A. M
No. 3—Daily		7.35 A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday		10.01 A. M
No. 55—Daily		4.52 P. M
No. 1—Daily		10.07 P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily		5.50 A. M
No. 2—Daily		6.52 A. M
No. 46—Express, daily		4.41 P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun		5.12 P. M
No. 12—Daily		8.35 P. M
No. 4—Daily		12.37 A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.
IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3 P. M.	SOUTHWARD No. 1 A. M.	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2 NOON	NORTHWARD No. 4 P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. Junc.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*9 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 51	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05	3 05
6 31	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 59	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 43	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 29
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv *†7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.			A. M. A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager. G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 1901. NUMBER 24.

REPUBLICAN STATE PLATFORM.

Selfish Bosses Denounced and Specific Reforms Promised.

Below will be found the platform unanimously adopted by the Republican State Convention on the 6th instant, in Baltimore. It is a strong presentation of the issues upon which the fight in this State will be made this fall, and deserves a careful perusal by all our readers:

The Republicans of Maryland, in State Convention assembled, reaffirm the National platform adopted at Philadelphia.

Under President McKinley and a Republican Congress, the United States has become a great world power. Industry has revived. Labor is employed at the highest wages. The gold standard is firmly fixed. Our export trade leads the world.

A Republican Congress has just reduced taxes $40,000,000, yet our credit is the highest in the world. Our National Treasury, in place of a Democratic deficit, shows an increased surplus.

In diplomacy the successful management of President McKinley in China has added new glory to the American name. In Cuba the nation's pledge is being faithfully fulfilled. To Hawaii and Porto Rico American administration already brings marvelous progress.

In the Philippines insurrection has been suppressed, and civil government is steadily superceding military control. Under our flag personal freedom and a government of liberty regulated by law are the benificent results fast coming to the people of our distant possessions. We confidently pledge our Republican Senator and our Representatives in Congress to uphold our great President in his successful Administration; to support the Republican insular policy, now sanctioned by the Supreme Court; to maintain the public credit and to guard the protective policy which has brought us such prosperity at home, and an export trade which the world envies.

After a generation of fraud and violence at the polls, Republicans gave our people peaceful, fair and free elections, reassessed property, and equalized the burden of taxation in case of the laborer and the farmer, assessed $60,000,000 additional stocks and bonds, gave free school books to our children, gave Baltimore a modern city charter, refunded the public debt at lower interest, and so reduced the debt that it would have been wiped out in four more years of Republican rule.

The Republican party compelled officials of the Gorman-Rasin administrations to disgorge public moneys, and collected public dues from long-exempted corporations. Republicans first gave, in counties and cities, minority representation in the administration of our schools.

In four years a Republican State administration redeemed every pledge whereon it was elected. In two years the present Democratic administration has broken every pledge whereby Democracy regained power. It promised to pass laws to repress the great and growing evil of trusts. The Democratic Legislature defeated a bill to redeem this pledge, which the Democratic Convention was ashamed even to repeat in this year's platform. It pledged a non-partisan administration to the Police Department of Baltimore and to emancipate the force from partisan control. Instead, the administration of the police law is a sham and a fraud. It pledged reduction of State taxes, yet in the regular session the Legislature was extravagant and corrupt beyond precedent, and in extraordinary session wasted money on a partisan census useless to the State, but valuable to the Democratic campaign workers, at the taxpayers' expense; perpetrated a most unfair gerrymander of Baltimore city districts, and made itself infamous by its unconstitutional disfranchising election law.

It twice defeated the corrupt practices act, which it promised to enact. It promised a non-partisan administration of the public schools, and yet promptly so empowered a partisan Governor that he forthwith turned out every non-partisan board and put the public schools in every county upon a political basis.

The Republican party, which redeemed all its pledges to the people of our State, now gives these new promises, which it will as surely perform:

In the words of our own Declaration of Rights, we reaffirm that "the right of the people to participate in the Legislature is the best security of liberty and the foundation of all free government." . . . . . "And every male citizen having the qualifications prescribed by the Constitution ought to have the right of suffrage." Therefore, a Republican Legislature will repeal our unconstitional election law, and enact the bill prepared by the same association that formulated the election law of 1896, and restore manhood suffrage in Maryland.

It will enact the corrupt practices bill prepared by the same organization, and thereby decrease or prevent the bribery of voters. It will take out of politics the police of Baltimore city, secure appointments by the merit system, and put an end to promotions and dismissals for political reasons. It will pass a new police bill prepared by the same organization.

It will regulate primary elections. It will adopt a compulsory primary election law, and make the primaries as fair as it has made our general elections.

It will bring the local control of the schools in the counties near to the school district, and yet remove it further from partisan politics.

It never legislates in reckless disregard of business interests, but it is ready by law to curb and defeat organized trusts which stifle competition in trade, and to suppress all combinations which create a monopoly. It passed the only Federal laws against trusts, and in this State will handle these problems with conservatism and courage.

The oyster and crab industries of Maryland give employment and support to a large part of our population. In the packing houses and on board the numerous craft that take oysters from the waters of the State, capital and labor join hands, and any legislation may be declared unwise and hurtful that needlessly hampers the legitimate operations of the one or burdens or curtails the privileges of the other.

We condemn the Democratic State oyster law of 1900, in that it has created a small army of officials selected from the mercantile and other avocations with almost unlimited powers, and has worked great hardship upon both the packer and boatman, and placed burdens upon the whole oyster industry too grievous to be borne.

The oyster beds and bars in some sections of the State are much worn and need replenishing; from these bottoms many thousand sturdy citizens take their livlihood, and bring in large measure to their communities what prosperity they enjoy.

The Republican party, as in the past, pledges its best efforts in behalf of this most worthy class, and favors that legislation which will revive and replenish these oyster bottoms at public expense. All the rights which the oystermen and crabbers have had in the past shall remain to be enjoyed by them, and not pass into the possession of a certain few who are depending upon Democratic legislation to abridge ancient rights and grab public territory.

We appeal to all good citizens to unite in defeating the selfish political bosses in their conspiracy, begun with the extra session, to perpetuate themselves and their methods, by one-sided elections, and to thwart the first purpose of that conspiracy by defeating the election to the United States Senate of the Democratic leader who dictated the disfranchising election law to a servile Assembly. Their victory would again fasten upon our State the reign of corruption and violence overthrown in 1895, and enable them to entrench themselves for a generation behind a far worse disfranchising election law than the un-American law we are pledged to repeal.

If we succeed, we will defeat the election to the United States Senate of a man whose views on tariff and finance fluctuate with political exigencies, who is stable only in unvarying control of the Democratic party machine. If we succeed, we will forever destroy the power of that Democratic city boss who, beyond the average span of human life, has tolled legislation and controlled Baltimore politics for revenue only.

The Deer Park Fair.

Friday of last week the fair under the auspices and for the benefit of the Deer Park Village Improvement Society was held in the grove at the Deer Park Hotel.

The plot of ground upon which the fair was held was an ideal one and was roped off in order that none could gain admittance without paying the requisite fee.

In one portion of the grounds was situated a dairy, presided over by a number of young ladies in peasant costume who dispensed deliciously cool milk and other dairy products. A lucrative trade was transacted here and the investment proved a paying one.

Nearby was a table where ice cream, cake, candy and sweets of all kinds could be purchased. Also, cigars, etc.

The stand devoted to the sale of fancy articles, jewelry, etc., was well patronized and the amount of money realized from the sale of these articles went well toward swelling the exchequer of the society.

At another table were vegetables, fruits, etc., for sale.

The Japanese pavilion was the prettiest and best arranged of the large number on the grounds. The ladies in charge were all tastily arrayed in Japanese costumes.

The grounds and stands were unusually picturesque and the ladies and gentlemen in charge of the affair are to be congratulated upon its success.

The money sealized, which, we understand, was a considerable sum, will be devoted to the furthering of the plans of the association to make Deer Park and its surroundings more attractive.

Developing Coal Lands.

Squire Wm. Birmingham, of Barton, Allegany county, is developing a large tract of coal land underlaid with the upper and lower four foot veins of coal, and the five foot vein, known as the "Split vein" on the Duckworth and Michaels farms, adjoining the Franklin coal mines, known as the Davis Coal company, on Georges Creek. The Squire has options on the principal part of this large tract of coal land.—Piedmont Independent.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

MOUNTAIN TRIOLETS.

IN THE HAYING.

A dainty picture, all will say,
The girls are in the haying:
There's Belle and Maude and Ida, gay—
A dainty picture, all will say—
And how I love to make the hay,
'Tis all such merry playing.
A dainty picture, all will say,
The girls are in the haying.

While bumble bees through August noons
Go booming through the clover,
A scoffing cricket sits and croons
While bumble bees through August noons
Are seeking for the honey-moons
Where Cupid played the rover;
While bumble bees through August noons
Go booming through the clover.

Where fields of buckwheat blooming white
In mountain lands alluring,
'Neath azure skies so deep and bright
Where fields of buckwheat blooming white,
'Tis there sweet Fancy takes her flight
And Hope is more assuring;
Where fields of buckwheat blooming white
In mountain lands alluring.

August, 1901. T. L. L.

THE TOWN OF BABYVILLE.

[Hon. Lou M. Beauchamp, of Hamilton, Ohio, who lectured at the Park at the beginning of the Chautauqua season and recited the poem entitled "The Town of Babyville," of which he himself is the author, created great applause. We have been favored by Mr. Beauchamp with a copy of the poem and publish it herewith.—EDITOR REPUBLICAN.]

It's the dearest town, the fairest town, the prettiest town to me,
Of all the towns in all the lands, this side or cross the sea:
It's sunshine there, and moonshine there, and starlight all the time,
And it's never cold, and none get old, in it's lovely summer clime;
There's never a ghost or a goblin there, and sin was never known,
And no one ever had a pain, or heard a neighbor groan,
And the birds sing always, night and day, in fact they're never still,
In this airy, fairy, darling place, the Town of Babyville.

The stores are full of sweetmeats, and they're sold for just a song,
The hobby-horses in the streets are free the whole day long;
The band plays every afternoon, there's fireworks every night,
And all the babies toddle out to see the glorious sight.
You kiss them as you meet them, and they kiss you when you go,
And clap their hands, and laugh with glee, to see you at their show;
The doctor died last summer, and is resting o'er the hill,
For none get sick, they haven't time, in the Town of Babyville.

The houses are of gingerbread, the fences are of cake;
The river's full of lemonade, and a big panada lake;
You eat whenever hungry, and you drink whenever dry,
And pay your board in kisses,—that surely isn't high;
But if you want to live there you have to pay a toll,
Some pay it very readily, some can't, to save their soul;
It's not in gold or silver, nor yet a paper bill,
It's just to bring a baby to the Town of Babyville.

You can live with us forever, if a baby comes along,
We want another sunny face, another voice in song,
For we all sing in our village, from the book of Mother Goose,
And it takes a babe to teach you how to let your voice out loose;
So if you think of coming, just send your name along,
And tell us when the baby came, and if it's well and strong,
And tell us when to meet you, we'll be waiting by the mill,
And the band will play you welcome to the Town of Babyville.

God bless us all, and keep us, when heavy hearts there'd be
If all these little darlings should be lost to you and me;
There would never be a sunny day in all the wide, wide land,
And all the skies above us, with clouds could but be spanned;
But God is good, stop worrying, and join me in a song,
Here's love, and life, and sunshine to the babies, weak and strong,
Let's cuddle down beside them, and rest content, until
God calls us all to Heaven, from the Town of Babyville.

HOYES.

Weather very warm.

Plenty of rain and the pasture lands are reviving as a result.

Corn is growing finely.

The berry crop is good but the apple crop is quite a failure.

George E. Bishoff is building another silo.

Lorenzo DeWitt and Guy McKeen left last Sunday for parts unknown.

A picnic at Accident on next Saturday will be attended by a number of young people from this section.

Harry Fike, who is employed in the woods by Thomas Flanigan, met with a serious accident recently by which his leg was broken and very badly crushed.

William Sterling, of Elder, died on Monday, after a prolonged illness of typhoid fever. He leaves a wife and two children.

Stops the Cough and Works off the Cold.

Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets cure a cold in one day. No Cure, no Pay. Price 5 cents.

SCHLEY COUNSEL WANT TO KNOW.

They Want Facts in Purported Howison Interview.

WASHINGTON, August 20.—The letter of Admiral Schley inviting the attention of the Navy Department to the interview in a Boston paper in which Admiral Howison expressed certain views very decidedly in favor of Admiral Sampson, and as adverse to Admiral Schley, and asking the department to learn from Admiral Howison if the interview is authentic, was received by Acting Secretary Hackett this morning. Mr. Hackett refused to state what action he had taken, if any. It is a fair inference that Mr. Hackett has consulted Secretary Long and that he will be directed by Mr. Long to forward to Admiral Howison a letter asking categorically if the interview is authentic and seeking to ascertain, if it is not true, why Admiral Howison has not repudiated it long ago.

It was understood at the department when Mr. Hackett announced several days ago, that Admiral Howison had been selected to succeed Admiral Kimberly, who declined to serve, that the Acting Secretary had received from Admiral Howison a letter explicitly stating that he had not expressed an opinion on the Sampson-Schley controversy. It is remarkable that Admiral Howison should have forgotten the appearance of the interview in question, and it is most unfortunate that he completely ignored it in his letter to Mr. Hackett.

A copy of Admiral Howison's reply will be sent to Admiral Schley, whose counsel will then decide on their next step. It must not be understood that Messrs. Wilson and Rayner are protesting against Admiral Howison as a member of the court of inquiry. They were careful to state yesterday in their interview with Mr. Hackett that they regarded Admiral Howison with high respect and that they had all confidence in his integrity. Nevertheless their professional duty to their client, Admiral Schley, compelled them to ascertain if any charge that one of his judges in the coming trial had expressed an opinion harshly adverse to him, was true. Under the regulations governing the procedure in a court of inquiry, the right is reserved to Admiral Schley to challenge any member of the court.

The assurance is given by friends of Secretary Long that he will dispose of this matter himself, and that Mr. Hackett will be merely the public medium. It is stated that if Admiral Howison in his reply to the letter from the department does not repudiate the interview thoroughly and decisively, Secretary Long will forthwith relieve him from duty and appoint another rear admiral whose fairness is beyond dispute, and the name of Rear Admiral Jouett is already mentioned as Admiral Howison's successor.

The department also received this morning the letter from Admiral Schley demanding to be supplied with a copy of the government's list of witnesses. The letter is written in a firm tone and asks this list as the well-established right of their client. Secretary Hackett has referred this letter to Captain Lemly, the Judge Advocate of the Court, who is still out of the city. Captain Lemly will return next Monday, when he will proceed to make up his list and promptly supply Admiral Schley with a copy.

Admiral Schley and his counsel, Captain Parker and Judge Wilson, held another conference this morning at the Shoreham Hotel which lasted until 12 o'clock. Several papers of importance were gone over and a number of points brought out. Mr. Rayner is in Baltimore. He will return to Washington on Thursday, when other developments in the case are looked for. In the meantime, Judge Wilson and Captain Parker are hard at work on the case, outlining the general plan for the conduct of the Admiral's defense and arranging evidence.

Admiral Schley's popularity was never more completely demonstrated than by the enormous amount of mail which has poured into the Arlington since his arrival here. It has been years since a patron of the hotel received so many letters and packages as are being delivered daily to the Admiral. Many of the letters are from strangers, and contain earnest expressions of good will and hope for success. Admiral Schley sees few callers. He still declines to make any statement of his case.

Mr. Hackett's interview with the newspaper men was particularly brief to-day. Yesterday he gave out a carefully prepared statement to the press, telling about the visit of Admiral Schley's counsel to his office and announcing the demand for the government's list of witnesses as the sale purpose of their visit. Some newspaper men, in their dispatches, rather tartly invited attention to Mr. Hackett's ill-advised reticence. Accordingly, to-day Mr. Hackett refused to say a word.

Communicated.

Maryland Agricultural College,
President's Office, July 12, 1901.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Another year has closed upon the work of the Maryland Agricultural College. For the past four years you have given space in your columns to a circular letter, giving an account of the year's work, for the benefit of your rural and urban communities.

The technical nature of the different courses gives an opportunity to fit young men for some special work in life. Our graduates find occupation without difficulty, upon finishing their work with us. Every department is equipped with modern appliances for practical work; each scientific department has its laboratory, and the young man acquires the power to perform a definite work by becoming himself a personal investigator. The only rational method of learning how to do, is to DO YOURSELF.

The year has been a prosperous and satisfactory one. The average attendance for the past seven years has been raised by this year's registry. For the eight years preceding 1892, the average attendance was fifty—since then the attendance has been one hundred and twenty. The grade of the work has been advanced, until to-day the graduates are admitted to post-graduate work in Johns-Hopkins University, or accept positions where special technical training is required. Never in the history of the world has there been a period when qualified men, who can do one special kind of work well, were in greater demand. Think over this statement for your son.

A departure from the usual methods of procedure in certain classes of State and National work, has been welcomed by many who feel an especial pride in the outcome of work requiring for its best execution, special training. There can be little doubt such a policy is the only true one. Bureaus made up of laymen, with no special training to prosecute the work, must necessarily dissipate much of the means appropriated for the specific purpose, in fruitless effort.

The past conception that men of science are necessarily impractical, if ever true, cannot apply to this age. Closely connected with, and animating every agency for the public advencement in this day, should be carefully trained and scientific experts, working out every detail of the problems involved. This policy has been inaugural by the State of Maryland. May its inauguration be followed by the incorporation of the principle as a fixed policy of the State—not only in its material concerns, but likewise in its fiscal and economic problems as well.

The wisdom of such is clearly demonstrated in the work of the Geologic Survey, Weather Service and Highways, under the control of the Johns-Hopkins University and the Maryland Agricultural College. The publications from these sources bearing upon the work under supervision, have not only a State and National reputation, but International as well. Maryland's resources, and the factors entering into making her territory a desirable place of abode, are known over the world as never before, due to these agencies.

The Food and Fertilizer Control, Farmers Institute Department and State Horticultural Department, under the control of the Board of Trustees, have given a character of service which has commanded the confidence of the people of the State.

The growth and development of the College and Experiment Station have spread their influence in every section of Maryland.

As powerful agencies in the uplifting of your State, you are asked to emphasize this work by bringing it to the homes of your constituents.

Very truly yours,
R. W. SILVESTER,
President Maryland Agricultural College.

A Team Runs Away.

The two-horse team belonging to Charles B. Cropp, the Oakland groceryman, ran away at Mountain Lake Park Wednesday of last week. The wagon was loaded with watermelons and was overturned. Mr. Cropp was badly bruised and his son, Hosmer, quite seriously so. The wagon was almost entirely demolished.

SMALLPOX MUCH FEARED.

Conditions Indicate an Epidemic Next Winter—Officers Urged to Act.

The regular monthly meeting of the State Board of Health, which was held in Baltimore Wednesday, was attended by all the members—something which has never before occurred at the August meeting.

The recent outbreaks of smallpox in Washington and Frederick counties were discussed, and it was agreed that the trouble was mainly caused by the negligence of two physicians—one in Maryland and one in Franklin county, Pennsylvania, from which place the disease was imported into this State. Steps were taken to have the Maryland physician presented by the grand jury of his county.

Dr. John S. Fulton, the secretary, was instructed to write a strong letter to each of the local boards of health in the State urging the necessity of advance action to meet an epidemic of smallpox, which, it is feared by medical men, will occur next winter. Dr. Fulton said in explanation:

"The boards of health and medical experts all over the country have agreed with great unanimity that all conditions indicate an epidemic of smallpox all over this country next winter second to none since 1872.

"The reappearance of the disease in any considerable number of cases is about coincident with the beginning of the Spanish-American war. It has now been scattered all over the country, and in practically every State there are a number of small foci for the spread of the epidemic. It first developed in the South, and has been carried northward, mainly by negros.

"The summer is the season most favorable to the spread of the contagion, which is carried by berry pickers, harvesters and other nomads. When winter comes and people are shut up in their houses the disease developes. Preventive measures are less striking in their results, but they are better and more efficient than remedial measures are, and money can be saved by advance action. Thus, contracts for medical attendance and nursing and for ground of pest-houses can be made more advantageously when there is no smallpox about than in the actual presence of danger."

Sparks' Show Coming.

John H. Sparks' New Railroad Shows and Trained Animal Exposition will exhibit in Oakland on Friday, August 30, afternoon and evening. Admission only 10 and 25 cents. This show is known the world over as the largest, grandest and best 25 cent show on the road, with all new, startling, original and up-to-date features. The finest performing lions, wolves and elephants on earth are to be seen with Sparks' big one ring shows, together with a troupe of highly educated horses, ponies, mules, dogs, goats and monkeys, also a fine acrobatic and gymnastic performance and six funny clowns. See Romeo, the largest lion in captivity, and Mary, the smallest baby elephant ever on exhibition. See our grand free balloon ascension, with a parachute jump, also a free thrilling high tower dive from a ladder 80 feet high into a net. This is given free to all from the show ground at 1 and 7 p. m., rain or shine. Don't miss it. It alone is worth going many miles to see and it costs you nothing. Mr. Sparks offers a handsome bedroom suite to any couple that will take a trip in his big bridal balloon and get married. Now is your chance for a big novel wedding and a handsome present, and no danger of any accident at all. There have been hundreds of successful marriages in this big balloon and not a single accident. Now is a chance of a life time. Don't miss it.

Resolutions of Respect.

At a recent meeting of the Oakland Concert Band the following resolutions on the death of Mr. Bert W. Wolf were adopted:

WHEREAS, It has pleased Divine Providence to remove from among us our esteemed brother member, Bert W. Wolf, whose death came as a great shock to the members of this organization; therefore be it

Resolved, By the Oakland Concert Band, that in the death of our brother member our loss is keenly felt and we deeply deplore his taking away, but submit to the will of Him who doeth all things well; and be it further

Resolved, That our sympathy be extended to the relatives of the deceased in this sad hour of their bereavement and loss; and

Resolved, That these resolutions be spread upon the minutes of the band and a copy be sent to the mother of the deceased and published in the county papers.

P. E. KIMMELL,
LEO J. RASCHE,
ROY HAMILL,
Committee.

Call for Your Letters.

Mrs. Lizzie Morrison, Geo. L. Long, S. D. Sherrcord, J. C. Browning, L. C. Tabb, Jeff. D. Kisner, R. Vincent, Jr., & Sons.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

Where Chance Intervened

By William McLeod Raine.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

KATE DALTON found her friend Jessie Cochrane's lovers an interesting study. It is to be presumed she fell to comparisons, and that in the process a certain stalwart young man of her own far away in the east did not suffer. She was convinced that ultimate victory would rest with either Lieut. Horace Mansfield or Mr. James Warren, and the long odds were all in favor of the army officer who was fresh from the laurels of a Santiago campaign. It did not hurt the case of Mansfield that he had accidentally come into collision with a Mauser bullet while he was on his way up the hill to the Spanish intrenchments on that fatal day when so many blue-coated lads went to their death. In fact, unless Miss Danton guessed wrong, it lent to him a romantic glamour which was seriously lacking in the person of that unromantic business civilian Warren. Probably the lieutenant was quite unconscious of playing the hero, even though he had a good deal to say about Cuba, but Jessie Cochrane in her imagination dressed him for the part and set him on a pedestal whether he would or not.

When the four of them started on the cog road for the summit of Bear's peak one morning the smiles were for the gentleman with gold buttons, and James Warren was quick to recognize that fact. He was a prosaic man who faced the facts of life, and the one that stood out to hurt him now was the certainty that the scales were dipping in favor of his rival. Yet though he was not enjoying life that morning he showed a wooden, unperturbed face, and forced himself to take part in the gay chat.

After a time they fell to telling stories, and Warren offered as his contribution the well-worn anecdote of the old lady who was riding on the cog road and grew nervous for fear of an accident. She stopped the conductor to ask him what would happen if the coupling pin should break. That official reassured her by explaining about the air brake. And if the air brake gave way? In that case there were other emergency brakes which might be relied upon to check the car. But supposing these too broke, what would then become of them? "In that case," the conductor told her, gravely, "it would depend upon the kind of life they had been leading."

THE SOLDIER WAS MUCH TO HER LIKING.

The talk drifted to a discussion of the abject terror and panic fear which sometimes sweeps over a crowd at a dangerous moment. The lieutenant believed that such moments were the touch-stones to test the quality of a man; if one flinched then he was a coward, if not he might be said to have won his spurs of manhood. Warren had not much to say about it. He stated that he had never been in a panic, and in consequence he could not tell how he would behave. He supposed he would be in a dreadful funk. He had known men with a good deal of sand lose their nerve at times, and he did not think they were necessarily cowards on that account. The young volunteer officer disagreed with him in toto, and it was plain that Miss Cochrane accepted his decision as final. Indeed, her friend from the east thought she looked Mr. Warren over rather cavalierly and that his defense of the unheroic man had lost him ground in her esteem.

The lieutenant appeared to have much to say to Miss Jessie of a private nature after the party had arrived at the summit of the Peak. The other two divined that they would rather be alone together, and though Warren longed for eyes in the back of his head he did not once let them get within his vision. The way he phrased the situation to himself was that the lieutenant ought to have his chance just as he, Warren, had had his; and if the soldier were more to her liking he hoped he was man enough to take it as a gentleman should.

The soldier was much to her liking that day at all events. They were having the gayest kind of a time, and their gayety had in it the shy ripple of happiness easy to be detected by an interested observer. More than once Miss Danton and Warren passed close to them without being themselves noticed, and both of them were conscious that the affair would reach a crisis before night. The girl from the east liked the imperturbable manner in which the civilian accepted the defeat which was inevitable. It was the way of the Anglo-Saxon, and a good way too, she told herself. She wanted to tell him that some day he would find a good woman to appreciate him, but she reflected that it would be impertinent and refrained.

It was on the way down that chance intervened. The lieutenant and Jessie Cochrane were a little quiet, and when their shy eyes met they did not hold each other long. It was Miss Danton and Warren on the seat behind them who kept the conversational ball rolling as the train moved slowly round the curves of the steep mountain edge. Presently the pace quickened perceptibly. Mansfield, looking for a moment far out of the big windows, drew in his head to say:

"We're going pretty fast. I don't know what the engineer can be thinking of. We are right at the steepest part of the grade, and he ought to go easy instead of sending her along like this."

Still the rate of speed increased ominously. The car swept round a curve at a pace which threatened to hurl it from the track over the precipitous edge of the mountain. The driving rod of the engine had broken by one of those mischances which happen once in a thousand years. Women began to cry out hysterically, wringing their hands and moaning. Men looked at each other with white, frightened faces, then made for the doors and the big windows in panic terror, everything forgotten except the horrible fear of death which was clutching at their hearts. The traditions of the Anglo-Saxon race were ignored, and they were bent on saving themselves, no matter whom they trampled down in their wild rush for safety.

Kate Danton was conscious of no fear, only anger and disgust at the selfishness and cowardice of the men who were intent on getting out at any cost. She saw Jessie Cochrane clutch at the arm of the lieutenant instinctively, and noticed that young Mansfield turned on his sweetheart a face sick with horror. Terror was knocking at his heart and sponging clean the slate of those things a man must remember. Another instant, and he had flung himself out of the window to the mountain slope outside.

James Warren looked into the angry eyes of the young woman beside him, then at the white-faced girl huddled on the seat in front. The one to whom his heart went out in that moment when life and death hung in the balance was the one who needed him most. He rose in the swaying, pitching car, and stumbled forward to the place beside her. Conventions were all forgotten. He remembered only that the woman he loved was close to eternity, and his arm encircled her to ward off harm if might be.

All this was a matter of seconds only. Presently the air brakes caught, the wheels ground into the iron of the tracks, gradually the speed slackened and the train jolted to a halt. There was plenty of excitement. Everybody was talking at once, explaining and questioning. The men who had played the lesser part were showing speciously just why they had jumped. It appeared that they had intended to get at the brakes somehow and that their minds had been full of saving the women, though when it came to details their explanations halted a little. Warren exchanged a grim and cynical smile with Miss Danton at all this voluble talk. One might have noticed that the men were really feeling sheepish and that their eyes met each other only furtively.

As for Lieutenant Mansfield, he offered no defense, but chose the manlier part of bearing his shame in silence. He was white to the lips with his disgrace, and he hated himself with a loathing that was exceeding bitter. He dropped into the seat beside Miss Danton and rode the rest of the way in silence. By tacit consent the accident was a tabooed topic. The young army officer had shown the white feather, and all of them understood that he was prepared to accept as his punishment the loss of his place in the regard of his sweetheart. He was quite out of the running, and he knew it. The day was one long agony of shame to him. It was seared into his consciousness beyond the chance of healing that after he had won his love he had lost by reason of his own cowardice. It did not help matters that he had only done what four-fifths of the rest of the men in the car had done. The point was that he had flinched where Warren had stood firm.

Three months later Miss Danton was chief bridesmaid at the wedding of Jessie Cochrane to Mr. James Warren. The affair passed off with great eclat, but one army officer in the Philippines who read the newspaper account found the reading something less than enjoyable, if one might judge by his white, tense face.

Feminine Charity.

Maude—Young DeAuber was married to that rich Getrox girl last week.

Clara—Why, I thought he claimed to be wedded to his art!

Maude—Well, she's mostly art.—Chicago Daily News.

Just a Hint.

"Let us sit nearer the music," she said.

"But then you can't hear what I am saying to you," he urged.

"Quite true," she admitted, sweetly.—Chicago Post.

Springs of Misconduct.

"You haven't any manners, Jack; why didn't you offer to escort that young woman home?"

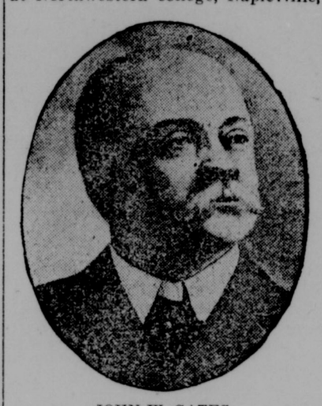
"Oh, I have manners all right; but I didn't have street car fare."—Chicago Record.

WESTERN IRON KING.

John W. Gates, of Chicago, One of the Important Factors in American Business Life.

John W. Gates stands in the foremost rank of iron and steel manufacturers in the country. Business associates say that they have never known him to be wrong on the iron and steel market, and his ability and judgment have placed him at the head of some of the most important enterprises in that industry in the United States.

Mr. Gates was born in Du Page county, Ill., on May 18, 1855, and was educated at the public schools and at Northwestern college, Napierville,



JOHN W. GATES.
(An Important Factor in Western Business Life.)

Ill., from which he graduated in 1873. He entered business as a dealer in grain, and then in hardware. While there he foresaw the possibilities of the wire business, and finally established the firm of J. W. Gates & Co. to deal in wire products. He organized in 1881 the Southern Wire company, and became its president. Three years later he formed the Baddock Wire company, of Pittsburgh, and with his associates became interested in the Iowa Barbed Wire company, of Allentown, Pa., the St. Louis wire mill, and the Baker Wire company, of Lockport, Ill. These companies were combined in December, 1892, into the Consolidated Steel and Wire company, with a capital of $4,000,000.

Mr. Gates resigned as president of the Consolidated Steel and Wire company in 1895, and in that year he became president of the Illinois Steel company. He held that position until September, 1898, when the company was taken into the Federal Steel company. In the meantime the Consolidated Steel and Wire company continued to grow, and in April, 1898, it was combined with other companies into the American Steel and Wire company, and Mr. Gates was elected chairman of the board of directors. Mr. Gates remained in that office for some time after the absorption of the company by the United States Steel corporation this year.

Mr. Gates is traveling abroad now, but has large business interests in Chicago. He and his friends bought the control of the Colorado Fuel and Iron company recently at an average price of about 50 for the stock. He is largely interested in Port Arthur, Tex.

THOUSANDS OF VIPERS.

Slain Every Year by a Peculiar Official Employed in the Prefecture of Haute, France.

In the prefecture of Haute, Loire, France, according to La Nature, they have an official viper killer. The present incumbent of this important office is a gentleman by the name of M. Courtol, who, judging from the statement that he kills an average of 1,500 vipers a year, and one year killed 2,502, must be pretty expert in the business. He receives five cents a head for all he destroys and makes a tolerably comfortable living out of his employment.

COURTOL, VIPER KILLER.
(On an Average He Destroys 1,500 Venomous Snakes Per Year.)

M. Courtol says the viper when at rest is not easily seen, according to the Philadelphia Times, as it assumes the color of the ground or rocks of the locality, becoming bluish black upon basaltic rocks and reddish upon volcanic scoriae. In addition to this, according to him, the viper chooses its bed before retiring by seeking ground of the same color as its skin.

M. Courtol has utilized 1,800 skins of these snakes in making himself two suits of clothes. One of them, which he is seen wearing in the picture, consists of a pointed cap, jacket, waistcoat and trousers; the other is in the style of Louis XV.

A Western City Sport.

Three bears were killed recently within the city limits of Seattle, Wash.

TRAMPS MADE TO WORK.

Nebraska Farmers Grab Them on Freight Trains and Compel Them to Earn Good Pay for Work.

Owing to the large crops the farmers in Nebraska and Kansas have to use all sorts of ingenious schemes to get harvest hands. Enterprise in this respect lately brought three citizens of Waverley within the grasp of the law, reports the New York Sun.

The three farmers were in the habit of lounging about the railroad station every evening between nine and ten o'clock. About that time a freight train came along and stopped for water. In the Lincoln yards before starting toward Waverley two accommodating brakemen always took great pains to leave one car unsealed. Into this tramps would jump.

When the train stopped for water at Waverley the farmers rushed for the car and seized the lurking tramps. One of the farmers was a justice of the peace. First the tramps were tempted by offers of good wages to work. In case the tramps refused these overtures they were thrown into the stuffy jail and sentenced to a few days' hard labor for vagrancy. The labor consisted in shocking wheat for one of the trio.

The tramps were put to work under close surveillance, and, when they finished their stint were allowed to depart in peace with full stomachs and a small sum of money given to them by the farmers.

Several of the neighbors were jealous of the three farmers because of the success of the tramp scheme and concluded to compete with the originators for some of the pauper labor.

One evening a few days ago the justice and his two associates found two neighbors in possession of a tramp whom they had discovered in the freight car. The vagrant averred that he was from the shady precincts of Chicago and declared that he would not degrade himself with farm labor. The two farmers declared that he must.

The three late arrivals with the justice at their head demanded the tramp. Alexander Farwell and Simon Buskirk, who held the tramp, refused to surrender him. A fight ensued. Farwell, it is alleged, struck the justice. Then a free-for-all fight followed. Farwell and Buskirk tried to defend their tramp. The trio of farmers were bound to get him.

In the melee the tramp delivered a few well-directed but impartial punches at the combatants and made his escape to a lumber yard near by. The justice and his party discomfited the opposition and then captured the tramp. He was sentenced to ten days for disturbing the peace and listed for the wheat fields the next morning.

Farwell and Buskirk were not discouraged. They made their way to the county judge early the next morning and swore out warrants for the three farmers, charging them with assault and battery. The trial will be held after harvest, and in the meantime the unfortunate tramp is the property of the man who can pounce upon him.

THE AMERICAN MAN.

Something About His Physical Condition as Compared with That of Europeans.

The most important, because the most fundamental, of problems concerning the quality of the American man concerns his physical condition as compared with that of his kindred beyond the sea. As to this point the evidence is so clear that it needs little discussion, says the International Monthly. It is evident that the American Indians, a race evidently on the ground for many thousand years before the coming of the Europeans, had found the land hospitable. For savages they were remarkably well developed, and, though unfitted for steady labor, their bodies were well made and enduring. Taking their place, the north Europeans, representing a wide range of local varieties, English, Irish, Highland Scotch, Germans, Scandinavians, Normans, French and many other groups of old world peoples, have, since their implantation 100 years or more ago, shown that the area of the continent from the Rio Grande to the far north is as suited to our kind as is any part of the earth.

This is sufficiently proved by the statistics of American soldiers gathered during the civil war; the American white man of families longest in this country is, on the average, larger than his European kinsman, the increase being mainly in the size of head and chest. It is further indicated by the endurance of these men in the trials of the soldier's life and by the remarkable percentage of recoveries from wounds. This endurance of wounds was regarded by the late Dr. Brown-Sequard as a feature common to all the mammals of this continent, being, as he claimed, on the basis of an extensive experience, as characteristic of American rabbits as of American men. Moreover, the statistics of life-insurance companies doing business in this country appear to indicate that the expectation of life is greater here than in the old world.

Saved by His Ugliness.

One of the conscripts appearing recently before the Nimes (Belgium) board of military examiners was disqualified on account of his extraordinary ugliness, which one of the officers held would make his comrades laugh and thus be subversive of discipline. His ugliness exonerates him from three years' service with the flag.—N. Y. Sun.

HAD FUN WITH THE PARSON.

Incidentally That Functionary Worked Off a Little Jollity on the Cowboy.

A clerical friend of mine told me a capital story of a Yale man who was the stroke ore of his crew, and the chief athlete on the football field, says a writer in the New York Times.

He entered the ministry and spent years in missionary labor in the far west. Walking one day through a frontier town, a cowboy stepped up to him and said:

"Parson, you don't have enough fun. Take a drink!"

The minister declined.

"Parson," said the cowboy, "you'll die if you don't have some fun."

And he knocked the parson's hat off his head and hit him a whack on the ear.

The old athlete's spirit rose; the science which he had learned in the college gymnasium and forgotten for a quarter of a century was aroused, a blow landed on the jaw of that cowboy that sent him sprawling in the street.

The parson walked over him as if he had been a door rug, picked him up and dusted the side of the house with him and then mopped up the sidewalk with his form.

As the ambulance was carrying the cowboy off he raised his head feebly and said:

"Parson, what did you fool me for? You are chock full of fun."

Curfew Law Invalid.

County Judge Smith at St. Paul, Neb., has declared the Nebraska curfew law unconstitutional. A week ago four young women, daughters in each instance of prominent families, engaged in a charivari. All are grown, but of an age which brings them within the provisions of the curfew ordinance. They were arrested and detained for being out late. Habeas corpus proceedings were begun, with the result that the law has been declared illegal, and the girls ordered released. An appeal will be taken to the higher courts.

The Chip Off the Block.—"I can tell you one thing, Maria. If Johnny is like me, he will have good staying qualities, anyhow." "He has them now, John. He'd stay in bed till noon every day if I'd let him."—Boston Traveller.

Not a Congenial Pursuit.—"And will you devote your son to art?" "No. He has too good an appetite."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Muffins with Dates.

Remove the seeds from half a pound of dates, and chop the flesh fine. Beat two tablespoonfuls of butter to a cream, add the dates and two eggs well beaten. Stir all together and add one cupful of milk. Sift three cupfuls of flour with two level teaspoonfuls of baking powder and one teaspoonful of salt. Mix to the liquid ingredients, pour into well buttered iron muffin pans, and bake half an hour in a quick oven. Good hot or cold; nice for children's lunch.—Ladies' World, New York.

Do Your Feet Ache and Burn?

Shake into your shoes, Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It makes tight or New Shoes Feel Easy. Cures Corns, Itching, Swollen, Hot, Callous, Smarting, Sore and Sweating Feet. All Druggists and Shoe Stores sell it, 25c. Sample sent FREE. Address, Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y.

So Say We All.—McJigger—"You don't mean to say you believe in divorce?" Thingumbob—"Well, I do in the case of the man who is wedded to his opinions."—Philadelphia Press.

Piso's Cure cannot be too highly spoken of as a cough cure.—J. W. O'Brien, 322 Third Ave., N., Minneapolis, Minn., Jan. 6, 1900.

After a railway collision we generally read that "the line was blocked for some hours." If the line had been "blocked" before, the collision would not have occurred.—Ally Sloper.

Relieve Whooping Cough

With Hoxsie's Croup Cure. No nausea. 50 cts.

An Unkind Cut.—Tess—"Do you think the cut of my skirt pretty?" Jess—"Yes, indeed; very." Tess—"Do you, really?" Jess—"Yes; I had two like that when they were in style."—Philadelphia Press.

Any place with just the right pair in it is as much of a paradise as was the Garden of Eden.—Good Cheer.

FRAGRANT

SOZODONT

a perfect liquid dentifrice for the

Teeth and Mouth

New Size SOZODONT LIQUID, 25c
SOZODONT TOOTH POWDER, 25c
Large LIQUID and POWDER, 75c

25c

At all Stores, or by Mail for the price.
HALL & RUCKEL, New York.

SKIN TORTURES

And every Distressing Irritation of the Skin and Scalp Instantly Relieved by a Bath with

Cuticura SOAP

And a single anointing with CUTICURA, the great skin cure and purest of emollients. This treatment, when followed in severe cases by mild doses of CUTICURA RESOLVENT, to cool and cleanse the blood, is the most speedy, permanent, and economical cure for torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, and pimply skin and scalp humours with loss of hair ever compounded.

Millions of Women

USE CUTICURA SOAP, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, in the form of baths for annoying irritations and inflammations, or too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and many sanative antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women and mothers, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. No amount of persuasion can induce those who have once used these great skin purifiers and beautifiers to use any others. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients and the most refreshing of flower odours. It unites in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the BEST skin and complexion soap, and the BEST toilet and baby soap in the world.

Complete External and Internal Treatment for Every Humour,

Cuticura THE SET

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales, and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT, to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humours, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. British Depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 27 and 28, Charterhouse Sq., London, E. C. POTTER DRUG AND CHEM. CORP., Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

HOMELESS CHILDREN.

A Few Illustrative Instances of the Part Played by the Liquor Traffic in Torture of Little Ones.

About two years ago the New Voice, reviewing for its readers the "Committee of Fifty's" book, "Economic Aspects of the Liquor Problem," emphasized the fact that, according to the statement of that exceedingly conservative work 45 per cent. of the great army of homeless children—an army that in the United States is every year recruited by 16,000 little ones who were abandoned by their parents—that 45 per cent. of these, by the most conservative estimate, are homeless and friendless because of drink.

In the city of Chicago there is an institution that has for its object the care and rescuing of homeless children. It is known as the "American Home Finding association" and is particularly engaged, as its name would indicate, in finding homes for homeless little ones. Naturally this institution has had much observation with regard to the part played by drink in the destitution of children and recently its superintendent was requested by the New Voice to narrate a few of the instances that he has met.

THE NAMELESS LITTLE SINGER.

The association keeps no statistics with regard to the causes of the homelessness of the children for whom it cares, but everyone connected with the institution has a fund of narratives bearing upon the subject. Owing to the fact that many of these little ones are now in comfortable homes where they are loved and cared for, it is, of course, not desirable that their history should be recorded in such a way that in future years it will be remembered. Nor is it wise, sometimes, to publish their pictures for the same reason. A few photographs, however, were secured and the story of many instances was learned.

One of the inmates of the home to-day is a three-months-old baby taken from its drunken father after the death of its mother and after the father, in drunken brutality, had threatened to kill his child. There are two other little ones of whom the record is "mother drunken and dissolute, sunken in the very depths of dissipation."

Two others are a brother and a sister, three and five years old, inmates of the home because their drunken parents cannot care for them. There are two pretty little boys, hardly more than babies, both of them the victims of drunken parents.

One of the interesting cases in the home's history is that of a little girl who, at the age of 11 years, was found singing in the lowest dives of Chicago to earn money to buy drink for her brutal father.

The little boy, Sylvester, was found almost dead from starvation lying by the side of his dead mother, who, abandoned by her drunken husband, penniless and an invalid, had committed suicide in a dingy garret.

Little three-year-old Verna will never see the daylight and is blind because of the drunkenness and indifference of her parents.

Not a few of the cases cared for by the Home Finding association are those of abandoned mothers with their little children and among these cases drink has been a most frequent factor. In the home at the present time are three mothers with their little children, all of whom tell this story, one of them refusing in abject terror to even tell her name for fear its publication might reveal her hiding place to a drunken brute, who once swore to "love, cherish and protect" her.

One of the stories told at the home was that of the rescue of a family of four little children, the youngest two years old and the oldest only ten, who were found in midwinter in a dilapidated house in Chicago, where for 24 hours they had been alone without fire or food with the body of their dead mother. Their father had died a drunkard two years before.

The superintendent of the association, Dr. George K. Hoover, asked for a statement with regard to the percentage of homeless children who are made homeless by drink, said:

"I believe it to be a conservative statement that the drink habit is the cause of bringing more than one-half of the homeless children to homelessness and poverty. In addition to this it must be remembered that the traffic forces thousands of children into an environment whereby they are in the constant presence of dissipation and are of necessity schooled in crime, their lives blasted and society scourged."

TOBACCO A GOOD THING.

How a Preacher Stopped the Mouth and Spoiled the Argument of a User of the Weed.

Some years ago, while laboring as an evangelist in a country community near the city of A, I spoke one evening on the evil of using tobacco. While making calls among the people the next day I visited one of the leading families of the neighborhood. I expressed my pleasure at their regularity in attending the meetings and invited them to continue to come. The man of the house remarked that he didn't just know about that, as he was offended at my remarks about tobacco. I replied that I would be very sorry indeed to have him stop coming to meeting.

He said that he was satisfied that tobacco was a good thing, and he could prove it to me, and added that if I could successfully answer his argument he would continue to attend the meetings.

He had a large family of boys and girls, and it being a stormy day, several of his neighbors had dropped in. I thought, perhaps, a conversation with him on that subject might be profitable to them, so I consented to try and meet his arguments, and asked him to proceed.

"Do you believe that God made tobacco?" he asked. "I certainly do," I replied. "Did He not say that all He made was very good?" he continued. "If tobacco is good it is not therefore an evil thing and consequently it is not wrong for even Christians to use it if they wanted to do so," he said, with a look of triumph.

I answered: "My friend, your argument is the best I ever heard in favor of mankind using tobacco. In fact, I do not believe there is a better one. But it is my turn now to ask questions. You will kindly answer mine as frankly as I did yours." To this he readily consented. "Very well," said I, "did God make wolves?" "He did," he replied. "And did He not pronounce them with the rest of creation, good?" "He certainly did," he answered. "Have you a flock of sheep?" I asked. "I have," he responded. "Well, sir, seeing that wolves are good they must be good for all purposes. Tell me why you do not get one and use him as a sheep dog?" "Why, he would kill my sheep," he exclaimed. "Oh! I see then that according to the nature of the animal it is not good for it to act as a sheep dog. Now, sir, tell me, do you think God made snakes?" "I believe He did," he replied. "And they are, therefore, good?" I asked. "They must be if God made them," he answered. "I see you wear a necktie. Tell me why you do not get one of those pretty, little streaked snakes and make a necktie out of it?"

The boys laughed and the girls shuddered, while the man, seeing the weakness of his argument, blushed and said: "It would not do to use snakes in that way."

"So then, my friend, while it is true that God made wolves and snakes and pronounced them good, He did not mean that they were good for all purposes." "I expect you are right," answered the confused man. "Now, sir, while it is a fact that God made tobacco and saw it was good, do you not see that He did not intend it for all purposes, and that it is good only in the place God intended it to act as a good thing. I know of a few things in which it seems to manifest its virtues. Mountain goats and ugly green worms feed on it. It is certainly good for them. It is also used for dyeing purposes and killing lice on animals; but because it is good for these things is no reason to suppose it is good to be used in a manner by men that makes them filthy, and frequently renders others uncomfortable. It is just as much out of place in a human mouth as a wolf is out of place as a sheep dog or a snake used as a necktie."

After a few words of prayer I bade them a cheerful good morning and passed on my way. He came to the remainder of the meetings.—Earnest Christian.

NEWS AND COMMENT.

The Corean government has promulgated a law enforcing the penalty of death for opium smoking.

There are 28,894 juvenile temperance societies in the British islands, with a membership of 2,536,000.

Mrs. Angeline Ewing, of Toledo, O., has been awarded damages of $100 against August Noethan, saloonist, for selling liquor to her boy.

"Practical Methods of Dealing with the Liquor Traffic," is one of the subjects announced on the programme of the great Ecumenical Methodist conference to be held in London September 4-16.

The new liquor law of North Carolina requires that before application is made for liquor license it is incumbent upon every applicant to advertise the fact of his intention so to do at least 30 days prior to the passage upon said application by the county commissioners.

An empty whisky barrel exploded in New Haven the other day, causing considerable havoc. Here is another strong argument in favor of the proposition to let the whisky barrel remain unemptied.—Chicago Record-Herald. Why not do away with the whisky barrel entirely?

Peers and Public Houses.—A parliamentary return just issued shows the number of licensed houses owned by peers. The list includes the following: Lord Derby, 72; duke of Bedford, 50; duke of Devonshire, 47; duke of Rutland, 37; duke of Northumberland, 36; Lord Dudley, 33; Lord Cowper, 22; Lord Salisbury, 11; Lord Dunraven, 11.—London Tit-Bits.

CLAIMS FOR MANGLE ISLAND.

Sovereignty Over Them and Other Small Islands Asserted by Nicaragua.

The government of Nicaragua has recently put in a claim to sovereignty over several groups of small islands, including the Mangle islands, lying off the Atlantic coast of the Isthmus of Panama, says the Washington Star. The question arose when President Loubet of France recently gave his decision as to the boundary between Costa Rica and Colombia. The decision awarded to Colombia a considerable part of the territory in dispute, including the valuable bay of Chiriqui, on the Atlantic side, and also several groups of outlying islands which were in dispute between the two governments. When the award was made known Nicaragua came forward with a claim of ownership over the small group of islands. It was answered in behalf of Colombia that President Loubet had carefully gone over the records establishing ownership, and that these had failed to disclose any authority on the part of Nicaragua to claim them. The negotiations have not proceeded beyond this point. The islands are rather unimportant except for their strategic location off the easterly entrance to any canal route which may be chosen. For this reason the controversy has received the attention of the isthmian canal commission, which has not, however, had occasion to take definite action on the subject.

An Elevator in the Monument.

Not all of us have viewed the national capital from the top of Washington monument, but it will hereafter be easy to do so if on the spot. The shaft has been equipped with an elevator, and the new "lift," which rises 555 feet to the top, is provided with electrical cut-offs and mechanical grips of every kind so as to insure the safety of the public. In the opinion of the government engineering officers, it would be impossible for the car to fall any distance, no matter what might happen to the machinery. The new car will not be put into service for the public for about a week. In the meantime the machinery will be run daily and the attendants and engineers practiced in its operation. In favorable weather the view from the top of the monument is a magnificent one, comprehending the city and much historic country.

Preventive of Smallpox.

A doctor out west alleges that he has discovered that apple cider vinegar taken in reasonable quantities is a sure preventive of smallpox.

REV. MOLLIE CRAFT.

Mollie B. Craft is the first regular ordained woman minister in the religious work of the colored race. Through her efforts a colored Baptist church has just been organized in one of the suburbs of Chicago. She was ordained in Milwaukee in 1898. She is a graduate of the Howe Baptist theological school of Memphis. Her evangelical work began in the north, much of it being in the mining and lumber districts of northern Michigan. She organized many congregations in those regions. She is well known to all colored church goers from Tennessee to Michigan and Illinois.

CALIFORNIA'S NATURAL SPHINX.

The strange freak of nature here illustrated has recently been found along the boundary line of Los Angeles and Ventura counties, Cal. Scientists who have seen a picture of the strange formation say that there is no other rock in existence that is such a perfect representation of a man's head. The San Francisco Call delights in claiming that California now has a sphinx which is just as imposing as that in far-away Egypt, that it is older than the African handwork and the only perfect piece of statuary in the world thus far discovered, wrought by the hand of the Almighty Himself.

HARSH-VOICED CANARIES.

They Are Not Allowed by German Experts to Stay with the More Promising Singers.

"Moulting is the crucial time for a canary's voice," writes Ida Shaper Hoxie in an article on "The Singing Village of Germany," in Ladies' Home Jornal. "Some birds lose the little that they have; others, of course, blossom out into promising singers. As soon as a harsh tone is heard, out goes that unfortunate bird, for promising singers must never hear a harsh chirp. When I asked what became of the unfortunates I was told by the fanciers: 'Oh, we sell them, of course. You know they can sing in a way, and many people don't know the difference between a good singer and a bad one.' My mind went back to a certain canary I had had to live with once in America! I wondered what percentage of these outcasts, who are huddled together in a cage out of hearing of the more favored birds and allowed to chirp as they please, go to America. One of the men who devotes all his time to the canaries allowed me to spend several hours among his birds. I sat a long while trying to analyze the exquisite sounds that came from a dozen tiny cages with closed fronts hanging high on the wall. I could have gone to sleep had I chosen—the trilling was so soft and sweet, not at all like the songs of the lusty-throated American birds."

The Level of Lake Erie.

Lake Erie is now three and one-half feet below the city base of level, the standard from which the city takes measurements of altitude. What is known to engineers as the "city datum" represents the high water mark of the lake in 1838. It cannot be said that the level of the lake is steadily lowering, as some believe, for the level has risen above and gone below the city datum several times since 1838. It is interesting to note that the greatest depth in Lake Erie directly north from Cleveland is 83 feet. The greatest depth in the lake is more than 200 feet, off Long Point.—Cleveland Leader.

Gambling in Life Insurance.

They gamble in life insurance in England, and anyone who cares to pay the rate may take out insurance payable to them in case of the death of King Edward. The rate charged for a life policy on his majesty is ten per cent., while an accident policy costs 30 per cent. a year.

Conceit.

Ever remark how much you dislike conceit in others? Your conceit is equally unpopular.—Atchison Globe.

FOR FEMININE WEARERS.

Tailor Costumes for the Coming Season—Gowns for Afternoons and Receptions.

The fabrics composing some of the smartest tailor costumes for next season are made of a fine, light quality of French camel's-hair serge. They are silk-lined, but the shapely skirts are merely finished with rows of silk stitching. The little jacket-fronts turn back from a vest of cream satin, showing a simple trimming of gold braid and buttons, tucking, briar stitching, or a dainty arrangement on each side of the front of silk appliques of very delicate coloring, says the New York Post.

En suite with skirt of satin-finished black peau de soie is a new bolero jacket of black velvet, finished around the lower part with scroll-like edges. White satin, covered with guipure—the designs picked out with tiny jet and gold beads—forms the wide collar, revers, and small turn-back cuffs. The vest, with its high stock and full undersleeves gathered into a narrow band of the jet and gold, are of finely-tucked white satin.

One of the pretty toilet accessories (and a most becoming toilet accessory it is) is the ruff of silk, edged with fur, or a narrow line of plain or fancy chenille, round or flat. You purchase about four yards of silk; although of good quality, it need not be expensive. The silk is then cut into whatever width you wish the ruff, and accordion plaited. This done, add to the hem the narrow band of chenille and box-plait the silk through the center of the strip. Deep fringes of chenille may be fastened to the front for stole ends, if desired. Many women wear ruffs of this kind to concerts and at the theaters, instead of a collarette of fur. They are very becoming, to say nothing of the protection they afford, and very often the charitable service they mutely perform for undraped shoulders.

Black-and-white effects will be quite as prominent as ever during the coming season; for youthful wearers, who do not care for this combination, are blue, chestnut-brown, opal-gray, tan and Russian-green covert suitings, with often two vests accompanying the tailor suit selected; one of deep red vesting, with hair-lines of gold or brown, the other of cream-color decorated with scroll and palm patterns in black and gold. When the darker colors are found more becoming, friar's or Oxford gray or deep sable-brown shades of silky English serge or cheviot, are worn with a vest of braided red cloth. Handsome black costumes are being prepared for the coming Lenten season in faced cloth, drap royal, camel's hair, Eolienne, costume satin, and mohair. For general spring wear, all the delicate neutral tones in cloth and soft, light wool take a prominent place among the season's favored materials.

Children's Friendships.

From about the fifth or sixth year children are apt to make firm friendships with their small contemporaries. This should be a watchful period for mothers, for these early friendships have a marked influence on the mind, morals and manners of a child. Nearly every character is molded very largely by early companionship and surroundings. Every mother should take care to be her children's companion as far as possible, for she may be quite sure that if they are left to the care of servants they will at the best only attain the ideal manners and customs of the nursery or servants' hall, which are not quite those of the cultured classes. Children require the companionship of little folks of their own age, and a mother should be so much her children's friend that she knows all their associates and is able to nip in the bud any acquaintance which she thinks undesirable. The mother who, to save herself fatigue, lets her children seek companions among their schoolmates and neighbors without troubling herself to find out whether their influence is likely to be good has only herself to blame if the manners and morals of her offspring are corrupted.—Washington Star.

A Humorist Perhaps.

African Explorer (an Englishman)—You can't imagine the dense ignorance of many tribes I met in the heart of Africa.

Friend—I suppose they had no idea what a missionary was?

"Not the slightest! Why, I questioned one chief, and he said he had an idea a missionary was something good to eat!"—Brooklyn Life.

Bavarian Salad.

Shred very fine two heads of lettuce, chop two onions fine and cut one cold beet into cubes. Make a layer of the lettuce, toss together the beets and onion and pile on the lettuce. Marinate with a French dressing, pour over the top an oil mayonnaise and garnish with sliced olives.—Good Housekeeping.

French Toast.

Beat one egg in a shallow dish, add a teaspoonful of sugar, a pinch of salt and one cupful of milk; soak six slices of stale bread in the custard, drain and brown them on each side on a well-buttered griddle; spread them with jelly or marmalade and pile them lightly on a dish. Serve at once.—Good Literature.

To Clean Alabaster.

Pound pumice stone to a fine powder and mix it with verjuice. Let it remain several hours, then dip in a perfectly clean sponge and rub the marble with it till clean. Rinse it off with clear, fresh water, and rub it dry with a clean linen cloth.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

PUNGENT PARAGRAPHS.

Not Afterward.—"Does it hurt to be lynched?" asked the tenderfoot, timidly. "Not after it's over," replied Lariat Luke, sagely.—Ohio State Journal.

Attorney (for the defense)—"Now, what time was it when you were attacked?" Complainant—"I don't know; ask your client—he took my watch."—Fun.

She—"I love this excessively hot weather! Don't you, Mr. Boreham?" He—"No! I can't stand it. I shall go away if it continues!" She—"I do hope it will!"—Punch.

The Chief Cost.—Askit—"And so you have given up your summer trip to Wetspot-by-the-Sea?" Tellit—"Yes, I had to. I had money enough for expenses, but not enough for tips."—Baltimore American.

Economy.—Mrs. Newbride—"How much are your spring chickens?" Poulterer—"Dollar a pair, ma'am." Mrs. Newbride—"Well—er—I've got to be very economical, so just give me the very smallest pair you have."—Philadelphia Press.

Doctor—"There's nothing serious the matter with Michael, Mrs. Muldoon. I think a little soap and water will do him as much good as anything." Mrs. Muldoon—"Yis, doctor; an' will Oi give it t'him befoor or afther his males?"—Glasgow Evening Times.

Reproving a Toper.—"It is astonishing, Jim Bangs, that you don't know enough to come home before daylight! Why can't you imitate the moon?" "Wha's the matter wiz moon?" "Why, the moon knows enough to drop out of sight when it's full."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Proper Feeling.—Magistrate—"I am told that you have already been convicted 14 times on this same charge. Aren't you ashamed to have to acknowledge to that?" Prisoner—"No, your worship. I don't think no man oughter to be ashamed of 'is convictions." Magistrate—"Two months, without the option of a fine."—Pick-Me-Up.

MONKEY CONGREGATION.

Remarkable Assemblage in the Forest with the Birds Serving as Musicians.

The author of "Sands of Sahara," when visiting the Gorge of Chiffa, came upon a strange ceremonial which, a native assured him, was an unusual one. The gorge itself is like a grand sanctuary, canopied by trees and lighted delicately by the sun filtering through foliage. A remarkable assemblage was there that day—a congregation of monkeys apparently holding some kind of service, to which the birds of the forest gave music.

The monkeys sat in rows upon the broad, outreaching branches of the virgin trees. They were in parties of two, three or four, although one fellow sat alone, like a decorous bachelor. While most of them remained stationary, certain partriarchal fellows passed about the area of assemblage, sitting down for a few minutes on the branches beside different families of the parish, seeming to give them counsel.

The ceremonies were conducted with the greatest propriety. The monkeys seemed to be taking part in a service in which they were deeply interested. When it was over, and they were about to go out into the world, the ruling elders could be seen running about, passing from tree to tree on the interlacing branches; nor did the assembly break up until those evidently respected officials had visited and saluted the entire convocation. Even their departure was made most decorously.

Then, after that serious council had adjourned, the monkeys fell to enjoying themselves. They scampered from tree to tree. They swung from branch to branch. Some hung by their tails, and others, in little coteries, hand in hand enjoyed their mid-air frolic. But the old bachelor did not clasp hands with anybody.

Fast Nine Months Every Year.

A census which has just been completed in British India has brought to light the extraordinary fact that there are in that country 1,416,638 persons who fast and remain entirely idle during nine months of every year. These persons are members of the Jain sect and their homes are in Bengal and in the provinces of Guzerat and Rajputana. Their principal shrine is on the mountain of Parasnath, near Chota Nagpore, and thither they flock every spring, in order to begin the first great fast of the year. A Jain can easily live for six or seven weeks without taking even a morsel of food, and during certain festivals it is customary for all of them to abstain from food for two full months. When they eat they confine themselves to vegetables, for they never kill an animal, even in self-defense. It is their religion which imposes upon them the obligation of fasting, but travelers say that abstinence from food is no penance in their case, and that even if they were all to become converted to some other creed they would still remain idle and lead a severely ascetic life for the greater part of the year.—N. Y. Herald.

Gordon's Bible at Windsor.

In the corridors at Windsor stands a little ebony pedestal, and on it a splendid casket of seventeenth century Italian work, with sides of engraved rock crystal. Within this gorgeous setting lies wide open, on a satin cushion, a little well-worn book. It is Gen. Gordon's Bible, and is open at the Gospel according to St. John. Below a little plate bears an inscription recording the fact that the Bible was presented to her majesty by the sister of Gen. Gordon after his death.—N. Y. Sun.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 10 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 22, 1901.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET.

For Comptroller of the Treasury:
HERMAN S. PLATT,
Of Baltimore City.

For Clerk of the Court of Appeals:
THOMAS PARRAN,
Of Calvert County.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY TICKET.

For State Senator:
ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

For House of Delegates:
PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.
CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

For Sheriff:
WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

For Treasurer:
JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 14.

For County Commissioners:
TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.
JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

For Register of Wills:
EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

For County Surveyor:
FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

OUR candidates are men around whom any party should be proud to rally and it behooves every lover of Republican principles, every loyal and patriotic son, to buckle on his armor and go forth to battle against the hosts of Gormanites.

WHATEVER may be the main issue upon which the present political contest will be waged, it is the duty of every Republican to rally to the support of the nominees of his party. It would also seem the duty of every man, irrespective of party, to aid in the election of men who will not only guarantee to all men the rights to which they are entitled, but secure to them the highest right man can have, after worshipping God as he may see fit—the free and unrestrained exercise of the right of franchise.

A FEW weeks ago we mailed to all subscribers who were in arrears statements showing their indebtedness to this office. Whilst the responses, in a number of instances, have been prompt and entirely satisfactory, the majority of those owing us have in no manner paid any attention to our call for what is justly and rightly due us. As we are laboring with a limited capital and the aggregate amount owing to us by our friends is quite large, we ask that all who have not paid will do so at once. It is unpleasant for us to ask through these columns for what is due us, but no other remedy seems at hand. If you are coming to court, Sept. 9th, bring the amount due us with you. If you will not be in Oakland at that time, send us a money order or remit by check or registered letter. Any way, let us hear from all who are in arrears.

"WILL the Democrats nominate a ticket for Garrett county?" has been asked times without number recently. The answer has invariably been, "What's the use?"

The Democracy is at its wits end to find candidates who are willing to stand up and spend their money for an empty honor.

An effort has been made to have the talked-of ticket headed by a prominent mill operator. The gentleman has some wealth, and among the leaders it is an open secret that if the aforementioned gentleman can be prevailed upon to accept the nomination his purse strings can be easily loosened and the expense of the entire campaign paid from his plethoric purse, but we give him credit with having more business acumen than to allow himself to be made the paymaster of the Democracy of the county, and with no hopes of being reimbursed for his expenditure.

The Republican ticket is made up of good business men, and if the dissatisfied element of the Democracy desire to render a real service to the people let them cast their ballots for the ticket headed by Senator Ravenscroft.

A Change Time Has Wrought.

According to the official figures, there are in Maryland, of all sexes, 1,188,044 souls, of whom 953,424 are white and 235,064 colored. In other words, only 19.8 per cent. of the whole population is colored. How silly it is, indeed, for General Baughman or any other intelligent man, how downright funny for a great party in solemn convention assembled, to talk of negro domination in a State where whites outnumber the blacks four to one. That General Baughman attempts to wave this red alarm flag before the people of Maryland reminds us of one of the incidental features of a great tragedy of the past.

General Baughman was a soldier in the Civil War. Brave, fearless, earnest and enthusiastic, he fought a good fight for the Confederacy. While we cannot assert it positively, we believe he was among those who used to boast that one Confederate soldier could whip five of his fellow Americans from Yankeeland. That was in 1861-65. How times have changed! Forty years ago General Baughman would have triumphed over five Yankees. To-day he stands in fear and trembling lest one negro triumphs over four white Marylanders. Time works many wonders, but never was marvel greater than the change that has come over General Baughman in the interval between the day when he was a better man than five other white men until now, when he quakes in his boots for fear that he is not as good a man as one-fourth of one lowly negro! Negro domination? Bah! Look at the census figures.

More Advice From Bryan.

The weary, shallow effort, so persistently pursued by Editor Bryan to give the workingman advice on how he should vote, is becoming nauseating. Bryan now has the effrontery to urge the artisan and toiler to pin their faith to the soup house party, his contention being that it is not favorable to trusts. This is the identical gentleman who harangued the people during two well remembered political campaigns from the tail end of a train and here are a few of his prophecies: That a vote for sound money was a vote for ruin and disaster; that hardship and poverty, of which the country was bountifully supplied at that time, could be speedily dissipated by opening our mints to the silver of the world; that a protective tariff was robbery and an insurmountable obstacle in the path of prosperity; that wheat and silver were united in the bonds of commercial wedlock and where the one went the other had to follow.

As a dreamer Col. Bryan has no peer, living or dead. The conditions that he declared ruinous have proved to be the most profitable in the history of the world. Wages, in the aggregate, have never been so great in the United States. The contention between the steel corporation and its employees does not hinge upon the problem of wages, and statistics prove the American artisan leads those of all other nations in this substantial particular.

The American workingman is not devoid of common sense. He will not ally himself with a soup house crew, nor will he put aside remunerative toil to favor an impracticable theorist. The average workingman is better able, through the mediums of his memory, experience and brains, to know what is best for him than is Mr. Bryan. If not, let him recall the conditions that were common some six years ago.

Deceptive Issues.

The Democrats have had their State Convention, and the edict has gone forth from Gorman and Rasin that the "issues" on which the campaign is to be conducted are "negro domination" and alleged "census frauds."

This is evident from the labored editorials in democratic organs.

As though in a State where there are less than 70,000 negros of voting age in a total of 521,903 males of voting age, there is much danger of colored voters dominating! It looks, indeed, to the average Democrat as though a negro voter assumed to be of about eight times as much importance as the voter who is fortunate enough to be the possessor of a white skin.

Did ever a party which boasts of a long line of notable statesmen ever before have so weak a piece of timber as the principal plank in its unique platform?

A greater bugaboo than this of Maryland Democracy never before did duty in a political campaign.

And next to it, as an issue, is the census matter. A handful, as it were, of Federal enumerators, failed to do their duty, as sworn to do. The Administration, of course, as soon as mistakes were pointed out, promptly began an investigation for the purpose of correcting the State's returns and punishing the guilty offenders.

That wouldn't do, of course not! The Democrats must have a census of their own; it would put forty thousand dollars in the pockets of party workers, and, quite as important, furnish desponding Democrats with what they were sorely in need, an "issue." But, happily, the majority of the people of the State are too intelligent to be duped by such claptrap, such cheap humbuggery. It is a weak subterfuge, and too easily seen through to cut much of a figure with the voters of Maryland.

They will remember the numerous and important reforms introduced in the State during the few years the Republicans were in power. They were years of economical administration and good government. Taxes were reduced, former Democratic officials were forced to refund to the State large sums of money wrongfully withheld, schools were improved, and the best election law ever known in the State was placed upon the statute books.

The average voter has a long memory, and if we mistake not the signs of the day, he will in November strongly rebuke the party which is attempting to mislead the people by the false cry of negro domination and the still sillier carping as regards the State's enumeration.

Women as City Improvers.

A writer in a recent number of one of our State papers suggests that women generally ought to interest themselves more in municipal improvement. There is a practical value in beauty which is more apparent to the keener esthetic sense of women than of men, and their energy in banishing ugliness and substituting attraction is a much needed factor in municipal life. The town and village improvement movement, which has already done so much in this direction, owes much of its impetus to women, and it is largely women who belong to these associations and conduct their work.

The home making instinct in a woman of which housekeeping is one of the expressions, is shocked by the sight of dirty, ill-paved, untidy streets, ill-kept public thoroughfares, refuse-laden lots and a generally unkempt condition of municipalities. Then, again, the superior tenderness of the feminine heart recalls the sufferings of man and beast caused by lack of good water in hot weather, and the result of this is an agitation for the drinking fountains with which all cities and towns ought to be liberally supplied, and which go so far towards preserving the public health. The planting of trees, with their beauty-giving qualities and hygienic value, is another work appealing strongly to women, who labor untiringly when they see, in imagination, long, cool, green vistas shading the dusty streets and tempering the glare of the summer sun.

Another great advantage in the public work of women in this regard is that it is carried on wholly without reference to politics. They recognize only beauty's own excuse for being, and they are inclined to regard political expediency as a great hindrance in any sort of laudable work. The education they can give the young by putting this standard of municipal beauty before them, by accustoming them to feasts for the eye, and by their natural influence over children, is of incalculable value. Men are too apt to pass by these improvements as out of practical lines, and do not realize what they mean till they see for themselves the completed effect in the change from bare ugliness to flourishing natural loveliness.

There is a business value in this loveliness. It means smoother streets, greater cleanliness, a higher grade of health, an increase of energy and a better reputation abroad. The beauty spots in our city, the small parks, are not to be surpassed, but the rest of the city should conform to them. Let the women stir themselves and agitate the question. Let them insist on better streets, on more public cleanliness, on a liberal supply of handsome drinking fountains, and they will be surprised themselves at their success in getting them all. From public beauty the desire will spread to beautify private homes, and a smooth bit of grass, a few bright flowers and some delicate vines will transform the lowliest homes. Beauty is so cheap that it is simply extravagance to waste its opportunities. Let our women start the work done so well elsewhere, and the community in which they live, when they see the result, will rise up and bless them.

Grantsville's New Bank.

The stockholders of the First National bank of Grantsville, Garrett county, met in Frostburg and elected these directors: C. H. Jennings, U. M. Stanton, J. S. Hershberger, Dr. G. C. Keller, Eli Stanton, W. Arthur Hitchins and Frank Watts. The directory has named C. H. Jennings as president and U. M. Stanton vice-president. Real estate has been purchased on the most desirable corner of the town and architects have been asked to furnish plans for a one-story brick building to be occupied by the institution. It is to be equipped with burglar and fireproof vaults and all modern appliances for safety and convenience.

LAST EXCURSION

To Mountain Lake Park—Wednesday, August 28—Grand Army Day.

Always the greatest in the year and this time destined to surpass all previous days in the strength of the program and the enormous company to be present. A glad and happy day for old soldiers, who are this day passed free. See the great program:

11 a. m., lecture, "Thoughts for the Times," Jahu DeWitt Miller, easily the foremost lecturer on the American platform; witty and strong; the most popular man who has ever been at Mountain Lake Park.

1.30 p. m., grand concert, by the Royal Hungarian Gypsy Orchestra.

2.30 p. m., grand concert of war songs.

2.45 p. m., lecture, "The Nation of America," by Senator J. P. Dolliver, acknowledged everywhere to be the strongest and best political speaker our country has had for many years.

5 p. m., reunion of the old soldiers. Time of reminiscence.

7 p. m., grand concert. Dr. Pontius and chorus, assisted by the Royal Hungarian Gypsy Orchestra. The famous Mendelssohn Male Quartet. Miss Donna Adair, the brilliant soprano soloist. Mr. Delmore Cheney, fine basso. Miss Genevieve Wheat, the splendid contralto. Miss Marion Wilson, the renowned character impersonator, with quick change in costume. Rosani, the famous juggler. Making, in all, the most varied and delightful evening program ever offered at the Park.

8.45 p. m., venetian night on the lake. The most brilliant and expensive display of fireworks presented in all the years. Illuminated fleet and many pyrotechnic novelties. It will be worth coming many miles to see.

The last chance for a year to visit this "paradise of the mountains" and enjoy the rare and wonderful program offered.

Excursion trains from Cumberland, Clarksburg, Fairmont and all intermediate points. Plenty of car room, and cheap fare, reaching Mountain Lake Park early in the day and returning after all is over at night. For particulars see hand bills or consult your station agent.

Wanted.

One hundred men for general woods work and grading railroad.

PRESTON LUMBER & COAL CO.,
22 tf Oakland, Md.

SI SUMMERS' LATEST.

This Happened to Him When He was Very Young.

"Fire and tow," said Si. "Did you ever hearn me tell about the big rattler I killed when I was a young feller? Fire and tow! But that was a funny thing that happened that time. Never told you? Well!

"I was walkin' along through some brush, and a-carryin' a good hic'ry stick in my han' and I see the biggest rattler I ever come acrost. I up an' hits at him an' he dodges it an' bit the stick. The nex' time I fetched him over the ears and killed him. Well, I walks along for some time, and by and by I sees that my hic'ry stick was gittin' bigger an' bigger. Fire and tow! In an hour or two that stick—it was green, you know—was swelled right up ready to bust so I couldn't carry it no longer. You know, the rattler pizened it when he struck it. Funny, wasn't it? Fire and tow!"

The Constable Arrested.

Constable Charles Wilson, of Connellsville, Pa., who refused to pay a fee of 50 cents for locking up J. T. Hottle, of Friendsville, this county, who was in his custody for uncoupling a car of an excursion train, was arrested on Saturday and held for court.

Hottle, after his release from the custody of the Pennsylvania officials, came to Oakland and was seen here by one or two parties who recognized him. His whereabouts are now unknown.

George W. Shartzer, who was placed under arrest at the same time with Hottle, charged with pulling the bell cord of the same train and thereby placing the lives of many people in danger, is yet in jail at Uniontown where he will remain until after the charges against him are disposed of by the court which meets September 15th. When Shartzer was arrested he was searched by the officials and upon his person a revolver and a black jack were found. In Pennsylvania the punishment prescribed by law for carrying concealed weapons is a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $500, with a term of imprisonment besides, in the discretion of the court.

Lutheran Services.

Sunday morning at 11 o'clock Rev. Dr. J. W. Butler, of Washington, will preach in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church.

Wednesday evening at 7.30 Rev. Wm. C. Stoudenmire, of Baltimore, will preach.

The FARQUHAR PATENT VARIABLE FRICTION FEED

Medal and Highest Award at World's Columbian Exposition.

SAW MILL & ENGINE

BEST SET WORKS IN THE WORLD. Warranted the best made. Shingle Mills, Machinery, and Standard Agricultural Implements of Best Quality at lowest prices. Illus. Catalog.

A. B. FARQUHAR CO., Ltd., YORK, PA.

Wealth

AND HOW TO ATTAIN IT

100,000 SHARES OF STOCK OFFERED AT 50c ON THE DOLLAR

For the purpose of further developing their holdings the Company has decided to place One Hundred Thousand shares of stock—par value one dollar—at Fifty cents a share. There is no oil proposition before the people to-day that offers such rich returns—with absolute safety of investment.

6 per cent. Guaranteed for 8 Years

The first one hundred thousand shares, besides being non-assessable, are guaranteed to pay 6 per cent. interest annually for eight years. Every single share of the one Hundred Thousand sold will bear the indorsement of The Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco, a trust company incorporated under the laws of California, for Twenty Millions of Dollars, guaranteeing that The Central Pacific Oil Company will pay a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum for 8 years.

Read what the Chicbg Western Trade Journal of July 2 has to say editorially:

"Greater fortunes have been made out of oil than any other product Mother Earth has yet given us. Rockefeller could not have acquired his hundreds of millions in a few years through any other source, nor the Standard Oil Company have paid dividends making hundreds and thousands of millionaires out of men who started with but the clothes they wore. California is about to take the lead among its sister states in the production of this great treasure. Such persons as Henry Crocker, Claus Spreckles, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst and other multi-millionaires are putting thousands into the newly-discovered oil fields.

Wise ones who get at the start are sure to make fortunes.

This being the situation, the question naturally arises, how and where an investment in oil development stocks should be made. Common justice to our readers requires that we should advise them as to a reliable company, whose stocks are offered on a basis which insures safety and speedy profits. Such a corporation is the Central Pacific Oil Company—611 to 617 Laughlin building, Los Angeles, California—which represents the biggest oil proposition before the world to-day—including, as it does, the consolidation of the cream of the Kern river, Bakersfield, Ventura, Sunset, McKittrick, Tehachapi, Kramer, Newhall, Los Angeles and Fullerton Fields. Each share of this stock will have attached the guarantee of the Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco—with a subscribed Capital Stock of Twelve Millions of dollars—that the Central Pacific Company will pay 6 per cent. interest for 8 years." — Western Trade Journal.

The following is from an article which appeared in the Los Angeles Herald of June 2:

"A large number of land holders have just succeeded in consolidating some of the best oil lands in Southern California, and have incorporated the Central Pacific Oil Company—Capitalized for Five Millions of Dollars. Two millions have been expended in securing proven oil lands. Three million shares have been set aside as treasury stock, which will be used for developing the properties of the monster company. The gilt edge part of the great enterprise is in the fact that all the purchasers of the first One Hundred Thousand Shares will have the right to surrender the same to the company at the expiration of one year and receive in cash the full amount paid for stock, with interest of 6 per cent.—less any dividends that may have been paid on said stock."—Los Angeles Herald.

If you want some of the First One Hundred Thousand Shares of Stock, send your orders to the Secretary of the Company, A. Samuel Parks, or through Wells, Fargo and Co. Express, or to the Broadway Bank and Trust Co., our Los Angeles depository---or direct to

CENTRAL PACIFIC OIL CO.

Rooms 611, 615, 617 Laughlin Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

A Minister's Good Work.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running off so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and he said 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured. I think it is the best medicine I have ever tried." For sale by all druggists.

Fall term CENTRAL COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Cumberland, Md., Winchester, Va., begins Sept. 2nd. Write for catalog and free lesson in Gregg Shorthand. Scholarship $45.00

E. W. Grove

This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets the remedy that cures a cold in one day

It Saved His Baby.

"My baby was terribly sick with the diarrhoea, we were unable to cure him with the doctor's assistance, and as a last resort we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mr. J. H. Doak, of Williams, Ore. "I am happy to say it gave immediate relief and a complete cure." For sale by all druggists.

Estray Notice.

Strayed, early the present spring, five ewes, four being yearlings and one older. The sheep each had the top of one ear off and also an undercrop. Information leading to their recovery will be rewarded by the undersigned.

I offer for sale my farm of 146 acres near the Bowers place. The improvements consist of 35 acres cleared, good house, barn and two orchards. Well watered. L. W. Clark, Oakland, Md.

DON'T WAIT.

If you knew how SCOTT'S EMULSION would build you up, increase your weight, strengthen your weak throat and lungs and put you in condition for next winter, you would begin to take it now.

Send for free sample, and try it.
SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists,
409-415 Pearl Street, New York.
50c. and $1.00; all druggists.

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

August more than half gone.

The summer visitor is still in our midst.

Gus. A. Bolden, of Terra Alta, was in Oakland Sunday visiting relatives.

H. C. Sincell left Oakland Tuesday night for New York and Boston on a business trip.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

Miss Mary Sloan, of Lonaconing, who visited Mr. and Mrs. E. R. Sliger in Oakland last week, has returned to her home.

Mrs. D. Y. Morris, of Kingwood, was in Oakland and Mt. Lake Park a few days last week visiting relatives.

Louis Eisenger and Miss Della Gotsch, of Washington, were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Lauer, in Oakland, a few days last week.

Mrs. James J. Reynolds, of Baltimore, who was here several weeks visiting relatives, has returned to her home.

Dr. Green, the dentist, will visit Friendsville on September 17th and remain until the 30th. Teeth extracted without pain. 24 4

The ladies of St. Matthew's P. E. church held a fair and supper in Offutts' Hall on Tuesday night for the benefit of the church at which a handsome sum was realized.

Mr. and Mrs. R. E. Sliger entertained Mr. and Mrs. Duncan R. Sloan, Mrs. John McIndor and Miss Emma Bradley, all of Lonaconing, on Sunday.

Attorney D. Lindley Sloan, of Cumberland, was the guest of Judge and Mrs. David W. Sloan at their residence near Oakland a few days this week.

What most people want is something mild and gentle when in need of a physic. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets fill the bill to a dot. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. For sale by all druggists.

J. B. Fay, Esq., of Washington, came up to Oakland Sunday evening and on Monday, accompanied by Jas. W. Leathers, Esq., drove over to Moorefield to attend the reunion of McNeill's Rangers.

Major W. C. McGrew, of Morgantown, W. Va., who was at the Park several days last week, returned overland to his home Monday in company with Clark Pickenpaugh, who was the guest of Col. and Mrs. A. G. Sturgiss for a week or two.

The Rhoages Store at Deer Park can supply you with groceries, flour, feed, etc., at the lowest prices. Everything in our store is fresh, bought for cash and therefore at a less price than the same goods can be bought by our competitors. Our customers are given the benefit of the reduction.

Herman Creutzburg, the meat market man, has received from the manufacturers a new meat refrigerator which is now being erected in the Bolden-West building on Second street. Mr. C. expects to occupy his new quarters on September 1st.

Rev. W. C. Davis, of Allegheny, Pa., who is here on a visit to his parents, slipped on Friday evening and sustained a painful injury to his right leg which necessitated the attendance of a physician. He was unable to walk for a day or two but is now recovered to some extent.

Rev. F. M. Glenn, formerly of the Loch Lynn circuit, United Brethern church, but now stationed at Myersville, Frederick county, is in this section on a brief visit among his many friends. Tuesday night Mr. Glenn preached at Loch Lynn to an appreciative audience, and on Sunday morning at 10:30 he will preach at Crellin.

Rev. G. W. Kepler, of Parkersburg, W. Va., dropped into Oakland unexpectedly Saturday after having been graduated in Chautauqua work at the Park. Sunday night he preached in St. Paul's M. E. church, much to the delight of his former parishioners. His visit here was a source of pleasure to his friends and we trust also to himself.

A number of inquiries have been recently received by persons in Oakland from parties living at a distance for desirable farm lands and locations for summer residences. The fame of these mountains for home seekers is just beginning to spread and we may look forward at no distant day to see the entire country thickly settled and be made to blossom and bloom as a rose.

Prof. W. H. Johnson, of the Good Roads Division of the Maryland Geological Survey, has been here for a few days on a vacation, and during his stay has visited a number of points in the county inspecting our roads and noting their needs. While Prof. Johnson is at the head of the Highway Commission of the State he is unable to better the condition of our thoroughfares except by an order of the County Commissioners, but he is ready and willing at all times to make suggestions to our road makers which may at least help them in their work.

Editor Litzinger and son, Joe, spent Sunday at Grafton.

School Commissioner George E. Bishoff, of Hoyes, was in Oakland Tuesday.

Circuit Court and the Board of Counts Commissioners will convene on Monday, Sept. 9.

Ex-Sheriff Shaffer, of Preston county, W. Va., was in Oakland yesterday for a few hours.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds. Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

Lawson L. Loar and family, of Grafton, spent a portion of this week in Oakland with relatives.

The Misses Weber, of near Oakland, have as their guests Misses Minnie and Annie Pyles, of Washington, D. C.

Misses Mida Stuck and Hattie Smith, of Newburg, W. Va., were guests of Mr. and Mrs. George M. Mason a few days last week.

E. J. Fringer and two daughters, Misses Lulu and Jessie, left Oakland Monday for Moorefield where they will spend a week.

Miss Elizabeth R. Bixler, of Baltimore, arrived here yesterday and is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Norman S. Heindel.

Mr. and Mrs. John T. Mitchell had as their guests last week Miss Mitchell and her brother Jesse Mitchell, of Listonburg, Pa.

Justice in these times is fully awake, and is striking right and left. A young man in Georgia was fined in a police court lately for singing, with a congregation, out of tune.

Mr. Geo. T. Brew returned to Oakland Saturday evening after an absence of several weeks, which was spent at Ronceyerte, W. Va., where he has a large number of men employed operating a shingle and saw mill.

We regret to learn from Rev. G. W. Kepler that Mrs. Kepler has been quite ill for some time and that for several weeks she was under treatment in a Cincinnati hospital. She is somewhat improved now but still far from well.

Attorney E. H. Sincell, accompanied by Dr. W. H. Bixler, of Baltimore, who is the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Heindel, in Oakland, drove down to the northern end of the county this week on business, returning to Oakland Tuesday morning.

It is said that there will be lots of game this fall. The quail was never thicker and covoys are to be seen in every direction. More will be hatched out before the time for killing them arrives. Rabbits are numerous and the nimrods will have a nice time this fall.

A locomobile, belonging to a Mountain Lake Park summer resident, has made numerous trips to Oakland during the past week and has attracted considerable attention among the young boys and also many of the older ones. The machine is operated by power derived from a gasoline motor.

The Hocking Coal Company will apply to the Governor of Pennsylvania for a charter to do business under the above name. The following compose the firm: John T. Hocking, William G. Hocking and George H. Hocking, all of Meyersdale, Pa. The company owns considerable coal land in this county and will open up a big mine here.

Weimer Brothers, of near Red House, received on Monday a traction engine from the manufacturers which will be used to operate a threshing machine. The engine was fired up at the station here and run out to the farm of Mr. William White, when the first test of the machine was made in threshing wheat. The test was satisfactory.

The Baltimore and Ohio construction forces are doing some extensive work on tunnels along their line. The Hitchcock tunnel, near Swanton, is being enlarged and a new arch is being built. The old arch was only 26 feet wide, while the new one will be 30 feet wide and 25 feet high. It will be high enough to insure perfect safety to trainmen standing erect on the highest box car.

There is now being printed in colors for Harry L. Grant, Oakland's artistic photographer, an edition of 2000 copies of views of the State of West Virginia. The pictures are made from the finest half-tones and will be placed on sale September 10. The book will be 13 by 18 inches and will contain about one hundred views of the magnificent scenery for which West Virginia is noted. The price of the book will be $1.00.

The individual who gets the fewest letters makes the most complaint to the postmaster; the man who never had a good meal at home growls at the hotel accommodations; the man who complains most of his neighbors is the meanest of the lot; the church member who pays the least to the preacher's salary finds the most fault with his preaching, and always complains of the bad management of the church; and the subscriber who is the slowest to pay his subscription finds the most fault with the local newspaper.

One of "Cooney" Whetsell's horses died of general debility Tuesday.

Mrs. Joseph M. Conneway, of District No. 8, is seriously ill of typhoid fever.

Mr. David D. Paugh, of near Deer Park, was a business visitor to Oakland yesterday.

Miss Norene Robinson, of Washington, arrived here Tuesday night to visit the Misses Bartlett for a short time.

Mr. and Mrs. Godfrey Felty's little daughter fell at Mountain Lake Park one day recently and broke her left arm.

Miss Sudia Browning, of Blaine, accompanied Miss Mae Hamill home from her recent visit to the former place Saturday afternoon.

The third week of the Mountain Chautauqua at the Park has opened with undiminished crowds of delighted people in attendance.

Dixon & Kelso will pay 75c to 90c per bushel for good potatoes. Have on hand 8 car loads feed and flour to sell cheap. Peaches arriving every day. 23 2*

Mrs. Charles Earl Jaseph, nee Miss Bessie Nelson, of Evansville, Indiana, is here on a visit to her mother. Mrs. Jaseph's visit to her old home has been enjoyable to her numerous friends.

Of the one hundred and fifty Chautauquas of the United States none offers a better program than the Chautauqua at the Park. The people appreciate this fact and are liberal with their patronage.

There are many cases of typhoid fever at and near Friendsville, this county. In the town and immediate vicinity three deaths have occurred within the past week or two and there are now a number of patients in a precarious condition.

Rev. S. M. Engle, wife and family will leave next Monday for Falling Waters, near Martinsburg, where he will preach for two weeks. He will preach here next Sunday, and during his absence his pulpit will be filled by Rev. Mr. Edmundson, of Savage. —Piedmont Herald.

The Jennings Bros. railroad, from Niverton, Pa., into Garrett county, is nearly finished. The mill for transporting lumber, from which the road is being built, is partly up at a point near Bevansville. It will be very large.

Mr. Olin F. Durst, of the U. S. Army, arrived in Oakland on last Friday night from Fort Thomas, Kentucky, where he has been stationed, and remained until Sunday morning when he left for his home in Lonaconing. He will return to Fort Thomas to-night.

The following note was picked up in the postoffice a few days ago: "Dear Blanche—The reason I didn't laff when you laffed at me yesterday in the postoffice was because I have a bile on my face, and kan't laff, for if I did it would bust, but I love you, you sweet thing, bile or no bile, laff or no laff, and you know that."

One of the best things that a legislature ever did was the bill passed in Colorado, authorizing a ten minutes' instruction twice a week in the public schools on the subject of humane treatment of animals. This ought to be done by every legislature in the country. And in talks with children at the public schools teachers could do much to inspire a love and understanding toward animals among the children.

A Missouri editor apologizes to his readers for the lack of news, as follows, which shows the trials to which a country editor is often subject: "We expected to have a marriage and a death notice this week, but a violent storm prevented the wedding, and the doctor being sick himself, the patient recovered, and we are accordingly cheated out of both items."

More things enter into advertising than are generally supposed. In fact everything that connects a name and a business in people's minds is advertising. Membership in churches and clubs and societies, the giving of social entertainments, public charities —all these things and more are advertising. But greater and broader and better and easier than all these is newspaper advertising. You may think of that without thinking of the other plans, but no scheme of publicity is complete without the newspaper.

Grantsville, Garrett county, is anticipating a great boom in the not distant future. The town is situated in the midst of an excellent farming region, and a six-foot vein of coal underlies it, so that it has the natural facilities to make an excellent and thriving town. As the people of any community are very largely responsible for the development and progress of their surroundings there is scarcely a doubt that, since they will it so, the enthusiastic residents of Grantsville may realize their fondest dreams as to the future importance of their village. We shall watch her growth from this direction with much interest, and it is gratifying that Frostburg capital has already lent its aid to give Grantsville a new start.—Frostburg Forum.

Roy Hamill was in Cumberland on Monday.

Sheriff Oester was down in District No. 11 yesterday on business.

The apple crop of Garrett county promises to be an abundant one this year.

Mrs. Hester A. Frantz, of Grantsville, has been granted a pension of $2 per month.

Born, yesterday afternoon, to Mr. and Mrs. John W. Davis, a son. Congratulations.

On the docket of the Circuit Court there are something over sixty original cases and a great number of trials.

Senator Ravenscroft and family drove up to Oakland yesterday and were guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Casteel, near town.

A lame shoulder is usually caused by rheumatism of the muscles, and may be cured by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. For sale by all druggists.

Rev. Asberry Mick, pastor of St. Paul's M. E. church, preached to the Rowlesburg congregation Sunday morning. His sermon was favorably commented upon by those who heard him.

Mr. John Barnes, one of the pioneer settlers of this county but who has been residing at Barton for a number of years past, is now a patient at the McComas Hospital, suffering with Bright's disease.

Rowdyism at night in Oakland seems to be on the upward move. Hardly a night passes but several fights occur and the following morning the decorated faces of the participants tell the tale.

FOR SALE:—The Lutheran parsonage, located on the corner of Fifth and Green streets, in Oakland, near the court house. Contains 8 rooms, hallway, cellar and porches; excellent well of water. Will be sold cheap. Apply to or address Rev. George I. Uhler, Oakland, Md.

The Baltimore & Ohio is sending thousands of box cars to the West to be loaded with grain for the return trip. Hundreds of these cars are being rushed to Chicago and St. Louis over the main line every day. This road is now possessed of excellent equipment for the handling of grain and freight. There is some talk of the Pennsylvania and the Baltimore and Ohio entering into an arrangement for the pooling of freight cars, so as to get the most benefit out of the equipment. Much advantage would result from such an arrangement and the exchange of cars would help out greatly at common centers reached by both systems, such as Philadelphia, Baltimore, Washington, Cumberland, Pittsburg, Wheeling, Youngstown, New Castle, Columbus, Chicago and St. Louis.

Ate Toadstools.

Mr. and Miss Unger, Mr. and Miss Ruby and two other members of the Hungarian Orchestra, now engaged at the Chautauqua at Mountain Lake Park, went to the woods Sunday afternoon and gathered what they supposed were mushrooms, but in reality were either toadstools or a fungus growth. They carried them to their hotel and had them prepared. Two of the party ate heartily of the fungi, while the rest of them ate more sparingly. Shortly afterward all of them were taken quite ill and Dr. Henry McComas was hastily summoned. Heroic treatment by the physician resulted in restoring the patients, but two of them had a narrow escape from death.

Hip Broken.

Mrs. Commerford, of Fairmont, W. Va., a summer resident at Mountain Lake Park, fell through a trap door in a store at Loch Lynn Heights one day last week and sustained some very serious injuries, among them being a fracture of the right hip. After the accident she was attended by Dr. Henry McComas, who reduced the fracture and made the injured lady as comfortable as possible.

Mrs. Commerford is quite aged and has been a summer resident of the Park for many years.

Arrested for Disturbing the Peace.

James and Van. Cockran, Elmer, Oscar and William Goss and Parker Nutter, saw-mill hands, engaged in work on a mill along Deep Creek, were arrested Monday by Deputy Sheriffs William Newman and Silas O. Wiley charged with disturbing the peace. The men were brought to Oakland and gave bonds for their appearance before Justice Gonder on Saturday, when they will be given a hearing on the charge against them.

A Robbery.

Harvey Newman, employed as stable boss by the Preston Lumber and Coal Company at one of its camps near Aurora, was robbed Tuesday of $12 in cash and a check for his last month's pay amounting to $37. There is no clue to the thief.

Died.

STERLING.—William Sterling, a young man residing in the vicinity of Friendsville, died Monday of typhoid fever. He leaves a wife and two children.

GEORG.—Mrs. August Georg died yesterday at Accident of cancer of the stomach, after an illness of several months.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 4 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and instead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand and souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD
CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA, COLORADO AND UTAH.

Special low Summer Excursion Rates to all points. Personally conducted Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Personally conducted tour to San Francisco, Cal., account General Convention Episcopal Church. Tickets on sale Sept. 22nd to 27th. Good returning until Nov. 5th, with stop-over privileges.

Quickest and best line to

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Only line with Double Daily Through Service. Dining Cars and Free Reclining Chair Cars. Fastest train service to the famous

BEAUMONT, TEXAS, OIL FIELDS.

Through sleeping car from Chicago without change and through sleeping car reservations from Cincinnati via Memphis, Tenn., to

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Special Homeseekers' Excursions to all points South, West and North West.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER,
Traveling Passenger Agent,
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE GARRETT COUNTY BANK, AT OAKLAND, IN THE STATE OF MARYLAND, AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, JULY 15th, 1901.

RESOURCES.

Loans and discounts		$152,667 11
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured		35 80
Stocks, securities, etc		99,317 87
Banking-house, furniture and fixtures		12,782 93
Other real estate and mortgages owned		1,507 66
Due from National Banks		30,020 65
Due from State Banks		5,400 21
Checks and other cash items		169 07
Fractional paper currency, nickles and cents		157 20
Internal-Revenue stamps		60 00
MONEY IN BANK, VIZ:
Specie	$8,763 35
Legal-tender notes	10,075 00	18,838 35
Total		$320,956 85

LIABILITIES.

Capital stock paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus fund	10,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	3,713 12
Due to National Banks	2,432 89
Due to State Banks	1,077 59
Individual deposits subject to check	170,689 93
Time certificates of deposit	107,860 13
Cashier's checks outstanding	233 19
Total	$320,956 85

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss:

I, S. T. Jones, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of August, 1901.

G. A. FRALEY,
Notary Public.

CORRECT—Attest:
D. E. OFFUTT
G. S. HAMILL
J. M. DAVIS,
Directors.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. McROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH McROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

The laws of health require that the bowels move once each day and one of the penalties for violating this law is piles. Keep your bowels regular by taking a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets when necessary and you will never have that severe punishment inflicted upon you. Price, 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

Money to Loan.

$4,000 to loan on first mortgage in n sums to suit upon town property or nearby farms.

EDWARD H. SINCELL.

PLAYING WITH FIRE

By D. A. Chauncey.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

"WELL, it's all off; we win."

The party at the extreme end of the bar turned from their glasses and regarded the newcomer with questioning glances—all but one. The latter, a tall, lanky man with strong features, keen and shifty eyes and a smooth side face with long chin whiskers from the heavy mustache down, gave a swift look about the bar room and then turned to the speaker with something of disgust in his face.

"Haven't you learned yet, Joe, not to talk in a public room? Forget it."

"But—"

"But nothing. Take a drink; the change's not made yet; it will steady your nerve."

The black-haired young fellow who had joined the party, in a state of excitement became a clam and silently threw down the drink handed him by the bar tender.

"Come to my room at nine," said the long man with the chin whiskers in a low voice. Then louder: "Well, good night, boys, I've got to go over that reapportionment bill to-night."

An hour later the same party were gathered in Maj. Franklin's room. They had dropped in one at a time in a quiet way and the major had rung for an ample supply of liquor and cigars.

"Now, Joe, what is it?" asked the major.

"It's all off. The Consolidated Electric people have sent to Washington for Harold Treat, and that means the bill will go through. So I guess we don't lose out on this session."

"Ain't that a sign of weakness?" suggested the heavy-faced man with the gray eyes. "Looks to me like the drowning man grasping at a straw."

"Not on your tintype," replied Joe. "Treat never yet lost a measure when he tried to put it through. Heavens knows what they had to pay him, but it's a sure thing that the bill goes through."

In due time Harold Treat, famed throughout the country as a lobbyist of boundless resource and marvelous tact, arrived at the state capital. He was accompanied by his wife, a woman of great charm of manner and a personality so strong as to win from the start those with whom she came in contact. Treat went to work quietly to round up enough members to pass the Consolidated Electric bill. He first went over the ground carefully and learned what had been done. The newspapers were full of the matter and everywhere, throughout the state, the bill was denounced as an outrage upon the public. The legislators were frightened at the widespread opposition and many who, ordinarily, could have been reached in one way or another, were afraid to brave the storm.

Treat remained cool and confident and within two weeks it was given out quietly that four members had been added to those formerly pledged to support the measure. There was still one vote lacking, and it seemed that it was impossible to get it. Treat smiled imperturbably and said he would. How he expected to do it the oldest politicians at the capital could not guess.

Meantime Mrs. Treat had remained wholly oblivious to the great contest. Her brilliant attainments, her modest demeanor, her charming and ingenuous manner and her pervading personality won her friends everywhere in the society of the capital. She dressed with the most exquisite taste and at once upon her appearance in the functions of "the official set" attracted the attention and admiration of all men. Among those was Henry Raymond, one of the most brilliant and conspicuous members of the legislature; a man of unusual gifts, who had won pronounced success in his profession and who came from a distinguished family. Raymond was classed among the few members who were acknowledged on all sides as being absolutely incorruptible. Possessed of an ample income from his profession, he had accepted the nomination to the legislature at considerable personal cost, solely from a conviction that it was his duty to the state. Back of this there may have been an ambition reaching far out and upwards into the future, but if so his nearest confidants did not know it. In any event, his public career had been dominated by the highest ideals, and he was the boast and pride of the better element among the citizens of his district.

It happened about the time that the Consolidated Electric bills needed only one vote to insure their passage, a veritable battle ensued between this strong, powerful man, and this keen, adroit and resourceful woman. She was the trump card in the hand of her clever and unscrupulous husband. When he had accomplished all that money and an appeal to ambition and a resort to his almost hypnotic power could do, he and she sized up the possibilities and the tremendous potentiality of sexual power was called into play upon some man selected with scientific analysis by these two adepts in the study of human nature.

In this case, with the audacity of genius they selected Henry Raymond as the victim. It was a bold stroke, because, if successful, it would not only give them the result they sought, but would in a measure disarm criticism and lend to their bad cause the great weight and influence of a man who was regarded everywhere as the personification of probity. It would strengthen every purchased vote and rob the affair of half the scandal it was sure to create otherwise.

It was played with all the science of long experience. Mrs. Treat did not throw herself at Raymond nor in any open way lead him into closer relations. But situations occurred and things happened, by the sheerest accident, of course, which threw him more and more into her company, and appealed more and strongly both to his physical and intellectual nature.

The finale came one soft spring evening during a reception at the governor's mansion, when, after a dance and a few moments of sparkling repartee at the refreshment table, they had wandered out under the great trees and among the velvety lawns and fragrant flowers of the great grounds surrounding the house. The affair had begun to be noticed, and many were the whispered wonders that Treat should remain oblivious to the apparent infatuation of Raymond for Mrs. Treat, and the equally apparent acquiescence on her part to his eager pursuit. For Treat, with all his reputation as an unscrupulous lobbyist, carried always the part of a self-respecting gentleman, and it was generally believed that his wife played no part in his political schemes. This was borne out by the child-like ingenuousness displayed by the woman at all times regarding the case in hand. She had time and time again, when talking to the opponents of the Consolidated Electric bill, asked, with eyes filled with wonder and reproach, how it could be that men trusted and honored by their fellow-citizens could think of betraying their trust by voting for such a horrid measure.

Down among the great oaks, through which the twilight struggled with its proverbial seductiveness, and with the scent of the springtime in the air, Raymond paused suddenly in the promenade, and turning impetuously to the woman, cried out:

"I cannot stand this longer. Your presence intoxicates me beyond control. There can be but one meaning to the favors you have shown me—that you are drawn to me, as I am drawn to you. Before I met you I thought I had met many women. Now I know that you are the only woman I ever saw. The rest were shadows. There is nothing in life to me but you. I know you are married. What of it? There is no marriage but the union of kindred souls. I have money. I will sacrifice my reputation, my friends. Come with me to-night—now, this moment! We will go to Italy, to Spain, Patagonia—anywhere, so that we are together. And we will live, live, live—not merely exist. Sinking all else into complete union to ourselves, we will forget the world, its ideals and standards, its condemnation or commendation, and live and love forever."

He had grasped her hand during this passionate speech, and his face was close to hers, and his eyes were looking into hers with an expression so intense that it lacked little of hypnotism. In all her life she never had felt her pulses throb as they did under the spell of this masterful man. In an instant her passionate nature realized the difference between this man and the cold, intellectual personality of Harold Treat. But she was not a creature of impulses, and she recovered herself with an effort.

"Do you love me so entirely?" she asked.

"What more can I do to prove it?" he replied, still retaining her hand. "I am willing to give up friends, ambition, the respect of my people, and the world—all the reputation acquired by the labor of a score of years. No, not ready, but eager. It is all there is in life for me."

"Senator," she said, steadily, "it is of the utmost importance to my happiness that the Consolidated Electric bill is passed. You can accomplish it. Will you do that for me? It is all I ask, and surely so great a love can concede that much." In an instant she realized how cheap a speech it was, and she hid her flushing face in her hands.

Then Henry Raymond rose to the height of the splendid powers with which he was gifted, and which had made him his reputation.

"I see it all," he said. "You think you are a stool-pigeon for Treat. But you are not. You are so much stronger than he is, that there is no comparison. What if I do vote for this infamous bill, and it is passed? You will go on leading a life that is a lie every minute you live. There is nothing in money, excepting what money will buy. I can give you all that—and more, a life of love, instead of one of slavery to a clever and perfectly cold-blooded man, whose only god is money. You are better than you think. Come! we will leave this place. Let the bill meet its fate; let the legislature and the state and all the world go on in their own way. To-morrow we will be on our way to paradise."

She swayed toward him, recovered herself partially, and drew back, then, lifting her eyes to his, caught the spark of passion, and her emotional nature exploded. She fell into his arms.

The next day was the most exciting ever known in the capital. It is doubtful which created the greatest comment, the fall of Henry Raymond or that of Amy Treat. It broke Treat's heart and his spirit. The Consolidated Electric bills failed to pass, and Treat never turned another trick. He spent years in trying to find the runaway pair, swearing he would kill Raymond on sight. It never was known just where they went, but a returned traveler who had "done Europe" in an unconventional way once whispered over his cups that he had met Raymond in an obscure place in Spain, but he never could be induced to give the name of the town.

MAN OF EXPERIENCE.

Capt. Lemly, Judge Advocate of Schley Court of Inquiry.

Has Had More to Do with the Prosecution of Naval Law Cases Than Any Other Officer in the Service.

Capt. Lemly is particularly well fitted for the exacting duties of judge advocate. He is now serving his third term as judge advocate general. He is a civil as well as a maritime lawyer. So far as known he has never expressed an opinion as to the merits of either Rear Admiral Sampson or Rear Admiral Schley. He served with Schley in the Essex on the South Atlantic station, and was a watch officer on board the Thetis, commanded by Capt. Schley, which, with the Bear, formed the Greely relief expedition.

Capt. Lemly says he would feel hurt to have it intimated that he has any personal feeling whatever in the controversy. In all the time he has been at the head of the legal department of the navy, his service dating back to 1892, he has, fortunately, never had occasion to pass upon any question that involved either Sampson or Schley in any personal aspect. He has known both—Schley better than Sampson, perhaps. He was one of Schley's personal friends when he (Lemly) was in active line service. Indeed, he accompanied Schley on the famous Greely relief expedition, and he rendered valuable service to Schley on that occasion, which the senior officer recognized. On the other hand, Capt. Lemly has known Sampson officially in the navy department when the admiral was at the head of the ordnance bureau, and they were thus thrown into close contact in a business point of view at least for several years.

Capt. Lemly had already arranged to depart from Washington on his annual leave on a trip through Canada some time in August. He will arrange to leave on a later date now, in order to be able to study up this celebrated case before the court meets September 12.

CAPT. SAMUEL C. LEMLY.
(Judge Advocate of the Sampson-Schley Court of Inquiry.)

Meanwhile the clerical force of the judge advocate's department can prepare the mass of documentary evidence necessary for use before the points may be gathered ready for the opening. It should be noted that under the ordinary rules of practice the judge advocate general of the navy is called upon to review the proceedings of court-martials and courts of inquiry. Secretary Long has promised Capt. Lemly that he will be exempted from the duty of reviewing the proceedings of the Schley court.

Capt. Lemly has probably had more experience in the prosecution of naval law cases than any other officer in the navy, and is generally regarded as one of the best equipped officers in the navy for the important duties which will devolve upon him as judge advocate of the court selected to pass upon controversial points resulting from the conduct of the naval campaign in the West Indies.

Prior to his assumption of his duties as judge advocate general of the navy, in June, 1892, he was prominently identified with several of the most important trials and investigations in the recent annals of the navy. As judge advocate and recorder of various courts he traversed nearly all points of the world visited by United States warships, going as far as China and Japan in the prosecution of such work.

He was judge advocate of the court-martial convened in China as a result of the loss of the United States steamship Ashuelot, and was also judge advocate in the court-martial case of Paymaster Watkins, which sat at Yokohama. He was also judge advocate in the court-martial cases appointed for the trial of ex-Surgeon General Wales and ex-Paymaster General Smith. Probably his most important work of this kind, however, was as judge advocate of the court of inquiry which investigated the loss of the Jeannette in the Arctic. That investigation was conducted in Washington and was marked by almost as much acrimony and controversy as the pending Sampson-Schley case.

Naval officers in speaking of the fairness of Secretary Long in selecting the court of inquiry point to the fact that Admiral Kimberly was Schley's commander back in the 70's.

Suffrage Laws in Belgium.

Under the Belgian law unmarried men over 25 have one vote, married men and widowers with families have two votes, and priests and other persons of position and education have three votes. Severe penalties are imposed on those who fail to vote.

A MODERN APOSTLE.

Richard Janasch, a German Enthusiast, Leads a Strange Nomadic Religious Life.

Richard Janasch, the modern apostle, is the latest phenomenon in the religious world which at the beginning of the twentieth century boasts of an endless variety of factions, sects and theories. Richard Janasch is at present tramping through Bohemia, where, during his peregrinations in the cities and villages, he is followed by vast throngs, many of whom believe in him. Here is the doctrine of Richard Janasch in a nutshell:

"Provide neither gold nor silver nor brass in your purses; nor script for

THE MODERN APOSTLE.
(Queer Garb Worn by Richard Janasch, a German Evangelist.)

your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves. Eat no meat and drink no strong drink. Abide in the dwellings provided by the rocks and other elements of nature."

In accordance with these partly Biblical and partly vegetarian rules, Richard Janasch goes about dressed in a single toga and tries in coiffure and other ways to look as much as possible like one of the ancient apostles. He has followed this nomadic life for some time now and, though he adds healing by herbs and natural means to his vocation, he has not been molested by the authorities on the continent.

Janasch is a glassblower by profession. Had he continued at his trade he would have been a physical wreck. He was advised by his doctor to seek some outdoor employment. For farming he was not strong enough, so he entered on the nomadic life in emulation of the ancient apostles of Christ. He is described by the German press as an eloquent preacher who draws great multitudes, especially from the working classes in large centers.

EX-EMPRESS EUGENIE.

The Only Recreation in Which the Lesser Napoleon's Widow Indulges Is Yachting.

One of the most familiar figures in European waters in recent yachting seasons is Eugenie, the ex-empress of France. She is now cruising in the Mediterranean. Her yacht, the Thistle, was once the property of the late duke of Hamilton. To meet the requirements of her majesty the vessel was considerably enlarged. As always, Eugenie is attended by a numerous and stately retinue, for she still enjoys the traditions of a great court following, though her personal attire in these untoward days follows the simplest lines of the tailor's art. One of the best friends of this woman of former majesty is the captain of the Thistle, who, though an Englishman, invariably escorts her from the yacht to the train at the end of a cruise, and, at leave-taking, bends over and kisses her hand with a courtliness worthy of the days of Louis XIV. Though Eugenie is always treated in England with the greatest consideration, her life has been sadly embittered by the long exile from France. Her nearest friends declare that her passion for yachting has been the means of preserving her life through the trying vicissitudes that have followed her through nearly three decades. She still retains traces of the rich Spanish beauty that made her famous in Paris half a century ago, when an emperor sought her hand.

EX-EMPRESS EUGENIE.
(Napoleon's Widow Now Is a Devoted Yachtswoman.)

Killing Rats with Gas.

Some interesting experiments have taken place at the London docks to show the effect of a new system for the extermination of rats on board ships. The vessel is charged with sulphur dioxide gas, which apparently has the effect of attracting the rats from their hiding places, and as soon as they breathe the fumes they become suffocated. In the experiments on the steamer Gourkha several hundred rats were destroyed in a few minutes by means of the gas, which has no injurious effect upon the decorations of the saloon.

TREATMENT OF CONSUMPTION

Encouraging Intelligence Regarding the Successful Treatment of the Grim Destroyer.

An ancient writer tells how Xerxes, after surveying his mighty army of a million men, was moved to tears by the thought that a century later not one of all the million would be alive. A similar thought was in the mind of a great pathologist the other day when he said that 10,000,000 Americans of the present generation are doomed to die of consumption. He based his assertion on vital statistics which show that among civilized peoples over one-seventh of the deaths is due to this disease; but statistics are not unchanging, and happily the most recent figures open up a new world of hope and encouragement, says the Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

The great specialists now predict that the next few years will see the worst enemy of human life numbered among the curable diseases. Already, conservative doctors are holding out hope to patients who come to them in early stages of the malady. Their marked success in these cases, together with the new methods of bacteriological and microscopical research, has given new impetus to the study of the disease. More than that, recent experience has emphasized the vital importance of the earliest possible detection of tubercular tendencies, and progressive medical men all over the land are watching for suspicious symptoms with redoubled vigilance and fighting them with new skill.

One by one the old theories of the disease hae been discredited and new ones have been accepted in their stead. Within the decade the child of a consumptive was regarded as the certain victim of an inexorable fate. The new science brings him new hope—tells him that if he will live as he should the chances are in his favor. Only recently has tuberculosis been proved an infectious disease and treated as such. This discovery alone has saved untold lives, and upon its practical recognition depend millions more.

Infinite pathos lurked in the old idea that for the rich patient, who could seek high altitudes, there was reprieve—for the poor man, death. Nowadays we know that pure air is the curative agent; that the poor man may find as sure a cure upon his own roof or in a near-by suburb as the wealthy one can seek in the tablelands of Colorado. With the open-air treatment is coupled a scientific diet of meat and eggs and other foodstuffs rich in nitrogen, which have the effect of fortifying the system and increasing its resisting power.

Hospital authorities who have kept records of thousands of autopsies say that a large percentage of people, dying from whatever diseases, exhibit more or less evidence of having had tuberculosis at some period of their lives. In many of these cases nature has effected her own cure unassisted, and often without the knowledge of the sick man. It is said upon good authority that the dreaded bacilli at some time obtain entrance into the lungs of every individual. Of say, seven thus attacked four will throw off the bacillus at once; after a longer and more serious struggle two will be eventually cured; the seventh dies.

With the treatment and cure of consumption we have but little intimate concern. That is something that must be left to the doctors. What we should know—every one of us—are the simple precautions which will enable us to escape the disease. One thing is certain: If the tubercular bacilli do not obtain foothold in our systems we shall never have tuberculosis. From this it follows that we should ever keep our bodies in a state of preparedness to resist invasions of the disease to which we are all exposed—that is, we should see to it that we eat pure food, have plenty of exercise and get our fill of sunshine and pure air.

Germany has ever been a leader in this department of medical investigation; but America has kept very close behind, and has even passed her in the practical application of the great principles discovered by her scientific men. In a word, she has done her full share in bringing well-founded hope to the hopeless, and in working out a solution for one of the grim riddles of the ages.

No Deception About It.

There was absolutely no deception about it.

He advertised: "Sure recipe to prevent sunstroke on even the hottest day," and that is just what he furnished.

To all who applied he sent a slip of paper on which the following was printed:

"Swing your hammock in an icehouse and stay in the hammock."

Was it not all that he promised?—Chicago Post.

Mustn't Use Up His Employer's Time.

The Boss—If we are to retain your services, Mr. Lambkin, you must take more care of your appearance. You look as if you hadn't shaved for a week.

The Clerk—But, sir, I am growing a beard.

"That's no excuse. You must do that sort of thing out of business hours."—Glasgow Times.

An Exhibition Stunt.

Mamma—The whipping you got yesterday doesn't seem to have improved you. Your conduct has been even worse to-day.

Willie—That's what I wanted to prove. You said I was bad as I possibly could be yesterday, an' I knew you was wrong.—Philadelphia Record.

FAMED ECHOES OF AMERICA.

Phenomenal Reverberations in Well-Known Buildings and Out-of-Door Spots in This Country.

In this country there are many well-known buildings noted for their echoes, and of these perhaps none is more remarkable than the tabernacle in Salt Lake City. When this hall is empty and quiet, the ring of a pin falling on the floor can be heard from all points and even the feeble, rasping sound produced by rubbing the hands together is perfectly audible from one end of the building to the other, says Pearson's Magazine.

A better known, but really less wonderful, example of audibility within a building is found in the national hall of statuary in the capitol at Washington. The phenomena manifested here, which are genuine and interesting enough, have been somewhat overstated. I have spent a long morning in this hall studying the matter critically and having obtained due permission have questioned the various groups of visitors while being placed in chosen positions by the guides to hear the marvelous reverberations of sound.

The guides certainly make the most of their opportunities for impressing visitors—but when a guide retreats to a distance to whisper you may observe on approaching him with due caution that his whisper is of the "stage whisper" sort and calculated to carry with great distinctness under any conditions. The chief acoustical peculiarities of the chamber are clearly due to the fact that the roof, which is partly domed, is not symmetrical with respect to the floor, so that a complex reverberation is the consequence.

Natural echoes unsurpassed in wonderful effect are not far to seek in America. Probably Irish Killarney itself does not hide away more striking echoes than lurk within the famous Colorado canyon, and it would be rash to assert that these are quite the most wonderful to be found among the rocky retreats of the far west.

Deep ravines being the recognized haunt of echoes, it may be taken for granted that many exist in the great gorge of Niagara, and anyone journeying to the falls by this approach will be well rewarded by stopping at Inspiration point, walking forward to the edge of the cliff, and here waiting till the first train, on nearing the level crossing, blows its whistle. All the deep glen takes up and carries on the warning shriek.

The musical chord blown so constantly by railway engines often meets with a beautiful response from the surrounding country. This is very noticeable round the lake of Geneva, Wis., when the listener is standing on high ground and trains are threading their way through the woodland below. These effects are due to the nearness of extensive pine forests to the railroad tracks.

Many who visited Wadesboro, N. C., to observe the total eclipse of the sun from the observation station there last year noticed that the organ-like piping of the trains, when two miles distant in the broad, wooded valley below, would give place, without sensible break, to an echoing reply, which slowly and softly died away like the wild notes of some gigantic harp.

DON'T BE A PORCHER.

Name for Women and Girls Who Constantly Frequent the Hotel or Cottage Porch.

At every summer hotel there is to be seen an army of women and girls who have been named "porchers." Don't be a "porcher," even though you have to spend your holidays at a hotel. The "porcher"—well, she sits on the porch. That's all, says Ada C. Sweet, in Woman's Home Companion. Perhaps she crochets idly, or dawdles over a bit of lace or muslin which she misnames her work. "Dressed up" and ready for inspection morn, noon and night, the "porcher" sits and rocks in her chair, meanwhile gossiping over the really live people who come and go between her and the rest of the world. My dear girls, run about on the grass, in the woods, along the country roads, afoot, awheel or on horseback; row on lakes, drift on streams and rivers, dip in the salt sea; camp in the pine woods; rejoice in the natural life of the farm; journey the world round, or stay in the sugar-camp cabin with a jolly party of friends, and be happy in whatever you do, finding change, exercise, happy companionship and rest; but never, never be a "porcher!"

Hit the Ball Just Once.

It was Charlie's first game of golf. His patient friend had taken him sadly around the 18 holes and watched him hack the ball into small bits and cut up the green as though it had been plowed by shrapnel. After the game Charley and his patient friend were talking to a few of the golfers on the clubhouse veranda.

"That was a beautiful shot you made this afternoon, Charley," said the patient friend.

Charley brightened up and flushed happily, while the young women looked at him admiringly. "Which one?" he asked, eagerly.

"Why," said the patient friend, "the time you hit the ball."—Chicago Tribune.

Hopeless Case.

Diggs—Say, that dog of yours keeps me awake nights with his howling.

Biggs—Sir, I have no dog. It must be my daughter's singing that annoys you.

"Oh, that's too bad. I suppose you can't very well get rid of her, eh?"—Chicago Daily News.

Particulars Wanted.

She—Hogan has had another addition t' his fambly.

Ryan—Odd or aven?—Puck.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

COMFORT FOR CHICKS.

Coop and Run Which Enables Them to Get Plenty of Exercise and Fresh Food.

I have a coop and covered run which is used both for the setting hens and for the hens with chicks. The coops are about four feet square, and are made very much like portable hen houses, only smaller. They are made so tight that nothing can get in them to disturb the chicks when they are closed. With each coop I have a covered run made by taking some boards about 12 feet long and 12 inches wide and nailing them together in the form of a box 12 by 4 feet, without top or bottom. A piece of wire netting is nailed over the top, and the covered run is completed, except some openings in the sides through which to put feed and water, and to make a passage from the run to the coop. A small slide door is made on one side of the coop, and the run is placed so the opening in the side comes opposite this door. At night the chicks can be shut in the coop by closing the slide door, and this makes it easy to move them to fresh ground frequently. When the chicks are thus inclosed they are safe from all animals or whatever could harm them. Last year I had a brood of 30, all brooded by one hen, in such a coop and run, and did not lose one of them, while formerly I always lost some of them by the hawks, rats, cats or other animals. I was not bothered with chicks running over the lawn or garden.

COOP AND RUN FOR CHICKS.

The same coop and run were used for setting hens. I used small portable boxes for nests, and when I have a setting hen I move her at night to one of these coops and set her on some old eggs, and when I get three or four hens in a coop setting on old eggs I am ready to put my good eggs under them and at the same time fill the incubator with eggs. They all hatch about the same time, and all the chicks are given to the hens, as one hen can brood from 25 to 30 chicks, if the weather is not too cold. When you set a hen in such a coop, with run attached, she can go out in the run and get her food and water and dust herself. She cannot get away, and there is but little danger of her leaving her eggs. For making the coops I buy large boxes at the stores, and the cost of a coop and run has only been about two dollars when they were made by a carpenter. The wire netting will not cost over 50 cents, and if one does the carpenter work the expense will be small. I would especially recommend this plan of raising chickens to people living in villages.—W. H. Jenkins, in N. Y. Tribune.

THE AMERICAN BREEDS.

Many Promising Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes Are Positively Spoiled by Overweight.

Farm-Poultry, an influential Boston publication, has of late been inviting opinions concerning the proper weight of the American breeds of chickens, among which are the Plymouth Rocks and the Wyandottes. We should say that fully two-thirds of the breeders who have expressed themselves on the subject take the position that the standard weight is too high. It is claimed that the medium-sized birds of these families are almost invariably better layers than those which meet the demands of the standard in regard to weight. One well-known poultry judge, in his contribution to the discussion, says that not more than one Plymouth Rock in 12 which pass through his hands at the shows is up to standard weight. If the men who patronize the shows meet with difficulty in getting their birds up to standard weight, how much more of a task it must be for farmers who, as a rule, can give but a fraction of their time to the study of the problems of the poultry yard? And if this heavy weight is obtained at the sacrifice of the laying qualities why not cut it down? Some advertisers take great pains to have it known that their birds are fully up to standard weight. Farmers should know that they can easily pay more money for that kind of Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes than they are worth.

Some Housework Figures.

A Vermont man, with a fondness for figures, has produced the following: "We have often heard of women dishwashing their lives away, but did anyone ever think of the number of times, reduced to actual figures, the table has been spread, cleared of dishes washed and put away during 30 years? A black walnut dining table has been in use in my family for 30 years. In that period this table has been spread 32,850 times, and as many times cleared and the dishes washed. My family averaged five during that time, making 164,250 meals eaten from that table. At the low price of 15 cents per meal these would amount to $24,637.50. These figures are small compared with 60 years of continuous service which sometimes happens, but they show how women cheerfully do their duties from the cradle to the grave."

RHEUMATISM IN PIGS.

How to Combat This Dangerous Disease Which Is Common Among Young Animals.

This is a very common disease among pigs, especially young ones. It is impossible to say what causes rheumatism in the pig, as it is found under all conditions, where the pigs are well kept, or where they are not. Symptoms: There is lameness in one or more legs, which is more or less noticeable according to the severity of the case. The joints often swell at the fetlocks. When the muscles are affected it may assume the form of inflammatory rheumatism and will cause an elevation of temperature and sickness. In such case the animal will be very stiff and refuse its food, its breathing will be fast and short, and its snout dry, and if the animal is made to move, it may squeal with pain. When the legs are the parts affected, it may shift rfom one leg to the other, but if the joints swell it will likely remain stationary until relieved. Treatment: Keep the animal in a comfortable place, and if it is in good flesh give it a dose of Epsom salts, one to two ounces, or two to three drops of Croton oil in a spoonful of sweet oil, or it may be dropped in the mouth. Croton oil seems to be a useful medicine in rheumatism. Follow this by giving ten to fifteen drops of oil of gaultheria to the adult pig three times a day in a little sweet oil. For pigs two to three months old give half this quantity. I have given iodide and the bicarbonate of potassium in ten-grain doses two or three times a day in a little water with good results; but I have excellent results by giving the oil of gaultheria. Rub the sore, swollen joints with equal parts of oil of turpentine and sweet oil. In cases of inflammatory rheumatism, after giving the physic, give from three to five drops of the tincture of aconite every two hours for the first two days, then give the oil of gaultheria as directed. Young and old pigs are liable to sprains of the ligament at the top of the hoof and fetlock joint, which may be mistaken for rheumatism, as the symptoms resemble it; but as the treatment for rheumatism of the joints will answer the purpose for sprains, it will make no difference if a mistake is made.—Dr. McIntosh, V. S., in Swineherd.

FEEDING THE PIGS.

An Arrangement That Will Be Found of Much Value and an Aid to Cleanliness.

Pigs, being voracious animals, are hogs in every sense of the term, and while it may be a pleasure to administer to their wants when they are small, the feeding of them upon their having attained a good growth is not always so agreeable. Especially is this true if the animals cannot be kept out of the troughs until they are filled.

GREEDY PIGS HELD IN CHECK.

Hence it is that the arrangement presented in the picture will be found of much value and great convenience. Before pouring in the swill the front end of the pen, in the form of a swinging door suspended from the top, is placed in the position indicated on the right. The trough is then filled and the door allowed to assume its former position, as shown at the left. King Porker thus can easily be held in check until his table is set, and neither he nor his owner be caused any harm thereby.—Frederick O. Sibley, in N. Y. Tribune.

Goats to Protect Sheep.

The old idea that the goats are all bad and the sheep all good will have to be modified, if the goat proves himself as useful as a southern farmer says he is. After trying in vain to protect his sheep against sheep-killing curs by shooting an occasional cur that presented a good mark, Mr. J. A. Morris, of Atlanta, bought some Angora goats. He found that these animals, while friendly with sheep, fought the stray dogs to a finish. Not only so, but their pugilistic spirit spread to the rams, which had formerly been afraid of the dogs, and so the flock was doubly protected. If this faculty of the Angora goat is general it will be worth many thousands of dollars to the farmers of the southwest, who have in many cases abandoned sheep raising because of the depredations of the worthless, wandering cur. — Rural World.

Cottonseed Meal for Pigs.

We fed cotton seed meal to one lot of hogs that had not done well in another experiment, and they were ready for market, well finished, in 22 days. Cotton seed meal fed in large quantities or for long periods is death to hogs. Fed for a short time in small quantities, it is valuable to put hogs in good condition that are not doing well. We begin by feeding one-fourth pound of cotton seed a day per 1,000 pounds live weight of hogs, and increase each day to ten days, when we feed per day three pounds per 1,000 pounds live weight of hogs, mixing the meal with the other grain. This quantity of cotton seed can be profitably fed three to four weeks.—Kansas Experiment Station Bulletin.

The swarming mania may be prevented by inserting a frame of comb containing young brood.

LEVEL CULTURE BEST.

No Kind of a Season Warrants Ridging of Corn and No Kind of Soil Demands It.

No farm practice is more inimical to intelligent corn culture than that alarmingly common in the corn belt of laying by the corn with large shovels set to throw the earth from between the rows into a ridge centering in the rows. Ridges thus formed increase the exposed surface and hence make possible larger evaporation of moisture. Moreover, they leave the middles hard and compact so that the soil pumps ooze out the water by the ton, and compel the foraging roots of the plants to go straight down for food and moisture, which should be available in the first several inches of soil that has been removed from the middles and thrown about the base of the plants.

Ridging spoils the surface of the ground for pasture and meadow unless it be repeatedly worked. If you should sow clover in the corn and lay the latter by with ridge-forming shovels your clover pasture always would be a series of bumps, which would aggravate the driver of the mowing machine, cause the hay loader trouble and annoy in other ways.

In a rolling country where, strange to say, ridging is commonest, the practice is of greater advantage than in the prairie country, since in the former it furnishes convenient surface avenues for the escape of water, which in a short season transforms them into small ditches and skims off the cream, as it were, of the land and deposits it in the creek or stream, leaving the farmer a veritable new but poor farm.

Level culture is not only easier on the corn, team and workman, but it is decidedly better for the land. It avoids root pruning, aerates the soil and removes weeds. Experiments have shown that it also will give larger yields than ridge culture. Then why ridge your corn?

We know one of the principal reasons why corn growers do it: Ridging covers up a large number of weeds growing in the hill and thus makes the field appear clean. We are convinced that the weeds if left uncovered cannot do as much injury to the corn plants as the ridges will inflict. As between the two evils choose the lesser.

Don't ridge your corn. Adopt that saner system—level culture. No kind of a season warrants ridging and no kind of soil demands it—science condemns it, good farming opposes it and you ought to quit it.—National Rural.

TO GRUB OUT STUMPS.

A Comparatively Easy Method of Preparing Old Timber Land for General Cultivation.

The plan herewith shows a method of ridding a field of stumps. Two poles (a a) are placed slanting against a low wheel wagon. They should be 12 feet long and bolted together at the top and placed on opposite side of the wagon from the stump, leaning over the wagon until the top is perpendicular with the side of platform next to stump. I use a platform consisting of two poles of sufficient size to be strong enough to hold up a heavy load, with boards laid between. Place the wagon far enough from the stump or stone to be removed, to allow two or three planks five or six feet long to be set in between stump and wagon with ends resting on platform. Tie a rope 50 or 60 feet long to top of poles (a a) so that there will be at least 15 feet left over on the short end. This short end is tied around the stump. The team is then hitched onto the long end of the rope (b). This is an easy method of drawing out large-sized stumps.—J. A. Moorman, in Farm and Home.

PULLING STUMPS BY HORSE POWER.

GRADUATES IN DEMAND.

Young Men Educated in the Science of Agriculture Have Bright Future Before Them.

Four or five years ago, says the San Francisco Chronicle, we warned our readers that graduates in agriculture would soon be in greater demand than any other class of educated men, and that young men and women who would at once enter a first-rate agricultural college would find their careers ready for them at the end of their course. That prediction has come true. The department of agriculture is scouring the country for promising young men who have been educated to do its work. We do not suppose that a single one of our readers was led by our prophecy to enter an agricultural course, and we would not now venture to repeat it. The advantage of pioneering is gone. The demand is rapidly producing the supply from the young men of states whose people are better informed and more alert than our own, and students who enter now will probably find themselves at graduation exposed to strong competition which only the fittest can survive, and perhaps no better off than graduates in law, medicine, electricity and the like who are walking the streets in search of a job. But, nevertheless, while the day of the "sure thing" for the graduate in agriculture is past, and his reward not likely to equal those of the most brilliant and successful graduates in other professions, the opportunities, on the whole, are still far better than those in most other lines of achievement.

PACIFIC OCEAN TURNS RED.

A Most Remarkable Phenomenon Is Witnessed Along the California Coast.

Following the earthquake shocks that visited the California coast peculiar phenomena have developed in the Pacific ocean. Within a distance of 65 miles along the Los Angeles county shore line the waters, heretofore clear and of the usual greenish color have become a terra cotta red. This color line extends off shore for several miles, and is so distasteful to the fish family that they have gone far into the ocean to seek clearer waters. At night this colored sea water gives off a phosphorescent light that enables one to read average print.

At a certain point along the beach the water has turned into sweet water that can be drunk. No theory is advanced except that in the Pacific, off the coast, the earthquake opened a fissure that forces fresh water and colored matter to the surface, and the latter is drifting to the shore. A tidal wave followed the earthquake.

They Cry in Tragedy.

Friend—Did you ever shed real tears on the stage?

Actress—Often. It's enough to make even an actress cry to be told right in the middle of a five-act tragedy, that the manager has skipped with the receipts.—N. Y. Weekly.

His Modest Reply.

Diggs—Do you believe there is any truth in the saying that it takes a genius to live with a genius?

Biggs—No, I don't. I never considered my wife a genius.—Chicago Daily News.

"Think of it! Goats on racing yachts as mascots!" "They are certainly no more remarkable than rams on battleships."—Philadelphia Times.

If you cannot keep cool you can keep your temper.—Town Topics.

Impartial.—Tess—"I never see Miss Spinner out wheeling that Mr. Wheeler and Mr. Sprockett are not with her." Jess—"Yes, she's got them both on her string. The girls are calling her 'Miss Tandem.'" Tess—"But she rides an individual wheel." Jess—"Yes, but she's a bicycle maid for two.'"—Philadelphia Press.

An Unlucky Coincidence.—Silas—"How did Ezry Marks come tew lose his farm?" Jason—"He thought his neighbor's fence wuz encroachin' on his land, an' the very fust darn lawyer he spoke tew about it thought so, too."—Boston Traveller.

"It was a marriage of reason." What! With that donkey Todkins? Absurd!" "Not at all. He may be an apology for a man, but as an apology is an excuse, she reasoned he was an excuse for getting married."—Philadelphia Times.

Nell—"Mr. Weston paid me quite a compliment at dinner last evening. He told me I ate like a bird." Belle—"Well, he's a good judge. He runs an ostrich farm, you know."—Philadelphia Record.

Good Advice.—"I'm thinking of doing a little speculating," said the lamb. "What's the best thing to put your money in?" "A safe deposit vault," replied the old bird.—Philadelphia Press.

Miss Pritty—"You'd never dream what a lot of proposals I've had." Miss Jellus—"Perhaps not, but I'll wager you've dreamed most of them."—Philadelphia Press.

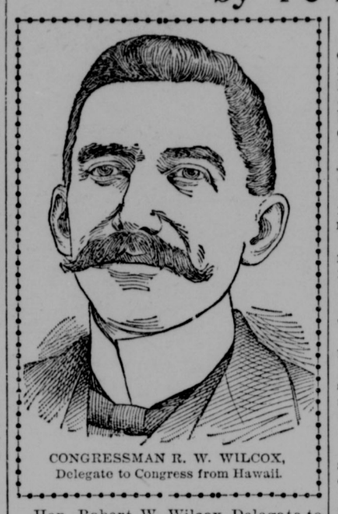
The Widow's Intended.—"Well, Tommy, has your mother told you of my good fortune?" Tommy—"No. She only said she was going to marry you!"—Punch.

A Useless Adjunct.—Ascum—"What's the idea in your new story?" Wright—"Idea? Why, it hasn't any. It's a society novel."—Philadelphia Press.

"He's a regular ward healer." "Why, he looks like a physician." "That's it. He is a hospital doctor."—Philadelphia Times.

MEMBER OF CONGRESS FROM SANDWICH ISLANDS

Cured of Catarrh of the Stomach by Pe-ru-na.



CONGRESSMAN R. W. WILCOX, Delegate to Congress from Hawaii.

Hon. Robert W. Wilcox, Delegate to Congress from Hawaii and the Sandwich Islands, in a recent letter from Washington, D. C., writes:

"I have used Peruna for dyspepsia and I cheerfully give you this testimonial. Am satisfied if it is used properly it will be of great benefit to our people. I can conscientiously recommend it to anyone who is suffering with stomach or catarrhal troubles."
—R. W. Wilcox.

All over this country are hundreds of people who are suffering from catarrh of the stomach who are wasting precious time, and enduring needless suffering. The remedies they try only temporarily palliate the distress, but never effect a cure. Remedies for dyspepsia have multiplied so rapidly that they are becoming as numerous as the leaves of the forest, and yet dyspepsia continues to flourish in spite of them all. This is due to the fact that the cause of dyspepsia is not recognized as catarrh.

If there is a remedy in the whole range of medicinal preparations that is in every particular adapted to dyspepsia, that remedy is Peruna. This remedy is well nigh invincible in these cases.

Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O., says:

"In my large practice and correspondence I have yet to learn of a single case of atonic dyspepsia which has not either been greatly benefited or cured by Peruna."

No one suffering with catarrh of the stomach or dyspepsia, however slight, can be well or happy. It is the cause of so many distressing symptoms that it is a most dreaded disease. Peruna acts immediately on the seat of the trouble, the inflamed mucous membranes lining the stomach and a lasting cure is effected.

If you do not derive prompt and satisfactory results from the use of Peruna, write at once to Dr. Hartman, giving a full statement of your case, and he will be pleased to give you his valuable advice gratis.

Address Dr. Hartman, President of The Hartman Sanitarium, Columbus, O.

To Investors Our Wheat Fund produces to investors an average of over 10 per cent. per month. Withdrawal on demand. "Nothing so safe as wheat." For full particulars apply to W. E. DOBSON & CO., Bankers and Brokers, 51 and 33 Broadway, New York. Banking World says: "Their methods are honorable, conservative and open to all."

PILES ANAKESIS gives instant relief and POSITIVELY CURES PILES. For free sample address "ANAKESIS," Tribune building, New York.

RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 58 S. California Ave., Chicago.

AGENT WANTED GENTLEMAN or LADY, only one in each town, to sell Tea at importer's PRICES. WRITE QUICKLY to HOME TEA COMPANY, 22 Pearl Street, NEW YORK CITY.

STARK TREES best by Test—77 YEARS. LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We PAY CASH. WANT MORE SALESMEN Weekly. STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

SOZODONT Tooth Powder 25c

20,000 HARVEST HANDS

Required to harvest the grain crop of Western CANADA. The most abundant yield on the Continent. Reports are that the average yield of No. 1 Hard Wheat in Western Canada will be over thirty bushels to the acre. Prices for farm help will be excellent. Splendid Ranching Lands adjoining the Wheat Belt, will be run from all points in the United States to the FREE GRANT LANDS. Secure a home at once, and if you wish to purchase at prevailing prices, and secure the advantage of the low rates, apply for Literature, Rates, etc., to F. PEDLEY, Supt. Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to J. S. YOUNG, 315½ State St., Columbus, O., Canadian Government Agent.

EXCURSIONS

☞ When visiting Buffalo, do not fail to see the CANADIAN EXHIBIT at the Pan-American.

ECONOMY CREAM SEPARATOR
Pays for itself in a few days. Separates in 40 minutes automatically and gets all the cream. Only costs a trifle and lasts forever. AGENTS WANTED—Big pay—every farmer buys. Where we have no agent we will send a Separator at agents' prices, to introduce it. Write for catalogue, prices, etc., to ECONOMY SUPPLY CO., 554 Main St., Kansas City, Mo

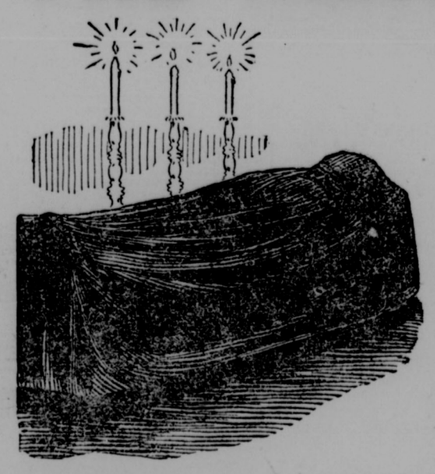
PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION

A. N. K.—C 1877

WHEN WRITING TO ADVERTISERS please state that you saw the Advertisement in this paper.

THE BLACK DEATH

BUBONIC PLAGUE, ASIATIC CHOLERA, YELLOW FEVER,



all begin in the bowels. It's the unclean places that breed infectious epidemics, and it's the unclean body—unclean inside—that "catches" the disease. A person whose stomach and bowels are kept clean and whose liver is lively, and blood pure, is safe against yellow fever, or any other of the dreadful diseases that desolate our beautiful southland. Some of the cleanest people outside are filthiest inside, and they are the ones who not only "catch" the infection, but endanger the lives of all their friends and relatives. There's only one certain way of keeping clean inside so as to prevent dicease and that is to take CASCARETS. Perfect disinfectant and bowel strengtheners. All diseases are

PREVENTED BY Cascarets CANDY CATHARTIC

BEST FOR THE BOWELS

THIS IS CCC THE TABLET.

10c. 25c. 50c.

ALL DRUGGISTS

CASCARETS are absolutely harmless, a purely vegetable compound. No mercurial or other mineral pill-poison in CASCARETS. CASCARETS promptly, effectively and permanently cure every disorder of the Stomach, Liver and Intestines. They not only cure constipation, but correct any and every form of irregularity of the bowels, including diarrhœa and dysentry. Pleasant, palatable, potent. Taste good, do good. Never sicken, weaken or gripe. Write for booklet and free sample. Address STERLING REMEDY CO., CHICAGO or NEW YORK. 429

GORMAN USING THE WHIP.

Mayor Hayes, of Baltimore, Must Help the Legislative Ticket.

Mr. Gorman, Chairman Vandiver, of the Democratic State Committee, and other leaders of the party, will confer at Saratoga this week or the week following, and the entire plan of the fall campaign will be mapped out.

With very few exceptions, none but Gorman men are being nominated by the Democrats in the counties, and there are no indications as yet of any formidable opposition within the party in Baltimore city.

Never before has the regular Democratic organization in Baltimore assumed the independent and aggressive attitude which is its policy this year in dealing with its independent and inter-party rivals. It believes that it is so strongly entrenched in its control of party affairs that no quarter should be offered its whilom adversaries, and, what is more, the regulars do not ask for quarter.

Instead of offering the olive branch to Mayor Hayes and his friends, it offers him W. Starr Gephart, his most bitter foe in the Democratic party, as a member of the State Committee. Gephart lives in the same ward in which Hayes lives, and his appointment, therefore, is a home thrust.

Mr. Gorman is apparently not so anxious to conciliate Hayes as he was a month ago. The leader of the regular organization will say to the Mayor's friends that if they do not pitch in and help the legislative ticket in the city the Democrats, should they secure control of the General Assembly, will, in addition to electing Mr. Gorman to the Senate, lop off a year of Mayor Hayes' term by amending the new city charter so as to make the Mayor's term three instead of four years.

The chief battle grounds in the legislative contests in the counties will be Anne Arundel county, Calvert, Caroline, Dorchester, Charles, Frederick, Prince George's, Talbot, St. Mary's, Somerset and Kent.

Chairman Goldsborough, of the Republican State Central Committee, will immediately start the active work of the campaign, so far as the Republicans are concerned, by the appointment of committees on illiteracy and documents, registration and naturalization. The make-up of these committees is left entirely to Mr. Goldsborough and City Chairman Mason.

The Republicans have at this time a superabundance of would-be candidates for the Legislature in the Second and Third districts and the indications are that it will require considerable skill and good management to prevent the wrong set of men from getting on the ticket. The present plan of the leaders is to postpone, if possible, the nominations in these two districts until the Democrats have named their ticket. This plan of procedure may have to be changed if the Democrats hold their legislative district convention too late.

$50.00 Reward.

The above reward will be paid for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the party or parties who on the night of July 31, 1901, entered the livery stable of Cora V. Savage, at Deer Park, and maliciously cut and destroyed certain vehicles, harness, bridles, etc.

FRED. A. THAYER,
State's Attorney for Garrett Co.

If you have a baby in the house you will wish to know the best way to check any unusual looseness of the bowels, or diarrhoea so common to small children. O. P. M. Holliday, of Daming, Ind., who has an eleven months' old child, says: "Through the months of June and July our baby was teething and took a running off of the bowels and sickness of the stomach. His bowels would move from five to eight times a day. I had a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in the house and gave him four drops in a teaspoonful of water and he got better at once." For sale by all druggists.

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Rattlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

Special Rates to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition, Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Excursion tickets from Oakland, Md., to Buffalo and return via Pittsburg account Pan-American Exposition now on sale at ticket offices Baltimore & Ohio Railroad:

SEVEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

FIFTEEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

SEASON TICKETS—On sale daily, good returning until Nov. 30th, 1901, $19.20.

For full details, time of trains, etc., call on Agent Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. til nov 1

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

Order of Publication.

Noah Bowman, Plaintiff, vs. Elizabeth Bowman et al, Defendants.

No. 1118 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this bill is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate of which Samuel Bowman, late of Garrett county, deceased, died seized and possessed.

The Bill states—

1st. That a certain Samuel Bowman was in his lifetime seized and possessed of a parcel of land situated in Garrett county, Maryland, containing about sixty-four and one-half acres.

2nd. That being so seized, the said Samuel Bowman some twenty years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving him a widow (who has since died) and the following children, viz., Noah Bowman, Joseph Bowman, Cornelius Bowman and Lydia Bowman.

3rd. That the said Lydia intermarried with one J. H. Pitzer, and some years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving her her husband and the following children, viz., Maggie B., who intermarried with W. G. Rogers; Annie, who intermarried with S. J. Neil (the said Annie now being dead, dying intestate, leaving surviving her her said husband and one child, Conova, a minor); Harriet, who intermarried with Alex. McAnear; Frances L., who intermarried with W. W. Brown; Sarah A., who intermarried with L. L. Cooper; Noah C. Pitzer, a minor, and J. R. Pitzer.

4th. That Cornelius Bowman is also dead, dying intestate, leaving a widow, Elizabeth Bowman, and the following children, viz., James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman and Mattie, who intermarried with W. H. Morgan.

5th. That the said Joseph Bowman died intestate some years ago, leaving a widow, Lizzie Bowman, a son, N. E. Bowman, and other children, whose names and ages are unknown.

6th. That the real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury, and that in order to make division thereof the property will have to be sold and the proceeds divided.

7th. The Bill then prays for a decree for the sale of said property and for a distribution of the proceeds, for general relief, and also for an order of publication against the non-residents and unknown heirs.

It is thereupon, this 12th day of August, 1901, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 13th day of September, 1901, give notice to the defendants, the said Elizabeth Bowman, James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman, Mattie Morgan and W. H. Morgan, her husband, J. H. Pitzer, Maggie B. Rogers and W. G. Rogers, her husband, S. J. Neal, Conova Neal, Harriet E. McAnear and Alex. McAnear, her husband, Sarah Cooper and L. L. Cooper, her husband, Noah C. Pitzer, Frances L. Brown and W. W. Brown, her husband, J. R. Pitzer, Lizzie Bowman, N. E. Bowman and the unknown heirs of Joseph Bowman, deceased, of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 30th day of September, 1901, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy—test:
E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

Mortgagee's Sale
—OF—
REAL ESTATE

By virtue of a power contained in a mortgage from Alfred W. Dennett and wife to James R. Bishop, dated September 24th, A. D. 1895, and recorded among the mortgage records of Garrett county in Liber E. Z. T. No. 27, folio 458, the mortgagors having made default in the observance of the covenants therein upon their part to be performed, the undersigned trustee, assignee of said mortgage, will offer at public sale in front of the postoffice in the town of Oakland, in said Garrett county, State of Maryland, at two o'clock p. m., on Monday, September 9, 1901,

all that lot of ground situated near Mountain Lake Park, in said county and State, which is described as follows, to-wit: Beginning for the same at the southwest corner of A. C. Brooke lot on the road leading from Mountain Lake Park to Oakland and running thence along said road eight rods, eleven feet and seven inches; thence by a parallel line to that of Jennie Smith and others on the opposide side of the lot 100 rods to the Park alley; thence by and with said alley 34 rods to aforesaid line between Jennie Smith and others and James R. Bishop; thence by and with said line between Jennie Smith and others and James R. Bishop 74 rods, 11 feet and 7 inches to Brooke lot; thence with third line of said Brooke's lot reversed 25 rods, 4 feet and 9 inches; thence with second line of said Brooke's lot reversed 23 rods, 4 feet and 9 inches to the beginning, containing more or less, and being the same lot of ground that was conveyed to the said A. W. Dennett by deed from James R. Bishop and wife which is duly recorded among the land records of Garrett county, especial reference to which deed is herein made for a more particular description of said lot of ground.

Seventeen and a Quartar Acres of Land

The property is unimproved.

TERMS OF SALE:—CASH.

WILLIAM E. WALSH,
Trustee, Assignee of Mortgage.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE
COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO.,
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 22, 1901.

The Board of County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Monday, Sept. 9, 1901,

as required by law, for the purpose of transacting all routine business.

By order of the Board,
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

Oakland Pharmacy

JOS. E. HARNED, Proprietor.

Drugs, Chemicals, Stationery, Cigars Cameras and Photo Supplies

Turnbull's

China and Japan Mattings, all weaves and colorings.

Porch and Lawn Furniture,

Iron and Brass Bedsteads,

Linoleums and Oil Cloths,

Carpetings.

JOHN TURNBULL, JR., & COMPANY,

16, 18, 20 West Baltimore Street,

BALTIMORE

I HAVE PURCHASED
THE OAKLAND COAL YARD
of Mr. D. L. Conneway and will continue the business. I will keep constantly on hand a large supply of
HARD AND SOFT
COAL,
KINDLING WOOD, Etc.

All orders will receive prompt attention. Leave orders with the weighmaster or at my residence, the Giessman Hotel.

35-2 GEO. GIESSMAN

Rough, Red Hands

made to look white as the driven snow and so soft to the touch as the skin of a baby—

LILY CREAM

imparts a velvety smoothness to the skin—dries instantly and is perfectly invisible—it is healing, soothing, protecting.

LOGAN DRUG COMPANY,
WHEELING, W. VA.
15 and 25 cents. At your Druggist.

ROAD PETITION.

This is to give notice that thirty days after the first publication of this notice application will be made to the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county, Maryland, for the appointment of viewers to view and locate a new road beginning for the same at the south end of Garrett V. Moon's lane and running thence down Laurel Creek and through the lands of the Manor Mining and Manufacturing Company, James L. Harvey and J. B. Lipscomb and along the lines of said Lipscomb and Chas. Cooper and through the lands of the said Mining and Manufacturing Company to the town of Schell, a distance of about three miles.

J. L. HARVEY,
J. O. O'HARE,
J. B. LIPSCOMB and others,
Petitioners.

22⅝5t*

The Maryland Agricultural College

COLLEGE PARK, MARYLAND.

Maryland's School of Technology. Four Courses of Instruction.

AGRICULTURAL — MECHANICAL
SCIENTIFIC — CLASSICAL

Each department supplied with the most modern and approved apparatus. Practical work emphasized in all departments. Graduates qualified at once to enter upon life's work; graduates in Mechanical Engineering and Chemistry this year, all secured positions upon graduation. Boarding Department supplied with all modern improvements—bath rooms, closets, steam heat and gas.

Tuition, Books, Heat, Light, Washing, Board and Medical Attendance, $154.00 for scholastic year. Catalogue giving full particulars sent on application. Daily visit by physician to college.

Attention is called to the Short Course of Ten Weeks in Agriculture. Particulars sent upon application.

Term commences September 23rd. Early application necessary for admittance.

R. W. SILVESTER,
President M. A. C.

Special Examinations.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 12, 1901.

There will be a special examination for teachers held in Oakland on

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30th,

beginning at 8 o'clock a. m. The examination for free scholarship to State Normal and other institutions will take place on same day.

By order of the Board
ED A. BROWNING,
Examiners.

23 2

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., August 14, 1901.

Josias Bittinger, appointed Republican Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 28, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead Geo. W. Engle is hereby appointed to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

The Garrett County Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank

OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE
SECOND NATIONAL BANK
of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital $100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits.. 250,000
Liability of Shareholders 100,000
Additional Security to Depositors.. $450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, — O. C. Gephart,
James Clark, — L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, — A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS

cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.

A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St.Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for

ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

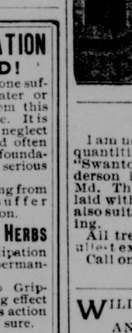
S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.



J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy

MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the utmost extent of the law.

Call on or address:
C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.

Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

135⅝ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale.

House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187⅝ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26⅛ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swauger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to

JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent,
OAKLAND, MD

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,

Office 7 North Liberty St.

CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—REPUBLICAN Building,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
OAKLAND, MD.
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. fe14-1y

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. 38 10 6

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice,
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

M. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 16-'96

H. W. McCOMAS, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to 9 p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county, Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 6 22 5m

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md.
Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26t*

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tract and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42	A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.30	A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01	A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52	P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07	P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50	A. M
No. 2—Daily	6.52	A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41	P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12	P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35	P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37	A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.
IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3	No. 1	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2	No. 4
P. M.	A. M.		NOON	P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. June.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 16	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05	3 05
6 31	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 59	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 41	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 29
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv*7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.			A. M. A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager. G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1901. NUMBER 25.

WITNESSED BY A REGIMENT.

Duel With Revolvers Fought on the Western Plains.

The St. Joseph (Mo.) correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat writes:

"Wm. Balley, the chief lieutenant of the noted guerrilla, Charles Quantrell, during the War of the Rebellion, who has just passed away at the State Insane asylum in this city, a victim of paresis, was one of the figures in a duel fought on the plains of Texas, as he was fleeing with Shelby and a handful of ex-Confederates from the United States, to seek an asylum under the reign of Maximilian in Mexico. After the last remnant of the guerrilla band had been hunted to earth, Halley escaped to one of the commands under Gen. Jo. Shelby, which was then making its way to a point on the Brazos river, in Texas, with the expectation of making a final attack upon Federal forces and supplies at Corsicana.

"Shelby's army was marching toward Austin, near where the duel between Halley, who was then a first lieutenant in one of the companies, and a captain of a company in another regiment, occurred. The duel was witnessed by a number of Shelby's men, who are now residents of this city, and Major Edwards, who accompanied Shelby to the City of Mexico, returning only after the army was disbanded and upon the refusal of Maximilian to accept the Missourians into the service of the empire.

"The duelists—both young men—quarreled about a woman—a fair young thing—who was the captain's by right of discovery, the lieutenant's by right of conquest. At the night encampment she abandoned the old love for the new, and in the struggle for possession the captain struck the lieutenant fair in the face.

"'You have done a serious thing,' some comrade said to him.

"'It will be more serious in the morning,' was the quiet reply.

"'But you are in the wrong, and you should apologize.'

"He tapped the handle of his revolver significantly and made answer: 'This must finish what the blow has commenced. A woman worth kissing is worth fighting for.'

"The name of either duelist has heretofore remained unspoken. Most of the men who witnessed the tragedy have long since passed to their reward, and it is only since the death of Halley in this city that one of his comrades-in-arms, who witnessed the tragedy, has volunteered to give his name. There are those to-day living in Marion county, Missouri, whose sleep in eternity will be brighter and sweeter if they are left in ignorance of how one fair-haired boy, who went forth to fight the battles of the South, found a grave when her battles were ended. The lieutenant challenged the captain, but the question of its acceptance was decided upon before the challenge was received. These were the terms: At daylight the principals were to meet one mile from the camp upon the prairie, armed with a revolver and a saber. They were to be mounted and stationed 20 paces apart, back to back. At the word they were to wheel and fire, advancing or remaining stationary, as they choose. In no event were they to pass beyond a line 200 yards in the rear of each position.

"So secret were the preparations and so sacred the honor of the two men that, although the difficulty was known to 300 soldiers, not one of them informed General Shelby. The General would instantly have arrested the principals and forced a compromise, as he had done once before, under circumstances as urgent, but in no way similar. It was a beautiful morning, all balm and bloom and verdure. Two and two and in groups the men stole away from the camp and ranged themselves on either flank. A few rude jokes were heard, and they died out quickly as the combatants rode up to the dead line. Both were calm and cool, and on the captain's face there was a half smile. Poor fellow, there were already the scars of three honorable wounds upon his body; the fourth would be his death wound.

"They were placed and sat their horses like men who are about to charge. Each head was turned a little to one side, the feet rested lightly in the stirrups, the left hands grasped the reins, well gathered up, the right hands held the deadly pistols, loaded fresh an hour before.

"'Ready—wheel!' The trained steeds turned upon a pivot as one steed.

"'Fire!'

"The lieutenant never moved from his tracks. The captain dashed upon him at a full gallop, firing as he came on. Three chambers were empty and three bullets sped away over the prairie, harmless. Before the fourth fire was given the captain was abreast of the lieutenant and aiming at him at deadly range. Too late! The lieutenant threw out his pistol until the muzzle almost touched the captain's hair, and fired. The horse dashed away riderless, the captain's lifeblood upon his trappings. There was a face in the grass, a widowed woman in Missouri and a soul somewhere in the white hush and waste of eternity. Comrades buried him before the sun rose, before the dew was dried upon the grass, and returned from the scene of combat without a word of comment upon their lips.

"Lieutenant Halley sought his quarters, took a cup of coffee, a short nap and, with his comrades, resumed the march toward the Mexican border. They crossed and went straight to the City of Mexico, engaging in battle at almost every step of the journey, finally to reach their destination and have their proffers of service to an empire rejected. Halley and a few companions organized a band for an early return to the States. He dared not return to the home of his childhood, near Independence, Mo., because a price had been placed upon his head. He was scarcely more than a boy, being then not 21 years of age. After a stealthy call at the home of his sister, at Independence, he left the next day for Salt Lake City, where, for many years he discharged the duties of a peace officer in that wild and unsettled country. Many outlaws fell victims to his unerring aim with the revolver, and in the course of a decade the feeling against him and the guerrillas of the Civil War had so much ameliorated that he returned to Missouri and became an officer of the St. Joseph police force. In his demise passes away one of the characters which the Civil War produced among the boys of Missouri yet in their teens."

If you have a baby in the house you will wish to know the best way to check any unusual looseness of the bowels, or diarrhoea so common to small children. O. P. M. Holliday, of Daming, Ind., who has an eleven months' old child, says: "Through the months of June and July our baby was teething and took a running off of the bowels and sickness of the stomach. His bowels would move from five to eight times a day. I had a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy in the house and gave him four drops in a teaspoonful of water and he got better at once." For sale by all druggists.

Grantsville.

It is quite a while since our last batch of items were written for THE REPUBLICAN. Many events have since occurred, contributing both to weal and woe of your readers. Time is truly fleeting, and we have cause to more fully realize the force and truth of the statement as we take a mentally retrospective look. We are hurrying on to the great beyond and to a final restitution, regardless of creed, theory, practice, belief or lack of any belief.

Mrs. Mary Hersberger, wife of Emanuel Hersberger, has been quite ill from a paralytic stroke or threatened apoplexy, but is slowly improving.

Mrs. Elizabeth Beachy, widow of the late Bishop Joel Beachy, was seriously affected with erysipelas of the face, but is also improving.

Charles Wegman, of the Baltimore police force, is at home on a vacation.

H. S. Yoder last week delivered 100 bushels of potatoes, at 83 cents a bushel, to Niverton, Pa., about three miles distant, for S. A. Lichliter, of Elk Lick, Pa.

Jennings Bros. are having a freight warehouse and station erected where their railroad crosses the National road, east of town.

Mrs. McDowell, of Salisbury, Pa., is visiting Miss Maggie Brown.

Alvin Getty and wife, of Cumberland, are visiting their relatives and friends here.

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Rattlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

MOUNTAIN TRIOLETS.

THE MOUNTAIN MISTS.

When the mountain mists are glooming
In a winding sheet of woe,
Then my soul, with dread consuming,
When the mountain mists are glooming,
Sees new terrors darkly looming
On the path I fain would go;
When the mountain mists are glooming
In a winding sheet of woe.

THE NEVER ENDING RAIN.

With the weary, dreary drizzle
Of the never ending rain.
'Til my thoughts are all a-frizzle
With the weary, dreary drizzle
From the skies so gray and grizzle
In a lachrymose refrain.
With the weary, dreary drizzle
Of the never ending rain.

THE HAPPY COOK.

When everything is found just right
Then cooking is a pleasure;
The good wife takes a great delight,
When everything is found just right,
In having meals quite out of sight
And giving ample measure;
When everything is found just right
Then cooking is a pleasure.

August, 1901. T. L. L.

SEPTEMBER TO BE DRY.

Rev. Irl Hicks Tells of Weather Conditions For the Coming Month.

Rev. Irl Hicks, in Words and Work, predicts variable weather for September. The autumnal equinox, central on the 22d, covers the whole month with its perturbing influence, he asserts in his forecast, and as a result and changes peculiar to the season are apt to break out at any time and sure to break out at some time during the transition of the seasons to opposite ends of the globe, or in the equinoctial period proper.

Warm and dry periods will prevail throughout September. The first regular storm period will be from the 10th to 13th. "In all probability general rainstorms, gales and changes of weather will visit the interior of the continent at this time, as well as the coast regions."

"The reactionary storm period, central about the 16th and 17th, will bring perceptible changes to storm conditions, but more general energetic disturbances are almost certain to result during the Vulcan storms period, central on the 22nd, coincident with the center of earth's autumnal equinox." The final storm period reaches from the 26th to 30th.

Glancing ahead into the weather conditions of 1902, Rev. Hicks believes that we shall not pass out of this period of "minimum" precipitation with a bound, but that a shortage in general rains to a less destructive extent will be characteristic of the coming year. He believes that the "rain belt" which touched the extreme north in 1900, will advance further southward in 1902, but that the rainfall will not be excessive even there, and that the central and southern parts of the country will have another summer of shortage of rainfall.

Home From a Mountain Drive.

R. F. Hopwood, wife and brother, Frank P. Hopwood, with his wife, returned home Tuesday evening from a ten days' journey over the old National pike and into Maryland. The party drove in a carriage from Uniontown to Petersburg, where they remained over night; from there to Accident and thence to Oakland, where they made their headquarters, taking in Deer Park, Mountain Lake Park and other places of note. On Thursday last they had the pleasure of hearing the lectures of General Fitzhugh Lee and Lieutenant Richmond Pearson Hobson, who sank the Merrimac in the harbor of Santiago. General Lee's subject was "Our Country in Peace and War," and Lieut. Hobson's was "Our Navy." Mr. Hopwood says 5,000 listened to the lectures.—Uniontown Standard.

Special Rates to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition, Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Excursion tickets from Oakland, Md., to Buffalo and return via Pittsburg account Pan-American Exposition now on sale at ticket offices Baltimore & Ohio Railroad:

SEVEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

FIFTEEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

SEASON TICKETS—On sale daily, good returning until Nov. 30th, 1901, $19.20.

For full details, time of trains, etc., call on Agent Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. til nov 1

Died.

ECHARD.—At his home near McHenry on Tuesday of rheumatism of the heart, after a brief illness, Peter Echard, aged about 60 years. The deceased was a Justice of the Peace at the time of his death and also for a great number of years preceding his demise. His funeral will take place to-day. The interment will occur at Thayerville.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

WITH BROWN AT HARPERS FERRY.

Sole Survivor of the Famous Raid in 1859. His Name is Jacob Wildner.

ST. PAUL, MINN., August 25.—Approaching the end of his days in an obscure little village in Wisconsin is a man who recently has acknowledged that he was with John Brown at Harpers Ferry as one of Osawatomie's raiders. He escaped at the time of John Brown's capture, but returned in disguise, and was present at the execution of Brown and his companions.

This man is Jacob Wildner, and his home is in New Lisbon. So far as he knows, he is the only survivor of John Brown's party. He lives a quiet and retired life, because of age and poor health, and for many years he concealed the fact of his participation in the Harpers Ferry raid, fearing that it would create a prejudice against him. His mind is as clear as to the stirring events of 1859 as it was at that time, he says, and he gives from memory this account of the attempt to cause a rebellion among the slaves:

"On Sunday, October 16, 1859, John Brown and our men crossed the railroad bridge over the Potomac river, seized the United States arsenal, stopped the railway trains, captured a number of citizens, set free such slaves as they could find and held the town for more than 24 hours.

"The telegraph lines were cut and arms sent to the slaves, with the expectation that they would rise at once, according to their previous agreement; but this, for some reason unknown to me, they refused to do.

"The situation was thus unexpectedly critical for us, and our leader ordered pickets to be established to warn us of the coming of the citizens, who were arming against us. They attacked the arsenal next day. When he saw them coming John Brown gave us positive orders not to begin hostilities, so we held our fire until attacked. The first shots were fired by the mob. We returned the fire, of course, to the best of our ability, and succeeded in holding them at bay for a time. It soon became apparent to us, however, that the building could not be maintained against our assailants, whose numbers were increasing every minute.

"Some of our men lost heart then and attempted to escape. One leaped into the river and swam desperately for the other shore, but before reaching it he was wounded. He managed to scramble out upon a rock in the river, and threw up his hands in token of surrender. A Virginian waded out to him, and while he still had his hands in the air the Virginian shot him in cold blood. It was a cruel deed, and it convinced the rest of us that no mercy would be shown to us if we fell into the hands of the citizens.

"At the suggestion of our leader we then abandoned the arsenal for an engine house that stood near by, taking with us our wounded and the prisoners. We remained there all of Monday and Monday night.

"On Tuesday morning we learned that Col. Robert E. Lee, with a force of marines and some land troops, had arrived, and that, backed by the Virginia militia, he was about to attack us. This information was brought to us by two negro women, who implored John Brown to make his escape. One of them offered him her dress, and suggested that he blacken his hands and face as a disguise, but he told her that he could not go. The other made the same offer to me, and I had only just put on her gown when the attack was made. Brown had told us to do whatever seemed in our judgment to be right, and I did not care to sacrifice my life without an effort to save it. When the attack was made I jumped through a rear window and joined the two negro women, who had preceded me out of the window.

"They led me to a little cave above the ferry, where I was compelled to remain for 17 days, they supplying me with food. At the end of that time they said it would be safe for me to attempt to cross the river and get away. I made the attempt, but my disguise was discovered on the other side, and if I had not had in my possession a few pieces of gold with which to ranson myself I would have been turned over to the Virginians to share the gallows with John Brown."

Mr. Wildner returned to Harpers Ferry disguised as a negro woman, and was present at the execution on December 23 of John Brown and six of his companions. He could do nothing for them, and did not betray his presence to them.

Mr. Wildner is emphatic in his denial that Brown's raid was inspired by Abolitionists in the North or that they had anything to do with it. He insists that John Brown himself conceived the idea of liberating the slaves, and his followers, all strong anti-slavery men, entertained, with him, the belief that the negroes would all rise up at once and with their assistance gain freedom from bondage.

While he does not believe that the famous Harpers Ferry raid was a direct cause of secession and the Civil War, Mr. Wildner says that if it did have an important part in bringing on that struggle, the ultimate emancipation of the slaves brings glory enough for him.

West Virginia Line.

The boundary between Maryland and West Virginia, at the headquarters of the Potomac river, is in an unsatisfactory condition. It has been the subject of dispute and litigation, which has resulted in a suit before the United States Supreme Court. This suit seems to have been entirely lost sight of. The act authorizing the suit against West Virginia was passed by the Legislature of Maryland in 1890. The suit authorized by that act was instituted by Attorney General Whyte in 1891, since which time it has been pending. The surveys and locations were made under the administration of Attorney General Clabaugh. The most important question to be settled by the locations is the initial point or beginning of the line in controversy, which calls to begin at the most western source or first fountain of the Potomac river. Many persons, in both States, have always understood that point to be at the Fairfax stone, but when the representatives of Maryland met in the summer of 1897, to begin the survey they found a spring much larger than the one at Fairfax stone, with a much larger stream also. This stream is to the west of and 1¼ miles distant from the Fairfax spring. The Maryland representatives, after satisfying themselves upon the subject by testimony entirely satisfactory to them, began the line at the spring so discovered by them, which they called Potomac Spring. The disputed territory, as the matter now stands, lies between the parellel lines run from the Potomac Springs and Fairfax Springs, respectively, and embraces a tract of 54 square miles. It is said that West Virginia does not dispute the location seriously, but relies mainly upon her long-continued possession of the land in dispute.

Injured in a Runaway.

Mr. and Mrs. George F. Gephart, of Cumberland, who were the guests of Mr. J. R. Joy and family several weeks ago, met with quite an accident on the 8th inst., while sojourning at their farm east of Grantsville. While driving to Grantsville in a buggy, Mr. Gephart got out of the vehicle to fix something at the horse's harness, when he stumbled and fell, which frightened the horse and caused a runaway. The buggy struck a telegraph pole, throwing Mrs. Gephart out of the buggy, dislocating one of her shoulders and bruising and otherwise injuring her. Mr. Gephart was bruised, and both were badly frightened.

The accident occurred near the home of Lewis Diefenbach, whose wife was attracted to the scene of the accident and helped to get the victims of the same to her home, where they were cared for until they could be taken to their farm. The victims of the accident are both very old people, and their recovery is necessarily slow. However, we are glad to say that they expect to be taken to their home in Cumberland, to-day, by Mr. Joy.—Salisbury Star.

Girls to Be Sorry For.

The editor of the Sigourney News remarks that he always feels sorry for a girl who is stuck on a fellow who will spend a dollar for ice cream and chocolates and three for a Sunday buggy ride for her on a three dollar a week salary. Somehow we see visions of barefooted children, a frowsy-headed woman over a wash tub, tin cans for dishes on the table, and a combination of a corn cob pipe and a man in the kitchen corner. The young man who lives within his means while single usually has means after he's married.

Married.

LEE—GEORGE.—A verry pretty wedding took place at the residence of Rev. W. E. George, Deer Park, on Sunday morning, August 25. The contracting parties were G. G. Lee and Anna M. George, daughter of Hon. A. F. George. The attendants were J. J. Lee and Miss Pearl George. May they have a happy and prosperous journey through life.

MOUNTAIN TRIOLETS.

A VANISHED ARCADY.

No more we find the nut brown maid
With flushing cheeks and waving tresses;
O'er hill and dale, through glebe and glade,
No more we find the nut brown maid,
She's gone to town—the cunning jade—
To wear the latest dresses:
No more we find the nut brown maid
With flushing cheeks and waving tresses.

No sighing Strephon on the rocks,
His pangs of love complaining;
Unheeded go the wayward flocks,
No sighing Strephon on the rocks—
Discarded now the fustian smocks—
He's gone for higher training:
No sighing Strephon on the rocks,
His pangs of love complaining.

THE OLD HUNTER'S WISH.

I fain would hear the horn again
Go winding on the hill,
The bay of hounds in sweet refrain—
I fain would hear the horn again
Exultant sound with eager strain,
All hurrying to the kill:
I fain would hear the horn again
Go winding on the hill.

Aug. 3, 1901. T. L. L.

DIED IN HIS WESTERN HOME.

Silas Durst, a Former Resident of Garrett County, and For Many Years Lost Sight of, Died in South Dakota.

To the Editor of The Republican.

Over thirty years ago Silas Durst and his cousin, Jacob Durst, sons of twin brothers, Harry and Jacob Durst, left their adjoining homes in New Germany, in Garrett county, for the far west. Their enterprising and energetic natures impelled them to the Rockies. For the first few years they were as close in actions and movements as they were in blood. Still in some strange way in the course of time they became separated and practically unknown to each other. Ere many years passed Jacob died in his far away home. For some years in the beginning of the change of residence a home correspondence was kept up with the family, consisting of a father, mother, half dozen sisters and three brothers. The correspondence, ere many years passed, between the wandering son and the home people came to an end and no one knew the real cause. The good parents, brothers and sisters all believed the absent son to be dead; at least his whereabouts were unknown. The far away son through a strange imagination believed himself to have been forgotten or forsaken by the dear ones at home, hence he wrote no letters home for many years. More than a dozen years ago Jacob Durst, the father, died leaving a considerable estate, which in due time was settled up and Silas treated as a dead heir, and in legal contemplation he was so, as he had not been heard from within the time—seven years—which causes the presumption of death. But to the surprise and gratification of many about seven years ago he was discovered by a former near neighbor at the Black Hills, South Dakota, busily and prosperously engaged in mining. The home situation was explained to him by his discoverer. He at once declared his intention to return to his old home to see the remnant of his family. He occasionally wrote home promising a return, but there was always something to prevent it.

He continued at his prosperous business—mining copper principally—with the standing promise to return, but instead of that realization about the middle of July past several telegrams came from Rapid City, S. D., announcing his sudden death at a hotel in that place among strangers. He was buried at his home or place of business in Hill City with all proper respect and attention. Quite a tribute was paid him by a newspaper of that place.

He was credited with being one of the locaters of the famous Blue Lead Copper Mine, said to be the earliest of that country. It is said he labored and toiled there for about twenty-five years in the face of many difficulties, but he helped to make it a success while he yet lived. He left a considerable estate. No children; never married. His heirs are his brothers and sisters. His age was in the neighborhood of 55 years. His brother, William Durst, has gone or will go to Hill City to look after the estate. He is said to have been well thought of in his remote place of abode and death, and he will certainly be kindly remembered by the few who once knew him well.

OLD ACQUAINTANCE.

August 24, 1901.

$50.00 Reward.

The above reward will be paid for information that will lead to the arrest and conviction of the party or parties who on the night of July 31, 1901, entered the livery stable of Cora V. Savage, at Deer Park, and maliciously cut and destroyed certain vehicles, harness, bridles, etc.

FRED. A. THAYER,
State's Attorney for Garrett Co.

THE REPUBLICAN

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

COMPENSATION.

I sit alone with my heart to-night
Where the gloom is dark and deep,
Across the portals the shadows fall,
And here with my grief I weep;
But over my sad heart's darkness
Steals a radiance rich and rare,
For long ago, when a child at play,
I hid a sunbeam there.

The harp is silent, the chords are dead
Whose music was all too fleet,
And I listen in vain for the silver strain
That made my life complete;
But long ago, when a care-free child,
With no thought of sadder things,
I nestled a song-bird to my breast,
And there it sings and sings.

The garlands are faded and old and sear,
And the laurels that came with the years
Have gone with the dreams and the perished hopes—
I buried them all with tears;
But out in the garden of my soul
The roses bloom so fair,
For long ago, when a little child,
I planted a rose tree there.
—Muriel Strode, in Chicago Evening Post.

The Robber's Cross

By David Ker.

"THEY call Spain the land of adventure," muttered Harry White, as he strolled before breakfast around the outskirts of a small Spanish town on the southern slope of the Sierra Morena; "and I've been in it three weeks, and not had one adventure yet. A man gets no show at all in traveling nowadays. Hello! here comes somebody in a hurry!"

Very much in a hurry, certainly, seemed the sturdy Spanish peasant who had just appeared on the top of the steep ridge above the boy's head, for he was leaping from crag to crag as recklessly as a wildcat, and at times even swinging himself over some deep cleft by the bough of a tree, as if in such haste that he had no time to think of such a trifle as the chance of a broken neck.

But in this case it was "most haste, worst speed," for all at once a large stone gave way beneath the Spaniard's feet, and he came tumbling headlong down into the road amid a whirlwind of dust.

Harry—whose sympathies were already enlisted in favor of a man capable of such feats of strength and daring—flew to the spot, feeling as if he had really met with something like an "adventure" at last. But when he reached the fallen man he stopped short in sheer amazement.

And well he might. The man whom he had seen bounding along the ridge had had long gray hair and beard; he was quite sure of that for he remembered wondering that an old man should be so active. The hair of the man before him was short, thick, and black as night, and he had no beard at all.

LED HIM UP A STEEP ZIGZAG PATH.

Meanwhile, the stranger had managed to sit up, and was wiping the blood from a bad cut on his forehead. In doing so, he discovered the loss of his false hair and beard, and met Harry's eyes fixed wonderingly upon him.

"Well," asked he, fiercely, answering the boy's glance with a defiant stare, "do you know me?"

"No, and I don't want to know you," said Harry, in broken Spanish, rather nettled at the man's imperious tone. "I suppose you're a smuggler by your disguising yourself that way."

"Yes, I am," replied the other, with a strange smile. "Are you going to give me up to the police?"

"Not I!" cried Harry. "It's not the style of us Americans to give away a man who can't stand up for himself."

"Ah, you're an American, then?" said the smuggler, looking curiously at him. "Well, if you are willing to help me, I'll tell you how you can do it. Give me your arm as far as the chapel of St. James, about half a mile down the road—for I find I've sprained my ankle too badly to walk alone—and then I'm all right."

"Come along, then," rejoined Harry, offering his arm.

And the strangely assorted pair set forth.

On the way our hero told his new friend, who seemed in too much pain to talk himself, that he was traveling through Spain with his father, that he had picked up in Mexico what little Spanish he knew; that his tour had hitherto been provokingly bare of adventures, and that the one thing in the world which he most desired was to fall in with a gang of real Spanish brigands.

At last they reached the chapel, and then, at a peculiar whistle from the smuggler, five wild looking horsemen, with long guns on their shoulders, started out of the encircling thickets, one of whom led by the bridle a fine black horse, on which they at once mounted the crippled Spaniard, not without casting more than one puzzled and suspicious look at the wondering boy.

"Take this for your good deed," said the tall smuggler, taking a small silver cross from his neck and giving it to Harry. "It may be of use to you if ever we meet again. And, as you seem anxious to meet with some Spanish brigands, it may please you to learn that you have seen half a dozen of them to-day."

So saying, he spurred his horse and vanished into the forest with his grim comrades, while Harry turned slowly back to the town, hardly knowing whether he was awake or only dreaming.

"Just like my luck! I've lost my way, sure enough! And this strikes me as the very place to fall in with that nice man, Pedro Gonsalvez, the brigand captain, who seems to be terrorizing the whole country at this time."

The speaker was no other than our friend, Harry White, now grown into a tall young man, and revisiting, after a five-years' absence beyond the Atlantic, his former haunts in southern Spain.

He had certainly good cause to feel uncomfortable just then. To lose one's way in a gloomy forest, among the Spanish mountains, with night at hand and a storm coming on, is not a pleasant experience in any case; but when to all this is added a very strong probability of falling in with a band of robbers, whose usual mode of demanding ransom for a captive is to mail his ears or nose to his anxious friends as a hint that "speedy payment is requested," he must indeed be a brave man who can face the situation without flinching.

What Harry feared came only too soon. A hoarse shout was suddenly heard among the bushes, and before he could draw his revolver he was surrounded by a gang of fierce-looking men, whose grim, ruffianly faces and scowling eyes boded him no good.

A smart stroke from the butt of Harry White's heavy whip felled the foremost man, but the rest at once dragged him from his horse, and, in spite of his furious struggles, bound him hand and foot.

"Let me kill the dog!" roared the injured robber, whose head was bleeding freely. "He shall never strike a Spaniard again!"

"Not so fast, Brother Juan," said another. "He looks like an Englishman, and the English are all rich. We'll make him pay a fat ransom."

"And if he don't pay it quickly," put in a third, with a significant whisk of his knife, close to the prisoner's ear, "his friends won't find him quite so handsome the next time they see him."

Harry shuddered at the horrible threat and the roar of brutal laughter that followed. He was not completely disenchanted, for the brilliant and chivalrous bandits of his boyish dreams were utterly different from these ragged, hangdog ruffians, who almost choked him with the stifling odor of garlic and bad tobacco.

Then his horror turned to rage at the thought of being plundered and insulted by these brutal rascals, and he inwardly vowed that when he did get free he would spend all the money he had in hunting them down. But, as we shall see, he never got the chance of doing so.

The robbers laid their prisoner on the horse and led him up a steep, zigzag path to a kind of rocky platform, walled in on three sides by unscalable cliffs, while on the fourth lay a precipice of several hundred feet.

Here about 20 more brigands were encamped; and Harry White, suddenly remembering his silver cross, looked eagerly to see if the man who had given it to him was one of the band; but he could see no one in the least like him.

"Has Capt. Gonsalvez come back yet?" asked one of his conductors.

"No," was the reply, "but we are expecting him every moment."

Just then a hasty step was heard below, and a tall, dark figure, springing up the rocks as nimbly as a mountain goat, came bounding on to the platform.

"Up with you, comrades!" shouted the newcomer, who was no other than the formidable Pedro Gonsalvez himself. "We have been betrayed, and all the soldiers from La Redonda are upon our trail. We must retreat at once. Ha! who is this—a prisoner?"

"We took him in the valley yonder, and have kept him for ransom," replied one of the bandits.

"There is no time to think of ransoms now, when our very lives are at stake," said the robber chief, sternly. "Take what money he has on him, and then fling him over the precipice."

Instantly a dozen eager hands were rifling Harry's pockets, and the brave youth, giving himself up for lost, prepared to die like a man. But, as his watch was dragged forth by the robbers, the silver cross that hung to its chain caught the eye of Gonsalvez, who sprang forward and asked, hurriedly:

"Where did you get that cross?"

"It was given to me five years ago by a smuggler of these parts, whom I helped to escape when he was crippled by a fall," replied Harry, looking fixedly at him.

"And I am the man who gave it," said Gonsalvez, grasping his hand warmly; "and for that good deed you shall depart free and unharmed. Comrades, give him back all that you have taken. Follow that path, Senor Amerleano, which will lead you to the village of San Tomas; and when you tell this story to your friends, tell them also that kindness is never thrown away, even upon a brigand."—Golden Days.

PATENTS IN ENGLAND.

They Are Easily Obtained, Nor Is There Any Attempt to Rule Out Impracticable Ideas.

The English patent office does little with an application except to put it on record. Nearly every request is granted. There is no previous examination of files to ascertain whether the invention for which a patent is sought is original, as is the case in America. Nor is there any attempt to rule out impracticable ideas. Almost any "crank" can get a patent in England. About a dozen patents on perpetual motion are issued every year there, and twice as many are granted for flying machines. At Washington, when an application is made for a patent on a device which the examiner believes will not work, he demands a working model, which ordinarily is not required. If the applicant cannot show a machine in actual operation which will do what he pretends his application is rejected.

The examination made here to ascertain the novelty of an invention gives a greater value to an American patent than is possessed by the British. For this reason experts often advise an Englishman to apply for a patent in the United States as well as at home, not so much to protect his rights abroad as to find out whether the idea is original or not. An official in England recently said on this subject:

"The American fees are low, and the presumption of novelty which an American patent carries is cheaply bought, even if only for the moral effect in Great Britain, and when the possible realization of profit in America for any invention of considerable intrinsic value is added, the paying of the United States fees would seem to be a highly promising investment. When foreign inventors realize this we may expect to see them seeking American patents in greater numbers. Indeed, this mode of obtaining guarantees of presumptive novelty would seem to be cheaper and perhaps every way as satisfactory as could be found in any change in the British patent office practice."

HAS CANINE TEETH.

Remarkable Fish Discovered by a German Scientist Near One of the Gilbert Islands.

One of the strangest fishes in the world has been discovered near the Gilbert islands. Dr. Augustin Kraemer, a well-known scientist, obtained a few fine specimens of it during a recent fishing excursion which he took near Butaritari.

"I wanted to get some specimens of another curious fish, known as ika ni peka," he says, "but as I was unable I went during the full moon in a small sailboat to Makin, a coral island, which lies east of Butaritari, and there I found a German trader and two Chinese, who in return for some medical assistance which I was able to give them, were quite willing to help me in my search for strange fish. When I told them that I was looking for ika na peka, they replied that they would first have to get some bait, and to my surprise the bait which they got was this extraordinary toothed fish.

FISH WITH DOG'S TEETH.

"I examined it, and found that it belonged to the family of the Trichiurides, and that it was as thick as my arm, 75 centimeters in length, and very scaly. The most remarkable feature about it, however, was the fact that it had three pairs of long canine teeth in its upper jaw and one smaller pair in its lower jaw. I noticed, too, that it had no fins on its belly."

Either flying fish or crabs are used as bait for the purpose of catching them, and, when they are caught, they in turn serve as bait for catching other fish. The hooks used on such occasions are of a primitive kind, and can be found nowhere except in the Gilbert islands.

This toothed fish is only found at a great depth, and it generally makes its home near precipitous rocks, which it is dangerous for fishermen to approach.

Herd of White Rhinoceroses.

All have heard of white elephants, but few know that there are also in existence white rhinoceroses, constituting a distinct species. These are almost extinct, and probably not more than a dozen or so are left. The Revue Scientifique says, of a small herd of these animals in Natal, that fortunately they are protected by law and, fortunately also, the party that met the animals included the governor of the colony, otherwise the species might have been now more nearly extinct than ever before, for hunters are not scrupulous in such matters.

DISINFECTING LAMP.

Easily and Economically Managed and Suitable for Greenhouse or Household Use.

Dr. J. W. M. Kitchen, of East Orange, N. J., who has had a good deal of experience with orchids, and the pests which affect them, describes in the Medical Record a lamp which he employed in destroying insects and bacteria. The substances which he uses in fighting these creatures are poisonous to man as well as to microbes and bugs. The most potent are hydrocyanic acid gas and nicotine. What seems to Dr. Kitchen as the most effective way to dispose of any pest is to dip it into water that has been tinctured with the poison. But this is less convenient than to diffuse the deadly agent through the air in the form of gas or vapor. Hence the latter method is the one which Dr. Kitchen follows. He says:

DISINFECTING LAMP.

"I have found that the effectiveness of vapors and gases thus generated was largely controlled by the distance from the source of generation of the germ or insect treated. These gases and vapors were also effective in proportion to the quickness of generation and their consequent concentration. Vapors are more effective than dry gases, and they are more effective if applied to dry areas. Moist atmosphere surrounding an insect or germ seems to tend to protect it. I found that many escaped by hiding in the moisture holding peat and moss above referred to. I used all sorts of apparatuses to generate vapors, commencing with large, costly and complicated forms, and gradually evolving downward into the simple, inexpensive and uncomplicated form of a number of small generating devices.

"I found that the greater the number of points of generation of the destructive vapors I used the greater was the success, and this brings me to the point of my communication, viz., that in order to secure the best effect in methods of disinfection, a large number of points of generation and a quick liberation or formation of the disinfecting vapor should be used. In my greenhouse work I use a number of small generators, such as is outlined in the accompanying cut, distributed around the area of the house operated on. A little wood alcohol is placed in the generator lamps and lighted. The disinfecting material is put in the superimposed evaporating pan, and the apparatuses are left to do their very perfect work. It is obvious that the same method can be applied to house disinfection. Small generators can be placed in the several parts of a room, in corners, in closets and under beds, and will produce very much more germicidal effect, and at much less expense and labor, than in using one large apparatus, the vapor from which may be, perhaps, applied through a keyhole. By using this diffuse method of generation, of course, any degree of concentration and strength of disinfecting vapors can be obtained by merely multiplying the numbers of generators."

Streaks on Planet Neptune.

Neptune, the most distant known planet of the solar system, presents to the telescope only a small, greenish disk on which no distinct markings are visible. But during the past year the great telescope of the naval observatory at Washington has revealed indications of the existence of streaks on Neptune bearing a resemblance to the belts of Jupiter. A few years ago similar streaks were seen on Uranus. Saturn also possess them, so that it may be said that cloud-like belts are a feature common to all the four great outer planets.

Maximum Heat of Water.

Water boils at a temperature of 212 degrees, but having been brought to that temperature, it can not be made any hotter. The reason of this is not generally understood, and yet it is quite simple. Boiling is only another name for steam-making, the agitation and bubbling being caused by the escape of the steam into which the heat has converted the particles of water. It is the escape of the steam that prevents the water from getting any hotter than 212 degrees, for it takes heat away with it, thus keeping the temperature from rising.

Mechanism of Flying Fish.

Flying fish, called by naturalists "Exocaetus," is a common sight to all voyagers in tropical and subtropical seas. Their usual length is from 10 to 12 inches, though one 18 inches long has recently been described. They are enabled to execute flying leaps by means of the great development of their forward or pectoral fins. During the flight the fins are kept quietly distended, without any motion. Their flight is rapid, greatly exceeding that of a ship going ten miles an hour.

MEASURING BY FAULTS.

A Little Incident Which Proves That a Habit, Whether for Good or Evil, Is Never Trivial.

It was a meeting of a girls' society, a society organized with large purpose and high ideals. But it was necessary that it should grow to strength in numbers and working power before much could even be begun; therefore some of the most farsighted were working first for increased membership, and a score of new faces was in the room that afternoon. As soon as the meeting was opened, one of the charter members hurried over to the president. She was a beautiful girl, noticeable among all the rest for a certain exquisite daintiness which meant something more than rich clothing, for one felt that her "atmosphere" would have been exactly as fine and delicate had she worn a cotton gown. Her face was full of dismay.

"O Miss Yates!" she cried, "don't you think we ought to have strict membership rules, and let no one join unless by unanimous vote? There is one girl here this afternoon who is so untidy! We don't want girls like that."

There were two sides to the little incident. The girl who was "untidy" might prove to have splendid executive ability, or talent that could ill be spared, for hasty judgments are blundering things. Who of us would not resent being measured by our faults alone? But, on the other hand, what a commentary upon the effect of a bad habit. Doubtless her carelessness about her appearance seemed to that girl a trivial thing; yet day by day that one fault was making her lose untold opportunities for happiness and usefulness. It is safe to say that a habit, whether for good or evil, is never trivial.—Wellspring.

FRESH-AIR FOOD SAFE.

The Outdoor Pantry of the Southern States Is a Device That Is Well Worth Imitating.

Pantry requirements are a trifle paradoxical, in that they are air and light and darkness. A pantry window is essential, even if it be no more than a tiny two-light sliding sash, set anyhow in the outer wall. A regular window is much better. It need not waste wall-space-shelves, but can be so placed across it as to admit its working. But if a pantry can be allotted as much as six feet of house wall, it is better to have the window set crosswise, with the lower edge a little more than breast high. Then, by making one sash of glass and filling the other with wire gauze, the pantry can have a handy outdoor closet. Have a tight deal partition running out from the sash division, as far as the space permits. Put shelves around three sides of the two compartments thus formed and close them with tight light deal doors. Thus the indoor pantry can subserve its proper purposes and the outside closet banish the iceman for six months in the year.

People with plenty of ground space, yet constricted houses, may profitably take a leaf from the book of south country household economy. It is common there for country folk to have a sort of outdoor fresh-air closet, a small detached structure set in the shadiest place possible, standing upon four tall legs, with a flat shingle roof of barely enough pitch to shed rain. The floor is at least four feet from the ground, and the whole structure only big enough to reach well across. There are shelves all around and the weatherboarding up next the roof is full of tiny auger holes. The door fits tight and fastens with a lock. Around each of the four legs is commonly a tar bandage applied six inches above the ground. This traps venturesome ants, spiders and their kidney, thus keeping the inside clear. The structure is whitewashed inside and out twice a year. In hot weather floor and shelves are washed every morning and scoured twice a week. Such a fixture should not cost over three or four dollars, even if one hires it built, and it is certainly among the handiest things one can have about the house or yard.—Chicago Record-Herald.

OUTDOOR FOOD SAFE.

Vinegar as an Absorbent.

A little vinegar kept boiling on the stove while cooking cabbage, onions or cauliflower will prevent much of the odor from these vegetables escaping through the house.

ADJUSTABLE MIRROR.

A Toilet Room Convenience That Is Easily Arranged and Placed in Any Needed Position.

The illustration shows a method of arranging a small mirror in the lavatory room so as to be adjustable to different heights. The mirror may be as easily arranged this way as hung stationary, and is much more convenient. Make two small wooden pulleys about one inch in diameter and one-fourth inch thick, cutting a shallow groove in the edge or face of each. Small flat spools, such as are used for silk twist, will answer very well. On the wall, directly above where mirror is to be suspended, place one of the pulleys, holding it in position by a small wire nail which serves as an axle. To the right or left of this pulley, at any required distance, arrange the other pulley, in the manner indicated. Procure a stout cord, and fasten one end to a weight just as heavy as the mirror—weights and cord from one of the old-fashioned mantel clocks may be found in many households, and will be about right for the purpose. Bring the cord up over outside pulley and down over the pulley above mirror, where it is conducted through a small staple and tied to a small hook made from a piece of heavy wire. Place a small staple in top edge or back of the mirror frame and hang it on the weighted cord. The mirror and weight will now be in equilibrium, and mirror may be raised or lowered and will remain at point desired. When desired to remove the glass from the cord, raise it up till the hook is stopped by the staple in the wall before lifting the mirror off its hook. If possible, have the weight operate behind some piece of furniture, such as a cupboard, towel rack, or the like, so as to be out of sight, and to effect this improvement any length of pulley may be used to conduct the cord to the required point.—J. G. Allshouse, in Ohio Farmer.

ADJUSTABLE MIRROR.

THE MECHANICAL FAN.

Clever Duplication of the Electrical Air Stirrer to Work by Simple Hand Pressure.

Sentiment needs now to defend one of its last devices—the fan in the hands of the pretty girl. Behold, the spirit of utility, seeking new fields for the exercise of its powers, has invaded the field of the fan. It has set up as a rival of the lacy, silken implement of feminine hypnotism, that has served the gentler sex through untold ages, a mechanical device of brass, steel and wood—a thing that to the accompaniment of a low buzzing provides a gratifying and steady draught of cool air, and bearing the name of the "cold air fan."

The cold air fan physically suggests a cross between an egg-beater and a machine for strengthening the hands of a pugilist. One might almost suspect that the inventor had set out to make an egg-beater and been diverted, as an after-thought, to the fan idea by the prospects of greater financial gain in that direction.

Putting aside as intolerable the suggestion that this thing of wheels and levels—light and easy running though it be—can ever be a real competitor with the palm leaf and the great variety of daintier fans, the fact remains that the newcomer is sure to find an infinity of uses. For example, what could be more satisfactory to the patron of a country barber shop, where compressed air plants are as yet impossible luxuries, than this small, cheap creator of a cool breeze? Manifestly, nothing.

The makers say it will throw a current of air as far as an electric fan of like size, which is easily credible when they add the further information that the blades of the wheel can be made to reach a speed of 4,000 revolutions a minute. It works by compressing in the hand the handles of the scissors-like arrangement that forms its framework. A ratchet and a couple of cog-wheels transmit the motion to the fan, both blades of which are detachable, in order to be packed in small compass. —Chicago Record-Herald.

GIFTS FOR TRAVELERS.

Useful Embroidered Bags Nowadays Constitute an Important Part of a Tourist's Outfit.

A novel and useful gift to anyone going on a traveling tour or long journey comprises a set of bags made of embroidered linen or sateen. There should be a bag for soiled clothes, one for handkerchiefs, one for shoes, a nightdress case and a sponge bag.

The boot and shoe bag in these days is decidedly more attractive than the time-honored combination of brown holland and scarlet braid which one associated with this purpose in the past.

The soiled clothes bag is no longer an eyesore in cretonne of a "green and yellow melancholy," but in its pleasing form is made of dark blue linen worked in washing silks or flax or thread, with tufts of mimosa in natural coloring. A light, graceful pattern is darned in with pale china blue, and the design is lined off at the top with a straight border of either yellow or blue cord.—N. Y. Tribune.

RICH IN RESOURCES.

Congo Free State Soon to Be Annexed to Belgium.

Country Now the Personal Property of King Leopold—Produces Rubber Enough to Supply the World.

[Special Correspondence.]

"TALL trees from little acorns grow." England has demonstrated that a country limited in area may be of great consequence in the map-making of the world. Belgium has always been of considerable diplomatic importance, and probably will soon rank among great colonial nations. The Congo Free State will be a center of political interest within a short time. If it be annexed to Belgium as a colony, as existing conditions would seem to indicate, it will mean much, not only to the peoples directly concerned, but other nations as well. When the Belgians first explored the country, cocoanuts, ivory and palm oil were the only products exported. Many other articles are now added to this list, and a newly-completed railroad will ship at low rates.

The rubber trade has been carried on for about 40 years, but it first attracted the attention of the Belgians a few years ago. Now it is prophesied that it will furnish the great future wealth of the state, as it has developed so rapidly that among the rubber producing countries of Africa the Free State now holds the first place, annually furnishing to the world more than 3,000 tons. During the time of his first expedition, Stanley said that on the islands of the Congo river alone enough rubber could be secured in a year to pay the expense of a railroad. There are several varieties of rubber in the Free State.

It also ranks first among the countries from which ivory is exported. About 700 tons of ivory are annually produced in the world. Of this 600 tons come from Africa. The African ivory is considered far superior to that produced in Asia, on account of its greater density and waxy softness. A small stock of fossilized ivory comes from India and Siberia. According to Holtzapffel, fossil tusks from the north Siberian rivers have weighed 186 pounds. The average in Africa is said to be from 20 to 50 pounds. Those from the Congo are very large, weighing on an average 60 pounds. A pair, each weighing 156 pounds, were shown at the Brussels exhibition.

A CONGO CHIEF AND HIS TWO WIVES.

In the dense, almost unexplored, forests of the central Congo many herds of wild elephants are still roaming. These are hunted by the natives for their flesh, which they prize much more highly than they do their tusks. But what they term "dead ivory" forms the greater proportion of what the Free State sends out annually. The natives have collected elephants' tusks for hundreds of years for purposes of exchange, considering them of little value. In the Upper Nile region, the Khartoum merchants first discovered an accumulation of these treasures. Dealers finally advanced to Katanga, thence to the Congo, after which the ivory trade steadily increased. On July 31, 1888, an ivory market was started in Antwerp, selling 15 tons. In 1890 its sales exceeded those of the Liverpool market, and in 1895 those of London. In February, May, August and November of each year, great sales are held there. There were sold in Antwerp, in 1899, 21,446 tusks from the reserves and only 8,539 from newly-killed animals. The government confiscates all carcasses of elephants killed without especial permission.

CONGO NATIVE IN HIS CANOE.

The latest methods of treating the natives of the Congo Free State have brought out the fact that by proper management they may be utilized successfully as laborers. This means the possibility of a rapid development of the country. The building of the first 85 miles of railroad from Matadi to Leopoldville required five years. The negroes were treated like slaves, the Belgian overseers whipping them unmercifully. The results were so disappointing that they were afterward employed like the Belgian laborers and paid in accordance with the amount of work performed. They were so impressed by the fact that increased effort brought payment in proportion that the remainder of the road, 216 miles, was completed in four years, proving that "a man's a man for a' that."

Their being amenable to religious teaching to a remarkable degree goes to prove that the members of the Congo tribes may yet be made useful members of society. People who have inherited their Christianity might even profit by their example. A missionary states that in one of their villages a school had been formed and they had erected a church. They so rejoiced in their newly-found religious experiences that they began to consider the condition of their regenerate neighbors, of the heathen natives across a great river who had not, like themselves, been blessed by Christian teaching. They said: "Those people know nothing of Jesus, while we are saved. What shall we do?" In order to find a fitting answer to this query they held a special meeting and gave the matter long and careful consideration. The river was full of crocodiles, the crossing dangerous, the distance too great for an easy return journey. Several days must be spent among those "heathen" who would, very likely, treat them with great violence. Yet 50 Congo church members crossed the river and preached during three days so earnestly that they left converts behind them on their return. Now a church of 20 members is established in that village, who are working with excellent results among their neighbors. The negro temperament is emotional and responds quickly to religious teaching. The railroad experience seems to indicate also that they are not indifferent to the "main chance." But it would take a long and optimistic look into the future to discern in them theologians, financiers and politicians.

It is very hard to obtain anything approximating correct figures regarding the population of this territory, which possesses a five times larger area than France. The number of inhabitants was estimated by Stanley to be 29,000,000. That this is a minimum is the opinion of Gov. Gen. Wahis, who visited the Upper Congo and obtained statistics from government agents stationed there. The people are unevenly distributed. Tracts almost destitute of population are adjacent to crowded districts. The largest village in the Free State is Nmtomba, with a population of 10,000. The general preference seems to be for the forests rather than the river banks as dwelling places.

During its course the Congo river changes its name many times, but Mr. Stanley traced and identified it all the way. The Lualabo-Kongo, interrupted by cataracts and rapids, flows northward from the lake region to about two degrees north of the equator, where many islands stud the broad stream, ten miles wide. Then its course changes many times. In the great basin between east longitude 26 degrees and east longitude 17 degrees, through which it flows, the river has an uninterrupted course of 1,400 miles, with magnificent affluents. From here it descends by about 30 falls and flowing rapids to a great river between the falls of Yelala and the Atlantis. From the Chibalo mountains to its mouth the length is 2,900 miles. Stanley states that by its numerous great tributaries it drains 1,300,000 square miles. It has no delta and but one mouth. Only the Amazon exceeds the volume of water it brings down. A steamer drawing 12 feet can steam 110 miles from its mouth, where it is nearly ten miles wide and 160 fathoms deep.

The Free State is now the personal property of King Leopold of the Belgians, and an absolute monarchy. This form of government is, however, only temporary. Belgium has had the right to annex the state since 1890. It is well known that King Leopold, in making his will, instructed that the state become the property of Belgium in the event of his death before its annexation was finally voted upon by the Belgian parliament. It seems outside the limits of possibility that such a magnificent gift will be refused, but in such an event it can be bequeathed to anyone whom the king desires to name as his legatee. His successor, however, must, before accepting the gift, be authorized to do so by parliament. The king's nephew, Prince Albert, son of the count of Flanders, will probably succeed him on the throne.

EDWARD JULIAN.

Made Hay by Moonshine.

Down in New Jersey the farmers have been making hay while the moon shines because the sunshine is too hot.

RARE ART TREASURES.

Exquisitely Carved Jars Unearthed in the Ruins of an Ancient Palace in Crete.

The recent unearthing by Mr. Arthur Evans of the famous palace of King Minos, with its mysterious labyrinth and chambers, on the ancient site of Knossos, in the island of Crete, has brought to light some wonderful art treasures. King Minos, it will be remembered, was the wise ruler and inspired lawmaker. He is styled the Cretan Moses, who every nine years repaired to the cave of Zeus and received from the God of the Mountains the laws for his people.

The astonishing feature of these finds, says the New York Herald, is the revelation that long before the appearance of the rudest form of Greek art a mysterious and highly cultured civilization, at the early age of 3,000 B. C., was in existence. It is now thought that the unknown cradle of Greek civilization has been pointed out by these remarkable art objects.

MINOS' TREASURE JAR.
(Recently Found in the Ruins of a Palace in Crete.)

Exquisitely carved treasure jars found in the palace strikingly illustrate the bold and artistic creations of this prehistoric period. Mr. Evans has uncovered a large portion of the palace area. By an extraordinary piece of good fortune the remains of walls began to appear only a foot below the surface. This dwelling had been overwhelmed by a great catastrophe. Everywhere on the hilltop were traces of a mighty conflagration. Burnt beams and charred wooden columns lay within the rooms and corridors. There was here no gradual decay.

On the floor of one of the magazines were found huge store or treasure jars. One of these, found in a small, separate chamber, which is shown in the illustration, was nearly five feet in height. Only a few of the jars were opened. They proved to be empty. The jar was profusely ornamented with decorative designs, and the colors were almost as brilliant as when first laid down, over 3,000 years before. Excavations are still in progress in the palace grounds, and additional finds will undoubtedly be brought to light in the near future.

HIGH TELEGRAPH POLES.

Erected at Beaumont, Tex., on Opposite Banks of the Sometimes Turbulent Neches.

The highest telegraph poles in the United States have just been put up in Beaumont, Tex. So far as known, they are the highest of any in the world, the top being 150 feet above the ground. They were erected on the opposite banks of the Neches river by the Western Union Telegraph company, in order to string its cable across the stream. The span is 144 feet in length. This height is necessary to admit the passage of ships through the drawbridge, their masts being 100 feet tall and more.

HIGHEST IN THE WORLD.
(Telegraph Poles at Beaumont, Tex., 150 Feet High.)

This aerial span was preferred to laying a submarine cable, for it is expected that congress may at some future day have the Neches river dredged, and this would ruin the cable. It is also much cheaper.

Autocars for Paris Police.

Autocars are to be utilized by the police in Paris to overtake cars driven at excessive speed. Several policemen are now being trained to drive the motor cars.

Most Intricate Game Known.

Japanese chess is the most intricate game in the world. The board has 81 squares, 20 pieces are used, and the pieces change in grade when they arrive at a certain position on the board.

Field for Young Lawyers.

There are 40 counties in Texas which have to seek legal advice outside their limits, as they have not a single attorney of their own.

A LIGHTNING RECORDER.

Ingenious Invention of a Cleveland Priest Performs Scientific Wonders.

A very important achievement has been added to the recent developments of electrical and meteorological science by Father Odenbach, of St. Ignatius college. This Cleveland priest has long been recognized as occupying a foremost place among American scientists, and his latest invention will be noted with great interest both in this country and in the scientific circles of Europe, says the Cleveland Plain Dealer.

In the meteorological observatory on the tower of the college building in Jersey street, Father Odenbach has set up an instrument which records every flash of lightning within a radius of nearly 100 miles. The apparatus is extremely complicated and not easy of comprehension to one who has not a scientific education. The theory, however, is the same as that of the Marconi wireless telegraphy. The electric waves, coming from a great distance or from near at hand, are collected and brought through a series of delicate appliances to a recorder, which notes each impression with a distinct click, similar to the click of a telegraph instrument.

The tower of St. Ignatius college is roofed with plate copper. This forms an excellent "collector" for the electric rays. Connected with this copper roofed tower is the lightning rod, which is a copper cable. When Father Odenbach first conceived the idea of working out his theory he noted that the tower was just suitable for his purpose. He accordingly had the lightning rod cut off and directed through the observatory instead of leading to the ground. On this rod he fixes his delicate recording instruments, and was highly pleased to note that they worked exactly as he had expected.

Father Odenbach was not entirely satisfied, however, as in case of a bolt striking the lightning rod it would be conducted directly through the observatory, destroy all the apparatus and probably kill whoever was present. He accordingly reset the lightning rod, and conducted only a small thread cable through the receiving and recording apparatus. He found that this worked exactly as well, and also obviated all danger of acident.

One day lately Cleveland was visited by its first electric storm of the season. Hours before the storm broke, when the sky was absolutely clear and no sign of lightning anywhere to be seen, the instrument was busy clicking off its record of flashes from distant clouds. During the approach, duration and recession of the storm the record continued accurate and unbroken, every flash being instantaneously recorded, and the records continuing after the flashes had become too distant to be visible. All day the instrument was busy with its recording, although scarcely a flash was visible.

Father Odenbach's invention is absolutely unique in America, and the first lightning recorder ever devised or set up on this side of the Atlantic. An Italian named Boggio has worked out a scheme for the same purpose, but in practical working the instrument of Father Odenbach's is far superior in every respect.

Father Odenbach believes that a lightning recorder will become an important instrument for meteorological offices. It will enable observers to note with certainty the approach of thunderstorms and squalls, local disturbances which it is impossible for any forecaster to predict with accuracy.

The instrument as at present arranged records by sound only. Father Odenbach is at work upon a mechanical appliance by which the record will be automatically placed on paper, thus rendering it unnecessary to watch the instrument in order to get continuous observations.

Sculptor of Great Men.

Hamo Thornycroft is a sculptor of heroes. He is at present engaged on the statue of Mr. Gladstone, which is one day to adorn London. The Cromwell statue at Westminster, which, in spite of the controversy over it, is one of the finest monuments of the metropolis, is also his. Gen. Gordon in Trafalgar square is Mr. Thornycroft's work, and the statue of Earl Granville in the houses of parliament was carved by his hand. John Bright at Rochdale is another of Mr. Thornycroft's statues, and his work is known, indeed, all over the kingdom and the empire. There are a Gordon statue from his studio in Melbourne, a statue of Sir Steuart Bayley in Calcutta, and others in several towns in the United Kingdom.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Plain English in Decisions.

Some of the young gentlemen now busy over their books in the law schools or law offices will be delivering the opinion of the court long before the clock strikes 1950. This is an additional reason why all those young gentlemen (since the wisest of us cannot pick out the future judges now) should be incited and required to study two or three (at least) of the John Marshall decisions, for the style no less than for the matter. He said what he had to say in simple, straightforward English—every time. The ability to do that is worth having, and it is much rarer among the eminent occupants of the bench than it ought to be.—Hartford Courant.

As She Understood It.

Harold—My dear Tessie, you look good enough to eat.

Tessie—Thanks; I am a trifle hungry. Suppose we try that restaurant just across the street.—Chicago Daily News.

THE THIRSTY MAN.

Little Charley Leads Him to the Fountain and Starts a Reformation.

"Mother," said Charlie, as he nestled lovingly by her side, "nurse knows such a funny man. At least, she knows his wife. I heard her telling cook last night, when they thought I was asleep. 'Poor Harriet,' she said, 'I am so sorry for her. Night after night her husband goes to the "Castle and Banner," and stops there drinking and drinking instead of going home. And she and the children never have enough to eat, and are always hungry, because he spends such a lot of money on drink.' Nurse and cook seem to think he must be a dreadful bad man, But I feel sorry for him, 'cause he must be always so very thirsty to drink so much as that. But why does he spend money for drink? Do you s'pose he doesn't know about water; and hasn't ever seen that new fountain in the square? What do they drink at the 'Castle and Banner,' mother?"

His mother sighed as she held her little son closer to her. For it is a hard task, and thankless, to open the eyes of our children to the knowledge of good and evil.

As Mrs. Russell was sitting alone on the evening of the same day the room door opened and nurse appeared, her face white and anxious.

"If you please, ma'am," she said, "I can't find Master Charlie anywhere. He was playing in the day nursery when I went to put baby to bed, and when I got back he was gone. His hat was gone, too, so I thought he must be in the garden, but I've hunted everywhere and can't find him. I never knew him do such a thing before, ma'am."

IT WON'T MAKE YOU SILLY.

And nurse began to cry.

Mrs. Russell rose hastily from her seat.

"Why! whatever can have happened to the child!" she cried. Then, like a flash, the memory of the morning's conversation came to her.

And hastily donning a simple sailor hat, she sallied forth.

About ten minutes before this a tall man, shabbily dressed, yet with the look of one who had seen better days, was entering the "Castle and Banner," when he was startled by a clear, childish voice addressing him.

"If you please, sir, are you very thirsty?" it said, "because there is such a nice fountain in the square, and you can have as much drink as you like there for nothing, and it won't make you silly, and you won't have a headache to-morrow."

The man looked down angrily, but his face softened as he met the gaze of Charlie's innocent eyes.

"Who sent you to tell me that?" he said, gruffly.

"No one sent me," said the child, "but I felt sure that nobody would be so silly as to drink the nasty stuff they sell in here if they knew there was water. So I came to tell you."

The man was evidently of a far better class than the ordinary frequenters of a public-house. And something in the situation seemed to appeal to his sense of humor. He smiled grimly as he spoke again.

"I have heard of water, my little man; but somehow or other I like this best."

"Oh, do you?" said Charlie, wistfully; "then doesn't it ever make you silly?"

A hot, painful flush spread duskily over the man's face.

"Sometimes it does; not often," he said.

"Water never does," said the child, eagerly. "Oh, please, sir, let me show you the fountain."

"Well, all right," said the man, half reluctantly. "I can call in here on my way back," he muttered to himself.

"Oh, thank you!" cried Charlie, delightedly, and slipping his little hand into the man's, he turned to go.

But the hand he clasped was drawn away.

"Don't do that," said the man. "Your mother wouldn't like to see you holding my hand."

"Oh, yes she would," he said, in surprise; "why shouldn't she?"

"Because I am poor and wear old clothes," the man replied, "and have been a bad man, too."

"I'm a bad boy sometimes," said Charlie, confidingly, "and I wear very old clothes when I'm playing in the garden. I like to hold your hand, 'cause I think you're a nice man. Mother says we ought to love everybody, 'cause God is our Father and loves us all. P'raps you've got a little boy at home about as big as me. If you have you know how God loves you, by how you love him."

"I've got a little boy at home," said the man in a subdued voice, "but he isn't as big as you; he's only eight years old."

"I'm only eight years old, too," said Charlie. "P'raps your little boy isn't so big as me because he doesn't have enough to eat. Nurse says she knows a man whose little boys don't have enough to eat because he is thirsty, and spends almost all his money on the nasty stuff to drink. I expect your little boy will grow bigger now you're going to drink water, don't you?"

The man's face was pale with emotion, the child's innocent chatter had touched his heart. But they had reached the fountain, and he was thus spared the necessity of replying. It was growing dusk; a man was lighting the lamps round the square. To his dying day Roger Carter never forgot the scene or the bright, earnest little face of the boy as he filled the drinking cup with water and handed it to him. He drained it eagerly, for he was really thirsty, and with the taste of the pure, cool water old memories rushed back to him. Once again he saw himself an innocent child like the boy before him. He thought of his own boy at home. Would he grow up like his father? God forbid!

"Well," he said, "that's the first drink of cold water I've had for many a long day."

"There," said Charlie, triumphantly. "I was sure you'd forgotten all about it. Have some more, do. It won't make you silly, and you won't have a headache to-morrow. I know, because I drink it myself. And there's nothing to pay for it, so you will have more money to take home for your little boy to-night, won't you?"

It was at this juncture that Mrs. Russell found them. She was not at all surprised to find her son conversing with a disreputable-looking man, but she was surprised to find in that man the husband of an old schoolfellow of her own, whom she had not seen for years.

The recognition was mutual, but while Roger Carter hung his head and tried to slink away, she came forward with outstretched hand and a bright smile of welcome.

"This is indeed a pleasure," she said. "It is a long time since we met. And how is Myra, Mr. Carter?"

"I have lost her," said the man. "She died two years ago, and since that time I have been going steadily downhill. I am ashamed for you to see me, Mrs. Russell."

"He'd forgotten about cold water, mother," piped out Charlie. "And he was very thirsty, so he had to drink the nasty stuff. But he's always going to drink water now, and then his little boy will have plenty to eat, and grow as big as me. You are, aren't you?" he went on, "now you know how nice it is?"

"I am, God helping me," said Roger, earnestly. "You have cured the thirsty man, Charlie, because you cared. Plenty of people have preached at me, but no one ever really cared before."

So there was something that even a little boy could do—Randall Chetwynd, in National Advocate.

PUNISHING HIMSELF.

Remorse and Self-Affliction Could Not Restore Lost Fortune of Drunken Miner.

A curious story is told of an acquaintance by an American miner. He says that the man was known in the camp as a quiet but determined man. He was well liked by the men who knew him, but he was averse to the dissipations common among the miners of the district.

While working at a place called Cripple Creek, several miles from Denver, he made a strike of several thousand dollars. He took his haul to Denver, and there, contrary to his usual habit, he succumbed to temptation and engaged in a prolonged debauch. He did not become sober until all his money was gone. Then he realized his folly and was exasperated at the besotted idiocy by which he had lost a fortune in a few days.

Money was offered him to pay his way back to the mines, but he refused to borrow a cent. He set out to walk the whole distance. A man who was driving a team in the direction he was going overtook him and offered him a ride, but the miner refused it. He trudged along doggedly, and the teamster overheard him muttering to himself: "Walk, walk, you miserable fool! Drink and gamble, will you? Then walk—it'll do you good. No, you needn't stop at a spring; go dry, you sot, you've drunk enough. Go on and walk—it serves you right. Walk—walk!"

And the man did walk until he reached his shanty, and sullenly resumed his work. Doubtless the self-inflicted suffering was a vent for his remorse, but it could not restore his wasted fortune.

PROGRESS.

The Michigan legislature has passed the Humphrey bill, which will practically require liquor-selling druggists to take out a saloon license.

Superintendent Richardson, of the United States insane asylum at Washington, puts the liquor-produced insanity of the United States at 55 per cent.

Judge Cornish, of Lewiston, Me., has rendered a decision to the effect that medicine composed of 23 per cent. of alcohol cannot legaliy be sold in the state.

Georgia will make prohibition of the liquor traffic the principal issue in the next political campaign. Ex-Gov. Northen is leading the temperance forces.

Pennsylvania has passed a law prohibiting the sale of beer or other liquor to women to be carried home from the saloon in a bottle or other receptacle.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 29, 1901.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET.

For Comptroller of the Treasury:
HERMAN S. PLATT,
Of Baltimore City.

For Clerk of the Court of Appeals:
THOMAS PARRAN,
Of Calvert County.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY TICKET.

For State Senator:
ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

For House of Delegates:
PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.
CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

For Sheriff:
WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

For Treasurer:
JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 14.

For County Commissioners:
TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.
JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

For Register of Wills:
EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

For County Surveyor:
FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

THE "Man from Laurel," now sojourning at Saratoga, in prescribing for Maryland and National Democracy, urges that time-honored remedy, "Harmony." But even with this sugar-coated preparation to tickle the palate, Terrapin State Democrats cannot swallow another dose of Gorman. Of him they have had their fill.

Gorman's Ratio.

The Gorman-Smith disfranchisement law will rob thousands of worthy and unfortunate white citizens of manhood's right of suffrage. But the Gormanites care nothing for that so long as more colored voters are deprived of their votes. Referring to the proportion of white and colored voters likely to be disfranchised the Peninsula Democrat, the leading Democratic paper in Talbot county, says:

"Mr. Gorman has placed a valuation on the white man as compared with the negro. This ratio has been in dispute for ages. Mr. Gorman, the self-constituted representative and champion of the so-called white man's party, has at last settled this disputed question and fixed the ratio at 1 to 2.

"Think of it! After all these years of our boasted moral, mental and social superiority, we are bluntly told, by the great advocate of white man supremacy, that as the crows fly and the coons run one white man is only worth two negroes. This is not a ratio based on international agreement, but a ratio fixed on an independent Gorman basis, without the consent of any other nation.

"Hence, Mr. Gorman has traded 15,000 white voters for 30,000 negro voters, or at the ratio of 1 to 2, in the hope of reaching—Washington. The hope is as wild as the trade. The loss of white voters will amount to more than 15,000, through disgusted relatives, friends and neighbors of the disfranchised whites. And how about the 30,000 negroes? Is not that an uncertain quantity?

"The election returns will tell the sequel of the story."

Causing Alarm.

The splendid ticket nominated by the Republicans is spreading alarm throughout the element in the Democratic party, known as the Gorman Ring. The ticket will poll the full party strength. That is everywhere admitted and that means success. But in addition the ticket will draw all good citizens to it. The high character of the gentlemen upon it is a pledge to the people that honor and justice will be their watchword if elected to the offices to which they aspire, and it also is assurance that the Republican party is only anxious to do good.

The fact is prominent and undeniable that the candidates are particularly well fitted to discharge the duties of the various offices, and are pledged to do the very best for the public. Another fact is also very notable and very worthy of consideration and that is, not a single delegate on the Republican ticket will vote to return A. P. Gorman to the United States Senate. Every citizen therefore who does not want to see Mr. Gorman placed at the head of the Democratic spoils gang again will make a move to prevent it by voting to send the Republican candidates to the legislature.

There are other cogent reasons why the Democratic ring is terrified, and the evidence of it is that its organs have begun to falsify and misrepresent to ward off the logic of the fine nominations and enviable record of the Republican party.

In due time the falsity of all the utterances by the minions of the Gorman Ring will be shown. The issue is between good government in the State, county and city as represented by the Republican party and Gorman rule and ruin as represented by the Democtatic machine.

Democracy and Prosperity Antipodes.

Labor in this country sought to improve its condition in 1892, when employment was general and wages fair, by using the ballot to entrust power in the hands of the Democratic party. Mr. Cleveland went the second time into the presidency and a Democratic majority in both Houses of Congress was chosen with the expectation that better times would follow. Can any Democrat aver, with sincerity, that the succeeding four years furnished any evdence that Democratic theories were conducive to the welfare of the laboring, farming, or any other interest of the country? Is it not true that Mr. Cleveland's second term was fraught with disaster to every interest except, possibly, that of the money lender? Labor was idle, capital was unemployed, farm products were lower in price than ever before or since, the goods of merchants lay unsalable on their shelves and general financial disaster marked the period.

This condition was relieved when such a change occurred in the use of the ballot, as substituted, in 1896, a Republican President and Congress for the Democratic Executive and Legislative departments of the previous four years. Of that there is no manner of doubt, since a period of unexampled prosperity has followed the change. Labor is generally employed and at very decidedly more remunerative wages than marked the time of Democratic sway, farm products command fair prices, manufactures flourish and all classes are prosperous.

The difference in conditions in the two periods referred to has not been accidental. It is the result of well defined causes. Under the Democratic administration manufactures languished because manufacturers feared to venture into an unprotected field. Labor was underpaid because labor was not in demand. Farm products were reduced in price because many of the people were idle and were forced to economize in the consumption of such products, and merchants were unsuccessful because the people were without money to buy their wares.

When Democratic newspapers, therefore, advise labor to employ the ballot to right inequalities in wages—meaning that this can be accomplished by investing the Democratic party with political power—it is only necessary to contrast the condition of labor under the rule of the two parties during the last decade. If Democratic rule wrought disaster not only to labor, but to every other interest of the country, and Republican policy brought prosperity to the laborer, the farmer, the manufacturer and the merchant, it would be the height of folly to return to the state which brought the former condition into existence. Democratic success and prosperity do not go hand in hand in this country.

This is the logic of fact and it is true. Why then should the people strengthen the hands of Democracy by investing them with power in local and State affairs? And then, too, there is not a local interest in Maryland that did not receive more valuable assistance when the Republicans were in power, for a short period, than it is experiencing from the party now in the ascendency. The best interests of the people were promoted by Republican success, in State and Nation, and it would be the part of wisdom to keep that party in power in the Nation and to restore it to power in the State.

Henry Fresh the Manufacturer of a Good Article.

We take pleasure in announcing that Mr. Henry Fresh, the genial manager of the Elk Lick Supply Company's large department store, is the manufacturer of a most excellent medicine, known as Fresh's Hoof Oil. Many who have tried it pronounce it the best medicine for the uses it is intended that they have ever tried. For horse's hoofs it is said to have no equal, and for inflamed sores, swellings, bruises, burns and many other things, it simply cannot be beaten. Furthermore, it works as well on hman flesh as on horses and cattle.—Salisbury Star.

Our Fifteen Most Mortal Maladies.

General surprise is expressed at the census figure on the comparative fatality of different diseases. The common belief that consumption leads all other causes of death in this country is shown to be unfounded.

Pneumonia, according to the census of 1900, is now the most fatal of American diseases, 191.9 per 100,000 of all deaths being attributed to it. Consumption is a close second, with 190.5 in every 100,000 deaths credited to it. Heart disease stands third on the list of our deadly enemies, with a record of 134 in every 100,000 deaths. After these three leaders the census report names 12 other principal causes of death, and in the order of their importance they are as follows: Diarrhoeal diseases, kidney disease, apoplexy, cancer, old age, bronchitis, cholera infantum, debility, inflammation of brain and meningitis, diphtheria, typhoid, premature birth.

It is interesting to note that 54 in every 100,0000 deaths in the entire country are not caused by any disease at all, but simply by "old age"—the natural running down of the human clock. And it is a striking proof of the progress we are making in our fight with consumption that it shows the astonishing decrease of 54.90 per 100,000 deaths since 1890, in which year it led the whole list of mortal maladies.

Bullet Whizzed by Mr. McComas' Head.

WILLIAMSPORT, Md., August 25.—Senator L. E. McComas, who left here the other day for Bedford Springs to rest and recuperate, had an experience with a man with a gun which he will not soon forget. The incident occurred while Senator McComas was on a bass-fishing trip on the Potomac river, about a mile above this place, recently, but the details have just become known. Senator McComas was accompanied by Mr. N. B. Scott, of Hagerstown, on the trip, and they were fishing from a boat in midstream near Spring Culvert, when, without warning, a rifle bullet sped from the canal bank and struck the water only a few feet from the end of the boat in which Senator McComas was sitting.

The occupants of the boat were startled by the shot, and instantly made known their presence. While scanning the bank to locate the person who fired the shot a man emerged from the bushes with a rifle in his hand. Senator McComas, who was very indignant over the recklessness of the man's aim, asked for an explanation of his conduct. He said he was not aware of the presence of the fishermen, and hastily departed before the occupants of the boat could get to the shore. Senator McComas said, in relating the incident, that he was not frightened by the shot, but roundly denounced the carelessness of people who handle guns and place the lives of others in peril.

A New Corporation Formed.

An application for a charter has been made (under the laws of West Virginia) for the Garrett Water and Light Company with a capital stock of $100,000. The object of this corporation is to supply Mountain Lake Park and Loch Lynn with water and electric or gas light. The charter also includes the right to build and operate an electric railroad between Deer Park, Loch Lynn, Mountain Lake Park and Oakland. The incorporators are Geo. C. Sturgiss, Esq., of Morgantown, W. Va.; F. T. Martin, Esq., of Fairmont, W. Va.; F. A. Thayer, Esq., of Oakland; L. A. Rudisill and P. T. Garthright, of Mountain Lake Park.

L. A. Rudisill was appointed a committee to solicit subscriptions for stock in the company. It is expected that the electric plant will be inaugurated this fall, as well as the inauguration of a water system.

A special meeting of the citizens of the Park will be held Sept. 10th, at which time an application will be made for a franchise in the Park. A meeting of the board of directors of the Association will be held at the same time.

Missouri Lutheran Church Burned at Accident.

The spire of the Missouri Lutheran church at Accident was struck by a bolt of lightning on Friday afternoon last about six o'clock and the building set on fire, completely destroying it and the furniture contained therein, with the exception of the organ, as well as the vestments of the pastor. The church was built many years ago and was situated at a point somewhat remote from the town proper and was a landmark of that section of the country.

In the tower of the church were two bells of more than ordinary sweetness of tone, having been cast in Holland expressly for the building. These bells were melted during the course of the fire and of course rendered useless.

The congregation, of which Rev. G. Blievernicht is pastor, will at once begin the erection of a new church and until it is completed the other churches of the town will be at the disposal of the congregation. The church was uninsured and the loss is total.

The Machine Ran Away.

Mr. Cormay's locomobile which, by the way, was the first machine of its kind seen in this section, is with us no more. It is now in a repair shop or maybe a scrap heap somewhere. Sunday afternoon the owner, accompanied by a friend, attempted to mount Loch Lynn with the machine. As is usual in such cases the machine balked when about half way up the precipitous incline. The driver reversed the machinery hidden in the depths of the box intending to back down and take another start. This undone the operator and incidentally, also, the machine The gear chain slipped from the sprocket wheels and a mad race down the roadway, backward at that, took place. Fate handicapped the race as a deep ditch was encountered into which the 'mobile piled upsetting it and knocking it into smitherens. The occupants were not seriously injured. The machine was loaded on a car Monday and sent east.

Prizes Awarded.

At the Deer Park Bazar, or fair, held recently at Deer Park under the auspices of the Deer Park Village Improvement Society, prizes were awarded as follows:

To Mrs. Walters, for the prettiest basket of flowers; to Mrs. Sara Laughlin, for the prettiest front yard; to Mrs. Benjamin Thrasher, for the best display of vegetables; to Howard Thrasher, for mechanical work; to Scott Shreves, for live fowls; to Mr. Brashears, for dressed chickens, dry picked.

Garrett Memorial Presbyterian Church.

Preaching Sunday morning at 11 o'clock, Sunday evening at 8 o'clock, September 1st, 1901, by Rev. W. C. Flournay, of Farmville, Virginia. All are cordially invited to attend.

Card of Thanks.

The undersigned desire to return their sincere thanks to all our friends and neighbors for the extreme kindnesses shown since the death of our son.

MR. AND MRS. WM. KILDOW.

Call for Your Letters.

Mrs. W. R. Davis, Mrs. Fannie Terrell, Mrs. L. L. Thomas, Mrs. Dinah Cole, Miss Carrie Broadwater, R. L. Clark, Jessie Williams, Jas. W. Michael, Grant Lipscomb.

Wanted.

One hundred men for general woods work and grading railroad.

PRESTON LUMBER & COAL CO.,
22 tf Oakland, Md.

FOR SALE.—$125 cash, horse, phaeton and harness complete; attractive outfit; gentle family horse. Apply to Dr. J. S. Stone, Mt. Lake Park. 1*

Dixon & Kelso will exchange peaches for potatoes, to be delivered about October 15. Will sell Mason quart fruit jars at 65c, ½ gallons at 85c; best white stone ware at 8c gallon. 2

PERCY H. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

General practice in all the Courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Money loaned on Mortgage.
Special attention given to sale of real estate, investigation of titles, conveyancing and preparation of legal papers.
Agent for the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn.
☞Offices in McComas Building, opposite Garrett County Bank.

Treasury Department.

OFFICE OF
THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
WASHINGTON, D. C., August 20, 1901.

Whereas, by satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned, it has been made to appear that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, has complied with all the provisions of the Statutes of the United States, required to be complied with before an association shall be authorized to commence the business of banking.

Now therefore I, Charles G. Dawes, Comptroller of the Currency, do hereby certify that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, is authorized to commence the business of Banking as provided in Section Fifty-one hundred and sixty-nine of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEAL — In testimony whereof witness my hand and Seal of office this twentieth day of August, 1901.

(Signed) CHARLES G. DAWES,
Comptroller of the Currency.

oct 31 No. 5943.

Special Examinations.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 12, 1901.

There will be a special examination for teachers held in Oakland on

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30th,

beginning at 8 o'clock a. m. The examination for free scholarship to State Normal and other institutions will take place on same day.

By order of the Board
ED A. BROWNING,
23 2 Examiners.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., August 14, 1901.

Josias Bittinger, appointed Republican Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 29, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead Geo. W. Engle is hereby appointed to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.

C. E. BLLITHORP, President.

Wealth

AND HOW TO ATTAIN IT

100,000 SHARES OF STOCK OFFERED AT 50c ON THE DOLLAR

For the purpose of further developing their holdings the Company has decided to place One Hundred Thousand shares of stock—par value one dollar—at Fifty cents a share. There is no oil proposition before the people to-day that offers such rich returns—with absolute safety of investment.

6 per cent. Guaranteed for 8 Years

The first one hundred thousand shares, besides being non-assessable, are guaranteed to pay 6 per cent. interest annually for eight years. Every single share of the one Hundred Thousand sold will bear the indorsement of The Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco, a trust company incorporated under the laws of California, for Twenty Millions of Dollars, guaranteeing that The Central Pacific Oil Company will pay a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum for 8 years.

Read what the Chic bg Western Trade Journal of July 2 has to say editorially:

"Greater fortunes have been made out of oil than any other product Mother Earth has yet given us. Rockefeller could not have acquired his hundreds of millions in a few years through any other source, nor the Standard Oil Company have paid dividends making hundreds and thousands of millionaires out of men who started with but the clothes they wore. California is about to take the lead among its sister states in the production of this great treasure. Such persons as Henry Crocker, Claus Spreckles, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst and other multi-millionaires are putting thousands into the newly-discovered oil fields.

Wise ones who get at the start are sure to make fortunes.

This being the situation, the question naturally arises, how and where an investment in oil development stocks should be made. Common justice to our readers requires that we should advise them as to a reliable company, whose stocks are offered on a basis which insures safety and speedy profits. Such a corporation is the Central Pacific Oil Company—611 to 617 Laughlin building, Los Angeles, California—which represents the biggest oil proposition before the world today—including, as it does, the consolidation of the cream of the Kern river, Bakersfield, Ventura, Sunset, McKittrick, Tehachapi, Kramer, Newhall, Los Angeles and Fullerton Fields. Each share of this stock will have attached the guarantee of the Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco—with a subscribed Capital Stock of Twelve Millions of dollars—that the Central Pacific Company will pay 6 per cent. interest for 8 years." — Western Trade Journal.

The following is from an article which appeared in the Los Angeles Herald of June 2:

"A large number of land holders have just succeeded in consolidating some of the best oil lands in Southern California, and have incorporated the Central Pacific Oil Company—Capitalized for Five Millions of Dollars. Two millions have been expended in securing proven oil lands. Three million shares have been set aside as treasury stock, which will be used for developing the properties of the monster company. The gilt edge part of the great enterprise is in the fact that all the purchasers of the first One Hundred Thousand Shares will have the right to surrender the same to the company at the expiration of one year and receive in cash the full amount paid for stock, with interest of 6 per cent.—less any dividends that may have been paid on said stock."—Los Angeles Herald.

If you want some of the First One Hundred Thousand Shares of Stock, send your orders to the Secretary of the Company, A. Samuel Parks, or through Wells, Fargo and Co. Express, or to the Broadway Bank and Trust Co., our Los Angeles depository---or direct to

CENTRAL PACIFIC OIL CO.

Rooms 611, 615, 617 Laughlin Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

A Minister's Good Work.

"I had a severe attack of bilious colic, got a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy, took two doses and was entirely cured," says Rev A. A. Power, of Emporia, Kan. "My neighbor across the street was sick for over a week, had two or three bottles of medicine from the doctor. He used them for three or four days without relief, then called in another doctor who treated him for some days and gave him no relief, so discharged him. I went over to see him the next morning. He said his bowels were in a terrible fix, that they had been running ofi so long that it was almost bloody flux. I asked him if he had tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and he said 'No.' I went home and brought him my bottle and gave him one dose; told to take another dose in fifteen or twenty minutes if he did not find relief, but he took no more and was entirely cured. I think it is the best medicine I have ever tried." For sale by all druggists.

Fall term CENTRAL COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Cumberland, Md., Winchester, Va., begins Sept. 2nd. Write for catalog and free lesson in Gregg Shorthand. Scholarship $45.00

E. W. Grove

This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets the remedy that cures a cold in one day

It Saved His Baby.

"My baby was terribly sick with the diarrhoea, we were unable to cure him with the doctor's assistance, and as a last resort we tried Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy," says Mr. J. H. Doak, of Williams, Ore. "I am happy to say it gave immediate relief and a complete cure." For sale by all druggists.

Estray Notice.

Strayed, early the present spring, five ewes, four being yearlings and one older. The sheep each had the top of one ear off and also an undercrop. Information leading to their recovery will be rewarded by the undersigned.

I offer for sale my farm of 146 acres near the Bowers place. The improvements consist of 35 acres cleared, good house, barn and two orchards. Well watered. L. W. Clark, Oakland, Md.

DOCTORS

say "Consumption can be cured." Nature alone won't do it. It needs help. Doctors say

"Scott's Emulsion

is the best help." But you must continue its use even in hot weather.

If you have not tried it, send for free sample.
SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists,
[illegible] Pearl Street, New York.
50c. and $1.00; all druggist.

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

D. E. Bolden, Esq., was in Cumberland Monday on business.

Mrs. Albert Bush, of Grafton, is the guest of the Misses Fringer this week.

Mrs. John Fox and daughters, of Pittsburg, are in Oakland visiting friends.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

C. Felty, Esq., after being housed up several days with an attack of illness, is out again.

Miss Jennie Johnson entertained a few friends at progressive euchre on Tuesday night at her home.

Miss Stella Goodwin, of Baltimore, is the guest of her aunt, Mrs. Creutzberg, on Second street.

Senator Ravenscroft and family, after spending a few days in Oakland, returned home Friday afternoon.

Lloyd Lowndes, Jr., of Cumberland, was in Oakland one or two days this week on professional business.

Mr. Geo. T. Brew returned to Ronceverte, W. Va., Tuesday morning after having spent a week in Oakland.

Dr. Green, the dentist, will visit Friendsville on September 17th and remain until the 30th. Teeth extracted without pain. 24 4

Mr. James W. Leathers, who attended the reunion of McNeill's Rangers at Moorefield last week, returned to Oakland Friday.

Miss Nettie Michaels left yesterday morning for Baltimore, where she will remain during the coming fall and winter.

His Honor Judge Edward Stake was in Oakland last Thursday night and a portion of Friday, when he heard arguments in a case.

Miss Lulu Murphy, of Keyser, has been the guest of her aunt, Mrs. W. M. Coddington, in Oakland, for some days.

Dixon & Kelso will pay 75c to 90c per bushel for good potatoes. Have on hand 8 car loads feed and flour to sell cheap. Peaches arriving every day. 23 2*

Representative George A. Pearre visited Mountain Lake Park Tuesday on business. He is suffering from a sprained knee and walks with the aid of a cane.

Monday next has been proclaimed a legal holiday (it being Labor Day) by Governor Smith, in consequence of which the banks will be closed that day and the postoffice will observe the regular holiday hours.

FOR SALE:—The Lutheran parsonage, located on the corner of Fifth and Green streets, in Oakland, near the court house. Contains 8 rooms, hallway, cellar and porches; excellent well of water. Will be sold cheap. Apply to or address Rev. George I. Uhler, Oakland, Md.

C. A. Bolden, Esq., of Meyersdale, Pa., spent a few days in Oakland last week. He was accompanied home Monday by Eugene Hart, who expects to remain at Meyersdale until late in the fall, when he will return to Oakland.

Dr. W. L. Davidson, superintendent of the Chautauqua at the Park, left that place yesterday afternoon for New York where he will take a steamer to-day for London to attend the Ecumenical Conference as a representative of the National University.

Lemuel Sanders, of Crellin, who recently underwent an operation for a cataract of the left eye, at the McComas Sanitarium, was in Oakland Tuesday. The removal of the cataract has restored Mr. Sanders' sight to some extent and it is thought by his physician that as soon as the inflammation recedes his sight will be wholly restored.

Assemblyman Patrick E. Finzel, of this county, who has been nominated by the Republicans for the House of Delegates, will make a fight for the Speakership of the House should the Republicans have a majority in that body. Mr. Finzel's experience in the House two years ago and also at the extra session has given him considerable insight into the workings of parliamentary law.

Farmer James Andrews exhibited to us on Monday a twig of a plum tree about fifteen inches in length and less than half an inch in diameter upon which forty well developed plums were attached. The fruit was in clusters and reminded one of bunches of grapes so thickly were they growing. All the plums were healthy looking and fully developed, the average size being about one inch in diameter.

An Italian foreman of a gang of his countrymen engaged in railroad construction work near Terra Alta received from the railroad company several days ago checks amounting to nearly three thousand dollars with which to pay the men for their labor. Instead of distributing the checks, however, the Italian mysteriously disappeared and has not been seen since. The men under him were left without the means of support and their previous month's bills unpaid. One of Oakland's business men lost about $50 as a result of the rascally actions of the dago.

Postmaster W. A. Smith, of Hoyes, is in Oakland to-day on business.

Attorney Thomas J. Peddicord has gone to Hamilton, Ohio, on business.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds, Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

Mr. E. J. Fringer and daughters have returned from their visit to Petersburg and Moorefield.

Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Moore, of Coketon, are here as the guests of Mr. and Mrs. William Kildow.

Miss Sadie Offutt, who has been visiting in Oakland, returned to her home in Cumberland on Monday.

Mr. W. McCulloh Brown, of Bayard, was a business visitor to Oakland Friday of last week.

WANTED.—A few shares of First National Bank stock. State price and number of shares. Address A, Lock Drawer 2, Oakland, Md. 1

Mr. Charles Falkenstine, wife and mother, of Cranesville, W. Va., are guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Falkenstine in Oakland.

Dr. W. H. Bixler suffered a severe sprain of his ankle one day this week and is effectually "housed" as a result.

A lame shoulder is usually caused by rheumatism of the muscles, and may be cured by a few applications of Chamberlain's Pain Balm. For sale by all druggists.

Benj. Billmire, Esq., of Baltimore, who with his wife spent some weeks in Oakland with relatives, returned to Baltimore Sunday. Mrs. Billmire will leave Saturday morning.

Mrs. Whitall and her son, Mr. Louis Whitall, who have been spending some time in Oakland, returned to their home at Ft. Meyer, Virginia, this morning.

A. S. Ingles has returned from Mt. Lake Park where he spent a month. He had a delightful outing and says the season up there is one of the best ever had.—Uniontown Standard.

What most people want is something mild and gentle when in need of a physic. Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets fill the bill to a dot. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. For sale by all druggists.

A small sized cloud burst took place at a point near Swanton last Friday evening and flooded the tracks of the B. & O. to the depth of two feet or more. Trains were delayed a few minutes as a result.

Mr. U. M. Stanton, of Grantsville, was in Oakland a day or two last week. Mr. Stanton is quite enthusiastic over the development of the country surrounding Grantsville as a result of the railroad now building through that section.

The continuous rains of the present month have greatly interferred with the farmers in harvesting their oats crop, many of whom cut and shocked the grain early in the present month, but much of which still remains in the fields and has been materially damaged.

The chestnut crop this year will be light, if any at all. During seasons when the crop is good tons are shipped from this and adjoining points to the the markets both east and west. The revenue derived from the chestnut crop is immense and the loss to our people over the failure this year will be keenly felt.

Indications point to a large yield of buckwheat this year. The acreage of this staple production of our farms is far in excess of former seasons. The grain will mature earlier than in former years and in consequence there is little danger of frost hurting it. The fame of the buckwheat grown on our hills and ground in our mills has always held the front rank.

Mr. M. S. Tucker, passenger engineer on the First district of the Baltimore and Ohio, had his right arm severely hurt in a peculiar manner at Frankville last Thursday morning. Mr. Tucker was going east on train No. 2, and when approaching Frankville he reached in his pocket to get his watch when his elbow, which projected from the cab window, struck a mail crane. Mr. Tucker had to have medical attention and will be off duty for some time.

A strike of small proportions was inaugurated here on Monday when the stone cutters and masons engaged on the new Catholic church asked for a nine-hour day with pay for ten hours. The increase was denied them and for a day or two no work was done on the church. Since the strike, however, a number of the workmen have resumed at the old rate of pay and it is expected that in a few days an additional force of men will arrive here.

In our advertising columns to-day will be found the notice of Comptroller of the Currency Dawes authorizing the First National Bank of Grantsville to begin business. The parties interested in the bank have secured as a site for the building a corner lot near the residence of Dr. G. C. Keller, in Grantsville. The erection of the building will be commenced soon and it is thought that by November 1st the bank will be in operation. Mr. John O. Getty will probably be the cashier.

Mr. M. N. Wilson spent a day or two at Oakland and Mountain Lake Park this week.

Miss Mamie Cecil, of Cumberland, was the guest of Miss Annie Grant a few days last and this week.

Mr. Charles Brown, of Grantsville, was a business visitor to Oakland last Thursday.

Creutzberg's meat market is now located in the new Bolden-West building, corner Second and Liberty streets.

The funeral of the late Albert O. Evans will take place Thursday afternoon at 2 o'clock.—Uniontown Standard.

Mrs. Chas. Jaseph, who has been in Oakland on a visit to her mother, Mrs. Anne Nelson, returned to Evansville, Ind., this morning.

Mr. Will Roberts, of Baltimore, who has been at Oakland and Mountain Lake Park for several weeks, returned home Tuesday evening.

Rev. J. Ed. Kildow, of Thomas, was here Sunday attending the funeral of his nephew, an account of whose death appears elsewhere in these columns.

The postoffice at Schell, Mineral county, W. Va., has been discontinued. Mail intended for that place should be addressed hereafter Wallman, Maryland.

Rev. George I. Uhler will return to Oakland from his visit to Easton and other points in Pennsylvania this week and will conduct preaching services in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church on Sunday, Sept. 1st.

Harry Fike, of Friendsville, was received at the Cottage State Hospital yesterday evening. He was employed by a lumber company there, and a falling log fractured his arm.—Uniontown Standard.

A boy's worst friend is his mother, when she indulges him in idleness and is blind to his vices, says an exchange. The best friend a boy can have is a dad who will escort him out to the woodshed, and, with a strap, convince him of the error of his ways, and indelibly impress upon his anatomy that the way of the transgressor is hard.

A medical writer contends that a person's body is his most valuable property, and often gets the worst treatment of all belongings. "Let a man once get the idea," he says, "of classing his body along with the rest of his possessions, and it is only reasonable to suppose that he will at least take as good care of it as his cat, his hat, his horse or his dog."

A western editor has made the discovery that his town would soon have a population of 10,000 if the people would burn their catalogues, kill all peddlers and patronize home merchants. And, then, if home merchants would advertise one-half as assiduously as the catalogue houses do, nearly all the mail orders would remain at home. People will patronize those who get out after trade.

It is currently rumored that the Baltimore and Ohio will change the end of several divisions and that Martinsburg and Keyser will again become division stations, and that Fairmont will take that honor from Grafton. These changes may not be made until the Potomac cut-off is completed and the new line built down Fish creek to the Ohio river. The latter improvement will shorten the line 17 miles and greatly reduce grades and curves.

It is the opinion of the Grocery World that advertising is news, since it tells the people of the existence of some desirable article and from whom and at what price said article may be obtained. As news the proper place for advertising in the newspaper; and it is to the newspaper that people look for it. While advertising does not create needs it does often make people aware of their needs. The news which calls attention to an article also makes the reader realize that he wants it.

The price of soft coal from the regions east and west of Oakland has advanced from fifty cents to one dollar per ton owing to the additional rate of freight charged by the transportation company. As a result of this advance our local mines have resumed operations and the outlook for the sale of the entire output for local consumption was never better. Teamsters of town as well as the mine owners will be thereby benefited and the money otherwise sent from this section to outside parties will be kept in circulation at home.

Mr. Charles Mason and his estimable lady spent several days here with Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Mason. Charley is one of those big hearted men, everybody's friend and makes friends wherever he goes. Raymond and Charles Mason are all that is left on the earth side of Dr. Cal. Mason's family, all of whom have gone to the other world, except these two brothers. They had not met for some years until this August. When a person looks from a religious point of view at the joy there was in the meeting of these brothers, and the weeping as they separate, how precious would the thought be of meeting where they part no more.—Albrightsville corr. Kingwood Argus.

KILLED AT COKETON.

John Edward Kildow Meets With a Sudden Death.

John Edward Kildow, son of Mr. and Mrs. William Kildow, of Oakland, met with a mishap at Coketon, W. Va., on last Friday morning which terminated his life. He was engaged as a brakeman on the logging train of the Rumbarger Lumber Company and upon approaching Coketon he jumped from the moving train in order to turn a switch. It is thought by those who witnessed the accident that he either slipped and fell backward under the trucks or that a piece of timber upon which he was standing gave away and precipitated him upon the rails. The truck passed over him with the result above stated.

His remains were conveyed to Oakland Saturday afternoon and taken to his late home and on Sunday afternoon at 2.30 the funeral services were held at the residence by Rev. Asberry Mick, of the M. E. church. The interment was made in the Oakland cemetery and was witnessed by a large concourse of friends and relatives. The floral tributes by the friends of the deceased were magnificent and numerous.

The body was accompanied to Oakland by Messrs. L. A. Crowl, Frank Blackwood, Robert Hoover and A. C. Barnaby, all of Coketon, who, with Charles Liller and Lee Mason, of this place, acted as pall bearers at the funeral:

The age of the deceased was 18 years, 9 months and 23 days.

Close of the Chautauqua.

Yesterday witnessed the close of a most flattering season for the Mountain Chautauqua at Mountain Lake Park. The great crowd of people present to hear Senator Dolliver lecture was never excelled at the Park. The immense auditorium was literally packed and the speaker was listened to with rapt attention by the thousands who went to hear him. One excursion train from the east and two trains from the west were run on the Baltimore and Ohio. These trains consisted of about twenty-five coaches and they were filled to their capacity. Added to this the thousand or more of our own people who went in buggies, carriages, etc., and one may judge the size of the audience.

At night a concert by the Assembly talent was given. The entertainment at the auditorium closed with an exhibition in jugglery by Rosani. At the lake beautiful fireworks were exploded and then the people went home.

Killed On the Grade.

Harry C. Leiben, 34 years of age, unmarried, a bricklayer by trade and employed by the Baltimore and Ohio railroad at Hitchcock's tunnel, on the seventeen mile grade, was killed near that point Saturday night by falling from a moving freight train. The body was brought to Oakland Sunday morning on train No. 3 and taken to Bolden & Co.'s undertaking rooms where it was prepared and encased in a casket and sent to Baltimore, the home of the deceased, for burial.

The unfortunate man had gone to Piedmont on Saturday from the tunnel and was returning on a flat car of a freight train to his place of employment. It is presumed that he fell asleep and rolled off the car with the result as above stated.

Died in Nebraska.

W. R. Sollars, father of Edward E. Sollars, Esq., of Oakland, died on Thursday of last week at his home in Schuyler, Colfax county, Neb., after an illness of one week. His death was preceded by a stroke of paralysis, which he suffered on the 17th inst. He was aged 87 years and leaves two sons and four daughters, all of whom with the exception of Edward E. reside in the west. During the civil war Mr. Sollars lived on the Swan Meadows farm near Oakland and moved to the west many years ago.

Garrett a Peach Producing County.

Recently Ami Rodeheaver, residing a few miles west of town, brought to Oakland some fine peaches which he had grown on his place. For years past numerous attempts have been made to grow peaches to perfection in this section of the county and at last success seems to have crowned the efforts of our husbandmen. Lower down in the county peaches have been grown every year and are of a delicious flavor.

Republican Headquarters to Open.

Chairman of the Republican County Central Committee, Dr. J. W. Laughlin, has secured a suite of rooms in the Ravenscroft building, Second street, as Republican headquarters for the campaign this fall. The rooms will be open every Saturday for the present. During court the headquarters will be open at all times.

Important Church Notice.

The last quarterly conference for this year will be held in St. Paul's M. E. church on Friday evening of this week at 8 o'clock.

The Holy Communion will be administered in this church next Sunday at 10.30 a. m.

All cordially invited.

ASBERRY MICK, Pastor.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 4 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring.) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and instead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring.) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD — CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA, COLORADO AND UTAH.

Special low Summer Excursion Rates to all points. Personally conducted Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Personally conducted tour to San Francisco, Cal., account General Convention Episcopal Cuhrch. Tickets on sale Sept. 22nd to 27th. Good returning until Nov. 5th, with stop-over privileges.

Quickest and best line to

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Only line with Double Daily Through Service. Dining Cars and Free Reclining Chair Cars. Fastest train service to the famous

BEAUMONT, TEXAS, OIL FIELDS.

Through sleeping car from Chicago without change and through sleeping car reservations from Cincinnati via Memphis, Tenn., to

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Special Homeseekers' Excursions to all points South, West and North West.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER,
Traveling Passenger Agent,
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

REPORT OF THE CONDITION OF THE GARRETT COUNTY BANK, AT OAKLAND, IN THE STATE OF MARYLAND, AT THE CLOSE OF BUSINESS, JULY 15th, 1901.

RESOURCES.
Loans and discounts		$152,667 11
Overdrafts, secured and unsecured		35 80
Stocks, securities, etc.		99,317 87
Banking-house, furniture and fixtures		12,782 93
Other real estate and mortgages owned		1,507 66
Due from National Banks		30,020 65
Due from State Banks		5,400 21
Checks and other cash items		169 07
Fractional paper currency, nickles and cents		157 20
Internal-Revenue stamps		60 00
MONEY IN BANK, VIZ:
Specie	$8,763 35
Legal-tender notes	10,075 00	18,838 35
Total		$320,956 85

LIABILITIES.
Capital stock paid in	$25,000 00
Surplus fund	10,000 00
Undivided profits, less expenses and taxes paid	3,718 12
Due to National Banks	2,432 89
Due to State Banks	1,077 59
Individual deposits subject to check	170,639 93
Time certificates of deposit	107,860 13
Cashier's checks outstanding	233 19
Total	$320,956 85

State of Maryland, County of Garrett, ss:

I, S. T. Jones, Cashier of the above-named bank, do solemnly swear that the above statement is true to the best of my knowledge and belief.

S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of August, 1901.

G. A. FRALEY,
Notary Public.

CORRECT—Attest:
D. E. OFFUTT
G. S. HAMILL
J. M. DAVIS,
Directors.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. McROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH McROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

The laws of health require that the bowels move once each day and one of the penalties for violating this law is piles. Keep your bowels regular by taking a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets when necessary and you will never have that severe punishment inflicted upon you. Price, 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

Money to Loan.

$4,000 to loan on first mortgage in n sums to suit upon town property or nearby farms.

EDWARD H. SINCELL.

The Devil's Demise

By Snowden King.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

TWO HOURS ago Otis Macmanara had received the disappointment of his life—a woman's "no!" He had been trampling the streets of Louisville ever since, smoking a number of cigars and wondering what he should do with the rest of his life.

Common sense kept whispering that Grace Langdon was not the only woman in the world, and that he, Macmanara, was young, handsome, and wealthy, but his heart was beating to another tune, and he knew it would keep to that same tune until life was put away.

As the gas and electric lights began their rivalry, common sense gained the supremacy so far as to cause the young man to buy a book and tell himself he would go home and try to read it. He had just come out of a book store and was turning the storm collar of his coat up against the driving snow, when a voice very low and very clear, and also very close said: "It is warm in my home."

"Did you speak to me?" Macmanara asked of a gray shadow leaning against a lamp-post.

"I said it is warm in my home."

Macmanara laughed. "There is nothing so very novel in that fact, my good fellow; there are millions of homes tonight as warm as the tropics, in spite of the weather outside—my own, for instance, to which I am going now."

"Are you going?" It was not the question only; the voice held a soft, enchanting cadence that fascinated Macmanara.

"Well, yes, I am sure I shall start for home as soon as my car turns the corner."

"And I am as equally certain you will go with me."

"Since you are so sure of it will you tell me the name of my would-be host?" and Macmanara listened somewhat eagerly for the answer which came without hesitation.

"I am the Devil."

"This is interesting. I have had numerous indirect invitations to visit you, Mr. Devil, and a number of my friends have predicted that my final resting would be with you, but I never expected you to step up in the flesh and invite me, and the fact is, I never in all my life felt so much like going to you as I do to-night."

At that moment a carriage stopped outside the curbing, and the coachman came down to examine the harness. The carriage door opened and one of the occupants asked the cause of the delay. Macmanara caught sight of the face that had caused both his joy and his sorrow. When the carriage moved, a delicate lace handkerchief gleamed white beneath the gas light. Only an instant it lay there—the next it was reposing in Macmanara's coat pocket.

The name daintily written in one corner of the handkerchief was "Gracie."

"Good night, Mr. Devil—I really must be going. If you will take my advice you will go back to that very warm home of yours and stay there until spring, for, as one who knows his world, I can tell you the weather here is going to be very much worse before long."

The gray shadow stepped out into the full glare of the flickering light, revealing a handsome young man dressed in a stylish suit of gray.

"I am disappointed," and Macmanara whistled. "Why, you are a young man and I thought the Devil was as old as the world. A young man with a blond mustache and no horns! If you want to masquerade as the Devil—why don't you make up for the part?"

The self-confessed Devil doffed his hat. "Feel," he said.

In striking contrast to a fair, almost womanish complexion and a blond mustache, his hair was black as night. Macmanara's hands glided slowly over the bowed head in search of the horns. They were there, and a thrill crept down Macmanara's spine as he touched them. He had jested with the man, believing him to be a crank, but now, for some reason, he did not understand. He was startled.

"You are convinced, and will go with me?" Always soft and low, yet very clear, the Devil's voice was a melody.

Macmanara looked up. A pair of clear blue eyes, behind which there seemed to burn a flame—eyes unlike any he had ever seen before, looked straight into his own. The Devil had possession of his man in a moment, but even with his sense enthralled Macmanara shuddered as he asked: "I must die first?"

"No," the Devil answered, emphatically, "I want you to go with me and see and feel the beauty, comfort and happiness in my home and then come back to the world in the flesh and tell how basely I have been maligned."

While the Devil was speaking they were moving straight toward the river, and when they reached it he unlocked a skiff and invited his guest to step in. As the boat went scudding down the river Macmanara wondered where the Devil had learned his stroke. The Falls City quickly faded from view—a mere speck in the distance. Macmanara had taken many a row on the Ohio, both as boy and man, but never any like this. An hour ago he was the most miserable man on earth, now he was perfectly happy; there was nothing left for him to wish for.

The boat was drifting now, and at a place where the rocks shelved over the bank it stopped suddenly. The Devil whistled, waited a moment, then whistled three times in rapid succession. It seemed to Macmanara that the whole side of the cliff opened to them and gave forth a light so dazzling in its brightness that he had to close his eyes. The Devil picked him up and carried him into a richly furnished room and put him down on a couch piled with cushions. There were ribbons, laces, satins and silks, in chairs, on tables, everywhere in elegant profusion and confusion, but what impressed Macmanara most and what he could hardly take his eyes from was a table in the center of the room on which was piled, as generously as pebbles on the beach, every known gem. Diamonds, rubies, opals and pearls threw a shade over their smaller sisters and tried hard to outshine each other in their fascinating glow and glitter.

"My angels are out to-night on other missions, but I shall do my best to entertain you, and shall be more sorry than I can say if I fail," and the Devil bowed courteously to his guest.

While he was speaking he placed a diamond scarfpin and opal ring on the table. They immediately began to sparkle a challenge to their neighbors. What a familiar look they had to Macmanara! The Devil drew a chair close to the couch, picked up a guitar, and the last thing Macmanara remembered was hearing a rich tenor voice singing a popular melody.

The next morning when Macmanara awoke he was in his own room. The fire in the grate was burning cheerily, and through the open door he could see his valet preparing his bath. Outside the sun was shining brightly, taking away the snow as fast as it had fallen the night before.

"What a dream!" Macmanara thought, as he sprang out of bed. His clothes were hanging on the back of a chair, and there were tiny rivulets where they had dripped the melted snow. He went through his pockets and his face fell. Yesterday he had drawn $2,000 from the bank, vowing in his heart to go as far from Louisville as the money would take him. This morning there was not a dollar in his pocket—not even the little pearl-handled knife he had carried for years.

When he went down to breakfast his aunt, who was also his housekeeper, looked beyond him after saying good morning, evidently expecting to greet some one else.

"How mistaken one can be, Otis," she said. "I expected you to bring company down to breakfast this morning, for when I heard you come home last night I was sure some one was with you."

"Maybe there was, and maybe there wasn't. What would you say, aunt, if I were to tell you I don't know?"

"If you were anyone else but Otis Macmanara I would say you were drunk, but as you are Otis I shall say you are poking fun at your old aunt."

When the papers were brought in Macmanara glanced over the headlines of the Courier-Journal, as was his custom, and the following fastened his eyes:

"AT THE MORGUE."

Found drowned in the river at two o'clock this morning, the body of a young man of medium size, fair complexion and a blond mustache. A lace handkerchief marked "Gracie" was all that was found in the dead man's pockets.

"That's the Devil!" and with the exclamation Macmanara rushed for his hat and overcoat, leaving his startled aunt to think he had gone insane.

"Yes," the morgue keeper replied to Macmanara's eager questions, "the poor fellow was brought here at an early hour this morning. This handkerchief was the only thing about him that may lead to his identity, and that has only one chance in a thousand. If his sweetheart reads the morning papers—and of course the handkerchief is his sweetheart's—she will be here in a short while, and, if she doesn't read them, he may go to his grave unnamed."

Macmanara examined the features of the dead man closely. It was his Devil of the night before, minus the black hair, in place of which there was a closely-cropped blond head. As Macmanara was leaving the morgue he almost ran over Grace Langdon, who caught his arm and cried out:

"Oh, Otis, it is really you, and you are not drowned, with my handkerchief in your pocket? I was going to the opera," the little lady explained, "and something got wrong with the horses as we were leaving Chestnut street, and the coachman stopped to see what it was. My escort opened the carriage door for the same purpose, when I saw you and dropped my handkerchief to see if you would pick it up, and the way you pounced upon it kept me happy for the rest of the evening. I lost my opal ring, too, but I don't care, for it was always bringing me bad luck."

Macmanara thought of the ring as he had last seen it flash by the side of his scarfpin on a table with thousands of other jewels, but he did not tell his wife-to-be of his adventure with the Devil. He asked instead:

"Gracie, why is it a woman will tell a man no, make him feel all the misery of hades, when in her heart she means yes?"

"I don't know, Otis, unless it is to make him understand how much he cares and give him the pleasure of proposing over again," she answered, happily.

It Answered the Purpose.

"I can't see," said the visitor, "why you have your genealogical chart hung so high. Such things are extremely interesting, but no one can examine it where it is."

Here Mr. Porcine took him gently by the arm and led him into the library where they could be alone.

"Mrs. Porcine," he explained, "was bound to have one of them things, and as we didn't have one right handy I just framed my prize greyhound's pedigree and hung it high."—Chicago Post.

YOUTHS' DEPARTMENT

TWO STUDENTS.

A little boy sat on the shore of a pond
While a bullfrog sat in the pool;
And each one gazed on the other one,
Like scholars in a school.

Then at last the little boy spoke and said:
"Why, Frog, do you gaze at me?
Pray swim or jump, that I may learn
Some Natural History!"

The frog he croaked out this reply:
"That's what I'm here for, too.
I'm studying Boys, and their curious ways,
For I've nothing else to do!"

Then the boy he turned and went away,
And the frog he sank below;
While circling ripples on the pool
Were all that was left of the show.
—Benjamin Wesbetr, in St. Nicholas.

OSTRICHES IN HARNESS.

A Queer Team Seen by a Traveler from the East on a Road in Southern California.

Charles F. Holder, under the title "Queer Steeds," describes in St. Nicholas some very odd rides and drives.

"Whoa, chick! Whoa, bird!" somebody was saying.

A stroller along a road in southern California heard the words and wondered at such unusual terms for horses. The road led out of a little village into the country, and was lined with golden poppies, while here and there brown-backed violets peeped through the green grain that, dropped from some hay-wagon, was now springing up all along the wayside.

The stroller was observing the flowers intently, so did not look around until "Whoa, chick! Gently, bird!" came right over his shoulder, so near that he sprang to one side, turned quickly, and in much astonishment stood facing the queerest team ever seen by anybody anywhere. Standing so close to him that one of the steeds reached over to peck at a flower in his hat, were two fuzzy, grotesque birds of gigantic size, in fact the largest birds in the world—ostriches—harnessed side by side to a curious, sulky-like vehicle that had three wheels like a tricycle. On the seat, holding the reins, sat a young man with a pleasant smile on his face, which broadened into a laugh as he saw the evident surprise of the startled observer.

"They're a little kittenish and skittish yet," he said, as one of the birds leaned over and pecked violently at the flower in the stranger's hat. "They can't kick, but they will eat anything in sight. Whoa, chick! Whoa, bird!" —as the birds made a joint effort to reach the bearer of the flowers, who now, laughing, backed out of reach of the strange team.

CALIFORNIA OSTRICH TEAM.

"Don't be afraid," said the driver, touching the bird-horses with his whip as they made another convulsive effort, lunging heavily toward the poppies. "They can't bite you; see, they're muzzled." And then the man with the flowers noticed the clever way in which the birds were harnessed. Around their necks was a strap, while another strap held their beaks together so they could not bite.

"We have to muzzle them," continued the communicative driver. "They'll eat anything—from nails to oranges. Last week one bird swallowed a pipe—and lighted, at that; just snatched it out of a man's hand. But that isn't their steady diet; no. They live on alfalfa grass and vegetables and ground shells and pebbles."

The birds were harnessed not unlike horses. Heavy leather collars fitted the lower part of their necks, forming breastplates that were attached to the end of the wagon-shaft and to each other; leading backward were traces that passed beneath the wings. The reins were not attached to their heads, but to their backs.

"They're just broken in," said the driver, "but they travel pretty well;" and he touched the birds with the short whip and spoke to them. They looked around with their great black eyes, and then, as though what he wanted had suddenly occurred to them, started, gradually settling into a very moderate trot, turning easily and coming back up the road again.

The Angel's Effective Weapon.

An Augusta Sunday school class had been talking of Adam and Eve and their expulsion from Paradise, and the angel with the flaming sword in hand to prevent their return. The teacher asked what it was the angel had in his hand to keep out intruders. The question was directed to one little boy who remained in deep thought for a moment and then said: "He had a contribution box."—Lewiston Journal.

MARY IN THE WELL.

Little Pennsylvania Girl Knows How It Feels to Fall Into Ten Feet of Cold Water.

Little Mary Sunberry, of Shamokin, Pa., can tell how it feels to fall 31 feet down a well and land in ten feet of water. Mary is 11 years old and small for her age, but she is plucky and can shout as loud as most anyone.

At the back of Mary's father's house is an old well boxed up to the height of four feet. In order to draw water from the well it is necessary to throw in a bucket to which is attached a rope, and then, the bucket filled, to pull it hand over hand to the top of the box, out of which it must be lifted. This is no small task for a grown person, and for such a little girl as Mary it is very nearly impossible.

MARY AND THE WELL.

However, Mary is not the kind of girl who says she "can't". She just tries with all her might. In this case she had succeeded in getting the bucket up to the ledge and was just about to lift it over when it slipped and dropped back into the well. Determined not to give up, Mary hung on, raised herself on her tiptoes and leaned over into the well. Probably she leaned too far—no one knows quite how it was—but the first thing Mary knew she was floating about on the water in the bottom of the well. Away up above her she could see the sunshine, but down in the well it was dark and cold. When Mary shouted she could hear a great roaring noise, and this she thought would certainly be heard at the house. It did not occur to her that the sound was all in the well and that in all probability the people at the house would never hear her. Indeed, it is doubtful if Mary knew this, for she has not yet reached the high school and the study of physics.

When she first fell into the well her skirt blew out like a parachute, and, filling with air, rested on the surface of the water, where it acted as a life preserver. But as soon as the cloth, which was calico, was wet through she began to go down, until finally just the tip end of her nose was above the surface of the water. Then, acting upon an impulse to save herself, Mary caught the rough stones of the wall and began to pull herself up. This was successful for a time, but when she was fairly out of the water she lost her footing and slipped back. This time her whole head went under water, and quick as a flash she thought "this is drowning."

It was only for a moment, however; then her nose poked its way out of the water, as before, and when she had taken a good, deep breath she again tried to draw herself up on the stones. Again she fell and again she tried to save herself, only to fall back a third time. Just then some one heard her calling and came to look down into the well. Mary was then making her fourth effort to climb up the wall of her prison. Hurriedly a bucket was thrown down to her and into it she climbed, tired and frightened enough.

Needless to say, Mary is the heroine of the town, and she has told her story as many times as there are boys and girls in Shamokin. Mary herself does not think she was so very brave, and she tells her story in a most matter-of-fact way.

"I was drawing water," she says, "and I had the bucket almost up to the top when all at once everything seemed to go round and round, funny. The pail slipped back and I tried to get it, and—and—and I fell in. It was so funny, I didn't know I was falling into the well at all; I just heard a funny sound, like a big bee buzzing; and when I saw where I was I was floating round on the water, ever so far down. It was dark, and so cold, and I just yelled, but nobody came!

"I don't know how I got hold of one of the stones on the side of the well, and I climbed up like we do in the barn. I'd have got on all right, too, if it hadn't been for being so wet, but that made my foot slip and I fell down again—oh! my nose went under the water and everything! I thought I was drowning, but I didn't, and so I tried to climb again, and I kept on, and by and by they came and got me out. I wasn't so scared till I got up—but I wouldn't like to fall in again, it's so cold."

And, indeed, who would want to fall 30 feet into a well?—Chicago Chronicle.

Prayer with a Proviso.

"Now, Mabel, when you say your prayers be sure to ask God to help you not to be a naughty little girl." Mabel promised that she would add this petition to her prayers, so when she had finished her usual form she spoke as follows: "And now, O God, please keep Mabel from being a naughty little girl." There was a pause, then she concluded: "Nevertheless, Thy will, not mine, be done!"

FUNNY FOLKS

Strange, Is'nt It?

"Queer she never got married. She's so capable and resourceful a woman—so earnest and forceful."

"Is she?"

"Oh, yes, indeed. She's the kind of a woman who can look out for herself. Why, she knocked a man down once when he tried to flirt with her, she took a horsewhip to a fellow who spoke of her in a derogatory manner and she drove a peddler four blocks with a mop."

"Yes, yes," he returned, thoughtfully; "it is strange that no one ever has seemed to want her for a wife, isn't it?"—Chicago Post.

Beginning to Doubt.

"Do you believe in the study of the dead languages?"

"I used to be devoted to the classics," answered the thoughtful looking man. "But I have lately begun to wonder whether it wasn't a mistake to spend so much time on Latin and Greek, instead of studying slang, so that we may be able to clearly understand the conversation of our contemporaneous fellow man."—Washington Star.

Secret of It.

"Why do you go away for the summer? You have a nice home near the lake with a big porch and everything possible to make you cool and comfortable."

"That's just the trouble. In the summer we must have some hardships and discomforts in order to make us think we are having a good time. And, besides, they are necessary to make us appreciate home at its true value in the fall."—Chicago Post.

His Dread.

"Wh-wh-at is that noise?" gasped Mr. Dunne, sitting bolt upright in bed with terror portrayed on his countenance.

"O Henry!" whispered his wife, "it is a burglar! I know it is!"

"That's very comforting news, my dear," said Henry, relieved, as he lay down; "I thought perhaps it might be the ice collector."—Ohio State Journal.

Blessed Ignorance.

"One half the world don't know
How the other half lives;" I laugh
When I think this refers to the wife
In regard to her better half.
—Harlem Life.

REASONABLE EXPLANATION.

He—Why does a woman always hold up her skirt in that manner when out walking?

She—Because she has no trouser pockets, I suppose.—Chicago Daily News.

The Annual Fool.

He took the old musket corroded,
And no thought of danger foreboded,
He said with a scoff
That it couldn't go off,
And found out too late it was loaded.
—Judge.

Reason for Doubt.

"I'm suspicious of this dish," he said as he helped himself sparingly. "I believe it's an experiment and not properly prepared at that."

"Why?" she asked.

"Well, I understand it was prepared by a woman who spends her time writing receipts at the rate of a dozen a day for a household magazine."—Chicago Post.

A Full Meal.

"O'Hara wor th' greatest actor Oi iver saw."

"He wor?"

"We wor, indade! Phwat did he say whin th' audience bombarded him wid cabbage?"

"Pfwat did he say?"

"He towld thim to throw corn bafe th' nixt day awn he'd hov a good meal."—Chicago Daily News.

They Could Use Him.

Farmer Krick—Henry writes fer more money; says he wants to take fencin' lessons.

Mrs. Krick—Well, fer goodness sake, send it to him, Hiram! It's the fust useful thing he's wanted to study sence he went to college. When he comes home ye kin jes' set him to work puttin' a new fence front o' the house.—Judge.

Knew Her Business.

Uncle George—Clara, if you are wise, you will drop that young Scattergood. He's a spendthrift by instinct, and you never can count upon his taking care of his money.

Clara—Don't be alarmed, Uncle George. If I can keep the engagement running for another year he won't have any money to take care of.—Boston Transcript.

What Happened.

The Bachelor—I was at a dinner once at which there were 13 at table.

She—Did anything happen?

The Bachelor—Yes; two of them were married within a year.—Puck.

Men's Ingratitude.

Tramp—I'm not an idler, mum; I'm unfortunate.

Housekeeper—Humph! Did you ever work for a living?

Tramp—Yes, mum. I used to be a salesman fer Dr. Wigg's gold medal hair restorer, mum; an' I worked hard an' faithfully fer him, mum, that he discharged me.

Housekeeper—Nonsense! Why should he?

Tramp—You see, mum, the worry an' overwork tryin' to do a big business fer him made me prematurely bald, mum.—N. Y. Weekly.

Unrecognized.

The wise look dismal, I surmise,
Because folk won't believe they're wise.
—Puck.

NOT WHAT IT WAS MADE FOR.

Chatterton (sourly)—Why don't you go into the water?

His Wife (naively)—Would you have me take all the starch out of the collar and cuffs of my bathing suit?—Brooklyn Eagle.

A Doublet.

Dar's de dubble-breasted jacket,
De dubble-breasted sack;
Dar's de dubble-breasted mackintosh
Dat keeps de watah back;
Dar's de dubble-breasted obercoat,
De dubble-breasted vest;
But a dubble-breasted chicken
Wud suit dis chile de best.
—Arkansaw Thos. Cat.

Heartlessness of Politics.

"It's a mean thing to do," said the politician, "but I've got to shake the public confidence in this opponent of mine somehow."

"But there is no use of abusing him."

"No. I'll awaken distrust by more insidious methods. I will have him called 'the silver-tongued orator.' If that name ever fastens to him, his finish is in sight."—Washington Star.

Came To at Once.

Laura—I hear Lulu fainted while shopping the other day.

Lillie—Yes; fainted right on the street.

"What in the world did they do?"

"Carried her into a store."

"Threw water on her, I suppose?"

"No; it wasn't necessary; it was a millinery store they happened to carry her into."—Yonkers Statesman.

Curiosity Punished.

Fuddy—Did you hear Fred's wife telling her little boy to stop asking questions, or she'd punish him? Rather unjust that, eh?

Duddy—May be; but the woman is consistent. Just see how she has punished Fred for asking that momentous question that made them husband and wife.—Boston Transcript.

The Power of Reiteration.

When first a man his greatness tells,
The world with doubt receives him,
But if he tells it loud enough,
The world at last believes him.
—Washington Star.

NO USE IN SOARING.

"I am very sorry, Marie, that your mind is concerned always with such trivial things! You seem to have no thought for anything better than a new hat!"

"What's the use? If I wanted an entire costume you wouldn't buy it for me!"—Heitere Welt.

From Our Own Omar.

This rose may once have been a maiden's heart
That had its blissful beat, its bitter sm
This thorn may once have been one of teeth
With which she tore dry meat and bone apart.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Circumstances Alter Cases.

Mrs. Dorcas—What does your husband do during the summer?

Mrs. Gayboy—That depends on whether I stay at home or go away to the country.—Judge.

But Not Her Face.

Gussie Gush—Do you know I paint?

Willie Softleigh—Aw—weally, Miss Gush, I nevah noticed it.—Ohio State Journal.

THE FARMING WORLD

WASHING FARM WAGONS.

A Simple Device Which Not Only Lessens Labor, But Does the Work More Thoroughly.

Anything tending to lessen labor and yet, withal, which will admit of being performed just as well as or better than if done bodily, by brute force, should always be recommended and approved of. There are, indeed, many things to which this golden rule applies, not the least important and beneficial of which is the device shown in the accompanying illustration for washing farm wagons; in fact, it is an economizer of time.

HOW TO WASH WAGONS.

As can be seen, it consists simply of a narrow watertight box, which is slipped into position under the wheel after it has been "jacked" up. A pail of water is then poured in and the wheel revolved. Are not the results apparent? Ah! the dirt can thus be removed speedily and by far more readily than when a pail is used to hold the water. Let anyone try it and see.—Frederick O. Sibley, in N. Y. Tribune.

LINSEED MEAL GRUEL.

It Is Declared to Be an Excellent and Nutritious Milk Substitute for Calves.

We are often asked for advice as to the best substitute to use when there is not a sufficiency of fresh new milk to be given to calves, says Dairy and Creamery. In our own experience we have not found anything better than a mucilage or soup made up of linseed meal or ground linseed cake, with the addition of a little flour and pea meal. An American breeder, in the course of a communication to one of our contemporaries, claims to have obtained excellent results from the use of a preparation made by slowly boiling one pound of fresh sweet hay in six quarts of water for about an hour, and straining the decoction so obtained into a bucket to cool. A handful of oil cake and a similar quantity of fine oatmeal is stirred into half a gallon of boiling water and allowed to simmer for the same length of time that the hay is stewing. At the end of that time this mixture is added to the hay tea, and the whole given to the calf along with a little milk. The "tea" should be given warm at first, but after awhile, when the calf becomes accustomed to it, it may be given quite cold without any injurious results. The allowance of oil cake may be increased as age progresses. The writer in question claims that calves so reared are in every way as good when four to five months of age as if they were getting whole milk right through.

NEAT WATERING PLACE.

An Ornament to a Roadside and a Convenience That Everybody Will Appreciate.

An old iron kettle, even if it has a hole in the bottom, can be utilized in the manner shown in the cut. A wall of rough stones is laid under it, using sand and cement mortar, and smoothly filling any break in the kettle with the cement. The water can be brought into the kettle in a pipe over the top or through a hole drilled in the side. Such a watering place is an ornament to a roadside, as well as a great convenience.—Orange Judd Farmer.

ARTISTIC WATER TROUGH.

The War Against Weeds.

How about the noxious and poisonous weeds? Are there any growing along the roadside or the fencings of the farm? If so, it will be time and labor well spent to see that they are mowed down closely about this time of year, or before they have time to go to seed. The last half of July and during the month of August, in this latitude, is the period during which one mowing of these enemies of the thrifty farmer will come nearer rendering them harmless for the year than any other. If you cannot afford to mow them down twice or more during the year, give them at least one good battle while the scorching sun and midsummer drought are your allies.—Chicago Sun.

RASPBERRY CULTURE.

Valuable Suggestions for Those Who Intend to Engage in the Business Next Year.

Select a piece of ground with good surface drainage, facing east or south. The soil should contain a good amount of humus. A good clover sod which had a crop of potatoes taken from it the year before planting berries, would be my ideal. During winter or in early spring give it a liberal dressing of stable manure—about 8 to 12 tons per acre. Plow under in early spring but be careful not to plow when the ground is too wet. I prefer plowing 7 or 8 inches deep.

Pulverize ground thoroughly; mark out with single shovel plow about 5 inches deep; rows 3½ feet apart. Plant every other row to potatoes, then plant your berries in the remaining rows. Now we want good thrifty, well-rooted plants. When we have to purchase them or have to transport a considerable distance we want them in a dormant state, but when plants can be got on an adjoining plantation I prefer to have plants well started, say tops 6 inches high, taking them up with all the soil that will adhere to roots, only taking about 3 or 4 dozen at a time and planting them 3 feet in row, running the shovel plow through the row just before planting so the soil is fresh and moist. As soon as they are set start the cultivation to form an earth mulch and arrest the evaporation from the surface of moisture brought up by capillary attraction; also to kill all weeds. Keep cultivating all summer and keep clear from weeds. The potato crop will pay for the work and the use of the land. Do not prune the first season. In the following spring prune the laterals back to 10 or 12 inches. After fruiting remove all old canes, and all new canes except 3 or 4 of the strongest, in August or September.

I take one horse to a breaking plow and plow the soil up to the row of plants, forming quite a ridge. The reason I do this is, it braces up the plants and keeps them from being blown over; also it drains the surface water from the plants and keeps them from heaving out the following spring. I prune all laterals back to 8 or 12 inches. The reason of so close pruning is it preserves the vitality of plants. Also it makes them set less fruit, but it will be of finer and better quality and just as many quarts. I cut the top bud out of all canes when 2½ feet high so that they will form laterals. After the second year cultivate with a double shovel plow and five-tooth cultivator. My first plantation has fruited four crops and this spring has a fine set of canes for fifth crop and from appearances will produce paying crops for three years or more in the future. I attribute this success to close pruning.—George Wyler, in Ohio Farmer.

PULLING GRAPEVINES.

Chain Trace Worked by One Mule Does the Work Neatly and in Less Than No Time.

Owing to a change in the plans of a fruit farm in a neighboring county, it became necessary to pull up two acres of a vineyard. The owner ordered his men to grub out the vines. They went at it with spade, ax and grubbing hoe, and at the end of the first half-day had only a few vines out. At that rate they had a week's hard work on hand. A Yankee neighbor happened to visit the farm, and after watching the men for awhile told one of them to go to the barn and harness a mule and bring him with a ten-foot chain. Then he set the men to digging around the vines and cutting the main roots. When the mule and chain came he made a half-hitch with the chain around a vine near the ground, and attached it to the mule's whiffletree. Then he took a piece of 2x4 about four feet long, placed one end on the ground and the other under the chain, leaning at an angle of 45 degrees toward the vine. The mule was started and the vine lifted out of the ground. The chain was unfastened and hitched to the next, and so on. The whole job was done with the mule, and was an easy and speedy one. The same plan will work with all grubbing where the roots are not too large. Fence posts can also be pulled up in the same way.—Orange Judd Farmer.

CHAIN TRACE IN OPERATION.

Worst Enemies of Butter.

Two of the strongest enemies of butter to-day are oleomargarine and the preservatives. Both are of the same general character, for they depend on the greed of men for their very existence. Both exist in the darkness and masquerade under other than their true characters. Oleomargarine can be profitably sold only when it is sold for butter. The preservatives are sold by being proclaimed as perfectly healthful drugs. The ignorant and vicious buy the chemicals. The ignorant principally buy the bogus butter products, or at least most of the consumers are ignorant. In either case a dissemination of knowledge is necessary to destroy the enemy.—Farmers' Review.

SELF-IMPOSED TAXES.

Hills, Corners, Mud and Fences Cost the Farmers Hundreds of Millions Every Year.

Among the taxes which the farmers pay there are some that are unavoidable, and these it is useless to talk about. There are others which farmers impose upon themselves, which they hesitate to share with others, which they submit to without a protest, and even cling to when they are being removed. These taxes we cannot talk about too much. These are taxes, too, which bring no useful revenue, nor even support a tax gatherer; they are burdens as needless as the traditional stone which balanced the grist on the way to mill.

Through the failure of the government in the original surveys on the public lands to lay out a scientific system of roads, and divide the lands accordingly, farmers have been left to lay out the roads for themselves, and generally they have put them on farm lines, going over all the hills that come in their way. The result of this is the hill tax in hilly regions and what may be called the square corner tax on the prairies.

The amount of hill tax I have estimated in one county in New Jersey, and found that needless hills double all the cost of hauling in the county, making practically a money tax of $10,000 annually to the township. The people have paid this tax for 100 years, and yet they wonder why they are poor. In the prairie regions, for want of the diagonal roads which the government should have laid out, the farmer, to reach a point ten miles to the northwest, for instance, travels seven miles north and seven miles west, adding 40 per cent. to his distance, or, for the average of all travel, 20 per cent. This is the square corner tax.

The mud tax is probably about equal in total to the hill tax, and this, again, doubles the cost of all wagon transportation; yet many farmers are opposed to stone roads.

However, the farmers themselves are doing away in many places with the enormous burden of the fence tax, and with it will go the snowdrift tax and the waste land on the roadside. They are slowly abandoning narrow tires and tracking wheels. Moreover, many of them begin to realize the enormity and absurdity of the hill, mud and square corner taxes, and we may yet hope in time to see in this country, as we do in France, beautiful hard roads everywhere, winding through farms, with crops growing close to the wagon tracks and the roads serving perfectly every purpose of public use and private convenience.

You ask how all this can be accomplished without a burden of taxation which will neutralize its benefits. I answer that it is all being done to-day in a hundred places in the United States, and there are farmers who acknowledge that they are getting rich in these hard times solely by reason of the improved roads which have been forced upon them, and are paying with perfect ease any additional tax they impose. These improved roads are being built in many ways and in various forms of construction, and every year's experience reduces the cost and brings about an easier providing of the necessary means.

It would be a very long story to go into the details in this direction, and I would not be prepared to say which is the best of the many methods of construction and of payment. Both need to be greatly varied to meet the conditions in the various states, and a careful study of local legislation is necessary; but the vital question is for the farmers themselves to settle generally whether they want good roads, and whether they will accept the help of those who are willing and anxious to join in paying the cost of road improvement. If they will take up the subject in all their organizations and appoint active working committees to visit the nearest accessible localities where good roads prevail, and to urge such legislation as will make them attainable everywhere, the work will soon reach a point where its own momentum will carry it forward.

The estimate of your able secretary that $600,000,000 is wasted annually in this country through bad roads is supported by that of other statisticians, and from this it appears that the tax they impose takes one-quarter of the whole value of all farm products in the United States. To abolish this tax is a reform great enough to engage the best attention of this congress. It is a practical and practicable field for its energies. What the congress says on this subject will be listened to everywhere, while what it says on other subjects may fall on deaf ears.—Gen. Roy Stone, at Parkersburg, W. Va.

Growing of Forest Trees.

Those who desire to grow forest trees of any kind for shade or ornamental trees should remember that there is no better time to gather the seed than when it ripens upon the tree, and no better time for sowing it than that when it would be self sown by falling from the tree. That is, if the tree is a native of the place where it is to be grown. If from a warmer climate it may be necessary to start the seed under glass, and protect it in some way during a few of the first winters while it is small. At the Arnold Arboretum by this method they have acclimated and grown in this way some trees and shrubs that are not native here, and seldom found north of Mason and Dixon's line. The seeds from these plants are more hardy than those from southern plants and thus they can be made to endure our colder northern climate, and the northern limit of their growth is gradually being extended.—American Cultivator.

EXACTED STRANGE OATHS.

Odd Marriage Ceremony Performed by an Early Montana Magistrate.

George Hazel, of Helena, Mont., in speaking of the formerly great influence wielded by the justices of the peace on the frontier, told the following story, says the New York Tribune:

"In the prestate day of Montana the justices of the peace reigned supreme in the land. They joined men and women in life, buried them in death, and were general peacemakers to the community at large, and judges of dog fights. Their position in western communities was unique, and the stories that have been told about them have been innumerable. One of the most peculiar characters to be found in Washington, however, was one Reed, J. P., who ruled over the town of Belknap, Mont., since deceased in the early '70s.

"He performed at Belknap in the winter of 1878 a marriage ceremony that is classic in western annals. He made the bride swear that she would support the constitution of the United States and the organized acts of the territory of Montana; that she would be ever loving, faithful and true, and would be ever willing to defend—with her life, if necessary—the honor of her God, her country and her flag. The bridegroom was compelled to swear that he would split the wood, carry the water, shovel the snow, build the fire and under any and all circumstances try to be a perfect gentleman. Instead of returning her devotion with slurs and scowls he would repay it with a kiss and kind words. If he ran shy of kisses he was to call on the justice of the peace, who was long on kisses, but short on girls. Reed wound up this unique ceremony by making the couple recite the Lord's prayer in unison. And the ceremony ended with the crack of a revolver and a pop of beer corks."

Do not hope to get rid of fools; too many of them.—Atchison Globe.

"Spain is to have a new navy." "For how long?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Gratitude is the memory of the heart.—Massieu.

The only way you can get along with some people is by jollying them.—Washington (Ia.) Democrat.

The secret of some men's success lies in doing a thing first and talking about it a few days later.—Chicago Daily News.

"Is your new household help tidy?" "If anything, too much so. The other day I found her washing the faces of the goldfish in the aquarium."—Philadelphia Times.

Wilton—"They say Hitnaught is a 'dead game sport.'" Hilton—"He is. He buys a lot of bears and bucks from the guides and tells the people down home that they are the trophies of his prowess."—Philadelphia Press.

Darkens His Life.—Askit—"Why does Writem, the great author, wear such a look of constant fear?" Tellit—"He wrote the class song when he graduated, and his enemies are constantly threatening to make it public."—Baltimore American.

"Johnny," said the little fellow's mamma, "I want to give you a piece of cake, but I can't find the key to the pantry." "That's all right, mamma," replied bright little Johnny. "I know how to get in without a key." "That's all I want to know," she said, as she reached for the slipper.—Glasgow Evening News.

Cause and Effect.—"He's quite a prominent politician here, is he not?" inquired the visiting Briton. "Oh, no, he's a statesman!" replied the native. "Well, what's the difference?" "A statesman, my dear sir, is one who is in politics because he has money. A politician is one who has money because he is in politics."—Philadelphia Press.

ROMEO USED TO THE CITY

Full Grown Sheep Which Follows New York Man Around Crowded Streets Like a Pet Dog.

A young man with a sheep that followed him like a pet dog attracted attention on Broadway, near Forty-second street, New York city, the other afternoon. The sheep, which was full grown, wore a collar, and, although undismayed by the crowds, seemed to take considerable interest in his surroundings. The young man and his novel pet walked down to Thirty-fourth street and turned across toward Eighth avenue. The sheep was evidently used to the bustle and confusion, and deftly picked its way through the mass of cable cars, carriages and other vehicles with as much unconcern as a dog would have done. The young man said:

"I am much attached to Romeo, who is faithful and accompanies me wherever I go. I raised him myself, and I would not part with him for anything. I live in a flat up town, and the neighbors are used to Romeo and think almost as much of him as I do."

A Joke on the Doctor.

Going into the free dispensary of the New York Medical College and Hospital for Women one afternoon a physician found three or four little girls who, while awaiting treatment, had evidently made friends, and were huddled together on one bench, eagerly discussing something of great interest, which on investigation proved to be a much handled "chunk" of candy. In astonishment he inquired what they were doing. Some questioning finally elicited an explanation that "de one what tells de biggest lie wins it." "Oh," said the doctor, "I am ashamed of you. When I was little like you I never told lies." A slight pause, then from the smallest girl: "Give him de candy."—N. Y. Tribune.

Had the Tools.

"I just dropped in to see if you wanted any of your wise saws sharpened," said the funny man.

"No, we use our own files for that," replied the editor.—Philadelphia Press.

Do Your Feet Ache and Burn?

Shake into your shoes, Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It makes tight or New Shoes Feel Easy. Cures Corns, Itching, Swollen, Hot, Callous, Smarting, Sore and Sweating Feet. All Druggists and Shoe Stores sell it, 25c. Sample sent FREE. Address, Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y.

A Mistake.

"The owl, you know, was Minerva's favorite bird—"

"Minerva? Thought it was Bacchus."

"Oh, no! You must be thinking of a boiled owl!"—Puck.

Notice.

I want every man and woman in the United States interested in the Opium and Whisky habits to have one of my books on these diseases. Addgess B. M. Woolley, Atlanta, Ga., Box 887, and one will be sent you free.

A Charitable Bore.

Mrs. Widder—My first husband always worried over the ice bills.

Mr. Widder—Well, let us hope he is where he has none to bother him now.—Baltimore American.

Check That Ugly Cough

With Hoxsie's Croup Cure. No opium. 50 cts.

Don't swear at the mercury. May be it has been climbing up to find a cool place.—Indianapolis News.

Piso's Cure is the best medicine we ever used for all affections of the throat and lungs.—Wm. O. Endsley, Vanburen, Ind., Feb. 10, 1900.

Self-respect ought to mean something more than a comfortable sense that you have not been found out.—Town Topics.

A man is never so wretched that he forgets his bad habits.—Atchison Globe.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY.

Genuine

Carter's Little Liver Pills.

Must Bear Signature of

Brent Good

See Fac-Simile Wrapper Below.

Very small and as easy to take as sugar.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

FOR HEADACHE.
FOR DIZZINESS.
FOR BILIOUSNESS.
FOR TORPID LIVER.
FOR CONSTIPATION.
FOR SALLOW SKIN.
FOR THE COMPLEXION

GENUINE MUST HAVE SIGNATURE.

Price 25 Cents | Purely Vegetable. Brent Good

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

20,000 HARVEST HANDS

160 ACRES FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Required to harvest the grain crop of Western CANADA. The most abundant yield on the Continent. Reports are that the average yield of No. 1 Hard Wheat in Western Canada will be over thirty bushels to the acre. Prices for farm help will be extra. Splendid Ranching Lands adjoining the Wheat Belt. EXCURSIONS will be run from all points in the United States to the FREE GRANT LANDS. Secure a home at once, and if you wish to purchase at prevailing prices, and secure the advantage of the low rates, apply for Literature, Rates, etc., to F. PEDLEY, Supt. Immigration, Ottawa, Canada; or to JOS. YOUNG, 515 State St., Columbus, O., Canadian Government Agent.

☞ When visiting Buffalo, do not fail to see the CANADIAN EXHIBIT at the Pan-American.

WANTED GENTLEMAN or LADY AGENT, only one in each town, to SELL TEA at importer's prices. WRITE QUICKLY to HOME TEA CO., 32 Pearl Street, New York.

RHEUMATISM Yan Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Pastexperience speaks for itself. Depot, 88 S. California Ave., Chicago.

STARK TREES best by Test—77 YEARS. LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

OPIUM WHISKY and other drug habits cured. We want the worst cases. Book and references FREE. Dr. B. M. WOOLLEY, Box 3, Atlanta, Ga.

PENSIONS on age, disability and Widowhood; P. L. PENSIONS or any U. S. Service. LAWS FREE. A. W. McCORMICK & SONS, Cincinnati, O.; Washington, D. C.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION

A. N. K.—C 1876

SOZODONT for the Teeth and Breath 25c

At all Stores, or by Mail for the price. HALL & RUCKEL, New York.

SUNSTROKE

The summer's awful heat will kill those not fit to resist it—those whose bodies are full of poison because they have neglected their bowels.

The victims of sunstroke, or of any of the other terrible dangers of summer—diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera morbus—are always those who have been careless about keeping clean inside, and as a result have their blood full of rotten filth breeding disease germs and their bodies ready with weakness to succumb to the hot spell. Dizziness, heat headaches, sick stomachs, sticky oozing ill-smelling sweats, restless nights, terrible pains, gripes and cramps in the bowels, sudden death on the street, all result from this neglect.

Keep yourself clean, pure and healthy inside, disinfected as it were, with CASCARETS CANDY CATHARTIC, the greatest antiseptic bowel tonic ever discovered and you will find that every form of summer disease will be effectively

PREVENTED BY Cascarets CANDY CATHARTIC

BEST FOR THE BOWELS

THIS IS CCC THE TABLET.

10c. 25c. 50c.

ALL DRUGGISTS

CASCARETS are absolutely harmless, a purely vegetable compound. No mercurial or other mineral pill-poison in CASCARETS. CASCARETS promptly, effectively and permanently cure every disorder of the Stomach, Liver and Intestines. They not only cure constipation, but correct any and every form of irregularity of the bowels, including diarrhœa and dysentry. Pleasant, palatable, potent. Taste good, do good. Never sicken, weaken or gripe. Write for booklet and free sample. Address STERLING REMEDY CO., CHICAGO or NEW YORK. 430

KEPT TALLY ON FIBS.

THE ASTONISHING RESULT OF ONLY ONE DAY OF COUNTING.

An Investigator's Discovery of What an Enormous Bouquet of the Flowers of Fable Adorns the Daily Speech of the Average Mortal.

"Do you know that the average American is a hopeless and incorrigible and unmitigated liar?" said an amateur cynic of Baronne street. "I don't mean he lies viciously, but suave mendacity glides off the end of his tongue as easily as molasses flows from a spigot on a warm day in summer. He does it unconsciously, habitually, automatically—just as his lungs expand and his heart palpitates and his hair grows, without any special attention from the rest of his system. He does it because he can't help it. The thing has become a second nature.

"I had all this brought home to me," continued the amateur cynic, "by a very simple little experiment which I tried on myself and a few others no longer ago than yesterday morning. Did you ever see a pocket counting machine? Well, it's a little device shaped like a watch. Whenever you press the stem the needle on the dial jumps a point, and it registers in that way up to several thousand on the principle of a cyclometer. They are used by anybody making long counts and are very handy, because they never forget where they leave off.

"But, to come to the point, something happened to remind me of our national vice of untruthfulness as I was getting up yesterday, and I determined to 'keep tab' on myself and ascertain, if possible, how many actual, out and out lies I put into circulation in the course of the day. I chanced to have one of the little counting machines I have just mentioned, so I slipped it into my pocket and started out.

"The first lie I told was right at the door. Smithson was passing and stopped to shake hands. 'Hello, old man!' said I. 'Delighted to see you,' when as a matter of fact I was deuced sorry to see him, because I owe him ten. I gave the counter a squeeze and hurried on, but before I got to the office I had jogged it nine times.

"What did I jog it for, did you ask? Oh, trivialities, mere trivialities, but at the same time point blank lies, every one of 'em. Whenever I opened my mouth out dropped some confounded hyperbole. I told Jones the joke he insisted in springing on me was the 'best I ever heard' and then made a double tally in assuring his wife she was looking remarkably well when she was looking exactly like a scarecrow. I told another friend I never laughed so much in my life as I had at something or other, I don't remember now what, and still another that I hadn't slept a wink for three nights when I had neuralgia lately—all lies, bald lies, in spite of their harmlessness.

"When I reached the office and looked at the dial, I was horrified. 'Good heavens!' I said to myself. 'It seems to be physically impossible for me to speak the plain truth in the paltriest matters. I'll just remain perfectly quiet for half an hour and keep check on Boggs.'

"Boggs is our head bookkeeper and a pillar in one of the suburban churches," continued the amateur cynic. "He wears rubber overshoes in wet weather, cultivates sandy side whiskers, carries a gingham umbrella, belongs to a building and loan association and has all the other marks of severe respectability. I had supposed him to be the quintessence of cast iron veracity, but when I sat down in cold blood to put him on record I was astounded at the blase fashion with which he frivoled with the truth. I pushed the button on him 15 times in 27 minutes; then he got into a whispered conversation with a caller, and I lost the thread of his remarks. But I am certain if I had been in earshot the counter would have had hard work keeping up with the procession.

"That relieved my mind somewhat, and later on, when I made a quiet test of several of the other fellows in the office, I came to the conclusion that I was no worse than the average, but the average was pretty tough. As far as my investigations went, the invoice clerk held the record. He is a guileless sort of chap, with modest manners and a freckled nose, and I never supposed he had any imagination concealed in his peg topped cranium, but he forced me to push the indicator up exactly 22 times in 15 minutes. During the last part of the stretch, however, he was trying to trade off a secondhand bicycle, and that naturally swelled the returns.

"Of course I soon realized that the idea of keeping count on my own mendacity was entirely impractical and abandoned the effort, but the other data has furnished me with abundant food for thought. My brother-in-law, by the way, insists that we would make a great mistake in trying to weed these flowers of fable out of our daily speech. He says we lie continually and systematically because everybody else lies, and a man who would start out to tell the plain, cold, raw, rectangular truth about everything in life would be little better than an anarchist. He would upset all established standards of value and make it necessary almost to recast the language. Besides, nobody would believe him. But my brother-in-law is a doctor," added the amateur cynic thoughtfully, "and maybe that makes a difference."—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Chinese Era.

The "Chinese era" begins B. C. 2697, with the accession of the Emperor Yao, who first devised a calendar for the Chinese dividing the year into 365 days with an extra day every fourth year.

SARAH AND THE "INDIANS."

Bernhardt Played Fedora For Them at 35 Cents a Head.

Sarah Bernhardt, the great French actress, once played in Sullivan, Ind., at 35 cents a head.

It was many years ago, and Bernhardt was making a tour of the country. On the way from Louisville to Indianapolis the train was stopped at Sullivan by the news that a serious freight wreck had occurred a few miles up the road completely blocking the tracks and making progress to Indianapolis impossible until the next day.

"Very well," said the manager in excellent French and with forced calmness. "Since we cannot leave town we will give a performance here."

"Impossible," said Mme. Bernhardt, also in French. "Quite impossible."

"Not a bit," said the manager, and he went about it. The divine Bernhardt, being under contract to play a certain number of nights, was induced to consent. There was no "opera house" in Sullivan, but the Masonic hall was rented, and some of the scenery was crowded into it. The local job office got out a lot of handbills in a hurry, and messengers were dispatched to the adjoining towns to spread the glad news that Bernhardt, the divine Sarah, was to play in Sullivan that night and that admission would be 35 cents.

"No use trying to charge metropolitan prices here," said the manager to the treasurer, and that gentleman sighed and said he supposed not.

In the early evening there began to come into town long lines of green farmer wagons, each holding a family party. When the house was full, the great Bernhardt cautiously took a peep at it from behind the flimsy curtain.

"Mon Dieu!" she cried, raising her jeweled hands. "Look at the Indians!"

But she played Fedora for them, and she played until 11 o'clock.—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

HE USED THE SALT TEST.

An Old Apache Chief's Knowledge of the Human System.

In the early days of Union Pacific railroading Victoria, Nana and Geronimo, the three chiefs of the Arizona Apaches, with 100 of their best bucks, came through to Green River, Wy.

They had heard of the "heap wagon and no hoss" and had come to stop the train. They made a lasso of rawhide, and 50 men on each side held on to the rope as the freight came down the Wasatch divide. The engineer saw when several miles away what the Indians were up to, so he whistled "off brakes" and, opening his throttle, let her loose. The cowcatcher struck the rope and hurled the Indians in all directions, literally tearing them to pieces, headless, armless and legless. The three chiefs went south to their cactus plains very crestfallen.

Before they selected these men the old Chief Victoria had them all eat a piece of rock salt about as big as a pecan, run swiftly about 100 yards, sit down on a log or rock and cross their legs. Then he watched the vibration of the feet, which were crossed. The feet which vibrated the longest or had the longest strokes he declined to accept for a severe duty or a dangerous trip or for one that was at all hazardous, but he accepted the feet which vibrated short, distinct and regular strokes.

Now, what did the old chief know about pulsation of the arterial system or of heart action and indeed about salt in the system? I have lived near to Indian reservations and have had occasion often to survey over their lands for railroads and other objects, and I have wondered where old Victoria got his idea. Is not the child of the sagebrush plains better posted than his paleface brother?—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Love Letter of Prince Bismarck.

"On my window sill, among all sorts of crocuses and hyacinths, stand two camellias which always inspire me with strange thoughts. One of them, slender and pretty, with its ornamental crown (top) and soft, pale—very pale—pink blossoms, but little foliage and only two buds, transports me to Reddetin, holds itself rather stiffly and lisps English. The other makes far less impression of beauty as you look at it, and its stalk betrays in its gnarled twisting lack of care in its pruning. From the midst of the foliage looks out a dead branch, but the crown is rich in leaves, and the foliage is greener than that of its neighbor. It gives promise of abundant blossoming in its eight buds, and its color is deep dark red and white in irregular gay variegation. Do you take the comparison amiss? It is a lame comparison, moreover, for I do not love camellias, because they are without odor, and you I love precisely on account of the fragrance of the flower of your spirit, which is white, dark red and black."

Here is a picture of the Man of Iron with his armor doffed.—Harper's Magazine.

Luck and Pluck.

Two clerks named Thomas and Clarence were in the employ of a wealthy merchant. Thomas was always an industrious lad, but Clarence was much given to frivolity and was extravagant in his habits. In after years Clarence married his employer's daughter and was made a partner in the business. Thomas continued to be an honest, industrious clerk all his life, and his services were much appreciated by Clarence and his father-in-law.

Moral.—There is no royal road to success.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Not Fatal.

Willie—I think I could die listening to Miss Triller sing.

Cy Nick—Oh, you may feel like dying, but you'll pull through. I've been through it often.—Ohio State Journal.

MICA AXLE GREASE

Makes short roads. And light loads. Good for everything that runs on wheels.

Sold Everywhere.

Made by STANDARD OIL CO.

ROAD PETITION.

This is to give notice that thirty days after the first publication of this notice application will be made to the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county, Maryland, for the appointment of viewers to view and locate a new road beginning for the same at the south end of Garrett V. Moon's lane and running thence down Laurel Creek and through the lands of the Manor Mining and Manufacturing Company, James L. Harvey and J. B. Lipscomb and along the lines of said Lipscomb and Chas. Cooper and through the lands of the said Mining and Manufacturing Company to the town of Schell, a distance of about three miles.

J. L. HARVEY,
J. O. O'HAVRE,
J. B. LIPSCOMB and others,
Petitioners.

22x5t*

The Maryland Agricultural College

COLLEGE PARK, MARYLAND.

Maryland's School of Technology. Four Courses of Instruction.

AGRICULTURAL SCIENTIFIC — MECHANICAL CLASSICAL

Each department supplied with the most modern and approved apparatus. Practical work emphasized in all departments. Graduates qualified at once to enter upon life's work; graduates in Mechanical Engineering and Chemistry this year, all secured positions upon graduation. Boarding Department supplied with all modern improvements—bath rooms, closets, steam heat and gas.

Tuition, Books, Heat, Light, Washing, Board and Medical Attendance, $154.00 for scholastic year. Catalogue giving full particulars sent on application. Daily visit by physician to college.

Attention is called to the Short Course of Ten Weeks in Agriculture. Particulars sent upon application.

Term commences September 23rd. Early application necessary for admittance.

R. W. SILVESTER,
President M. A. C.

Order of Publication.

Noah Bowman, Plaintiff, vs. Elizabeth Bowman et al, Defendants.

No. 1118 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this bill is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate of which Samuel Bowman, late of Garrett county, deceased, died seized and possessed.

The Bill states—

1st. That a certain Samuel Bowman was in his lifetime seized and possessed of a parcel of land situated in Garrett county, Maryland, containing about sixty-four and one-half acres.

2nd. That being so seized, the said Samuel Bowman some twenty years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving him a widow (who has since died) and the following children, viz., Noah Bowman, Joseph Bowman, Cornelius Bowman and Lydia Bowman.

3rd. That the said Lydia intermarried with one J. H. Pitzer, and some years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving her her husband and the following children, viz., Maggie B., who intermarried with W. G. Rogers; Annie, who intermarried with S. J. Neil (the said Annie now being dead, dying intestate, leaving surviving her her said husband and one child, Conova, a minor); Harriet, who intermarried with Alex. McAnear; Frances L., who intermarried with W. W. Brown; Sarah A., who intermarried with L. L. Cooper; Noah C. Pitzer, a minor, and J. R. Pitzer.

4th. That Cornelius Bowman is also dead, dying intestate, leaving a widow, Elizabeth Bowman, and the following children, viz., James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman and Mattie, who intermarried with W. H. Morgan.

5th. That the said Joseph Bowman died intestate some years ago, leaving a widow, Lizzie Bowman, a son, N. E. Bowman, and other children, whose names and ages are unknown.

6th. That the real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury, and that in order to make division thereof the property will have to be sold and the proceeds divided.

7th. The Bill then prays for a decree for the sale of said property and for a distribution of the proceeds, for general relief, and also for an order of publication against the non-residents and unknown heirs.

It is thereupon, this 12th day of August, 1901, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 13th day of September, 1901, give notice to the defendants, the said Elizabeth Bowman, James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman, Mattie Morgan and W. H. Morgan, her husband, J. H. Pitzer, Maggie B. Rogers and W. G. Rogers, her husband, S. J. Neal, Conova Neal, Harriet E. McAnear and Alex. McAnear, her husband, Sarah Cooper and L. L. Cooper, her husband, Noah C. Pitzer, Frances L. Brown and W. W. Brown, her husband, J. R. Pitzer, Lizzie Bowman, N. E. Bowman and the unknown heirs of Joseph Bowman, deceased, of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 30th day of September, 1901, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy—test:
E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO.
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 22, 1901.

The Board of County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Monday, Sept. 9, 1901,

as required by law, for the purpose of transacting all routine business.

By order of the Board,
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

What it Cures

COUGHS. BRONCHITIS, RAWNESS, COLDS, LOSS OF VOICE, SORENESS, HOARSENESS, LARYNGITIS, TICKLING.

PINE AND TERPIN COUGH SYRUP

Is the new remedy that is astounding the medical world with the rapidity and permanency of its cures—it never fails—one dose relieves while a few more cures—price, 25 cents a bottle.

LOGAN DRUG COMPANY,
At all Druggists. WHEELING, W. VA.

The Garrett County Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank

OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE SECOND NATIONAL BANK of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital $100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits.. 250,000
Liability of Shareholders 100,000
Additional Security to Depositors.. $450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart,
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.

A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St.Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for

ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.
FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy MONUMENTS HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the utmost extent of the law.

Call on or address:
C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.
Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

133½ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale.

House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187½ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26½ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swauger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to
JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent,
OAKLAND, MD

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,

Office 7 North Liberty St.
CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—REPUBLICAN Building,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MD
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. je14-1

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 10

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice,
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

DR. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

DR. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 18-'99

DR. H. W. McCOMAS, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to 9 p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county, Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate. P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 8 22 8t.

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J. HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md. Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 28t*

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows.

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42	A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.35	A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01	A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52	P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07	P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50	A. M
No. 2—Daily	6.52	A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41	P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12	P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35	P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37	A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager.
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.
IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3	No. 1	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2	No. 4
P. M.	A. M.		NOON	P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. Junc.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05
6 51	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41
6 39	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 43	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 29
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv*7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.			A. M. A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager.
G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1901. NUMBER 26.

ENDOWED IN EXPERIENCE.

But the Cash Returns of the Garrett County Miners Was Not So Liberal.

On the sixteenth of June last a sextet of Garrett county citizens, comprising Messrs. Lawrence E. Compton, Michael Nathan, M. M. Ashby, John Shartzer, Richard Browning and Charles Beachy, took their departure for Nome, Alaska, laboring under the impression that "pay dirt" could be had in that locality in any desired quantity. One of these gentlemen, Mr. Compton, has returned with his mind thoroughly disabused of that idea, and his five companions, also en route home, entertain the same belief.

Mr. Compton, who arrived in this city on a Baltimore and Ohio passenger train yesterday and spent the day as the guest of his uncle, Jacob Brown, Esq., "the nestor of the Allegany county bar," was called upon by a Daily News representative in relation to his journey to the gold fields.

"The exodus from Nome has assumed the magnitude of a stampede," remarked Mr. Compton in the course of his conversation, "and probably not more than one thousand people will winter there. You will readily perceive what a rush this implies when I tell you that Nome in the zenith of her fame had a population of 40,000. During those boom days real estate and mining claims commanded fabulous sums, but there has been a very decided depreciation in both. For instance, I know of a Maryland woman who owned a lot in Nome for which she was offered $20,000 and would now be glad to sell for one-fiftieth of that sum. There are a number of substantial buildings in the town which have taken the place of canvas tents and shacks, and the residents are more comfortably sheltered than ever in the history of the town. The saloons are abundantly in evidence and command the balance in trade. Supplies, such as provisions, clothing, fuel, etc., are as cheap as in Seattle, because the market is overstocked. Labor no longer commands the princely compensation it once did and no one but a skilled artisan receives more than five dollars per day. The cost of living has also been correspondingly reduced, but the demand for labor has fallen off until there is forty applicants for one job.

"This summer has not in any sense been adapted to the wants and needs of the miners and has contributed in a great measure to the enforced idleness and consequent exodus. The beach and gravel along the creeks has remained frozen and one of the claims located some fifty miles from Nome was found to be covered with a ten foot accumulation of ice, rendering it impossible to mine the gravel. The beach, which once yielded large returns, is no longer a source of revenue, as the thousands of miners have washed out every particle of gold. Some of the large mining companies have been fairly successful on Anvil creek and its tributaries, but the export of gold from Nome and vicinity will be a mere bagatelle compared with that of last and the previous summer. Many miners from Dawson and the bonanza region came to Nome but quickly perceiving that every claim had been taken, departed as precipitously as they had come.

"This far, in the Klondike region and in Nome, only free gold has been discovered and the mining is purely of a placer character. It is fully agreed that lodes of quartz are to be found and a search is being made for them.

"Personally I am glad to get home and I know my companions are, although they concluded to prolong their stay in Alaska two weeks after my departure. While we are not over-burdened with wealth as the result of our journey, we return rich with experience.—Cumb. News.

HOYES RUN.

I thought a few items from this point might be of some interest to your many readers, hence these lines.

D. M. Loraw, foreman at C. C. Wilhelm's mill, is putting in a cut-off saw at the above mill. Mr. Wilhelm is doing a big business.

F. F. Goss is logging for A. Knabb & Co.

The young people of our town become quite noisy these evenings, but you cannot expect anything better from children.

Ed. Roth is hauling lumber for C. C. Wilhelm.

Dock Shank was in our vicinity one day this week.

Politics! There are no politics in this community. Everything is Republican this year.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

MOUNTAIN TRIOLETS.

TWO PORTRAITS.

The summer girl is off for town—
Good-by to flirting and to folly;
But woful is the country clown,
The summer girl is off for town,
She left him feeling rather brown,
A prey to melancholy.
The summer girl is off for town—
Good-by to flirting and to folly.

THE OTHER ONE.

The summer girl is off for town
Quite dazed with all her folly;
Upon her brow a puckered frown—
The summer girl is off for town,
The country bumpkin turned her down
And wed his buxom Molly.
The summer girl is off for town
Quite dazed with all her folly.

DIVORCES NEEDED.

When love is bought and sold for cash
Divorces then are needed:
'Tis all the go to cut a dash
When love is bought and sold for cash—
The devil take the after smash
Of marriage rites unheeded;
When love is bought and sold for cash
Divorces then are needed.

Jackson Park, Aug. 26, 1901. T. L. L.

WILD RIDE FOR A BRIDE.

Harry Hardie and Miss Myrtle Shaffer, of Terra Alta, Married Under Difficulties.

That the course of true love never did run smooth and that where two souls have but a single thought and two hearts beat as one there's no use for paternal or other interference was clearly and convincingly demonstrated Sunday night and Monday by a Preston county pair, who outwitted the fond father so badly that he is said to look worse than 30 cents in Chinese coin ever since.

For more than a year Harry Hardie, the hustling proprietor of the Racket Store at Terra Alta, and Miss Myrtle Shaffer, the handsome 18-year old daughter of John R. Shaffer, a wealthy farmer living three miles from Terra Alta, have been ardently enamored of each other, but paternal objections, owing to the girl's tender age, were furiously and fastly filed. Some weeks ago the young lady was allowed to come to Oakland to visit friends and last week went to Terra Alta, where it is understood an elopement of which the old gentleman got wind was planned. So bright and early Sunday morning Mr. Shaffer drove up to the door of the house in which Myrtie was domiciled in Terra Alta, and demanded that she don her attire with all haste and hie away with him to their old homestead. This the girl flatly refused to do and her father went to her room and by force succeeded in encasing her, not any too neatly, in her clothes, and tying her hands so as to check her resistance carried her to the wagon which was in waiting, and drove away with his captured daughter. After getting out of town he released her hands and compelled her to drive while he held on to his captive. Hardie hearing of these exciting proceedings, hastened to secure the fastest team in town and by the time Mr. Shaffer had driven half way home Hardie dashed up beside the wagon and told the girl to jump, which she did with more than due haste and after a chase several times around her father's wagon jumped into her sweetheart's buggy with her father at her heels. Hardie gave the horses a cut and they dashed away closely followed by the father's team. Mile after mile the teams rushed, urged on by the lashes of their drivers, but Hardie managed to give his prospective father-in-law the slip when they reached Oakland, a distance of ten miles, and hurried on to Deer Park, six miles farther, where they took train No. 12, arriving at Keyser at 10 o'clock that night, hatless, beltless, bespattered with mud and otherwise demolished. There Hardie attempted to secure a license, but failed on account of the girl's age. They returned to Oakland on No. 7 and secured a license and were married about 8 o'clock Monday morning, Mr. Shaffer having given up the chase soon after midnight. By 10 o'clock Monday Hardie was back in his store selling goods. Mr. Shaffer called in the afternoon and gave his son-in-law the glad hand, declaring that he had never been beaten out before in his life and that the man who could do so was a dandy and good enough to be his son-in-law.

Special Rates to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition, Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Excursion tickets from Oakland, Md., to Buffalo and return via Pittsburg account Pan-American Exposition now on sale at ticket offices Baltimore & Ohio Railroad:

TEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

FIFTEEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $16.80.

SEASON TICKETS—On sale daily, good returning until Nov. 30th, 1901, $19.20.

For full details, time of trains, etc., call on Agent Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. til nov 1

WOMAN'S INFLUENCE.

Changes It Wrought In Improving a Village.

When the ladies seriously take hold of a project it is pretty safe to assume that they will succeed. But it is as village improvers that they have never been known to fail when once they started in. A case in point is the transformation of Oxford, an old town in the interior of New York.

Three parks were set apart by the pioneers originally, but after 100 years they were little regarded by the people then living within sight of them. They were overrun with weeds and brush. Trees began to grow promiscuously in one, while the lines of another were broken down, and it became a mud hole.

One afternoon two women were looking out on the plot called Lafayette square. A little stream was stagnating through its center. Drivers and pedestrians had no consideration for the struggling grass.

The two talked with other women, and a meeting of women was called to devise ways and means of improving the village. A permanent organization was formed, and a president, vice-president, treasurer and secretary were elected. A board of directors and an executive committee were elected, and a constitution and by-laws were adopted.

Organization was perfected in September, the objects of the society were made known throughout the community, and the work of improving the village began at the home of each of the 20 members. The majority of the people said, "You can never accomplish anything." But the women entered enthusiastically upon their enterprise. They wrought changes in their own dooryards. They exchanged "slips" of hardy plants, purchased the roots of inexpensive but pretty shrubs. By ordering together and purchasing at wholesale they were able to save much. All orders were shipped to the president of the society, and the expressage on individual packages was saved for the purchase of more shrubs.

It was an aggressive campaign. The rubbish which had accumulated in the corners of the fences was cleared away. Old fences were replaced by new ones or repaired or removed entirely. The women made beautiful lawns about their homes and planted vines to spread over walls and fences. Ornamental shrubbery was set out; pretty evergreen or deciduous trees were procured from the forest near by and set in rows where the crumbling fences once stood. New sidewalks were laid. As the village was noted for its deposit of bluestone, handsome stone walks were procured cheaply. As soon as these were laid it was seen to be essential that wide gutters should be made, and with the gutters came grading the streets and removing weeds and stones. Attention was given to back door yards that faced the railroad. Weeds and brush had overrun them, and they had become a dumping ground. Back doors and barns which had never known a coat of color were painted, and the weather beaten, tumble down board fences were replaced by neat white pickets.

A subscription was finally started for funds to restore the parks. People were asked to give anything from a cent up. A New England supper was given, and it proved to be so pleasant and successful that it has been repeated annually. The society was able to swell the contributions by the proceeds from a series of entertainments, embracing concerts, theatricals and lectures, which found ready favor. These also were found so profitable in every sense that they have been continued.

The money having finally been raised, a committee of three was appointed to arrange for grading and curbing Lafayette square, the dimensions of which were 180 by 62 feet. A handsome fountain was given as a memorial to a former resident by his sons at a cost of $1000 and was formally dedicated to the village. The expense of the grading, curbing, setting the fountain and the village.

Washington park was then made delightful. Graveled walks were wound through it, in place of aggressive weeds lawn grass seed was sown, ground was spaded up and cultivated plants set out; mountain ash, weeping willow and balsam trees were placed here and there, and wild clematis and ampelopsis were so planted that they would in time overrun the tops of these trees. Hollyhock trees were secured, and asters, hydrangeas and wild roses were arranged in pretty vistas. Finally fallen and decayed timber, stumps, weeds and rubbish were taken from Fort Hill park, which was covered over with rich soil and seeded down and is now an attractive green plot of three-quarters of an acre surrounded by a fine curbing. The three parks are cared for at comparatively small expenditure.

In a forgotten cemetery on a side street near the heart of the village the few remaining slabs had been leveled by the frosts of many years. Wild apple trees grew and bore fruit, which was harvested only by the small boys. Old rosebushes ran wild and mingled with briers, burdocks, milkweed and goldenrod. Many old cans and pails had been thrown into the inclosure. The grass was never cut, and the grounds were fast becoming impenetrable. The women got to work, cleared the old cemetery of debris and reset the ancient shafts, removing the ashes of some of the forefathers of the hamlet to the new and handsome burial grounds on the hill across the river. The grass is now mowed regularly, the wild brambles are subdued, and the place is honored as it should be.

Hicks' Weather Forecasts For September.

In all probability a general storm disturbance, central the last two days in August, will still prevail in the middle and eastern parts of the country during the first day or two of September. The moon is full on August 29th, is on the celestial equator on the 30th, the central day of a Vulcan storm period, and in perigee on September 1st. We have before admonished our readers that these facts point to the probability of equatorial storms to the southward as we pass from August into September. We do not affirm that they must or will come but there are sufficient reasons to apprehend them, and to make a prudent watch on all marked indications the right thing. If such barometric depressions do not appear in and around the regions of the gulf by September 1st, the weather over the interior will remain warm and dry until we approach the great equinoctial perturbations sure to develop later in the month.

About the time of the moon's last quarter or extreme north declination on the 5th, reactionary disturbances will show themselves, when new storm areas will appear, or general storms, which may be advancing from the equator, will become more pronounced. The Mercury period is central on the 8th, extending its influence from the 1st to the 15th. At the same time the autumnal equinox, being central on the 22nd, covers the whole month with its perturbing influence. This does not imply that storms or other disturbances must be taking place all the time; but the relations of the earth to the sun are storm and weather "breeding" energies are entering and impregnating and intensifying the elements of the atmosphere and earth all the time, and as a result of these things storms and changes peculiar to the season are apt to break out at any time and sure to break out at some time during the transition of the seasons to opposite ends of the globe, or in the equinoctial period proper. One hundred to one, the accompanying storm diagram for September, and the abutting periods in August and October storm charts, will point out the centers of all the great disturbances and changes incident to the autumnal equinoctial term. Watch and see and say for yourself.

As we enter the regular storm period, central on the 10th, we may expect a very warm spell in most parts. From about Monday, the 9th, to Friday, the 13th, barometric readings will become disturbed, and dangerously low depressions will admonish of possible violence. Storms of this period are apt to reach a crisis on and touching the 10th, 11th and 12th. Tidal waves in the gulf and around the coasts will be abnormally high and fierce about the 12th and 13th. In all probability general rain storms, gales and changes of weather will visit the interior of the continent at this time, as well as the coast region. The magnetic and electric forces that normally lie dormant in our globe and atmosphere, as a rule, reach a maximum state of unrest and activity about September 11th. This is often manifested by earth currents and illuminating the north sky.

In all the foregoing forecasts we have said that there were strong probabilities of storms and storm phenomena. We insist that this view of the subject is reasonably correct. But if high barometric pressure should stubbornly dominate the gulf regions up to the middle of the month, it will remain hot and dry over most of the country until that condition breaks down, letting the heated, effected atmosphere flow down across the equator, and opening the doorway for autumnal storm and change. The ruling probabilities, however, as we figure them, are that storms and changes will come with the early storm periods of the month, and that very marked drops of the temperature, even to frosts in northern directions, will be reached before the middle of September.

The reactionary storm period, central about the 16th and 17th, will bring perceptible changes to storm conditions—changes to warmer, falling barometer, growing cloudiness and precipitation; but more general and energetic disturbances are almost certain to result during the Vulcan storm period central on the 22nd, coincident with the center of earth's equinox. It will be seen in the storm chart that the Mars perturbation unites with all the other causes of storms during much of this month, say from the 11th to the end. Ordinarily about Saturday, the 21st, to Tuesday, the 24th, would be the danger days of this period; but we figure that equatorial or West India storms will be more probable and violent from about the 27th to the 30th. During these last days moon is on the equator on the 27th, full on the 28th and in perigee on the 29th. Tidal waves will rise to a maximum in many parts of the earth during this period, central on the 28th and 29th. If a touch of frost, snow and early winter visit regions northward at the close of these disturbances, readers well up in our theory and forecasts will not be surprised or caught napping.

Giving a very brief look into the coming year and season, we can only hint in general terms at what we believe is in store in the way of weather and general seasonal conditions. We are carefully going over this ground in our 1902 almanac, our full calculations and deductions not yet being complete. We believe that we shall not pass out of this period of minimum precipitations with a bound, but that a shortage in general rains, to a less destructive extent, will be characteristic of the coming year. We believe that the "rain belt" which touched the extreme north in 1900, and moved further south in 1901, will advance further southward in 1902, but that the rainfall will not be excessive even there, and that the central and southern parts of the country will have another summer of shortage of rainfall, better, but not enough.

Two years ago called attention to the "slipping on" of the rain belt of the north side of our continent and the "slipping off" of the floods and rains in the extreme south in 1901. We also said that rains would relieve the drought on the Pacific coasts, beginning in 1900, and that rains would be more frequent along the Atlantic coast states this season. Let those who know the facts say whether we were correct.

New Germany Sunday School Picnic.

The Sunday school picnic held at New Germany on last Friday was a great success from every point of view.

The picnic was held in the grove adjoining the German Reformed church where a short program of song, prayer and an address was rendered. A free dinner followed, of which all present partook. The Lonaconing band was present and played many select airs for the occasion.

The picnic was given gratuitously by the citizens of the community and the delicious viands prepared by them was highly enjoyed by the partakers therof. In the afternoon ice cream was served by the ladies of the M. E. church. Some of the young men sold confectionery for the benefit of the church and from these sources the sum of $63.09 was cleared which will be applied to the debt of the church.

He Owes His Life to the Forethought of a Companion.

While on a camping trip in Webster county, Mr. S. I. Stump, of Normantown, W. Va., had a severe attack of bloody flux. He says, "I firmly believe I owe my life to the forethought of one of the company who had taken along a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy." Moral.—Procure a bottle of this remedy before leaving home. It cannot be obtained when on a hunting, fishing or prospecting trip. Neither can it be obtained while on board the cars or steamship, and at such times and places it is most likely to be needed. The safe way is to have it with you. Thousands of travelers never leave home on a journey without it. For sale by all druggists.

Call for Your Letters.

Mrs. C. J. Rodeheaver, Mrs. Elizabeth Hutchins, Mrs. R. E. Bier, Miss Dessie Nestor, Miss Annie Myers, Miss Edith Folkerth, Miss Lucy Davis, Miss Minnie Bucklew (2), Miss Carrie Broadwater, Rev. J. M. Miller, John Spindler, Frank Petz, W. Ulrich, James Upole, Anson B. Campbell, Jr., Walter Clem.

NEW COURSE OF STUDY

To Be Adopted in the Public Schools of Maryland.

The new course of study adopted by the State Board of Education on July 2 will, by order of the board, go into effect in all of the schools of the counties of Maryland September 1. The schedule has been in the hands of the teachers for several weeks that they might become acquainted with its provisions before they begin the work of the new scholastic year. The school authorities do not anticipate any great difficulty in having its features engrafted in the work of the school room and are satisfied its complete adoption will be a question of a short time. While the number of grades has been increased from nine to ten, the additional grade is the outgrowth of better apportionment of the work rather than additional text-book matter. With its old schedule of grades the teachers found it necessary to divide at least one of the grammar school grades, thereby necessitating an additional year.

In arranging the work of the new course the report of the committee of fifteen of the National Educational Association on the correlation of studies in elementary schools was considered, and its recommendations were adopted as far as school conditions in Maryland would permit. The report was looked upon as most helpful of all American educational classics.

Mr. M. Bates Stevens, State Superintendent of Public Education, said: "From the standpoint of actual school work there seems to be a natural, logical and practical grouping of studies, which has been followed in our system of grades under the following headings or co-ordinate groups:

"(1) language literature, (2) mathematics, (3) science, (4) conduct, (5) art. There is a classification of branches of each group, and the teacher is thereby assisted in the correlation of studies and given a general idea of the relative importance of each group. Following a general summary of each grade's branches is a brief outline of work for the grade divided into half-year's work to correspond with the requirement of the school law that semi-annual examinations of pupils be held in all schools.

"One distinguishing feature of the new course is greater flexility, allowing the teacher to do the most possible for that portion of our pupils, very much larger in some localities than others, which goes out of school before the elementary has been completed. These is an enrichment of the course, especially in the lower grades. In the matter of arithmetic the work has been somewhat abridged, so there may be more exercises in simple calculations. Accuracy and rapidity are aimed at in this branch, while less attention will be paid to those difficult portions of arithmetic in which problems exhaust the mental energy of the pupil rather than develop it.

"Another feature of the course is a greater amount of supplementary work. The grading has a greater lateral movement than the old system. It may not escape altogether the criticisms of being 'wooden' in some of its recommendations, nor can we get entirely away from the wooden system until all our teachers are trained and experienced. It takes into account the needs of the important interests of the pupil and embodies in its place suggestions and outlines of work to regard and develop such interests. The striking difference between the old and the new education is concisely stated when we say the 'three h's' have taken the place of the 'three r's' as the distinguishing mark. That system of teaching which will reach and harmoniously develop the head, the heart and the hand for the ends of complete living will perhaps accomplish most for the individual and most for the State.

"The conduct and art groups of study are emphasized in the new course. Larger provision has been made to inculcate good habits and teach moral lessons, while the subject of manual training will not be taught except in our high schools; drawing, cardboard construction, scissors-work and paper-folding can be introduced with profit into every school. The provisions of the new course will be discussed in the teachers' institutes, the majority of which this year will be held during the months of September and October."

Have you a sense of fullness in the region of your stomach after eating? If so you will be benefited by using Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They also cure belching and sour stomach. They regulate the bowels too. Price, 25 cents. Sold by all druggists.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

A QUEST.

Long since, there lived a man reputed wise
(Some better things were said of him, some worse),
Who made his life a tireless quest to know
The Why and Wherefore of the universe.

He wandered through solutions intricate,
And old and new philosophers he read;
This one converted, but another spake
And made his faith apostasy instead.

A paladin of atheism first—
But soon he dared to wonder how to-day
Existence universal was explained
By saying it existed yesterday.

So swerved away unto the other pole,
Hypothesis theistic, and would fain
Have found a cause without a prior cause—
But all his years of searching were in vain.

Thus all his fond illations turned to dust;
Some things he learned are not revealed to man;
What solace that he knew the essence of
All creeds religious since the world began?

His life was girt by vain analysis,
And subtile disputations held in thrall
His soul, that wildly dreamed to overleap
The mystery Life offers to us all.

But when Age left him twisted, gray and worn,
He felt the barren purpose of his quest,
And longed to quite forget his mocking doubts
And live his last, few, trembling days at rest.

But Death had watched him with a cynic's eye—
Had marked his shuffling steps, his sight grown dim,
And one still evening stood before his chair,
And smiled, half kindly, as he beckoned him.

One passing through a certain field of graves
May find a stone of rather ancient date,
Which bears these words, the last philosophy,
Of him whose life they thus commemorate:

"Here sleeps a man who sought to question God—
Who conjured with the everlasting Why;
Delved deeply into science, creeds and schools,
And learned this truth—that Man is born to die."

—N. Y. Sun.

KITTY'S COOL WHITE ROOM

By Carolyn Wells.

"O DEAR," sighed Mrs. Curtis, as she entered the dining-room, where her husband and her daughter were at breakfast one August morning; "I wish the weather would turn cooler. What does the paper say, John?"

"'There is no prospect of a cool wave.' That isn't very encouraging, my dear. I wish I didn't have to go down to the office."

"I wouldn't mind the heat," Mrs. Curtis continued, "but the St. Clairs are coming out from New York to lunch with us, and it is so trying to have company this awful weather."

"Well," said Kitty, philosophically, "we can't help it; we'll do the best we can and they won't suffer any more than we do ourselves."

"Well, good-by, dears," said Mr. Curtis; "give my regards to your friends, and if I don't come home to-night it will be because I've melted away. Hello, here comes Tom to mow the grass. Kitty, won't you run down cellar and unlock the door so he can get the lawn mower?"

Kitty went down the cellar stairs with a hop, skip and a jump, and opened the door for Tom. Then she started to go back, but paused for a moment in the cool, damp cellar, and it was then that her bright thought struck her.

She stood still, looking round her, and as her plan grew in magnificence her eyes danced with glee, and she ran upstairs calling:

"Oh, mamma, I've thought of the loveliest scheme for to-day. We can make a parlor down cellar that will be just beautiful."

"O, child, you're crazy. The cellar is damp and dark and Mrs. St. Clair would be mortally afraid of rheumatism; and, besides, I don't propose to entertain city company in the cellar!"

"But, mamma, I mean to make it all pretty and attractive. Just come down and look at it."

Unwillingly Mrs. Curtis let herself be dragged down by her energetic daughter, and when she felt the cool, moist air, she began to think there were some possibilities in her daughter's plan.

"Now, you go upstairs, mamma, and don't bother or think about this and when it's all done I'll call you."

Then Kitty told Tom of her enterprise and the handy man-of-all-work entered into the spirit of it with great enthusiasm.

The part of the cellar which Kitty proposed to utilize was directly under the parlor and of the same size and shape. It was scrupulously clean, with a hard cement floor and whitewashed brick walls, and had a large bay window.

As a safeguard against rheumatism Tom brought a great pile of old newspapers and laid them thickly over the floor. Then he spread down the white linen crash that just fitted the parlor floor for dances and secured it by heavy weights in the corners. Then, following Kitty's instructions, and aided by her willing and energetic self, he brought down wicker chairs and tables and the rattan couch from the veranda, which Kitty covered with a large white linen sheet, draping it prettily at the corners and adding several white pillows.

Then she asked Tom to bring down from her own room two large, cool-looking etchings in white frames and hang them on the cellar walls. Further decorations were two or three pale colored posters representing sea views or mermaids, and here and there a Japanese fan.

The windows were high and small, with iron gratings. These were easily arranged with fresh sash curtains of dotted swiss. The ceiling was the worst, for it was of rough, brown rafters, but with a little thought and some trouble it was canopied with four sheets, which added greatly to the white effect Kitty was striving for. Also an unsightly post which held up a beam was twisted with white cheese cloth, with sprays of green asparagus pinned on, and a palm in the green jardiniere was set against it.

On the wicker table she placed some fans, magazines, one or two white bound books, and a glass bowl of white peonies, surrounded with cool, green leaves.

Then, still mindful of Mrs. St. Clair's possible rheumatism, she spread a green and white Japanese rug beneath the most comfortable rocker, and another before the white-draped couch. Finally she stepped into the adjoining room, which was the laundry, to wash her hands, and all at once she had another brilliant idea.

Why not lunch in the laundry? The dining-room was so sunny and there could be no comfort in eating the dainty luncheon mamma had ordered if the guests were to be sunstruck during the meal.

After a short consultation with the cook, Kitty and Tom went to work again. It was easier this time, for the laundry was plastered and ceiled; the stationary tubs, when covered with a tablecloth, made a fine sideboard, and the laundry table did very well for four people to eat from, while spotless, shining damask and fresh white flowers quite disguised the lowly piece of furniture. Chairs were brought from the dining-room and a few rugs and decorations were quickly put in place. Then Kitty flew upstairs to dress.

"Wear a white gown, mamma," she said, "and haven't you a white dressing sack that you can lend to Mrs. St. Clair, for she can't go into my white parlor in a dark dress?"

When Kitty appeared again, in a thin white muslin dress, with pale green ribbons, she found the newly-arrived guests in her mother's room.

"O," exclaimed Mrs. St. Clair, "if I had been anywhere else but here I wouldn't have come. I'm nearly dead. The cars just crawled, and the sun fairly burned through the windows. Ethel could dress more coolly, but I had to wear this black silk, and I feel as if I should suffocate."

"Won't you lay aside your wraps?" said Mrs. Curtis, "and wear this white lawn sack? There are no other guests, and you will be cooler and more comfortable."

DECORATING THE CELLAR.

"Oh, thank you!" said Mrs. St. Clair, gladly; "indeed I will."

Then the party went down to the parlor.

"Dear me!" said Ethel, "it's no better downstairs than it is up, is it? But perhaps if we sit down and fan awhile we'll feel cooler."

The city child really looked pale and drooping.

Then Mrs. Curtis said: "It is not usual to entertain guests in the cellar, but Kitty insists that it is much cooler there; so, if you are willing, suppose we go down and try it?"

"Yes," said Mrs. St. Clair, catching at any chance of relief, "do let us go. I'd be willing to sit on a potato barrel or a wheelbarrow if I could get away from this heat."

So Kitty led the way, and when her mother and the visitors saw the "white room" they expressed the most amazed delight.

"Oh!" exclaimed Mrs. St. Clair, taking the comfortable chair which Kitty offered her. "How perfectly lovely this is! I think I shall stay right here until October."

"'Saved! I have fallen into a grotto,'" cried Ethel, quoting Jules Verne's hero, as she threw herself on the couch and looked as contented as she had previously looked miserable.

Kitty's head was nearly turned with the compliments paid to her cleverness and ingenuity, and when luncheon was announced and another surprise awaited the guests in the cool, pretty laundry, their delight knew no bounds.—Boston Globe.

Baby Talk.

She—Did it ever occur to you what poor talkers the men are?

He—Did you ever consider that it is the women who teach babies to say things?—Boston Transcript.

AN EXCEPTIONAL CASE.

A Lady of the Mountains Who Is Handsome and Superior to Her Neighbors.

One of the rare things to be met with in the mountainous regions of Kentucky, West Virginia and the adjoining states is a really pretty woman, unless of imported stock. Indeed, so prevalent is the tall and angular, saffron-skinned, slabsided lady that the traveler, wondering why that one thing woman most craves has been denied her sex in the mountains, lays aside his sense of beauty as something not needed and goes about quite oblivious of the fact that there are pretty women in the world, says a writer in the New York Herald.

Under such circumstances, when he does happen upon a handsome mountaineeress his surprise and delight are that much greater. It was my luck on one occasion to meet such a woman at a farmhouse in the valley of the upper Cumberland. Possibly she might not have so impressed me if I had seen her among the beauties of the metropolis, but out there in the wilds she was so unlike anything else I had seen that when she came out of the house in response to my "Hello!" and fairly burst upon my astonished vision I actually sat on my horse and stared at her in speechless admiration. I fancy she must have been used to it, for she appeared to take no notice.

"I beg your pardon," I managed to stammer after a moment, "can you tell me where I can get something to eat?"

"Hit's a mite airly fer dinner," she said, looking at a shadow across the porch, "but ef you'll 'light an' come in you kin git a bite here in half an' hour er sich a matter."

That suited me exactly, and I didn't care if it was two hours until dinner time so long as she was around, so I "lit" and went in. Naturally enough I talked to her, and it wasn't long until I was flattering her, just as all men flatter pretty women.

"Don't you find it rather lonesome living so far from the main road?" I asked after a few desultory remarks. The house was about half a mile up the hollow.

"'Twuz at fust, but I'm used to hit now," she responded with a philosophic smile.

"Haven't you any children?"

"Two, but they air at school an' don't git home till evenin'."

"Your husband is some company, I suppose?" I ventured.

"I hain't got no husband."

That rather startled me, and I paused a moment.

"My old man," she continued, "was killed by a saw log fallin' onto him about four ye'r ago. Him an' me come here from Virginny about a ye'r afore hit happened."

"Well, you are a mighty handsome woman to be a widow," I said, impulsively.

"That's whut the men folks in this neck uv woods is al'ays tellin' me," she laughed.

"Oh," I followed, "they recognize a superlative when they observe it, do they?"

"They know a good thing," she snickered softly in affirmative as she spread out the tablecloth.

"Well, why the mischief don't you marry one of them?"

"I reckon I'm a leetle like they air, mister," she explained.

"How do you mean?" I asked, not quite comprehending.

"I know a good thing when I see hit," she laughed.

"Oh, I see," I said, "and they are"—

"'Tain't fer me to be talkin' about my neighbors, mister," she interrupted. "Dinner's ready; pull up yer cheer."

Another Milk Adulterant.

Viscogen is the latest milk adulterant discovered by the inspectors of the state dairy and food department. For some time the department kept getting samples of milk apparently above the legal standard which, on being tested, were found to be far below. The cause was a mystery until, by a shrewd piece of detective work, the reason was discovered and a sample of viscogen was obtained. The stuff is a sirup composed of sugar, lime and water, about the color of water, and is used chiefly to make the milk appear richer than it really is. When viscogen is placed in milk or cream the lactic acid turns lime in the fluid into a white, thick substance, which, assimilating with the milk, gives it the appearance and taste of great richness. It is possible through its use to palm off upon customers milk and cream which is far below standard. While viscogen is not injurious to health, its use is fraudulent and will be stopped by the dairy and food department. Viscogen is so little known that the practice among dairymen is very limited.—Pioneer Press.

Fallacies About the Negro Race.

In the long continued discussion of the negro problem no solution has been offered that is more fallacious than that the negro will gradually die out. The census reports show that during the last ten years the negro population has increased by 21 per cent. Another theory on the race question advanced by Booker Washington to the effect that the tendency of the negro is to remain upon or migrate to the farm, has been exploded by the late census. It shows that the negro has a growing fondness for the town.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Honors Even.

The Summer Girl—I am told to beware of a sailor; that they have a wife in every port!

The Yachtsman—And I have been warned to beware of a summer girl; that they have a fiance in every summer resort.—Judge.

PUNGENT PARAGRAPHS.

Vangingerbilt—"I say, old man, give me a good disguise for the fancy ball." Balkinghorse—"Chalk your nose and go sober."—The Schoolmaster.

"No," said Mr. D. Spepsia to the restaurant keeper, "I didn't say the rare roast beef was good; I said good roast beef here is rare."—Indianapolis News.

Too Much Work in That.—"He says the world owes him a living." "Well, so it does. All he has to do is to go to work and collect it."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Beenaway—"And what of Willie Puttipate, whose mother considered him a budding genius?" Staidhome—"Oh, he turned out to be a blooming idiot!"—Smart Set.

"I've called," said the patient, "to see what you would give me for an attack of rheumatism." "Nothing," snapped Dr. Crotchet, "I've got an attack myself that I'd like to give away."—Philadelphia Press.

Entitled to It.—Client—"By what right are you keeping that $5,000 damages you recovered for me?" Lawyer—"Didn't you tell me in the first place that all you wanted was satisfaction?"—Ohio State Journal.

"I wonder if there'll be much of a fight," mused the funny man as he paced the promenade deck with his wife. "Much of a fight?" she queried. "How? When?" "When they set the dog watch on this ocean greyhound."—Philadelphia Record.

The Latest Fad.—Mrs. Nebb—"I am going to an observation party this afternoon, dear." Husband—"An observation party? What sort of a party is that?" Mrs. Nebb—"Mrs. Quizzer's next door neighbor is moving, and Mrs. Quizzer has invited a few friends to watch through the windows and see what they have."—Boston Traveller.

A MISCALCULATION.

The Old Doctor Didn't Stop to Consider That His Horse Could Be Beat.

When there is told a real-thing horse-race story, out of the common, it is orthodox and traditional to introduce a deacon. This being a true story, based upon the veritable information of a breeder and owner in attendance upon the Blue Ribbon meet, it is obligatory to cut out the deacon, remarks the Detroit Free Press.

In a little Pennsylvania town there were two doctors. By a judicious combination they might have coined money, but they were rivals. Each was a horse fancier and they pleased their bucolic constituency by having one or more entries at the county fair races, where the local flyers tried conclusions over a quarter-of-a-mile track; four times around and an eighth of a mile extra before the foaming chargers could be halted.

One year the doctors got into a wrangle over their respective steeds and reached a point in their howling debate where nothing but money could talk.

"Say," announced the younger doctor, who had only been in the community two years, "your horse is a pacer, mine a trotter. That calls for a time allowance."

"Not from me," shouted the old doctor, who had helped plat the town. "You've been making your cracks that you have a faster critter than I have. Here's a hundred dollars that says you haven't, and no gait is barred."

"Well, I'm not the man to weaken," declared the younger one. "'No gait barred' seems to be in your favor. Even up by adding that no horse owned by either of us is barred."

This was done. The old doctor appeared with his famous pacer and the young one with what looked like a compromise between a greyhound and a wild Texas steer. The first score was good and the doctors got away amid the wildest excitement. The pacer settled to his work like a clock. The nondescript made a few kangaroo jumps and was then off with the low, level leaps that would win a derby. The pacer got the flag and the old doctor kicked in vain, for "any gait" went. A year later the old man was running a truck farm and the younger one was a monopolist.

Called Down by Lillian.

Lillian Russell has never made any great fame for vivacity on the stage, but this has not been from any want of a feeling for the humorous side of things, and she has often flashed out a caustic bit of reply when an opening was presented. Not long ago she was a guest at a banquet given to a certain Russian noble, a small gathering, and the noble and Lillian happened to be placed side by side. He was a rather bumptious fellow, with a supercilious sniff at everything American. In his estimation Americans are little better than savages. He found fault with the various dishes served, went near to declaring the cooking outrageous, and made himself generally disagreeable. "Is it possible you eat that stuff?" he asked, when some corn was served. "Why, in my country we feed that to the hogs." "Help yourself, count," said Lillian, quietly, sliding the dish toward him. He is believed to have "tumbled."—Chicago Journal.

Veiled Sarcasm.

Customer—Say, I thought you told me that parrot I bought of you last week was highly educated?

Dealer—Yes, so I did.

Customer—Well, all I've got to say is that he must have been educated in the attic of a deaf and dumb institution.—Chicago Daily News.

A Friendly Tip.

Biggs—I wonder what makes my eyes so weak?

Diggs—I don't know—unless it's because they are in a weak place.—Chicago Daily News.

THE CURING OF DRUNKARDS.

Dr. August Forel Tells His Reasons for Becoming a Total Abstainer.

Some time ago Dr. August Forel was asked how he became a total abstainer. This is what he replied:

For thirteen years, while at Munich as well as at Zurich, as director of the insane asylum, I had a great number of alcohol patients, some afflicted with delirium tremens and others not so seriously afflicted. I had never seen a single one cured. When the delirium had passed they all began to drink again. I felt for a long time that there was a fault somewhere, but I did not find the remedy. In 1881 a drunkard of the worst type had had four attacks of delirium in one year, and each time after recovering he began to drink again, beating his wife, etc. I pronounced him incurable and advised his wife to secure a divorce. She took him to a little asylum of the Croix Bleu at Bale. Here he was cured and became the agent of the Croix Bleu at Paris.

He sent me his thanks, not without irony, for my good care of him. From that time I understood more and more that the treatment of alcohol patients consisting of the desire to bring them back to moderate drinking, rested upon a profound error. I endeavored to compel my drunkards to total abstinence, but without the least success. I sought a total abstinence society, but found none.

In 1884 a shoemaker in the neighborhood of my asylum came to take my measure for a pair of shoes. He refused the glass of wine that I offered him according to the custom well known in Switzerland. I discovered then that he was at the head of a little temperance society. Delightedly, I asked him if he would take my drunkards into his society. "With great pleasure," he said, "send them all to me."

From that day I sent him my drunkards, with attendants to care for them. With exemplary patience and devotion he labored with them and took them into his society. And then, for the first time in my life, I saw my drunkards cured—not all, but a goodly number.

I had, however, the feebleness to still await 18 months observing. I said to the shoemaker one day: "My dear sir, for 1½ years my drunkards, hitherto incurable, are being cured. One thing becomes more and more clear to my mind, and that is that it is you alone who cure them and not I. How is this? It is truly a shame for me, a physician and specialist, paid by the state, to have patients cured by a poor shoemaker who receives not a cent therefor, and to feel myself incapable of doing this."

"This is, however, very simple," replied the shoemaker, smiling somewhat archly. "I am a total abstainer and you are not. We make no one a total abstainer without giving the example ourselves."

"You are right," I replied. "For a long time I have felt this to be so, and I do not understand why I have waited thus. But from to-morrow I shall be a total abstainer."

This was in 1886, at the beginning of the year, and since then I have remained a total abstainer, and I have cured hundreds of drunkards with no further need of the shoemaker. My shoemaker, Mr. Bosshart, has become through my influence the deservedly honored manager of the asylum for drunkards at Ellikon.

Until 1892 I still had the weakness to offer wine to my guests and friends whilst my wife, my children and myself were total abstainers, to our great advantage as regards health and labor. This troubled my conscience, but I had not yet the courage to overcome custom. In 1892 my entrance into the order of Good Templars relieved me of my wine and of this painful burden. From that time I have felt entirely free and have broken the ties with alcohol.—Translated from La Source Organe de l'Union Francaise by Caroline R. Humphrey, in Union Signal.

Saloon Coffee.

An interesting temperance measure was presented in the New York legislature, recently adjourned, but failed of passage. Its purpose was to oblige all saloonkeepers to sell tea, coffee, milk and chocolate as well as intoxicants. The theory of those who drafted it was that many men who seek the saloons for warmth and light and sociability, and drink from a sense of obligation, would be content with temperance beverages, and perhaps prefer them if they were to be had. The opponents of the bill argued that the saloonkeepers might easily defeat its purpose if they wished by serving tea and coffee of so poor a quality that no one would drink it; but a plan similar to that provided for in the bill has been tried in certain saloons in England, and with considerable success.—Chicago Excelsior.

Diamond Cut Diamond.

In New York a quick-witted toper went into a barroom and called for something to drink. "We don't sell liquor," said the law-evading landlord, "we will give you a glass, and then, if you want a biscuit we'll sell it you for sixpence." The "good creature" was handed down and our hero took a stiff glass, when, turning round to depart, the unsuspecting landlord handed him the dish of biscuits with the remark: "You'll buy a biscuit?" "Well, no, I think not; they are too dear. I can get lots of 'em five or six for a penny anywhere else."

DOG SAVES LIVES.

Big St. Bernard Who Devotes Himself to Piloting Intoxicated Soldiers Across Tracks.

A large St. Bernard dog owned by Abraham Zimmermann, who conducts a hotel near the national military home at Marion, Ind., has attracted a great deal of attention recently by his marvelous conduct.

The hotel is situated in an out-of-the-way place, surrounded by woods, about one mile from the headquarters of the home. The place is frequented by veterans who congregate there to drink and spend their time. To reach the place it is necessary to cross the tracks of the Pennsylvania railroad. At this point a number of veterans have been killed who were returning to the home in an intoxicated condition.

It seems that the dog has assumed the responsibility of taking care of the veterans that frequent the place and become intoxicated. He begins to manifest an interest in an old soldier as soon as the veteran shows the effects of too much liquor and instinctively commences to keep a watch on him and his movements. When the veteran starts for home the dog accompanies him to the railroad crossing and runs in advance to see if a train is approaching. If one is in sight he returns to his intoxicated charge and places himself in front of the veteran and by barking notifies the soldier of the approaching danger. If the man then attempts to approach the railroad track the dog will seize him by the clothing and prevent him from doing so. After the train has passed he will then pilot him across the tracks and sit and watch him until he has entered the home grounds before returning to the hotel to look after another charge.

FOUND OLD VETERAN LYING IN THE SNOW.

The big fellow was making his usual rounds of inspection in the woods one day when he found an old veteran who was lying in the snow in an unconscious condition. He attempted to arouse him by pulling at his garments; failing in this he went to the hotel, where he attracted the attention of the landlord and a number of veterans by his queer actions. They followed him to the woods, where they found the unconscious man almost frozen. The rescue party picked him up and carried him to the home hospital, preceded by the faithful dog, who showed by his actions that he was grateful to the rescue party for their assistance and that he was also an important factor in the matter.

The dog has positively saved the lives of four veterans. His actions are purely from instinct, as he has never been trained to do the work. He takes no interest in a civilian, but devotes himself exclusively to those who wear the blue uniform of the government.—National Advocate.

FACTS.

There are 28,894 juvenile temperance societies in the British islands, with a membership of 2,536,000.

The number of retail liquor dealers in the United States at the close of last year was 206,000. The total vote of the prohibition party in the election of the same year was 209,000.

For continuous beer drinking, so to speak, Egypt holds the record among nations. In Egypt beer has been drunk for 5,000 years, and the "busa" of the fellahs of to-day is made by a process almost identical with that described by Herodotus, mentioned in hieroglyphs and depicted in sculpture as old as 3000 B. C.

Fifty counties of Alabama, 50 of Arkansas, 30 of Florida, 133 of Georgia, 90 of Kentucky, 20 of Louisiana, 15 of Maryland, 84 of Missouri, 60 of North Carolina, 70 of Tennessee, 120 of Texas, 55 of Virginia and 40 of West Virginia have adopted temperance regulations which prohibit the sale at retail of liquor within their territory, save on medical prescriptions.

The Treat Habit.

Americans spend $175,000,000 a year on books, magazines and newspapers. This is between two and three dollars a year to the head of population, and would seem to show that we are a literary nation. On the other hand, Americans spend $1,250,000,000 a year, or over $100,000,000 a month, on alcoholic stimulants, nearly as much a month for liquors as a year for literature. The treating habit has something to do with this. Men do not say to one another: "Come and have a magazine with me," and if by any chance such a thing should occur, the other man would not come back with the invitation: "Now have a novel on me." The treating habit is one of the worst faults of the American people.—Arizona Republican.

EDWARD IS POPULAR

All Classes of English Society Adore Their New King.

Was a Bon Vivant as Prince of Wales, But Now Is Sober and Sedate—His Coronation to Occur Next June.

[Special London Letter.]

WHEN King Edward VII. was Prince Albert Edward of Wales, he was considered the most democratic prince in Europe. Why, it would be hard to say. The people of England, as well as the masses of of other countries, raise up idols—sometimes because they are too stupid to comprehend the motives of their so-called superiors, at other times for the sole purpose of knocking them down.

As prince of Wales, the reigning British sovereign, who, by the grace of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, is soon to be made "British emperor," was a liberal patron of the turf—an institution far dearer to the average cockney than the established church. He appeared in person at every meet of importance, his horses contested for purses and his representatives were central figures in the betting ring. Among his associates he was noted as a gambler of nerve, and scandal ventured to assert that young and inexperienced men with money in their purses were plucked like geese in the august circles patronized by the prince. His love for beautiful women was proverbial, not only at home, but also in Paris and Homburg. Had he belonged to a somewhat lower stratum of society he would have been called a sport and a rake, but being heir presumptive to the throne, the sycophants who surrounded him dubbed him "perfect gentleman and prince of good fellows."

But the transition from second fiddle to first violin wrought a change in Albert Edward which frightened his old intimates and filled the hearts of the old-fashioned aristocracy with joy. Hardly had he been proclaimed king when his character and disposition changed radically. He was no longer anybody's chum—he was everybody's sovereign. He ceased to be a patron of the turf, stopped gambling, resented familiarity and reestablished customs which his venerable mother had permitted to pass into what Grover Cleveland would have called "innocuous desuetude." Instead of "liberalizing" royalty, he issued edicts recalling to life usages which had been forgotten even by the heads of the various red-tape departments of court officialdom.

Yet, in spite of these reactionary measures, his majesty is more popular than ever before; and this only goes to show that the masses are not only fond of display, but that the "divinity that doth hedge a king" still is a tangible something in the public mind. Many a revolution has been avoided in past ages by royal display. By the same means dissatisfaction has been changed into adoration. When the present German emperor ascended the throne, he was not a popular monarch. He was antagonized in parliament and out of it. The people called him young and inexperienced; the nobility cold and unreliable. He made a few bellicose speeches and arranged a succession of gorgeous pageants. Wherever he appeared he was "it," and very soon the factions which had abused him most became his blindest admirers.

Whether the erratic William gave his British uncle a few private lessons in statecraft, as some waspish writers have had the hardihood to assert, will probably never be known. Certain it is, however, that King Edward has succeeded in winning over to his side the high aristocracy and the middle-class nonconformists, two elements which, no longer than a year or two ago, pronounced him unfit to succeed the good Victoria as ruler of a great Christian nation.

Although the coronation of the king will not take place until next June, it is the paramount topic of conversation in the English metropolis; and everybody seems to delight that the celebration is to be conducted upon a scale of magnificence unparalleled in modern history. The costermongers seem to be quite as joyful over the coming event as the aristocratic ladies who will participate in the services at Westminster abbey. It is to be an all-around "by-the-grace-of-God" affair, in which everybody can take a part—the nobility by exhibiting rare family jewels, the rabble by shouting, and rich Americans by paying exorbitant prices for windows along the line of the royal procession.

The coronation of an English king is a mediaeval ceremony of so much interest that a short description of it may be welcomed by many American readers.

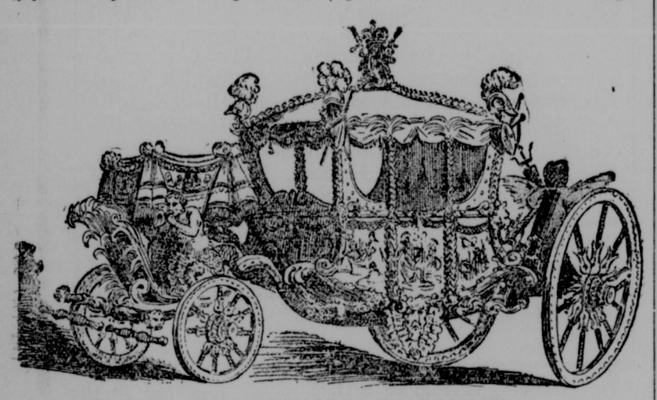
The king and his consort, accompanied by the princes and princesses of blood royal and attended by the highest household and military officers and crack military organizations, proceed from the palace to Westminster abbey, at the entrance of which the sovereign is received by the great officers of state and the noblemen designated as bearers of the royal insignia. He is conducted to the robing chamber where he is clothed in surcoat of crimson velvet with a mantle and hood of the same material, trimmed with ermine and bordered with deep gold lace. After the cap of state has been placed on his head, he advances up the nave into the choir, the choristers immediately beginning the anthem. The sovereign moves to the south side of the throne and passes to a chair of state called the recognition chair, where for a few moments he gives himself up to private devotion. The archbishop of Canterbury, standing near the king, then says to the lord chancellor, the lord great chamberlain, the lord high constable and the earl marshal, who stand, respectively, in the east, west, north and south side of the abbey: "Sirs, I here present unto you King Edward, the undoubted king of this realm; wherefore all you who are come this day to do your homage, are you willing to do the same?" The sovereign stands while east, west, north and south respond in union. This is the recognition, after which the king passes to the altar, where he offers to the archbishop an altar cloth of gold and an ingot of gold weighing one pound, called the sovereign's offerings. After that follows communion, and then the oath is administered to the king. Thereupon the archbishop anoints the royal head and hands in the form of a cross, with consecrated oil. Next he is presented with the royal spurs of gold, the royal sword, the imperial mantle of cloth of gold, the orb, the ruby ring, the scepters of the two kingdoms, the scepter royal and the scepter with the dove. One represents kingly power and justice, the other equity and mercy. Then follows the actual crowning. The crown is consecrated by the archbishop who places it on the royal head. This is the signal for all the peers and peeresses to put on their coronets, the bishops their caps and the kings-of-arms their crowns.

Simultaneously the royal salute is fired and there is a loud blast of trumpets, and all the world knows that the king is crowned. At this juncture the treasurer of the household distributes the medals struck to commemorate the occasion. The administration of the sacrament and the benediction conclude the religious ceremony, which occupies several hours.

The king then exchanges the robe of state for the royal robe of purple velvet, and the orb and scepter royal are placed in his hands. He is conducted out of the abbey and returns to the palace in the same great state as in the triumphal progress to old Westminster.

Whether King Edward will have a coronation banquet is not yet known. William IV. and Victoria omitted this part of the ceremony. Should the new king conclude to have one it will revive many old customs, among them the mummery of the "champion of England." This champion is a knight dressed in mediaeval panoply of war who makes his appearance at the coronation banquet at Westminster hall and challenges to mortal combat any who may deny the title of the monarch just crowned. Should no one answer after the third defiance, the champion will approach the kng, and his majesty will drink to him from a gilt cup, which he then presents to his gallant defender. The office of champion is an ancient one, and is supposed to have been brought to England by William the Conqueror. Since the time of Richard II. it has remained in the Dymoke family, of Scrivelsby manor, Lincolnshire, the present head of which is Sir Francis Dymoke, an unpretentious country gentleman of peaceful habits and very small stature.

WILLIAM WALTER WELLS.



THE ROYAL STATE CARRIAGE OF GREAT BRITAIN.

THE KING'S CHAMPION.

City of Electric Roads.

Montreal has over a hundred miles of electric road.

QUEER FRONTIER EXPERIENCE

Why a Western Pioneer Family Had to Pick Their Wheat Over, Kernel by Kernel.

In narating the frontier experiences of "The First White Baby Born in the Northwest," in the Ladies' Home Journal, W. S. Harwood tells of a queer experience that befell the family in the first year after settling on a farm far removed from the settlements. "The winter had been unusually long and severe, and their store of provisions ran low. It was a long distance to the nearest base of supplies, and communication with the outside world had been cut off. Indians in the neighborhood one night broke into the granary where the wheat was stored and stole a quantity. In doing this a large amount of broken glass became mixed with the wheat which the Indians left, so for many days, amidst much merry story telling and many a joke and laugh, in spite of the serious situation, the family gathered about a large table in their living room and spent the short winter days picking over the wheat, kernel by kernel, in order to free it from the pieces of glass. For this wheat stood between them and starvation, and none of its precious kernels must be lost. Their stock of flour had long since wasted away, as had most of their food supplies, so they boiled and ate the wheat without grinding. Relief reached them just in time to prevent a sad ending to the experience."

MISS RUTH HANNA.

Among the many charming girls in Washington's official society none is more popular than Miss Ruth Hanna, daughter of Senator Marcus Aurelius Hanna, of Ohio. She has been designated by the officials of the navy department to name the new United States cruiser Cleveland, and her appointment has pleased the people of Washington quite as much as her old Cleveland friends. Miss Hanna states that in naming the new ship she will not make use of the proverbial bottle of champagne, but will, instead, use Lake Erie water. This decision has been enthusiastically applauded by temperance people everywhere.

BILL BOARDS ON MONT BLANC.

There Is No Escape for Tourists from the Wiles of the Advertiser.

The agitation in France against the disfigurement of country landscapes by flaring advertisements still proceeds, but it appears with doubtful success, owing to vested interests. The country people whose land lies alongside the lines of railway are readily tempted by the offers of the advertising contractors from whom some of them reap quite a respectable income from displaying posters which puff soup, chocolate, drinks, etc. It is said that an agent of one firm is now starting on a journey through 36,000 communes, in each of which he is to arrange for the erection of a painted board. This is to be done in time for the tourist season, says the aris Messenger. The notice boards already arranged for and erected by this agent cost him no less than 14,000 francs a year.

The correspondent of a French paper states that this system of advertising has been carried to its height in Switzerland, where, on the very summit of Mont Blanc, the first thing to meet the Alpine climbers' eye is a flaring advertisement.

TIMBER FLUME IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The flumes which are used to float logs and hewn timber from the mountains to the sawmills are fed by mountain torrents, and are in some cases between three and four miles long. The lumbermen, after their week's work in camp, save a tedious journey by constructing a rough wooden skiff and using the waterway, traveling at times at the rate of a mile a minute. A gaff is used as a brake. The tenderfoot who makes this trip for the first time can consider himself lucky if he does not arrive at the bottom thoroughly seasick and with hair standing on end.

ENJOYED THE FIGHT.

"Polly's" Comment on an Engagement Between Wild Cats in Close Quarters.

The two wildcats in a box in a baggage-room at the Union depot had glared at each other for a couple of hours before the trouble began, says the Denver Republican. All the afternoon they had growled, and the supposition is that they had said things to each other that were not complimentary. The larger of the two had spilled the water belonging to the smaller one. He had switched his tail into the other's face, and in various ways had given the youngster to understand that there was apt to be trouble. Toward evening the two sat in opposite corners and glared at each other. The larger animal about eight o'clock thought it was about time to make the interior of the box interesting to one of the occupants. He was successful.

No sooner had the big cat attacked the smaller one than the latter was ready for business. There was a mass of tangled fur inside the box, the sides of which groaned with the struggle. Growls and flying fur came out from between the cracks, and those who were looking on could not tell which was the winner. Several of the baggagemen caught up sticks and through the slits in the box succeeded finally in poking the beasts into submission. As the two wildcats cowered down in opposite corners a South African parrot swinging in a cage near by called out:

"Let 'em fight! It's a peach!"

Doesn't Like the Auto.

A newspaper published in Nice, France, loudly declares against the arrogant and ill-smelling automobile. It says: "These vehicles are bringing about the complete ruin of the coast as well as of all the watering places, by taking possession of the principal roads and driveways and speeding over them. Persons who walk on the roads or who ride in other carriages are virtually taking their lives in their hands. The so-called automobile week which we have just had at Nice has been a veritable scandal. During whole days the public was debarred from the Promenade des Anglais. More than 100,000 persons were affronted in order that a few millionaires might be satisfied."

Say It in a Hurry.

Here is a word worth committing to memory, to be uttered severely when you want to terrify one younger than yourself into submission: "Suelpaardelooszonderspoorwegpetroolryting." The meaning does not matter very much, the sound being everything, but it may be as well to know that it is Dutch for "the quick-horseless-open-ordinary-road-running-petroleum carriage or motor car."

WORK OF THE WORLD

All People, Rich and Poor, Should Do Their Share of It.

California Judge Declares It Is the Duty of a Wife to Bear Some of the Financial Responsibilities of the Home.

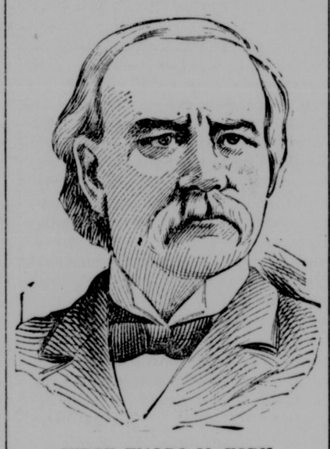
Judge Waldo M. York, of Los Angeles, Cal., is not the most popular man in southern California just now. He has brought down wrath upon his head by declaring from the bench that women should have some of the responsibility of the support of the family, and that the husband's failure to support the wife was not necessarily valid grounds for divorce. This is the judge's ruling:

"A wife might easily earn enough to support both herself and husband. I believe that women should bear some of the responsibility of the support of the family upon their own shoulders. We ought all of us to work and do something to keep the world going. The mere fact that this woman and her daughter have had to help support the family is not in itself sufficient grounds for divorce."

The decision, which is holding first place with the weather and other topics of conversation, was in the divorce suit of Mrs. Flora E. Stephens against Henry G. Stephens, which was decided in favor of the plaintiff. Mrs. Stephens brought action for freedom from her husband on the ground of cruelty and nonsupport, and told a pitiful story.

The wife left the husband, but the case is one which under the law constitutes a desertion by him, as Stephens told his wife she would have to go. They were living at the time in East Los Angeles, and she took her two children, who were living at home, and left the man who had failed to support her.

Before the Stephens family moved to Los Angeles they resided at Pomona, where the husband's neglect of and cruelty toward his family aroused such indignation that the citizens threatened to tar and feather him if he did not leave town. The man has no trade, and, according to the woman's story, no ambition and no inclination to work. Since leaving him Mrs. Stephens has been compelled to take in washing in order to support the family.



JUDGE WALDO M. YORK.
(He Thinks a Wife Should Help Support a Family.)

Although poor, the plucky little woman is ambitious for her children, and is putting one son through a college at Healdsburg. The boy, unlike his father, is energetic and a hard worker, and he is paying a part of his tuition by working before and after school hours. The oldest son, Amos, has a situation in Riverside county, but does little toward the support of the family. The oldest daughter, Mrs. Myrtle Woolacott, is happily married and does much to assist her mother. The youngest is a child of eight.

After these facts had been proved to the court, Mrs. Stephens' attorney, Charles Lantz, submitted the case, and Judge York rendered his decision. Touching upon the matter of nonsupport, the judge said:

"A wife might easily earn enough to support both herself and husband.

"The fact that the husband has not contributed to the support of the family without proof of his ability to do so, or proof of his neglect to do so by reason of his idleness, profligacy or dissipation, is insufficient to justify a divorce. Besides, the law does not contemplate that a poor man, relying solely upon his labor for support, should be the only laborer in the family. In this case the wife and her daughter, by honest and honorable employment, were able to earn a living and had the courage to do so. Their work was no harder than that ordinarily done by laboring people, and for aught that appears the husband may not have been able to find employment, and, if able to find employment, may not have been physically able to labor. All people, rich or poor, should do their part of the work, and not be drones, whose existence is useless.

"But it does appear in this case that the husband, prior to the separation, was extremely cruel to his wife in many ways, and that without cause he inflicted upon her grievous mental suffering and physical injuries, and upon that ground she is entitled to a divorce.

"I do not look upon this mattetr of women helping to support the family as such an extraordinary state of affairs as to warrant anybody applying for legal separation upon that ground."

PORCUPINES IN WISCONSIN.

The Destructive and Obnoxious Creatures Protected by a Queer Law of the State.

Suppose you took your gun and your dog and went into Wisconsin on a hunting and fishing trip. Suppose you saw more porcupines, of the common hedgehog variety, than you did game. Suppose one of them sneaked up behind your camp, and made off wth the string of black bass that was all you had for dinner. Suppose your $15c dog made a dash at the thief, and came back with his nose so full of quills that you had to sit down and pull them out by main force, while he howled loud enough to be heard in the next county, writes John Dickinson Sherman, in Youth's Companion.

Then you would probably pick up a club and start for that porcupine, determined to send him where there are no black bass to steal, and no huntng dogs to maim. And suddenly your guide seizes you and prevents you by main force. In answer to your argument that a porcupine is of no use on earth, he tells you that it is against the state law of Wisconsin to kill one. Wouldn't you think that law was a queer law?

And suppose you saw acres of dead basswood and birch and maple trees that the porcupines had killed. Wouldn't you be inclined to think that the people of Wisconsin were crazy to keep such a law on the statute books and enforce it? And wouldn't you think Wisconsin should be called, instead of the "Badger State," the "Hedgehog State," or the "porcupine paradise?"

This queer Wisconsin law, the like of which exists nowhere else in the United States, is apparently designed to establish the right of the porcupine to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness within the state boundaries. It has been on the statute books ever since there have been any such volumes, and there nas never been an effort made to repeal it. Of course it is often violated, but nine out of ten country justices of the peace will inflict the full penalty under ordinary circumstances. This is severe: the law provides a heavy fine or imprisonment for the killing or snaring of a porcupine.

At first glance, one of the queer things about this law is the fact that no effort has ever been made to have it repealed. One would suppose that the lumbermen would have had it scratched off the books long ago. Lumbering is one of the principal industries of the state, and the lumbermen naturally have considerable influence in the legislature. Now, the lumberman does not love the porcupine; on the contrary, he holds him in undying hatred. The animal ruins thousands of dollars' worth of timber every year, and the agrregate of the damage it has inflicted is almost beyond computation.

Of course, the porcupine does not go about killing trees for fun; but nature has given him an insatiable appetite for the inner bark and tender buds of the basswood, the birch, the maple and other forest trees. He picks out a good-looking tree, begins at the top and ends at the bottom. When he gets through with that particular tree, there is nothing left but the bare trunk and the stripped limbs. Then he picks out another maple or birch, and repeats the performance. Meanwhile, his sisters and his cousins and his aunts, to say nothing of the male relatives, are doing the same thing all round him. So it is easy to see why the lumberman does not love the porcupine.

Why, then, does the law of Wisconsin protect the animal? This is the reason: The porcupine is a life-saver. Nature seems to have designed him as a food supply for lost and unarmed and starving men. Wisconsin forests are vast, and human habitations in certain parts of the state are few and far between. But no man need starve to death while the porcupine flourishes.

For the animal is everywhere, waiting to be killed and eaten. He cannot escape if he would, and he does not try. He curls up into a ball and fancies himself secure, but a blow from a club will kill him easily. In short, the porcupine is the only eatable animal that an unarmed man can catch and kill. Every year many a lost and hungry man in the pathless forests of Wisconsin has dined heartily on roast porcupine and come out alive and unharmed, whereas otherwise he would have chewed his belt and boots, gnawed bark and died.

The porcupine is a princely banquet to a starving man, even when roasted over an open fire without salt, and indeed, he is as delicious as a 'possum. His bones are small, his flesh tender and his flavor good. The bark and buds on which he lives give him a wild taste that is decidedly appetizing.

So the porcupine flourishes in the Wisconsin forests. Wild animals cannot harm him, the farmer's dog has learned by experience to let him alone, and man is forbidden by law to molest him. The animal breeds by the thousands and lives a long life of ease. He does thousands of dollars' worth of damage every year to the forests. But every year the porcupine makes return, giving up his life that some human being may live. It will be many a year before Wisconsin repeals its porcupine law.

Just the Fellow.

"They say that Mulligrubs edits the Women's Corner in the Morning Growler."

"Why, he's a regular woman hater."

"That seems to make it all the more appropriate."

"How?"

"For a woman scorner to edit a woman's corner."—Judge.

EDWARD IS POPULAR

All Classes of English Society Adore Their New King.

Was a Bon Vivant as Prince of Wales, But Now Is Sober and Sedate—His Coronation to Occur Next June.

[Special London Letter.]

WHEN King Edward VII. was Prince Albert Edward of Wales, he was considered the most democratic prince in Europe. Why, it would be hard to say. The people of England, as well as the masses of of other countries, raise up idols—sometimes because they are too stupid to comprehend the motives of their so-called superiors, at other times for the sole purpose of knocking them down.

As prince of Wales, the reigning British sovereign, who, by the grace of Mr. Joseph Chamberlain, is soon to be made "British emperor," was a liberal patron of the turf—an institution far dearer to the average cockney than the established church. He appeared in person at every meet of importance, his horses contested for purses and his representatives were central figures in the betting ring. Among his associates he was noted as a gambler of nerve, and scandal ventured to assert that young and inexperienced men with money in their purses were plucked like geese in the august circles patronized by the prince. His love for beautiful women was proverbial, not only at home, but also in Paris and Homburg. Had he belonged to a somewhat lower stratum of society he would have been called a sport and a rake, but being heir presumptive to the throne, the sycophants who surrounded him dubbed him "perfect gentleman and prince of good fellows."

But the transition from second fiddle to first violin wrought a change in Albert Edward which frightened his old intimates and filled the hearts of the old-fashioned aristocracy with joy. Hardly had he been proclaimed king when his character and disposition changed radically. He was no longer anybody's chum—he was everybody's sovereign. He ceased to be a patron of the turf, stopped gambling, resented familiarity and reestablished customs which his venerable mother had permitted to pass into what Grover Cleveland would have called "innocuous desuetude." Instead of "liberalizing" royalty, he issued edicts recalling to life usages which had been forgotten even by the heads of the various red-tape departments of court officialdom.

Yet, in spite of these reactionary measures, his majesty is more popular than ever before; and this only goes to show that the masses are not only fond of display, but that the "divinity that doth hedge a king" still is a tangible something in the public mind. Many a revolution has been avoided in past ages by royal display. By the same means dissatisfaction has been changed into adoration. When the present German emperor ascended the throne, he was not a popular monarch. He was antagonized in parliament and out of it. The people called him young and inexperienced; the nobility cold and unreliable. He made a few bellicose speeches and arranged a succession of gorgeous pageants. Wherever he appeared he was "it," and very soon the factions which had abused him most became his blindest admirers.

Whether the erratic William gave his British uncle a few private lessons in statecraft, as some waspish writers have had the hardihood to assert, will probably never be known. Certain it is, however, that King Edward has succeeded in winning over to his side the high aristocracy and the middle-class nonconformists, two elements which, no longer than a year or two ago, pronounced him unfit to succeed the good Victoria as ruler of a great Christian nation.

Although the coronation of the king will not take place until next June, it is the paramount topic of conversation in the English metropolis; and everybody seems to delight that the celebration is to be conducted upon a scale of magnificence unparalleled in modern history. The costermongers seem to be quite as joyful over the coming event as the aristocratic ladies who will participate in the services at Westminster abbey. It is to be an all-around "by-the-grace-of-God" affair, in which everybody can take a part—the nobility by exhibiting rare family jewels, the rabble by shouting, and rich Americans by paying exorbitant prices for windows along the line of the royal procession.

The coronation of an English king is a mediaeval ceremony of so much interest that a short description of it may be welcomed by many American readers.

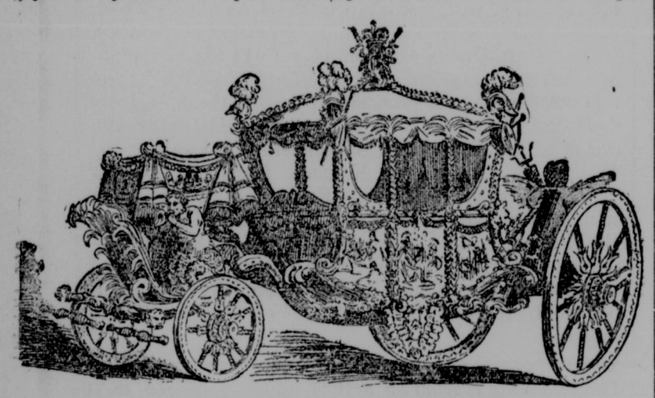
The king and his consort, accompanied by the princes and princesses of blood royal and attended by the highest household and military officers and crack military organizations, proceed from the palace to Westminster abbey, at the entrance of which the sovereign is received by the great officers of state and the noblemen designated as bearers of the royal insignia. He is conducted to the robing chamber where he is clothed in surcoat of crimson velvet with a mantle and hood of the same material, trimmed with ermine and bordered with deep gold lace. After the cap of state has been placed on his head, he advances up the nave into the choir, the choristers immediately beginning the anthem. The sovereign moves to the south side of the throne and passes to a chair of state called the recognition chair, where for a few moments he gives himself up to private devotion. The archbishop of Canterbury, standing near the king, then says to the lord chancellor, the lord great chamberlain, the lord high constable and the earl marshal, who stand, respectively, in the east, west, north and south side of the abbey: "Sirs, I here present unto you King Edward, the undoubted king of this realm; wherefore all you who are come this day to do your homage, are you willing to do the same?" The sovereign stands while east, west, north and south respond in union. This is the recognition, after which the king passes to the altar, where he offers to the archbishop an altar cloth of gold and an ingot of gold weighing one pound, called the sovereign's offerings. After that follows communion, and then the oath is administered to the king. Thereupon the archbishop anoints the royal head and hands in the form of a cross, with consecrated oil. Next he is presented with the royal spurs of gold, the royal sword, the imperial mantle of cloth of gold, the orb, the ruby ring, the scepters of the two kingdoms, the scepter royal and the scepter with the dove. One represents kingly power and justice, the other equity and mercy. Then follows the actual crowning. The crown is consecrated by the archbishop who places it on the royal head. This is the signal for all the peers and peeresses to put on their coronets, the bishops their caps and the kings-of-arms their crowns.

Simultaneously the royal salute is fired and there is a loud blast of trumpets, and all the world knows that the king is crowned. At this juncture the treasurer of the household distributes the medals struck to commemorate the occasion. The administration of the sacrament and the benediction conclude the religious ceremony, which occupies several hours.

The king then exchanges the robe of state for the royal robe of purple velvet, and the orb and scepter royal are placed in his hands. He is conducted out of the abbey and returns to the palace in the same great state as in the triumphal progress to old Westminster.

Whether King Edward will have a coronation banquet is not yet known. William IV. and Victoria omitted this part of the ceremony. Should the new king conclude to have one it will revive many old customs, among them the mummery of the "champion of England." This champion is a knight dressed in mediaeval panoply of war who makes his appearance at the coronation banquet at Westminster hall and challenges to mortal combat any who may deny the title of the monarch just crowned. Should no one answer after the third defiance, the champion will approach the kng, and his majesty will drink to him from a gilt cup, which he then presents to his gallant defender. The office of champion is an ancient one, and is supposed to have been brought to England by William the Conqueror. Since the time of Richard II. it has remained in the Dymoke family, of Scrivelsby manor, Lincolnshire, the present head of which is Sir Francis Dymoke, an unpretentious country gentleman of peaceful habits and very small stature.

WILLIAM WALTER WELLS.



THE ROYAL STATE CARRIAGE OF GREAT BRITAIN.

THE KING'S CHAMPION.

City of Electric Roads.

Montreal has over a hundred miles of electric road.

QUEER FRONTIER EXPERIENCE

Why a Western Pioneer Family Had to Pick Their Wheat Over, Kernel by Kernel.

In narating the frontier experiences of "The First White Baby Born in the Northwest," in the Ladies' Home Journal, W. S. Harwood tells of a queer experience that befell the family in the first year after settling on a farm far removed from the settlements. "The winter had been unusually long and severe, and their store of provisions ran low. It was a long distance to the nearest base of supplies, and communication with the outside world had been cut off. Indians in the neighborhood one night broke into the granary where the wheat was stored and stole a quantity. In doing this a large amount of broken glass became mixed with the wheat which the Indians left, so for many days, amidst much merry story telling and many a joke and laugh, in spite of the serious situation, the family gathered about a large table in their living room and spent the short winter days picking over the wheat, kernel by kernel, in order to free it from the pieces of glass. For this wheat stood between them and starvation, and none of its precious kernels must be lost. Their stock of flour had long since wasted away, as had most of their food supplies, so they boiled and ate the wheat without grinding. Relief reached them just in time to prevent a sad ending to the experience."

BILL BOARDS ON MONT BLANC.

There Is No Escape for Tourists from the Wiles of the Advertiser.

The agitation in France against the disfigurement of country landscapes by flaring advertisements still proceeds, but it appears with doubtful success, owing to vested interests. The country people whose land lies alongside the lines of railway are readily tempted by the offers of the advertising contractors from whom some of them reap quite a respectable income from displaying posters which puff soup, chocolate, drinks, etc. It is said that an agent of one firm is now starting on a journey through 36,000 communes, in each of which he is to arrange for the erection of a painted board. This is to be done in time for the tourist season, says the aris Messenger. The notice boards already arranged for and erected by this agent cost him no less than 14,000 francs a year.

The correspondent of a French paper states that this system of advertising has been carried to its height in Switzerland, where, on the very summit of Mont Blanc, the first thing to meet the Alpine climbers' eye is a flaring advertisement.

ENJOYED THE FIGHT.

"Polly's" Comment on an Engagement Between Wild Cats in Close Quarters.

The two wildcats in a box in a baggage-room at the Union depot had glared at each other for a couple of hours before the trouble began, says the Denver Republican. All the afternoon they had growled, and the supposition is that they had said things to each other that were not complimentary. The larger of the two had spilled the water belonging to the smaller one. He had switched his tail into the other's face, and in various ways had given the youngster to understand that there was apt to be trouble. Toward evening the two sat in opposite corners and glared at each other. The larger animal about eight o'clock thought it was about time to make the interior of the box interesting to one of the occupants. He was successful.

No sooner had the big cat attacked the smaller one than the latter was ready for business. There was a mass of tangled fur inside the box, the sides of which groaned with the struggle. Growls and flying fur came out from between the cracks, and those who were looking on could not tell which was the winner. Several of the baggagemen caught up sticks and through the slits in the box succeeded finally in poking the beasts into submission. As the two wildcats cowered down in opposite corners a South African parrot swinging in a cage near by called out:

"Let 'em fight! It's a peach!"

Doesn't Like the Auto.

A newspaper published in Nice, France, loudly declares against the arrogant and ill-smelling automobile. It says: "These vehicles are bringing about the complete ruin of the coast as well as of all the watering places, by taking possession of the principal roads and driveways and speeding over them. Persons who walk on the roads or who ride in other carriages are virtually taking their lives in their hands. The so-called automobile week which we have just had at Nice has been a veritable scandal. During whole days the public was debarred from the Promenade des Anglais. More than 100,000 persons were affronted in order that a few millionaires might be satisfied."

Say It in a Hurry.

Here is a word worth committing to memory, to be uttered severely when you want to terrify one younger than yourself into submission: "Suelpaardelooszonderspoorwegpetroolryting." The meaning does not matter very much, the sound being everything, but it may be as well to know that it is Dutch for "the quick-horseless-open-ordinary-road-running-petroleum carriage or motor car."

MISS RUTH HANNA.

Among the many charming girls in Washington's official society none is more popular than Miss Ruth Hanna, daughter of Senator Marcus Aurelius Hanna, of Ohio. She has been designated by the officials of the navy department to name the new United States cruiser Cleveland, and her appointment has pleased the people of Washington quite as much as her old Cleveland friends. Miss Hanna states that in naming the new ship she will not make use of the proverbial bottle of champagne, but will, instead, use Lake Erie water. This decision has been enthusiastically applauded by temperance people everywhere.

TIMBER FLUME IN BRITISH COLUMBIA.

The flumes which are used to float logs and hewn timber from the mountains to the sawmills are fed by mountain torrents, and are in some cases between three and four miles long. The lumbermen, after their week's work in camp, save a tedious journey by constructing a rough wooden skiff and using the waterway, traveling at times at the rate of a mile a minute. A gaff is used as a brake. The tenderfoot who makes this trip for the first time can consider himself lucky if he does not arrive at the bottom thoroughly seasick and with hair standing on end.

WORK OF THE WORLD

All People, Rich and Poor, Should Do Their Share of It.

California Judge Declares It Is the Duty of a Wife to Bear Some of the Financial Responsibilities of the Home.

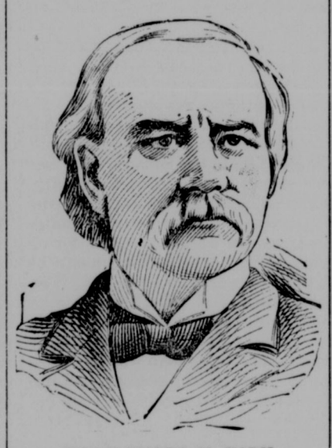
Judge Waldo M. York, of Los Angeles, Cal., is not the most popular man in southern California just now. He has brought down wrath upon his head by declaring from the bench that women should have some of the responsibility of the support of the family, and that the husband's failure to support the wife was not necessarily valid grounds for divorce. This is the judge's ruling:

"A wife might easily earn enough to support both herself and husband. I believe that women should bear some of the responsibility of the support of the family upon their own shoulders. We ought all of us to work and do something to keep the world going. The mere fact that this woman and her daughter have had to help support the family is not in itself sufficient grounds for divorce."

The decision, which is holding first place with the weather and other topics of conversation, was in the divorce suit of Mrs. Flora E. Stephens against Henry G. Stephens, which was decided in favor of the plaintiff. Mrs. Stephens brought action for freedom from her husband on the ground of cruelty and nonsupport, and told a pitiful story.

The wife left the husband, but the case is one which under the law constitutes a desertion by him, as Stephens told his wife she would have to go. They were living at the time in East Los Angeles, and she took her two children, who were living at home, and left the man who had failed to support her.

Before the Stephens family moved to Los Angeles they resided at Pomona, where the husband's neglect of and cruelty toward his family aroused such indignation that the citizens threatened to tar and feather him if he did not leave town. The man has no trade, and, according to the woman's story, no ambition and no inclination to work. Since leaving him Mrs. Stephens has been compelled to take in washing in order to support the family.



JUDGE WALDO M. YORK.
(He Thinks a Wife Should Help Support a Family.)

Although poor, the plucky little woman is ambitious for her children, and is putting one son through a college at Healdsburg. The boy, unlike his father, is energetic and a hard worker, and he is paying a part of his tuition by working before and after school hours. The oldest son, Amos, has a situation in Riverside county, but does little toward the support of the family. The oldest daughter, Mrs. Myrtle Woolacott, is happily married and does much to assist her mother. The youngest is a child of eight.

After these facts had been proved to the court, Mrs. Stephens' attorney, Charles Lantz, submitted the case, and Judge York rendered his decision. Touching upon the matter of nonsupport, the judge said:

"A wife might easily earn enough to support both herself and husband.

"The fact that the husband has not contributed to the support of the family without proof of his ability to do so, or proof of his neglect to do so by reason of his idleness, profligacy or dissipation, is insufficient to justify a divorce. Besides, the law does not contemplate that a poor man, relying solely upon his labor for support, should be the only laborer in the family. In this case the wife and her daughter, by honest and honorable employment, were able to earn a living and had the courage to do so. Their work was no harder than that ordinarily done by laboring people, and for aught that appears the husband may not have been able to find employment, and, if able to find employment, may not have been physically able to labor. All people, rich or poor, should do their part of the work, and not be drones, whose existence is useless.

"But it does appear in this case that the husband, prior to the separation, was extremely cruel to his wife in many ways, and that without cause he inflicted upon her grievous mental suffering and physical injuries, and upon that ground she is entitled to a divorce.

"I do not look upon this mattetr of women helping to support the family as such an extraordinary state of affairs as to warrant anybody applying for legal separation upon that ground."

PORCUPINES IN WISCONSIN.

The Destructive and Obnoxious Creatures Protected by a Queer Law of the State.

Suppose you took your gun and your dog and went into Wisconsin on a hunting and fishing trip. Suppose you saw more porcupines, of the common hedgehog variety, than you did game. Suppose one of them sneaked up behind your camp, and made off wth the string of black bass that was all you had for dinner. Suppose your $150 dog made a dash at the thief, and came back with his nose so full of quills that you had to sit down and pull them out by main force, while he howled loud enough to be heard in the next county, writes John Dickinson Sherman, in Youth's Companion.

Then you would probably pick up a club and start for that porcupine, determined to send him where there are no black bass to steal, and no huntng dogs to maim. And suddenly your guide seizes you and prevents you by main force. In answer to your argument that a porcupine is of no use on earth, he tells you that it is against the state law of Wisconsin to kill one. Wouldn't you think that law was a queer law?

And suppose you saw acres of dead basswood and birch and maple trees that the porcupines had killed. Wouldn't you be inclined to think that the people of Wisconsin were crazy to keep such a law on the statute books and enforce it? And wouldn't you think Wisconsin should be called, instead of the "Badger State," the "Hedgehog State," or the "porcupine paradise?"

This queer Wisconsin law, the like of which exists nowhere else in the United States, is apparently designed to establish the right of the porcupine to life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness within the state boundaries. It has been on the statute books ever since there have been any such volumes, and there has never been an effort made to repeal it. Of course it is often violated, but nine out of ten country justices of the peace will inflict the full penalty under ordinary circumstances. This is severe: the law provides a heavy fine or imprisonment for the killing or snaring of a porcupine.

At first glance, one of the queer things about this law is the fact that no effort has ever been made to have it repealed. One would suppose that the lumbermen would have had it scratched off the books long ago. Lumbering is one of the principal industries of the state, and the lumbermen naturally have considerable influence in the legislature. Now, the lumberman does not love the porcupine; on the contrary, he holds him in undying hatred. The animal ruins thousands of dollars' worth of timber every year, and the agrgegate of the damage it has inflicted is almost beyond computation.

Of course, the porcupine does not go about killing trees for fun; but nature has given him an insatiable appetite for the inner bark and tender buds of the basswood, the birch, the maple and other forest trees. He picks out a good-looking tree, begins at the top and ends at the bottom. When he gets through with that particular tree, there is nothing left but the bare trunk and the stripped limbs. Then he picks out another maple or birch, and repeats the performance. Meanwhile, his sisters and his cousins and his aunts, to say nothing of the male relatives, are doing the same thing all round him. So it is easy to see why the lumberman does not love the porcupine.

Why, then, does the law of Wisconsin protect the animal? This is the reason: The porcupine is a life-saver. Nature seems to have designed him as a food supply for lost and unarmed and starving men. Wisconsin forests are vast, and human habitations in certain parts of the state are few and far between. But no man need starve to death while the porcupine flourishes.

For the animal is everywhere, waiting to be killed and eaten. He cannot escape if he would, and he does not try. He curls up into a ball and fancies himself secure, but a blow from a club will kill him easily. In short, the porcupine is the only eatable animal that an unarmed man can catch and kill. Every year many a lost and hungry man in the pathless forests of Wisconsin has dined heartily on roast porcupine and come out alive and unharmed, whereas otherwise he would have chewed his belt and boots, gnawed bark and died.

The porcupine is a princely banquet to a starving man, even when roasted over an open fire without salt, and indeed, he is as delicious as a 'possum. His bones are small, his flesh tender and his flavor good. The bark and buds on which he lives give him a wild taste that is decidedly appetizing.

So the porcupine flourishes in the Wisconsin forests. Wild animals cannot harm him, the farmer's dog has learned by experience to let him alone, and man is forbidden by law to molest him. The animal breeds by the thousands and lives a long life of ease. He does thousands of dollars' worth of damage every year to the forests. But every year the porcupine makes return, giving up his life that some human being may live. It will be many a year before Wisconsin repeals its porcupine law.

Just the Fellow.

"They say that Mulligrubs edits the Women's Corner in the Morning Growler."

"Why, he's a regular woman hater."

"That seems to make it all the more appropriate."

"How?"

"For a woman scorner to edit a woman's corner."—Judge.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 5, 1901.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET

For Comptroller of the Treasury:
HERMAN S. PLATT,
Of Baltimore City.

For Clerk of the Court of Appeals:
THOMAS PARRAN,
Of Calvert County.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY TICKET.

For State Senator:
ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

For House of Delegates:
PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.
CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

For Sheriff:
WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

For Treasurer:
JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 14.

For County Commissioners:
TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.
JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

For Register of Wills:
EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

For County Surveyor:
FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

The Smallpox Danger.

The health officials all over the country are calling the attention of the people to the danger from the spread of smallpox. It is a cold weather disease. In summer, when there is free circulation of air, a spread of the disease is not to be greatly feared, but when cold weather comes, and the houses are closed, the conditions are favorable for development. Experience has shown that smallpox is persistent, and needs watching all the year.

There is no occasion for alarm about smallpox, diphtheria or any other contagious or infectious disease in Oakland. The death list shows that this is healthy county. But it will not do to attempt to fight a contagious disease after it makes its appearance. The proper course is that now being pursued by the Health Board—that is to have the conditisns such, by means of wholesale vaccination, that smallpox can take no hold in the State next winter. It is the duty of every good citizen to co-operate in every possible way with the Health Board in this matter.

The Country in Autumn.

The season is at hand when nature may be enjoyed at her best in the country. In this latitude the transition from summer to autumn and from autumn to winter is so gradual the seasonsmerge imperceptibly into each other. From now until nearly Christmas good weather may be expected. More rain has fallen this year since May than is usual, but of all seasons, the autumn is the most constant. The days are bright, pleasantly warm in September and October, followed by cool nights, insuring good rest.

Riding, driving and walking in the country are most enjoyable in the autumn. The season for hot, sticky days and thunder storms is past; the air is cool and bracing, and man and beast take delight in living. The changing colors of flowers and leaves, the fine sunsets and beautiful moonlight nights in the country, where the eye can sweep for miles with no rows of dwelling houses or tall skyscrapers to arrest vision; the quiet that attends life in places remote from the noise of the city—these and other conditions, which the dwellers in crowded centers can only feebly appreciate, make living in the country a positive pleasure.

Of late years the preference for the country, or at least a combination of city and rural life, has become marked in American cities. The trend has been toward the mountains and within a few hours' ride of Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on the East and Cincinnati, Columbus and other large centres of population on the West in the community surrounding Oakland can be found more attractive residences than any other section of the country. At our doors the country is diversified. Here is an eminence overlooking the country for miles, there a beautiful rolling plateau leading gently down to the lower levels of the country through which a mountain stream is quietly wending its way to join the mighty deep. The convenience of the telegraph and of the telephone and of the good markets have changed many things in the past twenty years. The advantages of living in the country from the standpoint of health, particularly in ths spring, summer and autumn, are self-evident. For the children the country is the ideal place for development.

A Diplomat From Maryland.

In these days when so many hasty and even reckless assertions are made respecting politics, and leading politicians, it is good to meet a man who speaks with caution. Take a case: Colonel Baughman, of Maryland, was in New York on Wednesday, and asked as to the political situation at home, said in reply:

"The Maryland Democratic State committee will meet in Baltimore on September 3, and Mr. Gorman, I am advised, will be a candidate for election to the Senate."

Mark the reference to Mr. Gorman, and consider the man who made it. Colonel Baughman is one of the leading Democrats of Maryland, and one of Mr. Gorman's closest friends. He knows, if anybody does, what is going on in Democratic circles, and he has been particularly active this year. He is working for Democratic success, and expects it. He was a prominent figure at the recent State convention at Baltimore, and since then has been busy looking after party matters in his section of the State. His presence in New York the other day was for the purpose of meeting Mr. Gorman and reporting on affairs up to date. So that when the New York reporter tackled Colonel Baughman about Maryland politics he tackled a man who had information to burn.

As to Mr. Gorman's candidacy for the Senate, that has been an open secret for a long time. In fact his friends practically announced his candidacy the day after it was definitely known that a Republican would succeed him in the Senate. He was the leading man in his party in Maryland then as he is now, and the issue in Maryland this year is Mr. Gorman's ambition to return to the forum where for years he was a prominent figure. He would not—probably from recognizing the superfluousness of such a proceeding—permit the State convention to instruct for him for the Senate, but every man who is working for Democratic success well understands that if success is achieved Mr. Gorman will be the chief beneficiary.

Still, when Colonel Baughman, intimate as he is with Mr. Gorman and with all the details and purposes of the present campaign, is interrogated as to matters at home he answers somewhat guardedly. He does not tell the reporter, as he might have done, and as so many men would have done, that Mr. Gorman is a candidate for the Senate, but that he is "advised that Mr. Gorman will be a candidate for the Senate." He gives the impression of having received the information in a casual or roundabout way, and as recognizing the necessity of repeating it with care. It is a nice point, made in the colonel's own way, and in this day of cocksureness and overemphasis it cannot be too highly praised.—Washington Star.

Democrats Despondent.

The leaders of the Democratic machine having conferred together on the political situation in this State, and having received the latest advices, instructions and encouragements from the "Big Boss" at Saratoga, are of the opinion that the outlook this fall is anything but promising for their machine. The condition of affairs in Baltimore is such that they realize that it is absolutely hopeless and they scarcely deem it worthwhile to try to carry the city, the prospects being so uninviting. They will doubtless turn their attention to the counties as they did in '97, but there are good people residing in the counties as well as in Baltimore, who do not propose to allow the Democratic ring to regain control of this State or to allow Mr. Gorman to go back to the United States Senate. This will make his fight as difficult as any he has ever had. Taking the situation as a whole, there is nothing pleasing or agreeable about it for the Gormanites. The Democratic ring leaders are anything but happy. The word is being passed along the line for every one to "pay up, pay up." Money is needed, and lots of it, for this is to be a tight fight. If corruption is to win it must have the means by which it can debauch the ballot and corrupt the voter. No one will be placed upon the Democratic ticket unless he can make a satisfactory contribution. The candidates for nomination offering the biggest piles will get the places. Where there are none who want the nominations, of course the ring will force persons to take them. However, when two or three are striving for a nomination the "ring" says "pay up, boys," and the man who has the biggest wad is to get the prize.

But still, even with the vast sums hoped to be raised in this manner, the ring leaders are very despondent and have no hope of carrying the State. Their party is divided within itself, the heelers and ring workers are snarling at each other's throats, and the greater portion of the better element, the citizens who are for good government and against corruption, have declared themselves as utterly opposed to the ring and its tactics. The condition is one that ex-Senator Gorman and all his slick, smooth, oily lieutenants will find impossible to overcome, and to-day the outlook for good government is bright. All good citizens have reason to feel encouraged.

To the Local Board of Health.

For the past three years Maryland has been constantly threatened with serious invasion of smallpox. In that time 17 out of the 23 counties of Maryland have been invaded by smallpox. There have been 41 outbreaks, and in 30 instances the disease was confined to the house in which it was first discovered. The exact number of cases which occurred in these 41 outbreaks is not known, but it is known that the eleven instances in which the disease was permitted to spread beyond the house first infected gave rise to more than three-fourths the total number. In Baltimore city during the same period the disease has in no instance spread beyond the house first infected.

During the three years there have been in the counties over four times as many cases of smallpox as in the city of Baltimore. One county had seventy odd cases of smallpox in one year against Baltimore's 48 cases in three years. It cannot be said that the State as a whole has done very badly. A few of the county outbreaks have been as well handled as those in Baltimore city. If we should compare our records with those of neighboring states we might plume ourselves on the results of our efforts, but the State has not done as well as is easily possible, nor as well as public safety and business interests demand.

The approaching winter promises a wider prevalence of smallpox in the United States than the country has experienced in thirty years. All the signs point that way, and it is therefore important for all the local boards of health to consider the prospect, make sure of their defenses and prepare in advance a definite plan of action. After invasion occurs it is not easy to get land for an isolation house, nor to make reasonable contracts for medical attendance, nursing and supplies. Among the local health officers there may be some who have accepted office believing that during their terms no smallpox would appear. The contract with local officers does not include medical attendance on cases of smallpox, no local board of health can expect its officer to render such service unless he is fairly paid. The local boards of health have a right, however, to expect their medical officers to investigate outbreaks of smallpox, and this will include the visiting of infectious cases whenever the matter of diagnosis is in question. There will be no room in Maryland this winter for a local officer who is unwilling to see a case of smallpox. The local boards should come to a definite understanding with their executive officers on these points. Vaccine physicians should be instructed to visit the schools on the opening day and vaccinate all who need it. The school boards should be advised that there is urgent need of rigid enforcement of the vaccination law so far as it relates to school children.

To take counsel upon this subject at the present time is but ordinary prudence. To postpone consideration until smallpox appears may mean that you will take counsel of foolish, unreasonable alarm.

Yours very truly,
JOHN S. FULTON, Sec'y.

He Wants a Pardon.

Lupton Frantz, formerly of Friendsville, this county, and at one time a policeman in the Meyersdale (Pa.) borough, but who is now serving a sentence of three and one-half years in the Western Penitentiary of Pennsylvania for stabbing Henry Wilt at Scottdale last fall, is seeking a pardon. His friends have commenced the preliminary work. It is said that the woman with whom he was living at the time he did the stabbing is very active in the work.

Estray Notice.

Estrayed, from the farm of the undersigned about May 25, a light red, white spotted, dehorned heifer, with slit in right ear. Reward will be paid for her return.

UPTON CUPPETT,
26 3t* Thaverville, Md.

A Degenerate Race.

A man who can sit at a chess board for three hours without moving a muscle, or on the bank of a creek for half a day waiting for a bite, can't sit still 30 minutes in church without feeling that he has done enough work to kill a hired man.

THE CAMPAIGN IS OPENED.

Republicans Fear More Democratic Tricks Under Gorman's Leadership.

The Maryland Republicans have opened the compaign, and the fight against the Gorman machine has been renewed in earnest. Gorman has returned from New York, and Monday met the chairmen of the Democratic county committees in a secret conference and instructed them in methods of registration work and plans for controlling the vote and barring the colored man under the new election law. The Republicans suspect a Democratic scheme of shutting out white as well as colored Republicans from the registration lists.

Chairman Goldsborough of the State committee has sent a letter to Governor Smith asking that a copy of the new State census list of "registered voters not in precincts" and of "men not registered" be furnished to him. If the Democrats, who absolutely control the Gorman census lists, furnish the above information, the Republicans will look up the men and see that they are registered.

Mr. Goldsborough, in speaking of the matter, said:

"The object of this letter is simply this: I believe the census was taken for the benefit of the whole people of the State and I suppose Governor Smith is interested in having the names of persons not entitled to be registered stricken off the books and the lists purged. Therefore, I have asked him to give us access to these lists and presume he will do so. The people of the State ought to have access to the returns of the State census."

A leading Democrat, discussing Mr. Goldsborough's letter to Governor Smith, said that the Republican chairman has overlooked the fact that the papers are not the property of Governor Smith, but belong to the Legislature of Maryland and must be returned to that body. The Governor is only custodian until the General Assembly shall meet, and that is the body to which Mr. Goldsborough should apply for the information he desires.

Republican State headquarters were opened Monday. United States Senator McComas will personally direct the Republican campaign, and Mr. Gorman will manage the Democratic organization in the political fight of his life.

Chairman Goldsborough has announced the chairmen of the campaign committees, upon whom most of the work will devolve, as follows:

Registration—Jas. E. McClelland.
Illiteracy—Wm. M. Stewart.
Naturalization—Chas. H. Roberts.
Meetings—William M. Byrne.
Special City Committee—George F. Jones.

These are all city committees, appointed to work in the city only.

The two State committee chairmen are:

Illiteracy and Documents—John C. Simmering, of Baltimore city.

Registration—Zebedee Householder of Baltimore county.

Mr. Goldsborough stated that each committee would consist of about five members, it being considered that more effective work can be done with a small force.

Estray Notice.

Strayed, early the present spring, five ewes, four being yearlings and one older. The sheep each had the top of one ear off and also an undercrop. Information leading to their recovery will be rewarded by the undersigned.

I offer for sale my farm of 146 acres near the Bowers place. The improvements consist of 35 acres cleared, good house, barn and two orchards. Well watered. L. W. Clark, Oakland, Md.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Thirty Years of Suffering.

"I suffered for thirty years with diarrhoea and thought I was past being cured," says John S. Halloway, of French Camp, Miss. "I had spent so much time and money and suffered so much that I had given up all hopes of recovery. I was so feeble from the effects of the diarrhoea that I could do no kind of labor, could not even travel, but by accident I was permitted to find a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and after taking several bottles I am entirely cured of that trouble. I am so pleased with the result that I am anxious that it be in reach of all who suffer I have. For sale by all druggists.

E. W. Grove

This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets the remedy that cures a cold in one day

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Rattlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

Wealth

AND HOW TO ATTAIN IT

100,000 SHARES OF STOCK OFFERED AT 50c ON THE DOLLAR

For the purpose of further developing their holdings the Company has decided to place One Hundred Thousand shares of stock—par value one dollar—at Fifty cents a share. There is no oil proposition before the people to-day that offers such rich returns—with absolute safety of investment.

6 per cent. Guaranteed for 8 Years

The first one hundred thousand shares, besides being non-assessable, are guaranteed to pay 6 per cent. interest annually for eight years. Every single share of the one Hundred Thousand sold will bear the indorsement of The Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco, a trust company incorporated under the laws of California, for Twenty Millions of Dollars, guaranteeing that The Central Pacific Oil Company will pay a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum for 8 years.

Read what the Chic bg Wes tern Trade Journal of July 2 has to say editorially:

"Greater fortunes have been made out of oil than any other product Mother Earth has yet given us. Rockefeller could not have acquired his hundreds of millions in a few years through any other source, nor the Standard Oil Company have paid dividends making hundreds and thousands of millionaires out of men who started with but the clothes they wore. California is about to take the lead among its sister states in the production of this great treasure. Such persons as Henry Crocker, Claus Spreckles, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst and other multi-millionaires are putting thousands into the newly-discovered oil fields.

Wise ones who get at the start are sure to make fortunes.

This being the situation, the question naturally arises, how and where an investment in oil development stocks should be made. Common justice to our readers requires that we should advise them as to a reliable company, whose stocks are offered on a basis which insures safety and speedy profits. Such a corporation is the Central Pacific Oil Company—611 to 617 Laughlin building, Los Angeles, California—which represents the biggest oil proposition before the world to-day—including, as it does, the consolidation of the cream of the Kern river, Bakersfield, Ventura, Sunset, McKittrick, Tehachapi, Kramer, Newhall, Los Angeles and Fullerton Fields. Each share of this stock will have attached the guarantee of the Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco—with a subscribed Capital Stock of Twelve Millions of dollars—that the Central Pacific Company will pay 6 per cent. interest for 8 years." — Western Trade Journal.

The following is from an article which appeared in the Los Angeles Herald of June 2:

"A large number of land holders have just succeeded in consolidating some of the best oil lands in Southern California, and have incorporated the Central Pacific Oil Company—Capitalized for Five Millions of Dollars. Two millions have been expended in securing proven oil lands. Three million shares have been set aside as treasury stock, which will be used for developing the properties of the monster company. The gilt edge part of the great enterprise is in the fact that all the purchasers of the first One Hundred Thousand Shares will have the right to surrender the same to the company at the expiration of one year and receive in cash the full amount paid for stock, with interest of 6 per cent.—less any dividends that may have been paid on said stock."—Los Angeles Herald.

If you want some of the First One Hundred Thousand Shares of Stock, send your orders to the Secretary of the Company, A. Samuel Parks, or through Wells, Fargo and Co. Express, or to the Broadway Bank and Trust Co., our Los Angeles depository---or direct to

CENTRAL PACIFIC OIL CO.

Rooms 611, 615, 617 Laughlin Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

How To Gain Flesh

Persons have been known to gain a pound a day by taking an ounce of SCOTT'S EMULSION. It is strange, but it often happens.

Somehow the ounce produces the pound; it seems to start the digestive machinery going properly, so that the patient is able to digest and absorb his ordinary food, which he could not do before, and that is the way the gain is made.

A certain amount of flesh is necessary for health; if you have not got it you can get it by taking

Scott's Emulsion

You will find it just as useful in summer as in winter, and if you are thriving upon it don't stop because the weather is warm.

50c. and $1.00, all druggists.
SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, New York.

PERCY H. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

General practice in all the Courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Money loaned on Mortgage.
Special attention given to sale of real estate, investigation of titles, conveyancing and preparation of legal papers.
Agent for the Phoenix Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn.
Offices in McComas Building, opposite Garrett County Bank.

Treasury Department.

OFFICE OF
THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
WASHINGTON, D. C., August 20, 1901.

Whereas, by satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned, it has been made to appear that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, has complied with all the provisions of the Statutes of the United States, required to be complied with before an association shall be authorized to commence the business of banking.

Now therefore I, Charles G. Dawes, Comptroller of the Currency, do hereby certify that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, is authorized to commence the business of Banking as provided in Section Fifty-one hundred and sixty-nine of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEAL

In testimony whereof witness my hand and Seal of office this twentieth day of August, 1901.

(Signed) CHARLES G. DAWES,
oct 31 Comptroller of the Currency.

No. 5943.

FOR SALE.—$125 cash, horse, phaeton and harness complete; attractive outfit; gentle family horse. Apply to Dr. J. S. Stone, Mt. Lake Park. 1*

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

Bright Lights Friday night.

Mr. Fred Allen and Mr. Granan, of Grafton, spent Sunday here.

Rev. and Mrs. George I. Uhler returned on Saturday from a visit to relatives in Pennsylvania.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Gerkin, of Lonaconing, were visiting relatives in town a day or two this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. F. White and children, of Hutton, were the guests of friends in Oakland Thursday last.

Miss Bessie Littman has opened a school for primary scholars in the Little building on Third street.

Will Browning and Thos. Martin, Jr., went to Clarksburg, W. Va., yesterday to attend the fair.

Messrs. R. I. Anderson and J. B. Vansant spent yesterday at Kingwood on business.

One-half bushel peaches and a large watermelon for 70 cents at C. B. Cropp's 26 2t

Hardware Merchant Chas. S. Davis will leave to-night for a business trip to Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Dr. Green, the dentist, will visit Friendsville on September 17th and remain until the 30th. Teeth extracted without pain. 24 4

Miss Sudia Browning, of Blaine, who visited Miss Mae Hamill for some days last week, returned home on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Felty and family, of Connellsville, Pa., who spent the summer in Oakland, returned to the above place Saturday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Anson Clement and daughter, of Hepburn, O., who spent some weeks at the Park, will return home to-day.

Mr. Christian Kimmell left Tuesday for Westernport to be at the bedside of his brother, Joseph Kimmell, who is dangerously ill.

Preaching services will be held on Sunday morning and evening in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church by Rev. George I. Uhler, the pastor.

A syndicate of citizens of Morgantown, W. Va., has purchased the plant of the Morgantown Electric Light and Power Company for $14,000.

A company of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, will be instituted at Gormania in a few days by Col. Maner Jenkins, of Piedmont. A company is also being organized at Davis.

John O. Michaels went over to Kingwood yesterday to appear before the board of pension examiners, whence he was ordered by the Pension Bureau.

Don't forget when you come to court next week that the latchstring at this office is always out. We will be glad to see any or all of our friends and patrons. The office will be open from 7 a. m. until 10 p. m.

A forty room addition has been planned for the Loch Lynn Hotel next year and an addition of twenty-four rooms will be added to Hotel Chautauqua. The Mountain Lake Hotel will also be enlarged.

FOR SALE:—The Lutheran parsonage, located on the corner of Fifth and Green streets, in Oakland, near the court house. Contains 8 rooms, hallway, cellar and porches; excellent well of water. Will be sold cheap. Apply to or address Rev. George I. Uhler, Oakland, Md.

Prof. A. W. DeWitt, of Frostburg, who has been employed as principal of the Oakland Public School, is in Oakland this week looking for a suitable dwelling for his family, who will move here as soon as the house is secured.

Mr. Henry Beckman, Garrett county's foremost stock breeder, went out to Clarksburg, W. Va., yesterday morning to attend the fair now being held there and also to inspect some Hereford stock which he may buy for breeding purposes.

Major Burns and family have returned from Mountain Lake Park where they have spent the summer. Every one is glad to see them back again. The Major has entirely recovered from the effects of the accident in which he was shot last summer.—Morgantown Dominion.

Judge Sloan and Attorneys Thayer, Heindel and Sincell drove up to Allegany Heights Tuesday, from which eminence they "viewed the landscape o'er." His Honor enjoyed the trip immensely, but not more so than the supper of buckwheat cakes, country cured ham and all the fixin's he devoured before the journey homeward was undertaken.

The oats crop, harvested during the early days of August and shocked in the fields, could not be moved to the barns owing to the wet weather prevailing after the harvest. As a result much of the crop has been ruined. In some instances the grain was moved from the fields to the barns before it was thoroughly dry and there become heated. Fearing fire from spontaneous combustion some of the farmers were compelled to haul the grain out into fields again, while others cut holes through the sides of their buildings in order to afford ventilation and thus lessen the danger of fire.

Mrs. Louis Bush, of Eglon, is in Oakland visiting relatives.

Editor Litzinger is spending this week in Washington, D. C.

Miss Tina Connell spent Saturday last with friends in Oakland.

Mrs. E. M. Spedden and children, of Crellin, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Shirer on Alder street.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

Mr. Thos. C. Bradshaw, of Columbus, Ohio, spent Saturday and Sunday in Oakland.

Mr. A. C. Walls, of Keyser, spent Sunday in Oakland the guest of relatives.

J. Russell Browning, of Blaine, was a visitor to Mr. M. R. Hamill's family in Oakland last week.

Farris Bosley returned to Wilmington, Del., on Saturday night where he will again enter school.

Mrs. R. A. Orcutt was called to Grafton Monday by the serious illness of a relative.

Miss Ethelyn Houghton, of Washington, is the guest of Miss Orlie Dunham at her home on Centre street.

There will not be many old soldiers of this community who will attend the reunion at Cleveland, Ohio, this month.

Mr. S. F. Cuppett, of Elder, was in Oakland one day last week on business. While here Mr. Cuppett made this office a brief visit.

The new water company organized at Mountain Lake Park is receiving liberal encouragement by the residents of that place.

"Bonnie," the little black mare belonging to Mr. Wm. Hocking at the Park, died one day recently. The animal was highly prized by Mr. Hocking and his family.

Mrs. Rosenheim and her daughter, Mrs. Marcus, of Parkersburg, who have been in Oakland the greater part of this summer, will return to their home this evening.

The Oakland District Conference, in session at Mountain Lake Park, is largely attended by ministers as well as laymen. The sessions of the conference are being held in the new M. E. church.

Mrs. L. Frank, of Toledo, O., who spent the summer at the Oakland Hotel, went to Parkersburg on Monday, where she will remain a few weeks before returning to her home at Toledo.

Mr. W. T. Ravenscraft, of Fairmont, was in Oakland a day or two this week on business. Mr. Ravenscraft, owing to the ill health of his wife, will leave Fairmont shortly and locate at some point in Colorado.

The Board of Supervisors of Elections will meet at their office in Oakland Saturday for the purpose of appointing additional election officials. The list of appointments will appear in these columns next week.

Court convenes in Oakland next Monday. Judge Sloan will preside, his health having improved to such an extent as to allow him to do so, which is highly gratifying to his numerous friends in this county and the Judicial Circuit.

Chamberlain's Pain Balm applied to a cut, bruise, burn, scald or like instantly allay the pain and will heal the parts in less time than any other treatment. Unless the injury is very severe it will not leave a scar. Pain Balm also cures rheumatism, sprains, swellings and lameness. For sale by all druggists.

Jerry Stanton has closed out his confectionery store and news stand to a Mr. Baumgardner, of Baltimore, who will take charge on Monday next. Mr. Baumgardner is known to many people here, having married Miss Lizzie Little, formerly of Oakland, a few years ago.

At Hagerstown on Monday Judge Stake stopped William Witmer and family from giving an exhibition of rattlesnakes. Witmer lives in the mountains near Cavetown. He has a collection of twenty rattlesnakes and claims to be a snake "charmer" and is proof against snakebites.

A corporation for the purpose of carrying on a wholesale grocery business at Piedmont has been formed. Mr. Scott T. Jones, of Oakland, and Mr. W. T. White, of Terra Alta, are interested in the venture. Mr. N. J. Crooks has been elected general manager by the stockholders.

The good politician never stops working until the polls are closed and the wise advertiser takes reckoning of his goods long after they have been sold and paid for. The day upon which a pair of his shoes is discarded is as important in his eyes as the day upon which they leave his store, for upon that day his business reputation is put to the tensest strain.

Manager Rudisill returned to the Park Tuesday afternoon from Montgomery county where he attended a Quaker convention for a day or two endeavoring to have the next meeting of that body assemble at the Park. The project was defeated, however, by a close vote, the majority of the delegates voting in favor of Asbury Park.

Elias Brown, of Accident, has been granted a pension of $6 per month.

Mr. William Miller, of Accident, was in Oakland and Mountain Lake Park Tuesday on business.

Miss Mollie Wheeler and niece, of Rowlesburg, were here a few days last week visiting Mrs. Loar and family.

Miss Lizzie Shrader, of Independence, W. Va., is visiting in Oakland as the guest of Miss Effie Orcutt.

M. E. Frantz, Esq., of Selbysport, has gone to Ada, Ohio, and entered school for the fall and winter term.

S. H. Jolliffe's Bright Lights will be at the opera house in Oakland Friday night.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds. Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

Candidate Chas. A. Ashby, of Crellin, was in the city yesterday on business.

Louis Littman, Esq., of Swanton, spent Sunday in Oakland with his family.

Mrs. Alvin F. Getty, of Cumberland, is in Oakland visiting Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Kepner, her parents. Mr. Getty spent Sunday here also.

Mr. J. W. Skiles and daughter, of Accident, were Oakland visitors last Saturday. We acknowledge a visit, brief, though pleasant, from them.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Rush, two children and niece, of near Accident were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Dunham in Oakland a few days last week.

When you want a pleasant physic try the new remedy, Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. Price, 25 cents. Samples free at drug stores.

The masons and stonecutters on the new Catholic church have all resumed work at the old rate of wages. A full force is now employed and the work is progressing rapidly.

Mrs. John Fox and daughters, who visited the family of Mr. George Fulmer, returned to their home in Pittsburg Saturday, accompanied by Miss Florence Fulmer.

Mr. John T. Hoffman, "the human bird," who played a trombone in the Morgantown orchestra at the Oakland Hotel part of the summer, was a visitor to Oakland Sunday.

If you want to buy books and stationery of the latest issues visit the book room at Mountain Lake Park. The stock will be closed out on Saturday and Monday next at greatly reduced prices. Be sure to go and look over the bargains at Room 2, old Auditorium, Mountain Lake Park.

Tickets for Buffalo from Oakland can now be bought for thirteen dollars and a quarter, good for ten days. This is the same price that had to be paid until within the past few days for a seven day ticket. Probably the rates will be somewhat lower before the show is over.

The summer people are leaving the mountains by the train-load. On one train last Thursday about one hundred people left the Park. Since that time they have been leaving steadily but in lesser numbers. There have been few departures from Orkland as yet. Many will remain here until in October.

Yesterday Mr. George E. Bishoff and Judge Daniel Wilson received by express at Oakland two thoroughbred short-horn Durham bull calves. The animals were shipped to this point by a brother of Mr. Bishoff who resides in Missouri. The calves were taken to the farms of the respective owners last night. The animals were admired by many who saw them.

Nearly every day hundreds of baskets of peaches are unloaded in Oakland from express trains and sold to the citizens of Oakland and adjoining towns. The fruit is of a delicious flavor, juicy and not overly ripe. One merchant in Oakland has handled thus far during this season upward of five thousand baskets and crates.

James Andrews, Esq., has sold his farm south of town to Messrs. Jonas and Daniel E. Orendorf, of near Grantsville. The new owners of the farm will take possession about Nov. 1st, at which time Mr. Andrews will leave here and locate at Lonaconing where he will engage in the meat and grocery business. While the people of the community regret the departure of Mr. Andrews and his family they none the less bid the Messrs. Orendorf a hearty welcome. Both are progressive farmers and good citizens.

The science of advertising is in its infancy. It is growing in importance and efficiency every day. It used to be a speculative venture. Now it is a science. Speaking of Bloomingdale Bros., I understand that during the first week of a certain "sale" they had recently, they spent $15,000 for advertising, and that the estimated profits on the week's business were $25,000. Bloomingdal's wasn't always a big store. The brothers are both young men. The business has been built within twenty years; built by judicious, persistent, truthful advertising, just as any other business be built. Advertising is merely telling people in a telling way what you can do them. If you tell them often enough and in the right way, there is no possibility of failure.

Farm House Burned.

Considerable excitement was caused in Oakland on Friday night when an alarm of fire was sounded by the whistle at the electric light plant and the reflection in the northeastern sky of an apparently big fire was seen by the citizens of town. At first glance the fire seemed to be at the summer home of Mr. T. A. Lambert, on the Deer Park road, but it was found to be the old farmhouse on the T. W. Casteel farm about a mile from town, which was occupied jointly by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Casteel and David Delawder and family. The building was erected prior to the Civil War and was among the first substantially built farmhouses of this entire section. When it was a comparatively new house the late Nathan Casteel moved into it where he spent the remainder of his life.

The cause of the fire is not definitely known, but it is thought that the blaze originated somewhere in the vicinity of the kitchen chimney and from that point it spread to every part of the house with great rapidity.

Nearly all the furniture was saved except a few pieces in the upper story. There was no insurance and the loss will amount to something over a thousand dollars.

A big crowd of men and boys from town went out to the scene of the fire during its progress and assisted in carrying the furniture saved under shelter.

Wanted.

One hundred men for general woods work and grading railroad.
PRESTON LUMBER & COAL CO.,
22 tf Oakland, Md.

Another Company.

It is reported to-day that another water, light and power company was organized yesterday for the purpose of furnishing water, electric or gas light and to supply power for an electric railway operating between Oakland, Deer Park and Mountain Lake Park.

The prime movers in the new company are reported as being L. D. Yoder, Mr. McKee and a few others. Mr. Yoder now owns the plant supplying water and light at the Park. The privilege granted Mr. Yoder some years ago by the Community of the Park to instal water works is still in force, but it is alleged that he has violated his contract and that since last Friday no water of any consequence has been at the disposal of the consumers. This is caused by a breakdown at the pumping station. The service, however, all summer has been entirely unsatisfactory and much complaint has been made. In consequence of the unsatisfactory service water takers have been dictating to the company their own terms of settlement for water consumed this season. Some have settled at 50 cents on the dollar, while others have paid the full amount demanded.

A meeting of the community will be held on Tuesday when it will be decided which of the recently organized companies will be granted the exclusive franchise of furnishing water in the future. A stiff fight will be put up by both companies for the privilege and the matter in all probability will end in the courts.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a Great Favorite.

The soothing and healing properties of this remedy, its pleasant taste and prompt and permanent cures make it a great favorite with people everywhere. It is especially prized by mothers of small children for colds, croup and whooping cough, as it always affords quick relief, and as it contains no opium or other harmful drug, it may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by all druggists.

Released From Custody.

Yesterday morning George Shartzer returned from Uniontown, Pa., accompanied by his son George W. who was tried in court there this week on the charge of carrying concealed weapons and for boisterous conduct on a Baltimore and Ohio excursion train.

On the charge of carrying concealed weapons he was found guilty but sentence was suspended upon payment of costs and he was released. The charge of boisterous conduct on the train was not pushed.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address, nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 1 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and instead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD
CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA, COLORADO AND UTAH.

Special low Summer Excursion Rates to all points. Personally conducted Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Personally conducted tour to San Francisco, Cal., account General Convention Episcopal Cuhrch. Tickets on sale Sept. 22nd to 27th. Good returning until Nov. 5th, with stop-over privileges.

Quickest and best line to

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Only line with Double Daily Through Service. Dining Cars and Free Reclining Chair Cars. Fastest train service to the famous

BEAUMONT, TEXAS, OIL FIELDS.

Through sleeping car from Chicago without change and through sleeping car reservations from Cincinnati via Memphis, Tenn., to

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Special Homeseekers' Excursions to all points South, West and North West.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER,
Traveling Passenger Agent,
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Special Examinations.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 12, 1901.

There will be a special examination for teachers held in Oakland on

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30th,

beginning at 8 o'clock a. m. The examination for free scholarship to State Normal and other institutions will take place on same day.

By order of the Board
ED A. BROWNING,
232 Examiners.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., August 14, 1901.

Josias Bittinger, appointed Republican Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 29, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead Geo. W. Engle is hereby appointed to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.
C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. McROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH McROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

The laws of health require that the bowels move once each day and one of the penalties for violating this law is piles. Keep your bowels regular by taking a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets when necessary and you will never have that severe punishment inflicted upon you. Price, 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

Money to Loan.

$4,000 to loan on first mortgage in n sums to suit upon town property or nearby farms.

EDWARD H. SINCELL.

Fall term CENTRAL COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Cumberland, Md., Winchester, Va., begins Sept. 2nd. Write for catalog and free lesson in Gregg Shorthand. Scholarship $45.00

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

Bright Lights Friday night.

Mr. Fred Allen and Mr. Granan, of Grafton, spent Sunday here.

Rev. and Mrs. George I. Uhler returned on Saturday from a visit to relatives in Pennsylvania.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. Gerkin, of Lonaconing, were visiting relatives in town a day or two this week.

Mr. and Mrs. Chas. F. White and children, of Hutton, were the guests of friends in Oakland Thursday last.

Miss Bessie Littman has opened a school for primary scholars in the Little building on Third street.

Will Browning and Thos. Martin, Jr., went to Clarksburg, W. Va., yesterday to attend the fair.

Messrs. R. I. Anderson and J. B. Vansant spent yesterday at Kingwood on business.

One-half bushel peaches and a large watermelon for 70 cents at C. B. Cropp's 26 2t

Hardware Merchant Chas. S. Davis will leave to-night for a business trip to Baltimore and Philadelphia.

Dr. Green, the dentist, will visit Friendsville on September 17th and remain until the 30th. Teeth extracted without pain. 24 4

Miss Sudia Browning, of Blaine, who visited Miss Mae Hamill for some days last week, returned home on Friday.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Felty and family, of Connellsville, Pa., who spent the summer in Oakland, returned to the above place Saturday last.

Mr. and Mrs. Anson Clement and daughter, of Hepburn, O., who spent some weeks at the Park, will return home to-day.

Mr. Christian Kimmell left Tuesday for Westernport to be at the bedside of his brother, Joseph Kimmell, who is dangerously ill.

Preaching services will be held on Sunday morning and evening in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church by Rev. George I. Uhler, the pastor.

A syndicate of citizens of Morgantown, W. Va., has purchased the plant of the Morgantown Electric Light and Power Company for $14,000.

A company of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Pythias, will be instituted at Gormania in a few days by Col. Maner Jenkins, of Piedmont. A company is also being organized at Davis.

John O. Michaels went over to Kingwood yesterday to appear before the board of pension examiners, whence he was ordered by the Pension Bureau.

Don't forget when you come to court next week that the latchstring at this office is always out. We will be glad to see any or all of our friends and patrons. The office will be open from 7 a. m. until 10 p. m.

A forty room addition has been planned for the Loch Lynn Hotel next year and an addition of twenty-four rooms will be added to Hotel Chautauqua. The Mountain Lake Hotel will also be enlarged.

FOR SALE:—The Lutheran parsonage, located on the corner of Fifth and Green streets, in Oakland, near the court house. Contains 8 rooms, hallway, cellar and porches; excellent well of water. Will be sold cheap. Apply to or address Rev. George I. Uhler, Oakland, Md.

Prof. A. W. DeWitt, of Frostburg, who has been employed as principal of the Oakland Public School, is in Oakland this week looking for a suitable dwelling for his family, who will move here as soon as the house is secured.

Mr. Henry Beckman, Garrett county's foremost stock breeder, went out to Clarksburg, W. Va., yesterday morning to attend the fair now being held there and also to inspect some Hereford stock which he may buy for breeding purposes.

Major Burns and family have returned from Mountain Lake Park where they have spent the summer. Every one is glad to see them back again. The Major has entirely recovered from the effects of the accident in which he was shot last summer.—Morgantown Dominion.

Judge Sloan and Attorneys Thayer, Heindel and Sincell drove up to Allegany Heights Tuesday, from which eminence they "viewed the landscape o'er." His Honor enjoyed the trip immensely, but not more so than the supper of buckwheat cakes, country cured ham and all the fixin's he devoured before the journey homeward was undertaken.

The oats crop, harvested during the early days of August and shocked in the fields, could not be moved to the barns owing to the wet weather prevailing after the harvest. As a result much of the crop has been ruined. In some instances the grain was moved from the fields to the barns before it was thoroughly dry and there become heated. Fearing fire from spontaneous combustion some of the farmers were compelled to haul the grain out into fields again, while others cut holes through the sides of their buildings in order to afford ventilation and thus lessen the danger of fire.

Mrs. Louis Bush, of Eglon, is in Oakland visiting relatives.

Editor Litzinger is spending this week in Washington, D. C.

Miss Tina Connell spent Saturday last with friends in Oakland.

Mrs. E. M. Spedden and children, of Crellin, are the guests of Mr. and Mrs. S. E. Shirer on Alder street.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

Mr. Thos. C. Bradshaw, of Columbus, Ohio, spent Saturday and Sunday in Oakland.

Mr. A. C. Walls, of Keyser, spent Sunday in Oakland the guest of relatives.

J. Russell Browning, of Blaine, was a visitor to Mr. M. R. Hamill's family in Oakland last week.

Farris Bosley returned to Wilmington, Del., on Saturday night where he will again enter school.

Mrs. R. A. Orcutt was called to Grafton Monday by the serious illness of a relative.

Miss Ethelyn Houghton, of Washington, is the guest of Miss Orlie Dunham at her home on Centre street.

There will not be many old soldiers of this community who will attend the reunion at Cleveland, Ohio, this month.

Mr. S. F. Cuppett, of Elder, was in Oakland one day last week on business. While here Mr. Cuppett made this office a brief visit.

The new water company organized at Mountain Lake Park is receiving liberal encouragement by the residents of that place.

"Bonnie," the little black mare belonging to Mr. Wm. Hocking at the Park, died one day recently. The animal was highly prized by Mr. Hocking and his family.

Mrs. Rosenheim and her daughter, Mrs. Marcus, of Parkersburg, who have been in Oakland the greater part of this summer, will return to their home this evening.

The Oakland District Conference, in session at Mountain Lake Park, is largely attended by ministers as well as laymen. The sessions of the conference are being held in the new M. E. church.

Mrs. L. Frank, of Toledo, O., who spent the summer at the Oakland Hotel, went to Parkersburg on Monday, where she will remain a few weeks before returning to her home at Toledo.

Mr. W. T. Ravenscraft, of Fairmont, was in Oakland a day or two this week on business. Mr. Ravenscraft, owing to the ill health of his wife, will leave Fairmont shortly and locate at some point in Colorado.

The Board of Supervisors of Elections will meet at their office in Oakland Saturday for the purpose of appointing additional election officials. The list of appointments will appear in these columns next week.

Court convenes in Oakland next Monday. Judge Sloan will preside, his health having improved to such an extent as to allow him to do so, which is highly gratifying to his numerous friends in this county and the Judicial Circuit.

Chamberlain's Pain Balm applied to a cut, bruise, burn, scald or like instantly allay the pain and will heal the parts in less time than any other treatment. Unless the injury is very severe it will not leave a scar. Pain Balm also cures rheumatism, sprains, swellings and lameness. For sale by all druggists.

Jerry Stanton has closed out his confectionery store and news stand to a Mr. Baumgardner, of Baltimore, who will take charge on Monday next. Mr. Baumgardner is known to many people here, having married Miss Lizzie Little, formerly of Oakland, a few years ago.

At Hagerstown on Monday Judge Stake stopped William Witmer and family from giving an exhibition of rattlesnakes. Witmer lives in the mountains near Cavetown. He has a collection of twenty rattlesnakes and claims to be a snake "charmer" and is proof against snakebites.

A corporation for the purpose of carrying on a wholesale grocery business at Piedmont has been formed. Mr. Scott T. Jones, of Oakland, and Mr. W. T. White, of Terra Alta, are interested in the venture. Mr. N. J. Crooks has been elected general manager by the stockholders.

The good politician never stops working until the polls are closed and the wise advertiser takes reckoning of his goods long after they have been sold and paid for. The day upon which a pair of his shoes is discarded is as important in his eyes as the day upon which they leave his store, for upon that day his business reputation is put to the tensest strain.

Manager Rudisill returned to the Park Tuesday afternoon from Montgomery county where he attended a Quaker convention for a day or two endeavoring to have the next meeting of that body assemble at the Park. The project was defeated, however, by a close vote, the majority of the delegates voting in favor of Asbury Park.

Elias Brown, of Accident, has been granted a pension of $6 per month.

Mr. William Miller, of Accident, was in Oakland and Mountain Lake Park Tuesday on business.

Miss Mollie Wheeler and niece, of Rowlesburg, were here a few days last week visiting Mrs. Loar and family.

Miss Lizzie Shrader, of Independence, W. Va., is visiting in Oakland as the guest of Miss Effie Orcutt.

M. E. Frantz, Esq., of Selbysport, has gone to Ada, Ohio, and entered school for the fall and winter term.

S. H. Jolliffe's Bright Lights will be at the opera house in Oakland Friday night.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds. Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

Candidate Chas. A. Ashby, of Crellin, was in the city yesterday on business.

Louis Littman, Esq., of Swanton, spent Sunday in Oakland with his family.

Mrs. Alvin F. Getty, of Cumberland, is in Oakland visiting Mr. and Mrs. E. D. Kepner, her parents. Mr. Getty spent Sunday here also.

Mr. J. W. Skiles and daughter, of Accident, were Oakland visitors last Saturday. We acknowledge a visit, brief, though pleasant, from them.

Mr. and Mrs. Milton Rush, two children and niece, of near Accident were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. C. Dunham in Oakland a few days last week.

When you want a pleasant physic try the new remedy, Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. Price, 25 cents. Samples free at drug stores.

The masons and stonecutters on the new Catholic church have all resumed work at the old rate of wages. A full force is now employed and the work is progressing rapidly.

Mrs. John Fox and daughters, who visited the family of Mr. George Fulmer, returned to their home in Pittsburg Saturday, accompanied by Miss Florence Fulmer.

Mr. John T. Hoffman, "the human bird," who played a trombone in the Morgantown orchestra at the Oakland Hotel part of the summer, was a visitor to Oakland Sunday.

If you want to buy books and stationery of the latest issues visit the book room at Mountain Lake Park. The stock will be closed out on Saturday and Monday next at greatly reduced prices. Be sure to go and look over the bargains at Room 2, old Auditorium, Mountain Lake Park.

Tickets for Buffalo from Oakland can now be bought for thirteen dollars and a quarter, good for ten days. This is the same price that had to be paid until within the past few days for a seven day ticket. Probably the rates will be somewhat lower before the show is over.

The summer people are leaving the mountains by the train-load. On one train last Thursday about one hundred people left the Park. Since that time they have been leaving steadily but in lesser numbers. There have been few departures from Orkland as yet. Many will remain here until in October.

Yesterday Mr. George E. Bishoff and Judge Daniel Wilson received by express at Oakland two thoroughbred short-horn Durham bull calves. The animals were shipped to this point by a brother of Mr. Bishoff who resides in Missouri. The calves were taken to the farms of the respective owners last night. The animals were admired by many who saw them.

Nearly every day hundreds of baskets of peaches are unloaded in Oakland from express trains and sold to the citizens of Oakland and adjoining towns. The fruit is of a delicious flavor, juicy and not overly ripe. One merchant in Oakland has handled thus far during this season upward of five thousand baskets and crates.

James Andrews, Esq., has sold his farm south of town to Messrs. Jonas and Daniel E. Orendorf, of near Grantsville. The new owners of the farm will take possession about Nov. 1st, at which time Mr. Andrews will leave here and locate at Lonaconing where he will engage in the meat and grocery business. While the people of the community regret the departure of Mr. Andrews and his family they none the less bid the Messrs. Orendorf a hearty welcome. Both are progressive farmers and good citizens.

The science of advertising is in its infancy. It is growing in importance and efficiency every day. It used to be a speculative venture. Now it is a science. Speaking of Bloomingdale Bros., I understand that during the first week of a certain "sale" they had recently, they spent $15,000 for advertising, and that the estimated profits on the week's business were $25,000. Bloomingdal's wasn't always a big store. The brothers are both young men. The business has been built within twenty years; built by judicious, persistent, truthful advertising, just as any other business be built. Advertising is merely telling people in a telling way what you can do them. If you tell them often enough and in the right way, there is no possibility of failure.

Farm House Burned.

Considerable excitement was caused in Oakland on Friday night when an alarm of fire was sounded by the whistle at the electric light plant and the reflection in the northeastern sky of an apparently big fire was seen by the citizens of town. At first glance the fire seemed to be at the summer home of Mr. T. A. Lambert, on the Deer Park road, but it was found to be the old farmhouse on the T. W. Casteel farm about a mile from town, which was occupied jointly by Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Casteel and David Delawder and family. The building was erected prior to the Civil War and was among the first substantially built farmhouses of this entire section. When it was a comparatively new house the late Nathan Casteel moved into it where he spent the remainder of his life.

The cause of the fire is not definitely known, but it is thought that the blaze originated somewhere in the vicinity of the kitchen chimney and from that point it spread to every part of the house with great rapidity.

Nearly all the furniture was saved except a few pieces in the upper story. There was no insurance and the loss will amount to something over a thousand dollars.

A big crowd of men and boys from town went out to the scene of the fire during its progress and assisted in carrying the furniture saved under shelter.

Wanted.

One hundred men for general woods work and grading railroad.
PRESTON LUMBER & COAL CO.,
22 tf Oakland, Md.

Another Company.

It is reported to-day that another water, light and power company was organized yesterday for the purpose of furnishing water, electric or gas light and to supply power for an electric railway operating between Oakland, Deer Park and Mountain Lake Park.

The prime movers in the new company are reported as being L. D. Yoder, Mr. McKee and a few others. Mr. Yoder now owns the plant supplying water and light at the Park. The privilege granted Mr. Yoder some years ago by the Community of the Park to instal water works is still in force, but it is alleged that he has violated his contract and that since last Friday no water of any consequence has been at the disposal of the consumers. This is caused by a breakdown at the pumping station. The service, however, all summer has been entirely unsatisfactory and much complaint has been made. In consequence of the unsatisfactory service water takers have been dictating to the company their own terms of settlement for water consumed this season. Some have settled at 50 cents on the dollar, while others have paid the full amount demanded.

A meeting of the community will be held on Tuesday when it will be decided which of the recently organized companies will be granted the exclusive franchise of furnishing water in the future. A stiff fight will be put up by both companies for the privilege and the matter in all probability will end in the courts.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a Great Favorite.

The soothing and healing properties of this remedy, its pleasant taste and prompt and permanent cures make it a great favorite with people everywhere. It is especially prized by mothers of small children for colds, croup and whooping cough, as it always affords quick relief, and as it contains no opium or other harmful drug, it may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by all druggists.

Released From Custody.

Yesterday morning George Shartzer returned from Uniontown, Pa., accompanied by his son George W. who was tried in court there this week on the charge of carrying concealed weapons and for boisterous conduct on a Baltimore and Ohio excursion train.

On the charge of carrying concealed weapons he was found guilty but sentence was suspended upon payment of costs and he was released. The charge of boisterous conduct on the train was not pushed.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address, nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 4 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and instead of section four of Article 3, of said Constitution.

SECTION 4. As soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring.) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State.

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD — CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA, COLORADO AND UTAH.

Special low Summer Excursion Rates to all points. Personally conducted Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Personally conducted tour to San Francisco, Cal., account General Convention Episcopal Cuhrch. Tickets on sale Sept. 22nd to 27th. Good returning until Nov. 5th, with stop-over privileges.

Quickest and best line to

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Only line with Double Daily Through Service. Dining Cars and Free Reclining Chair Cars. Fastest train service to the famous

BEAUMONT, TEXAS, OIL FIELDS.

Through sleeping car from Chicago without change and through sleeping car reservations from Cincinnati via Memphis, Tenn., to

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Special Homeseekers' Excursions to all points South, West and North West.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER,
Traveling Passenger Agent,
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Special Examinations.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF SCHOOL COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 12, 1901.

There will be a special examination for teachers held in Oakland on

FRIDAY, AUGUST 30th,

beginning at 8 o'clock a. m. The examination for free scholarship to State Normal and other institutions will take place on same day.

By order of the Board.
ED A. BROWNING,
232 Examiners.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., August 14, 1901.

Josias Bittinger, appointed Republican Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 29, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead Geo. W. Engle is hereby appointed to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.
C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

ADMINISTRATRIX'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscriber, of Garrett county, Maryland, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of

THOMAS R. MCROBIE,

late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 25th day of December next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

Given under my hand this 25th day of June, 1901.

ELIZABETH MCROBIE,
Administratrix,
Beckman, Md.

The laws of health require that the bowels move once each day and one of the penalties for violating this law is piles. Keep your bowels regular by taking a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets when necessary and you will never have that severe punishment inflicted upon you. Price, 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

Money to Loan.

$4,000 to loan on first mortgage in n sums to suit upon town property or nearby farms.

EDWARD H. SINCELL.

Fall term CENTRAL COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Cumberland, Md., Winchester, Va., begins Sept. 2nd. Write for catalog and free lesson in Gregg Shorthand. Scholarship $45.00

Tom Cornwiler's A Tumble

By L. G. Bates.

"I BELIEVE that boy has climbed every tree in the township, leastwise the worst ones," said Mrs. Cornwiler.

"Deary me! I should be afraid he'd break his neck," said Mrs. Millwaite.

"I don't see where he got it," said Mrs. Cornwiler.

"He got it from you, that's plain," said Mr. Cornwiler, boldly.

"From me! Why, just climbing a fence makes me almost dizzy!"

"Your father was a sailor," said Cornwiler, "and his father was topman in the navy under old Commodore Preble. Tom's inherited their climb from you."

While this discussion was going on indoors Tom was going off outdoors. Mrs. Millwaite's visit gave him a chance to go fishing. He put a hook and line in his pocket, intending to cut a fishpole on the way, and trusting to find fat, white bait grubs in old logs. He owned a sharp one-hand hatchet, which he thrust under his buckskin belt.

A quarter of a mile from the river he came to a familiar tree-stub. It had been a forest giant, but some storm had broken off its top, leaving its great trunk 30 feet high. Forest fires had consumed the fallen top and deeply charred the huge trunk. Tom struck it with his hatchet head. To his surprise it sounded hollow—a mere shell. He was immediately curious to know if it was hollow all the way up, and the only way to ascertain was to climb it.

A more uninviting stub to climb could not be found. It was very grimy, and too smooth and large to be clasped by either arms or legs; but Tom sought a thicket and cut the largest tough withe he could find. He wrapped this about the stub and fastened its two ends securely to his belt with strips of strong bark, making a hoop somewhat larger than the tree. Leaning well back, he walked his moccasined toes right up, raising the hoop by quick jerks.

The tree was hollow. Tom sat on the edge, with his feet dangling outside, as steady of nerve as if upon the ground. When his curiosity was satisfied he slipped off the hoop to retie it more to suit him. An incautious movement broke a bit of the edge and disturbed his balance. He made a violent move to recover himself. More edge crumbled inward, and down he went inside, head and heels together, like a shut jackknife. One hand held to the hoop, pulling it after him. Head, back, hips and legs scraped down the long tube, carrying fragments of rotten wood and a dusty cloud.

Tom struck on a deep, soft pile of debris, into which his doubled-up body plunged breast and knee-deep. The concussion shocked him breathless and set his nose bleeding copiously and the dust and blood hindered the recovery of his breath. Although he was not quite unconscious, it was long before he stirred. The back of his head had been severely raked and rotten wood was ground into all his lacerations.

When at last he began to try to move he found himself wedged in. Vainly he wiggled; he could hardly stir, and could neither lift himself nor get his legs down. His hips, back and all the muscles of his legs ached and prickled intolerably from strain and checked circulation.

He could not resist crying; but, being a lad of good courage, endurance and resource, he soon began a systematic effort for release, packing the loose debris down as firmly as he could with his hands, at the same time pressing it away all around with his body. This exertion caused greater ache, but he persisted resolutely. By and by he got his hatchet out of his belt, and struck it, after a dozen efforts, so firmly into the wooden wall that he could hang his weight to it with one hand while he worked the debris under him with the other. He gradually enlarged his space sufficiently to allow the bending of his knees. After that he was not long in getting his body up and feet down, so as to sit cramped on one hip, with both feet nearly level.

Exertion, pain and the pressure of returning circulation made his pulses throb and his head swim, and he lapsed into semiconsciousness. How long this lasted he knew not, but when he began to struggle again he was in black darkness. A few stars shone calmly down his wooden well, but he could work only by feeling about with his hands. He felt exhausted, hungry and weak, but he kept on working until he managed to stand erect. Then, after feebly kicking and pushing debris to fill up the hole where he had been, he curled himself as comfortably as he could and slept a blessed though troubled sleep.

After a long time he stretched out. His sore heels hit one wall, his sore head the other. This time the pain roused him to a renewed sense of his situation. He sat up, stiff, lame all over, weak, gnawed by hunger and thirst, but still undismayed and resourceful. A little thought and a trial convinced him that, weak and sore as he was, it would be a vain waste of strength to try to climb up the difficult inside of his prison.

"There's always more than one way to skin a cat," he reflected. "I've got to get out of this somehow; that's all there is to it." He ran a thumb over the edge of his hatchet. "Pretty sharp yet. Too light to chop easy, and no room to swing it, but it'll cut a hole, give it time."

Scraping away the rotten wood, he selected a place where the wall seemed thin, and began hacking. Progress was slow. At first his stiff muscles and sore body hurt acutely, but this pain wore away as he went on. The wood, charred outside and very dry, was hard and tough. Although it was a sunny day and his eyes had adjusted their vision to the dimness of his pit, he could hardly see where to strike. He dared not pry out large slivers, for if the edge or handle of his hatchet should break he might never get out. His awkward position and the one-hand work tired him rapidly, and he suffered occasional cramps.

During one of his frequent rests he heard Ban barking loudly outside.

"Good dog! I'm coming!" he shouted.

When Tom did not appear for supper, Mrs. Cornwiler began to fret, but not much, for he was often late. After supper, with no Tom to do the chores, Mr. Cornwiler grumbled, but did them himself, saying:

"Come, now, wife, the boy probably has a good excuse. He's pretty regular, considering."

By bedtime Mrs. Cornwiler was anxious.

"I'm sure he's lying hurt somewhere in the woods, fallen from a tree; or maybe he's got lost."

"Pshaw, now, Edith! Tom couldn't lose himself anywhere in this county the darkest night that ever was; and he doesn't know how to fall from a tree. He'll be home all right pretty soon. Likely he's hindered by something he thinks important."

At ten o'clock Mrs. Cornwiler was insistent and Cornwiler less confident. He proposed to take the dog and search.

Ban, being told to "Go find Tom!" set off joyfully, wagging his tail. He led Cornwiler straight to the charred stub and barked, leaping against it. Cornwiler looked the stub all over. There were no signs of Tom. He called, and fired his rifle. There was no reply. He supposed the stub solid, but thumped it. Unfortunately the blow struck where the shell was thick and where Tom had packed the debris hardest inside. It sounded solid. Mr. Cornwiler thought that Ban had foolishly tracked a squirrel up it, or perhaps a coon had been there and gone. He dragged the dog away, ordering him again to "Find Tom!" Ban instantly ran back to the stub and whined and scratched, but Mr. Cornwiler pulled him away.

Mr. Cornwiler searched a long time, but found no trace of Tom, and Ban seemed puzzled and not much interested. After midnight Cornwiler began a terribly anxious inquiry, rousing neighbor after neighbor. No one had any tidings. Mr. Millwaite dressed, took his rifle and accompanied Cornwiler. Mrs. Millwaite, notwithstanding her depreciation of Tom, went to cheer and comfort his mother all she could.

Millwaite suggested going first to the charred stub. "You know Tom's been there," he said, "and it's the right point to start from." As soon as they arrived Ban began whining and scratching about the stub. Cornwiler sternly ordered him off, and the poor dog, probably supposing it was all right, reluctantly obeyed. Both men believed the stub solid, and that Tom had merely come and gone. The news of the lost boy spread, and by sunrise a dozen men and boys were scouring the woods.

After getting breakfast and doing the housework, Clara Millwaite, who had been thinking, concluded that Tom must, after all, be at or near the charred stub. "A dog never mistakes in such matters; men do," the sensible girl reasoned. She would go and take a look for herself.

"If Tom is there he'll be hungry and thirsty," she thought, so she put a generous breakfast and a bottle of new milk in a bark basket.

Thinking Ban of no service, Cornwiler left him at the house, and the dog immediately returned to the stub and resumed his barking. Clara heard him and hurried to reach the spot and judge for herself of the dog's behavior. She arrived just as Tom drove a long sliver through, and put out his fingers for Ban to lick.

In a few moments more he had the aperture sufficiently enlarged for Clara to pass in the bottle and slices of food. Tom drank first—a long, thirsty pull. Then how he did eat! with the appetite of a starved wolf and the gratitude of a generous-minded boy. Clara bade him give her the hatchet, and while he ate she hacked with the skill and strength of a pioneer girl. As the wall was now pierced they could chop the edges of the shell and make faster progress. In half an hour Tom was able to squeeze through.

What an object he was! Bloody, grimy and covered with rotten wood from head to heels! Even his hair was plastered with gore and dust. Clara gathered leaves and helped him clean it off as well as he could, but it would require several severe scrub baths and a week's healing to make him presentable.

While they walked home she rallied him about his appearance, suggesting that half the township, especially the ladies, would be on hand to meet him. But Tom said he guessed that as long as she had seen him in this condition, he could stand being looked at by the other ladies.

As for Ban, he was so absorbed that evening with the unusually large bone given him that he quite failed to hear Mr. Cornwiler's compliment.

"I allow," said Mr. Cornwiler, "that when it comes to woodcraft, I haven't got half the sense of that dog."—Youth's Companion.

DICTATES OF FASHION.

Pretty Adjuncts to the Up-to-Date Summer Costumes—Dainty Trifles, Etc.

Broad-shaped collars are worn with many thin gowns, says the Chicago Daily News.

Good advice to the woman who wants variety at little outlay is to lay in a stock of lawn, lace and embridery collars in white, black, coffee and ecru.

Red parasols sing such a gay note along the highways and byways of summer resorts that they are chosen by many because of their decorative possibilities.

Belt buckles are pointed downward to give the fashionable long waist effect. Some belts of stitched satin have small buckles in the back also, by way of variety.

An excellent way to bring skirts up to date is to flounce them with shaped flounces up to the knee. Cloth may be flounced with glace silk or vice versa. For evening wear black pin-spot net, chiffon or net may be used.

There is a fad for some very elegant white suede shoes, but it is ever a dangerous thing to play with footgear; dark brown and black are always safe. There is a tendency also for the high-heeled shoe with a big tongue, a compromise between the Cromwellian and the Louis XV. shapes.

There are seen any quantity of black suede gloves, though black glace kid gloves are distinctly out of favor. White kid are immensely smart for many occasions, especially in the country, as well as thick white suede. White suede are also used for evening, as well as every shade of gray and other pale tints.

Less gold is seen on millinery and dresses, but evening dresses glitter with sequin and paillette embroidery and the new colored Roman pearls. Pearl pear drops are used to finish off lace ends, ribbons, etc. Ribbons play a part in ball dresses, the loveliest of gauze ribbon, shot with gold and embroidered with colored silks.

Tussah silk, which is wide and costs only $1.25 a yard, is a silk which promises to be serviceable, and it is stylish and attractive in appearance. It has something the appearance of pongee, but it is rather darker in color and of a different weave. Trimmed with plain linen laces or linen laces combined with colors it is very stylish, and will make useful and economical frocks.

WOMEN OF POISE.

They Indulge in Few Exclamations and Are Never Given to Gushing.

The dictionary defines poise as "the state or quality of being balanced; equilibrium; equipoise; hence, figuratively, equanimity; rest." Poise instills grace and symmetry into the workings of the mind, just as physical exercise does into the movements of the body. It is rarely a natural endowment, but may be cultivated to the point where it becomes second nature. Poise always carries with it a suggestion of reserved force, and the woman who wishes to acquire it must learn to husband her energy as well as her time; she must not fritter away words, moments or emotions, writes Ina Brevoort Roberts, in Woman's Home Companion.

The woman of poise indulges in a few exclamations or superlatives, and does not waste enthusiasm over trifles. She is gracious, but never gushing, and she has acquired the habit of listening attentively, not awaiting with ill-concealed eagerness a pause in the conversation to enable her to rush in and take the floor. The woman of poise never lingers after her good-by is spoken; never, in fact, under any circumstances, talks long while standing. She does not experience the difficulty too many people have of taking leave gracefully. She says good-by, gives you a bright smile, and is off to the pleasure or duty that awaits her. You do not find out all there is to know about the woman the first time you meet her; you become acquainted with her by degrees, and grow gradually into her friendship.

Why Some Children Are Timid.

How many children have been terrified by stories of the "Bogy Man," of "the wolf that will come and eat them," of "the policeman who will put them in the lockup," till their fear of the dark amounts to a positive agony. Bedtime should be an hour inseparably associated with the prayer at the mother's knee, followed by a quiet talk, after which the little one settles down to a restful sleep. But instead how often does it happen that the child is tucked in bed with the admonition: "Now go right to sleep, like a good boy, for if you don't there's a big dog over there in the corner that'll come and bite you!" Go to sleep! Sheer nervous terror keeps the child awake. How can he be expected to grow up anything but timid?—Arthur W. Yale, M. D., in Woman's Home Companion.

Snow Pudding.

Make lemon jelly with one-fourth box or one slightly rounded tablespoonful granulated gelatine soaked in one-fourth cupful cold water, dissolved in one cupful boiling water, one cupful sugar and one-fourth cupful lemon juice; strain and cool; beat whites of three eggs very stiff, and when the gelatine begins to thicken combine the two, and beat with a perforated wooden spoon in a large bowl to give wide sweep to each stroke, till very light; pour into a wet mould or into a pretty glass dish. Serve with boiled custard, poured around if moulded, or from a pitcher if not moulded.—People's Home Journal.

WATERMELON LORE.

Proper Way to Serve to Have the Melon at Its Best—Preserving Rind, Etc.

Southerners declare that people of the north spoil watermelons by too much chilling; that, like strawberries, they need the warmth of the sun in them; but the weight of opinion seems to be on the side of the ice box, says the Washington Star.

A novel way to chill a melon is to cut a ripe one into halves and scoop out the pink flesh, rejecting all seeds. Lay on a platter, and, with a silver fork, break into small pieces. Add one-half pound of powdered sugar and the juice of a lemon. Turn into a freezer, pack with ice and salt and turn slowly for 15 or 20 minutes until the mixture is mushy. Serve in glasses, with the addition of a teaspoonful of sherry to each glass if desired.

It is now considered a violation of the canons of good taste in table service to offer watermelons with the rind on. Split the melon in two, lengthwise, and with a large spoon and a rotary twist of the wrist scoop out the luscious pink flesh in cone-shaped pieces. Arrange on a bed of green leaves or cracked ice and you will have a picture for the eye as well as a delight to the palate. Cut in this way, which gives no waste, a good-sized melon will serve 15 or 20 people.

Watermelon rind preserved, and then dried out in the oven, is quite as good as citron for cake, mince pie, plum pudding and tutti-frutti ice cream.

In preserving watermelon rind, peel off the green part and cut in thin strips. For five pounds of rind put one quart of water and a pint of vinegar over the fire. When it comes to a scald add the rind, boil ten or twelve minutes, remove with a skimmer and drain. Have ready a sirup, allowing three and a half pounds of sugar to a pint of water. Let it come to a good boil, skim and add the strips of melon with two ounces of green ginger cleaned and sliced. Cook about three-quarters of an hour, or until tender enough to pierce with a straw. Remove the melon strips with a skimmer and lay on a platter. Continue boiling the sirup until reduced to one-half. Put the melon in a glass jar, excepting what you wish to dry to use in place of citron, and fill the jars to overflowing with the boiling sirup.

Watermelon rind is excellent made into a sweet pickle. Cook the strips of melon in clear water until nearly tender, then remove with a skimmer and drain. Make a spiced pickle, allowing to every eight pounds of melon a pint of vinegar and three pounds of sugar. Mix together a half teaspoonful each of ground cloves and mace and a teaspoonful each of cinnamon, ginger and allspice. Tie in a cheesecloth bag and add to the sirup. Cook the melon in the sirup until perfectly tender; remove the melon and cook the sirup until reduced down to one-half. Put into jars and seal while still scalding hot.

While it seems quite as wasteful and ridiculous an excess as painting the lily or throwing perfume on the violet to attempt any improvement upon the watermelon au naturel, a change from the stereotyped way of doing things is sometimes desirable. At a recent luncheon the first course was chilled melon, which had been prepared in this wise: All the center of the melon was scooped out, rejecting the seeds. This was broken with a silver fork into small pieces, then put into a freezer with the addition of half a pound of powdered sugar and the juice of a lemon. The freezer was packed in salt and ice and turned slowly for 15 minutes until a mush-like consistency was obtained. This melon frappe was served in glasses with a teaspoonful of sherry added to each glass.

Fish Raised by Hand.

At last the common sole has been reared at the Concarneau laboratory from the egg of the mature size. The crucial stage had hitherto been the post-larval some six or eight days after hatching out, but this has now been successfully passed by the system of artificial nourishment before the absorption of the yolk sac, the water being also continually stirred on the principle adopted by the Plymouth laboratory. As only such comparatively unimportant species as a blenny and bullhead, and in one instance a herring, had hitherto been reared through all their stages in the aquarium, this achievement at Concarneau is one of which MM. Bietrix and Fabre-Domergue may well be proud.—London Times.

An Elevator Disease.

Some physicians, in making examinations for life insurance companies, think that they have discovered a marked tendency to heart trouble and premature degeneration of the arteries in men and boys who run elevators and in others that make many trips a day. They do not yet know to what to ascribe it. Perhaps it may be due to changes in atmospheric pressure in passing from basement to roof and down again, or to the sudden starts and stops and the rapid descent. On the other hand, it may be the result of causes that they have not yet been able to discover.—Chicago Chronicle.

Black Currant Pudding.

Stew your fruit and top them. Line a basin with a light paste, strew sugar over it, then put in your black currants, add more sugar and a teacupful of cider, or an apple or two sliced thin; cover with a top crust, tie a cloth over it and boil for two hours.—Ladies World, New York.

WILL COST FORTUNE.

Schley Inquiry Has Serious Financial Side to It.

Expense Will Not Be Considered, However, by the Navy Department, Which Wants the Controversy Settled Forever.

Now that an official investigation of the Sampson-Schley controversy has been ordered no expense will be spared, as it is the purpose of the secretary of the navy to get every possible fact having any bearing on the Santiago campaign over which disputes have arisen before the court of inquiry.

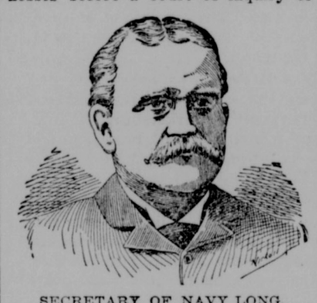
Every officer whose testimony will be of the slightest value will be summoned to Washington whether on duty on the Asiatic station or in Europe.

The meetings of the court, says the New York World, are to be held in the most richly appointed apartment of the navy department, the floors of which are covered with expensive carpets, the walls elaborately decorated and hung with valuable paintings of former secretaries, and which is furnished with manogany tables, settees and big easy chairs upholstered in leather.

The naval regulations provide that officers of the navy traveling under orders in the United States shall be allowed eight cents per mile while so engaged in lieu of their actual expenses.

Officers traveling to the United States from a foreign station will receive subsistence pay at the rate of from 80 cents to one dollar per day if traveling on a naval vessel or on any army transport. But as very few of the officers summoned from foreign countries can travel on government vessels actual traveling expenses will be allowed for the sea voyage, and eight cents per mile for such part of the journey as is made by rail. A naval officer coming from the Philippines to San Francisco on a merchant vessel would receive about $300 for the sea voyage, $250 for the journey from San Francisco to Washington and the same returning to his post.

Officers ordered to appear as witnesses before a court of inquiry or



SECRETARY OF NAVY LONG.
(The Man Who Ordered the Sampson-Schley Inquiry.)

to serve as members of a court receive no extra compensation. Retired officers ordered to duty on a court of inquiry will receive full active pay for the time employed. All officers whose presence will be required in Washington, except those on duty there, will receive commutation of quarters while there at the rate of $12 a room per month, and are allowed a number of rooms according to rank.

The principal witnesses to be called before the Schley court of inquiry and their present stations are as follows:

Capt. Cook, of the Brooklyn, at Annapolis; Capt. Clark, of the Oregon, League Island; Capt. Chadwick, of Admiral Sampson's flagship, the New York, Newport; Rear Admiral Evans, of the Iowa, Washington, at present on a yachting trip; Rear Admiral Higginson, of the Massachusetts, now in command of the North Atlantic station; Lieut. Commander Wainwright, commander of the Gloucester, now superintendent of the naval academy at Annapolis; Lieut. Sharp, of the Vixen, on duty on the training ship Hartford, somewhere off the coast of Sweden; Admiral Sampson, Boston; Lieut. Staunton, Sampson's flag lieutenant, now in command of Yankton in Porto Rican waters; Lieut. Commander Sears, Schley's flag lieutenant, hydrographic office, New York; Lieut. Wells, Schley's secretary, on the Kearsarge; Lieut. Marsh, Sampson's secretary, on the Mayflower; Lieut. Hodgson, navigator of the Brooklyn, Newport; Lieutenant Commander Seaton Schroeder, executive officer of the Massachusetts, naval governor of Guam; Executor Officer Harbor, of the Texas, naval attache at Paris or St. Petersburg.

How many of the subordinate officers will be summoned is yet to be determined. It is probable that when the list of witnesses is completed as many as ten will be called from the Asiatic station, and if no warship or government transport is available in time they will be directed to come on merchant vessels from Hong-Kong. Should ten officers come on merchant vessels from the far east that alone would entail an item of $5,000.

In addition to the expense of bringing witnesses there are the running expenses of the court. Stenographers and a clerical force are required, while the item of stationery will not be inconsiderable.

The inquiry will doubtless last a month, if not two months.

But Few Ever Get There.

When a woman has no excuse for being jealous she comes dangerously near being perfectly happy.

EXTRAORDINARY PLANT.

It Devours Animal Food Greedily When Given to It in Small and Tasty Morsels.

We all know that certain plants absorb and live on insects, but it has only recently been discovered that there are some curious species of plants that actually devour animal food when given to them in small morsels.

The leaves of these queer plants appear in doublets, like oyster valves. This double leaf is closed up from its base to within about three-quarters of its entire length. In the front part it is detached, the two pointed tops forming, as it were, a pair of lips, or a mouth, which the plant can open at will.

Inside this mouth is a kind of a passage or throat which extends toward

MEAT-EATING PLANT.
(Devours Animal Food When Given to It in Small Morsels.)

the body of the plant. This passage has a number of hairy bits about it, which are very fuzzy, and at the end of each bit there is a sticky substance.

When the plant opens its mouth it is evident that the trap is then set, for upon any insect entering it the lips close upon it at once, forcing it to the gummy substance of the throat. This substance has properties similar to those contained in the gastric juices of the human stomach, which help to decompose and digest the food. When so digested the food resolves itself into a liquid which is carried all over the plant to nourish and revive it.

The most marvelous thing about this newly-discovered species, says the New York World, is that it can digest such food as small morsels of beef, fish and egg gelatine, some of which, dropped into the open leaf, were retained and apparently digested. At the same time anything of a starchy or fatty substance the leaf or plant is not able to retain. It does not, therefore, close its lips upon it, and if allowed to remain in the mouth the plant will decay.

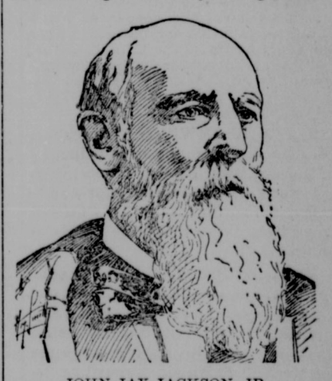
FORTY YEARS A JUDGE.

John Jay Jackson, Jr., of West Virginia, Has Sat on Bench Longer Than Any Other Man.

Judge John Jay Jackson, Jr., of Parkersburg, W. Va., celebrated the fortieth anniversary of his appointment as judge of the United States district court of West Virginia on August 3. He has sat upon the bench longer than any other judge, either federal or state, in the history of the United States.

Chief Justice Marshall, Judge Field and others sat over 30 years upon the bench, but no one has come within four years of the length of Judge Jackson's term of service.

Seventy-seven years of age, Judge Jackson might several years ago have



JOHN JAY JACKSON, JR.
(Virginia Jurist Who Has Sat on the Bench for Forty Years.)

retired, but he expects to die in the harness, and to judge by his present vigor it will be many years before he does. For he is to-day one of the most energetic of all the federal judiciary and his opinions are noted for their strength and vigor. During his term of 40 years of continuous service on the bench Judge Jackson has missed but one term of court, and that was when the confederate troops under Gen. Loring were in possession of Charleston.

Robinson Crusoe's Musket.

A Philadelphia firm of auctioneers recently offered at one of its sales Robinson Crusoe's musket. It was a fine old flintlock. It was in the possession of a grandniece of Alexander Selkirk, and its pedigree is much more uncluded than is usually the case with objects of this kind.

Wears a Copper Dress.

The bride of William A. Clark, Jr., the son of Senator W. A. Clark, the copper king, has a dress in her trousseau made of hairlike copper wire that was created in Paris especially for her. The effect is said to be unique.

Dainty Menu for Servants.

King Edward of England has ordered that the lower servants shall have in future not only joint for dinner, but also on alternate days a first course of fish or soup.

A CHECK ON BULLS.

Improvement on an American Device Suggested by South Australian Experimenters.

The Australian Leader suggests this improvement on a device to prevent bulls from breaking fences which was published years ago in the Country Gentleman—devised by the South Australian department of agriculture. It is described as follows:

"A block of wood is screwed on to each horn, and a wire stretched from block to block and also to the nose ring, as shown. So long as there is no pressure on the wires between the ring and the horns, the nose ring is simply held upwards without any discomfort to the animal. Should the bull rush any other animal, or attempt to get through any fence, the pressure pulls the nose ring upwards, causing considerable pain. It requires very few experiences to teach the animal that any misbehavior on his part is attended by suffering to himself. One prominent breeder says even the fiercest of bulls is quickly tamed by this device. In place of the blocks on the horns, the latter are sometimes bored through near the point and the wires secured. The blocks may also be put on in different ways, the object being to bring the wires from the horns to the nose away from the head and face."

CHECK ON UNRULY BULL.

KOCH ON TUBERCULOSIS.

Recent Statements of the German Pathologist Should Be Taken with a Grain of Salt.

London dispatches state that Prof. Koch, the German pathologist, who is attending the British congress called to consider means for the prevention of consumption, in the course of an interview with a newspaper reporter authorized the statement that he has demonstrated that the meat and milk of cattle infected with tuberculosis may be consumed with impunity. To the newspaper correspondent he is reported to have said: "You may say substantially that I have reached the conclusion that mankind's fear of contact with tuberculosis-infected flesh and fluid is unnecessary and unfounded. I arrived at the discovery through what I consider practically indisputable tests. These experiments lead me to believe that human tuberculosis and bovine tuberculosis are two entirely distinct species. I have found the human tuberculon incapable of inoculation into the animal system. Proceeding from that premise, I am prepared to show that humanity's far-reaching precautions against infected cattle may once for all be abandoned."

The results which Dr. Koch is credited with securing are not in accord with those which have been the product of similar tests made by many pathologists of this country and Europe, and before accepting these statements at their face value we shall await further particulars.—Farmers' Review.

A Comfortable Possibility.

Never hesitating to slur the plain farmer, some of the big city dailies are cartooning the proposition advanced in a western state to establish steam laundries and bakeries in well-populated neighborhoods. Whether feasible or not, the inspiration is a good one. The hard-working farmer's wife has never been able to share very much in the labor-saving machinery and implements employed on the farm, and her position has been one of hand to hand contact with the pressing work which must be accomplished 365 days in the year. Not impossibly these enterprises could be successfully run by farmers on the cooperative plan, affording needed relief to the overworked helpmate who does so much toward the permanent success of the farmer's business and toward his comfort.—Farm and Home.

The Cows in Fly Time.

Here is something that should be preserved by every reader that owns cows, especially, and good for other cattle also in fly time. The Country Gentleman gives it from its veterinary editor, who says it is a cheap, reliable remedy used on his cows for years, and found to be lasting in results, easily used and such a comfort to the animals that they could stand and be milked in the field, if necessary. Pine tar, one pound; lard, six pounds. Melt the lard and stir in the pine tar. Keep an old sponge in the pail, and smear a little on the back of the cow's head, along the spine and on brisket twice a week, or when necessary.

UNPROFITABLE TREES.

Some Reasons Why the Fruit Crop of Many Orchards Is Not What It Should Be.

In some cases it will be found that old fruit trees, though profitless at present, consist of good salable kinds, and the question is: By what means can such trees be brought into fruitful or profitable condition? A fruit tree of this kind need not necessarily be unprofitable because it is old, though if it is old and has been neglected it must be. We find that many of this class of tree are what they are through neglect. The heads have for years been allowed to become a tangled mass of growth. The head wood has become crowded, so that too many fruits set, and in the end do not come to a salable size, neither do they color up as they should do. In such cases the remedy is simple. The old, dead growth must be cut out thoroughly. The moss-covered boughs must be cleaned. All branches that cross and rub against each other must be regulated by removal, and generally the pruning out process must be carried out in such a way that when finished the heads of the trees will be open and airy, which will insure a free crop of the best fruits. If anyone will look into the matters with which we deal they will find that the majority of the profitless fruit trees we refer to are planted in grass land. The fact is instructive, and it justifies in the most emphatic manner the denunciations that we have launched against the system for years. It is utterly impossible to grow the best apples and pears in grass land—there can be no doubt about that. If we pay a visit in the fruiting season to the fruit trees set in grass we shall be struck with the small size of the fruits the trees usually bear. There may be plenty of apples or pears, but there will be few good-sized fruits to be seen among them. Tillage is of the utmost importance to fruit trees, but this important operation cannot be carried out when the trees are surrounded with grass. Aeration, so necessary in the production of large-sized fruits, becomes impossible, and the fine surface tilth that is so needful under good culture cannot be produced unless the land is open and uncropped by grass or any crops growing right up to the stems of the trees.—London Globe.

CHEAP GARDEN ROLLER.

Can Be Made at a Trifling Cost and Is as Useful as a More Expensive Article.

Procure a ten-gallon oil or carbide can, cut out the top and bottom smoothly. Next make a square box of inch boards. This box makes center of roller. Stay this in can by means of long nails. Set the can and box on a wide board and fill the space with one part Portland cement and three parts sand, put in enough water to make it thin enough to pour, being careful to keep can round. After drying out well center ends and bore holes size of rod or broomstick and mount in a frame as shown in the illustration, made of one-inch boards four inches wide, braced well. The diameter of the box regulates the weight of roller. If not heavy enough weights can be put on the frame in a shallow box. All this costs but little. The one I made cost not to exceed 50 cents.—J. O. Peeks, in Agricultural Epitomist.

LAWN GARDEN ROLLER.

The Largest Peach Tree.

The largest peach tree in the United States, if not in the world, stands in an orchard in Kent county, Maryland. It is about the size of an ordinary kerosene barrel, measuring 78 inches around at the base, or nearly 26 inches through. One foot from the ground it is 58 inches around, and at two feet it is 56 inches. The crotch is 56 inches, while the four primary limbs are from 25 to 32 inches in circumferences. There is also one secondary limb as large as a ten-year-old tree. This mammoth specimen is 28 years od, and has never missed a crop. It frequently overbears, and then the wood breaks badly, for it is very brittle. The big tree is one of the survivors of a large orchard planted at the same time, some trees of which measure four or five feet in circumference.

Soil for a Peach Orchard.

J. H. Hale says: The soil for a peach orchard is a warm, loamy soil, yet any soil except a strong clay will give good results. I used to apply commercial fertilizers freely, but have learned that they are not necessary in many instances, providing sufficient culture is given to the orchard. I am reclaiming abandoned farms; clearing up tracts of land covered with brush and other rubbish, and am planting them to peach orchards, clearing up the rocks, etc., at considerable expense. It will pay to use a subsoil plow before planting peach trees except where lands have sandy or gravelly subsoil. Do not plant the trees until your land is well subdued.

GOOD ROADS TRAINS.

They Carry Machinery and Good Speakers and Will, No Doubt, Prove Very Helpful.

To State Senator Earle, of Michigan, belongs the credit of suggesting the actual demonstration of good roads by sending a good roads train about the country to show the people how to build roads. If he had not been actively engaged in his legislative duties his train would have been started long ago, but owing to this fact others have appropriated the idea and started a good roads train ahead of his own. The senator expresses pleasure that the idea has been copied, and hopes that still others will take it up, for all that he desires is the rapid dissemination of the "gospel of good roads," and he thinks the good roads train affords the most effective method.

Senator Earle's train will leave Detroit equipped with all the modern machinery used in the construction and maintenance of good roads. The most convincing speakers will accompany the train, and they will preach the gospel of better highways wherever the train goes. These advocates understand that Rome was not built in a day, and that neither were the splendid highways of Europe constructed in a year. But they maintain that now is the time to begin a systematic improvement of the roads of the United States. There is only one thing lacking to a general bettering of the present deplorable condition of the common dirt roads, and that is the will of the people. The Yankee spirit which dominates the American people enables them to appreciate a good thing when they see it, and therefore it is expected that the good roads train will make more converts and produce better results than anything else which could be done.

A good sized train, which will include ten carloads of machinery, is already made up, waiting for the signal to start. A corps of expert road builders will be included in the outfit, which will insure the construction of the sample of road on scientific principles.

Canada has a train in preparation, but with greater advantages, inasmuch as the government has appropriated $1,000,000 to be expended in bettering the roads of that region. Thus far the United States government has not done anything worthy of mention in this direction; in fact, it may be said, to its shame, that the officials in charge of the department for the improvement of roads in this country have been obliged to rely almost wholly upon their own resources or generous-hearted philanthropists in promoting the work. Senator Earle thinks the time is ripe for this great republic to make a liberal appropriation to the cause of good roads, and he expects to bend all his energies in the attainment of this end, but he strongly hopes and asks for the hearty cooperation of all people who may be in sympathy with the movement.

It is the earnest hope of Senator Earle that the good roads movement will be enthusiastically taken up by every state in the union. And there is much evidence in support of the belief that his hope will be fully realized. Nineteen states have either held or are to hold state conventions to boom the movement for good roads during the year 1901. State Engineer Bond, of Albany, N. Y., has suggested to the managers of the Pan-American exposition that they do something for the cause. Accordingly, arrangements for another national gathering, to convene at Buffalo some time in September, are being rapidly perfected. This monster national mass meeting will in no way interfere with the work being done by either the state or national good roads associations. Much thought and attention is being given to that portion of the programme which deals with modern road making machinery, and it is expected that there will be the largest exhibition ever known of this kind of machinery at the Pan-American in connection with this meeting. The Charleston exposition, which will open in December, will do much to further the cause in the south. The managers are making strenuous efforts to have the good roads feature among the most prominent and helpful.—Municipal Journal.

GARDEN CONVENIENCES.

Gate and Seat Which Contribute Materially to the Comfort of the Farmer and His Wife.

Set a couple of posts eight feet high in the fence near the garden gate and the kitchen door. About 15 inches from the ground make a mortise in each post and put in a 12-inch plank for a seat. About eight inches from the top nail a board across from post to post and put in a few boards over the whole for a roof. This will be a good place to hang your hoe rake, etc., where they are handy to get when garden work is taken up for a few minutes. Then if a small cupboard is rigged on one of the posts or a drawer under the seat, garden seeds might be brought out there in the spring time, and the packages would then be as handy as the tools.—J. R. Patterson, in Orange Judd Farmer.

GARDEN GATE AND SEAT.

We don't think it wise to cultivate sweet potatoes or to disturb the vines when the latter have covered the ground. Pull out the weeds, but nothing more.

Same Kind of a Cat.

Dorothy, the only daughter of a prominent western minister, possesses a will that, if it increases with her years, will be a most formidable thing to encounter by and by. As it is her father and mother are constantly being shocked by her ungodly ways and general incorrigibility. Not long ago she was playing with her kitten, which objected in frantic jumps to being dressed in a doll's golf cape; and in her sudden desperation and exasperation her mother was horrified to hear her exclaim:

"You d— little cat!"

Of course a vigorous chastisement followed and the usual penitent tears were shed and promises made, but alas, for baby resolutions! The next day the kitten again proved intractable, and childish impatience was about to express itself when she caught sight of her mother's warning eye and uplifted finger. Then with an air of resignation she said:

"That's all right, mamma, but she's the same kind of a cat that she was yesterday!"—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Those Lucky Boston Girls.

"Miss Beenz never gets nervous about the heat."

"But she's from Boston, you know."

"Yes, I fancied so. She scowled horribly when I split an infinitive yesterday. But why does that save her from worrying over the heat?"

"She never knows how hot it really is."

"Explain."

"Why, when she takes the thermometer from the hook her hands are so cold that the mercury gets a chill and falls down in a comatose condition, and by the time she can bring her nearsighted spectacles to bear on the tube the freezing point is in sight. 'Fifty-three,' she said yesterday as she stared at the thermometer. 'Isn't it singular how the imagination will affect the human mind? Now, I don't—call that hot.' And it was actually 91 degrees in the shade!"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Summary Retribution.

"Behead the brass band!" shouted the Chinese emperor.

The court favorite looked questioningly at the empress dowager.

"Certainly," said she. "If it will amuse him, behead the entire band."

"But what reason shall I give?"

"Simply call attention to its lack of delicacy. As we were entering the Forbidden City it played: 'The Old Home Ain't What It Used to Be.'"—Washington Star.

The Last Straw.

The regular contributor to the "Poets' Corner" in the Berrytown News was summoned before the new editor.

"I shall be obliged to request you to discontinue your contributions, unless there is a marked improvement in your rhymes," said the editor.

"What!" cried the poet, indignantly. "When I am willing to publish for the love of my art without financial recompense?"

"That makes no difference—or very little," said the editor, firmly. "I have borne with you while you rhymed 'love' with 'move,' and 'sour' with 'pour,' and 'come' with 'home.' But when in your last poem, entitled: 'The Death of August,' you tried to inflict 'peaches' and 'she aches' on a long-suffering public, I felt it was my time to speak and say that unless you buy a rhyming dictionary, I can publish no more poems from your pen."—Youth's Companion.

Vigorous, But Futile.—Wealthy Patient—"What is your bill for amputating my leg?" Eminent Surgeon—"Three hundred dollars, sir." Wealthy Patient (filling out a check)—"That's a brave effort, doctor, but it will never restore the leg to its normal length."—Chicago Tribune.

An Alibi.—"Has my Willie been in swimming here to-day?" asked Willie's angry father. "No, sir," replied the biggest boy in the water. "Are you sure?" "Sure. Why, it was as much as he could do to keep from drownin', but we got him out all right. He's restin' over there in the bushes now."—Philadelphia Press.

A pessimist is one who declares when a drought is finally broken that the rain will help the weeds more than anything else.—Atchison Globe.

Ridicule of the things we envy is a kind of auto-jolly that is not always worth all it costs us.—Puck.

A single word to the point is better than a speech.—Chicago Daily News.

Culture without conscience gives manners without morals.—Ram's Horn.

EXPLORED WILDS OF BORNEO.

Dr. A. W. Nieuwenhuis, Medical Commissioner of Dutch Army in Java, Returns from Expedition.

Dr. A. W. Nieuwenhuis, a medical commissioner of the Dutch army in Java, has arrived at San Francisco on his way to Holland. He has been exploring the wilds of Borneo and in traveling from the west to the east coasts of that country he says he has done what no other white man has ever done before. On his expedition he had three white men and three natives. He won the friendship of the Dyak tribes in the interior by curing many of them of malaria by the use of quinine and they rendered him valuable assistance. He found the natives very superstitious, though well disposed toward white men.

The party made valuable collections of animals and plant life and gathered many geological specimens. Dr Nieuwenhuis has submitted many recommendations to the Dutch civil officers at Batavia for the extension of Dutch governmental authority to the interior of Borneo.

Did Not Get What He Wanted.

The late Rev. R. S. Storrs was a very hard man to interview, for he resented the inquisitiveness of the press and was icy to its agents. One evening a reporter attended a reception at his house, and in the course of the evening touched his arm and whispered: "Doctor, I'm from the ——; I want the names of guests and all the particulars." "Yes," Dr. Storrs whispered in return, "this way, this way," and, taking the young man's arm, he escorted him to the front door and put him out.—Chicago Chronicle.

Do Your Feet Ache and Burn?

Shake into your shoes, Allen's Foot-Ease, a powder for the feet. It makes tight or New Shoes Feel Easy. Cures Corns, Itching, Swollen, Hot, Callous, Smarting, Sore and Sweating Feet. All Druggists and Shoe Stores sell it, 25c. Sample sent FREE. Address, Allen S. Olmsted, Le Roy, N. Y.

Not Strange.

Quizzer—Isn't it remarkable the interest foreigners take in American affairs from the very minute they land?

Guyer—Yes, and especially in the money question.—Kansas City Independent.

I do not believe Piso's Cure for Consumption has an equal for coughs and colds.—John F. Boyer, Trinity Springs, Ind., Feb. 15, 1900.

Unfortunately, we usually answer a fool according to his own folly.—Puck.

Cure and Prevent Pneumonia

With Hoxsie's Croup Cure. Infallible. 50 cts.

There is no rest for the idler.—Ram's Horn.

WET WEATHER WISDOM!

THE ORIGINAL TOWER'S FISH BRAND OILED CLOTHING
BLACK OR YELLOW
WILL KEEP YOU DRY
NOTHING ELSE WILL TAKE NO SUBSTITUTES
CATALOGUES FREE
SHOWING FULL LINE OF GARMENTS AND HATS.
A. J. TOWER CO., BOSTON, MASS. 50

OPIUM WHISKY and other drug habits cured. We want the worst cases. Book and references FREE. Dr. B. M. WOOLLEY, Box 3, Atlanta, Ga.

PENSIONS on age, disability and Widowhood; P. I. or any U. S. Service. LAWS FREE. E. W. McCORMICK & SONS, Cincinnati, O.; Washington, D. C.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY.

Genuine Carter's Little Liver Pills.

Must Bear Signature of

Brent Good

See Fac-Simile Wrapper Below.

Very small and as easy to take as sugar.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

FOR HEADACHE.
FOR DIZZINESS.
FOR BILIOUSNESS.
FOR TORPID LIVER.
FOR CONSTIPATION.
FOR SALLOW SKIN.
FOR THE COMPLEXION

GENUINE MUST HAVE SIGNATURE.

Price 25 Cents | Purely Vegetable. Brent Good

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

20,000 HARVEST HANDS

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Required to harvest the grain crop of Western CANADA. The most abundant yield on the Continent. Reports say that the average yield of No. 1 Hard Wheat in Western Canada will be over thirty bushels to the acre. Prices for farm help will be excellent. Splendid Ranching Lands adjoining the Wheat Belt, will be run from all points in the United States to the FREE GRANT LANDS. Secure a home at once, and if you wish to purchase at prevailing prices, and secure the advantage of the low rates, apply for Literature, Rates, etc., to F. PEDLEY, Supt. Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to JOS. YOUNG, 51½ State St., Columbus, O., Canadian Government Agent.

EXCURSIONS

☞ When visiting Buffalo, do not fail to see the CANADIAN EXHIBIT at the Pan-American.

WANTED GENTLEMAN or LADY AGENT, only one in each town, to SELL TEA at importer's prices. WRITE QUICKLY to HOME TEA CO., 22 Pearl Street, New York.

RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 88 S. California Ave., Chicago.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

A. N. K.—C 1878

STARK TREES best by Test—77 YEARS. LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly STARK BROS, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

EDUCATIONAL.

HOPEDALE COLLEGE Hopedale, O. Classical, philosophical, scientific, normal, commercial, and post-graduate courses; books rented. R.R. fare free. $160 a yr., and a plan to earn that. Catalog free. W. A. WILLIAMS, D. D., Pres't.

SOZODONT insures your Teeth 25¢
At all Stores, or by mail for the price. HALL & RUCKEL, New York.

YELLOW JACK

that dreadful fiend that threatens the beautiful sunny south every summer can attack and kill only those whose bodies are not kept thoroughly cleaned out, purified and disinfected the year round. One whose liver is dead, whose bowels and stomach are full of half decayed food, whose whole body is unclean inside, is a quick and ready victim of yellow jack.

If you want to be safe against the scourge, keep in good health all summer, whether yellow jack puts in an appearance or not, keep clean inside! Use a mild laxative, that will make your bowels strong and healthy, and keep them pure and clean, protected against any and all epidemic diseases. It's Cascarets, that will keep and save you. Take them regularly and you will find that all infectious diseases are absolutely

PREVENTED BY Cascarets CANDY CATHARTIC

BEST FOR THE BOWELS

THIS IS CCC THE TABLET.

10c. 25c. 50c.

ALL DRUGGISTS

CASCARETS are absolutely harmless, a purely vegetable compound. No mercurial or other mineral pill-poison in CASCARETS. CASCARETS promptly, effectively and permanently cure every disorder of the Stomach, Liver and Intestines. They not only cure constipation, but correct any and every form of irregularity of the bowels, including diarrhœa and dysentry. Pleasant, palatable, potent. Taste good, do good. Never sicken, weaken or gripe. Write for booklet and free sample. Address STERLING REMEDY CO., CHICAGO or NEW YORK. 428

WASHINGTON LETTER.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 5, 1901.

A welcome relief from the monotonous twanging of a single string of a naval controversy has been revived here. Two subjects of the first importance have been revived through reports that cannot fail to attract national attention. One is Governor-General Wood's comprehensive review of progress in Cuba; the other Capt. Charles D. Sigsbee's annual notes on the advancement of the world's navies, the increase of their tonnage, etc.

There is no topic more interesting to Americans at the present than that of Cuban development. The cost in blood and treasure for the emancipation of the infant nation so near our shores, along with the hope of the United States that the islanders will prove themselves worthy of the sacrifice, has caused the people to follow the trend of Cuban affairs almost as closely as they do the progress of an American State.

General Wood's report is voluminous, but the questions presented demand thorough treatment. It is convincing and earnest. It is an intelligent summary of the efforts made for the purification and betterment of the population. In brief, General Wood's document recommends fuller reciprocity with the United States, without which, he says, the thorough development of the island will be impossible. He explains that the American authorities, with native assistance, have abolished many petty offices. These increased the tax burden unnecessarily and militated against a proper centralization of power and responsibility. The objections to curtailment in this direction met with protests, inspired more by personal losses than regard for the common weal.

A gratifying feature of the situation is that fewer police are required in the towns. The progress of the island's agriculture, the root of its prosperity, is marked. The first large sugar crop since the war will be harvested next spring, and the products already sold, or nearly ready for the market, seem to furnish a guarantee that the Cuban municipalities will soon be able to assume obligations connected with new public works. Under American protection and encouragement prison abuses have been largely eliminated. The hospital system has become practical. Rules and regulations to govern municipal elections have been drawn up, principally for the purpose of preventing the control of government machinery by extremists who in the past have proved incapable of dealing with the predicaments of their own creation.

One of the conspicuous reforms has been the inauguration of a modern system of law and jurisprudence. The Cubans, through bitter experience, learned that under Spanish regime there was one code for the rich and another for the poor. The Americans have endeavored to establish equality of justice. Natives of all classes are beginning to realize that ancient and iniquitous practices have passed out, that Americans are champions of fairplay and that under their plan of civilization no man is too humble to be accorded justice when he asks for a hearing. Although the new order of things is radical, the reform is not complete. It is hoped, however, that time will bring it nearer to perfection.

In other respects, General Wood has reviewed the Cuban situation in a manner that cannot fail to interest and enlighten all his countrymen who follow developments outside their immediate boundaries.

The conspicuous position of the American Navy and its officers renders the information compiled and presented by Captain Sigsbee more than ordinarily interesting. It will enlighten the laymen and stimulate the expert for speculation as to the probable outcome of the rivalry for mastery of the seas. The Chief Intelligence Officer of our navy summarizes the work of leading governments in the creation of fighting vessels. It is shown that of the foreign powers, Great Britain has made the largest additions to her war fleet during the year. Russia, Germany and France have not lagged far in the rear. Japan, too, has made progress characterized by Lieut. Phelps as "enormous." The Yankees of the Orient have plans for the near future that promise to place the navy of the Mikado near the top-notch of efficiency and on an equality with several of his leading rivals. In view of the reported encroachments of Russia in the Far East the conspicuous naval activity of Japan cannot escape comment.

While it is not possible in a limited space to review the statistics furnished by Captain Sigsbee, it may be noted that the nations are lavish in their expenditures to strengthen their sea-fighting arms. As usual, this feverish preparation for war seems only an additional guarantee of peace between world-powers.

Dixon & Kelso will exchange peaches for potatoes, to be delivered about October 15. Will sell Mason quart fruit jars at 65c, ½ gallons at 85c; best white stone ware at 8c gallon. 2

SARAH AND THE "INDIANS."

Bernhardt Played Fedora For Them at 35 Cents a Head.

Sarah Bernhardt, the great French actress, once played in Sullivan, Ind., at 35 cents a head.

It was many years ago, and Bernhardt was making a tour of the country. On the way from Louisville to Indianapolis the train was stopped at Sullivan by the news that a serious freight wreck had occurred a few miles up the road completely blocking the tracks and making progress to Indianapolis impossible until the next day.

"Very well," said the manager in excellent French and with forced calmness. "Since we cannot leave town we will give a performance here."

"Impossible," said Mme. Bernhardt, also in French. "Quite impossible."

"Not a bit," said the manager, and he went about it. The divine Bernhardt, being under contract to play a certain number of nights, was induced to consent. There was no "opera house" in Sullivan, but the Masonic hall was rented, and some of the scenery was crowded into it. The local job office got out a lot of handbills in a hurry, and messengers were dispatched to the adjoining towns to spread the glad news that Bernhardt, the divine Sarah, was to play in Sullivan that night and that admission would be 35 cents.

"No use trying to charge metropolitan prices here," said the manager to the treasurer, and that gentleman sighed and said he supposed not.

In the early evening there began to come into town long lines of green farmer wagons, each holding a family party. When the house was full, the great Bernhardt cautiously took a peep at it from behind the flimsy curtain.

"Mon Dieu!" she cried, raising her jeweled hands. "Look at the Indians!"

But she played Fedora for them, and she played until 11 o'clock.—Philadelphia Saturday Evening Post.

HE USED THE SALT TEST.

An Old Apache Chief's Knowledge of the Human System.

In the early days of Union Pacific railroading Victoria, Nana and Geronimo, the three chiefs of the Arizona Apaches, with 100 of their best bucks, came through to Green River, Wy.

They had heard of the "heap wagon and no hoss" and had come to stop the train. They made a lasso of rawhide, and 50 men on each side held on to the rope as the freight came down the Wasatch divide. The engineer saw when several miles away what the Indians were up to, so he whistled "off brakes" and, opening his throttle, let her loose. The cowcatcher struck the rope and hurled the Indians in all directions, literally tearing them to pieces, headless, armless and legless. The three chiefs went south to their cactus plains very crestfallen.

Before they selected these men the old Chief Victoria had them all eat a piece of rock salt about as big as a pecan, run swiftly about 100 yards, sit down on a log or rock and cross their legs. Then he watched the vibration of the feet, which were crossed. The feet which vibrated the longest or had the longest strokes he declined to accept for a severe duty or a dangerous trip or for one that was at all hazardous, but he accepted the feet which vibrated short, distinct and regular strokes.

Now, what did the old chief know about pulsation of the arterial system or of heart action and indeed about salt in the system? I have lived near to Indian reservations and have had occasion often to survey over their lands for railroads and other objects, and I have wondered where old Victoria got his idea. Is not the child of the sagebrush plains better posted than his paleface brother?—Chicago Inter Ocean.

A Love Letter of Prince Bismarck.

"On my window sill, among all sorts of crocuses and hyacinths, stand two camellias which always inspire me with strange thoughts. One of them, slender and pretty, with its ornamental crown (top) and soft, pale—very pale—pink blossoms, but little foliage and only two buds, transports me to Reddetin, holds itself rather stiffly and lisps English. The other makes far less impression of beauty as you look at it, and its stalk betrays in its gnarled twisting lack of care in its pruning. From the midst of the foliage looks out a dead branch, but the crown is rich in leaves, and the foliage is greener than that of its neighbor. It gives promise of abundant blossoming in its eight buds, and its color is deep dark red and white in irregular gay variegation. Do you take the comparison amiss? It is a lame comparison, moreover, for I do not love camellias, because they are without odor, and you I love precisely on account of the fragrance of the flower of your spirit, which is white, dark red and black."

Here is a picture of the Man of Iron with his armor doffed.—Harper's Magazine.

Luck and Pluck.

Two clerks named Thomas and Clarence were in the employ of a wealthy merchant. Thomas was always an industrious lad, but Clarence was much given to frivolity and was extravagant in his habits. In after years Clarence married his employer's daughter and was made a partner in the business. Thomas continued to be an honest, industrious clerk all his life, and his services were much appreciated by Clarence and his father-in-law.

Moral.—There is no royal road to success.—New York Commercial Advertiser.

Not Fatal.

Willie—I think I could die listening to Miss Triller sing.

Cy Nick—Oh, you may feel like dying, but you'll pull through. I've been through it often.—Ohio State Journal.

ROAD PETITION.

This is to give notice that thirty days after the first publication of this notice application will be made to the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county, Maryland, for the appointment of viewers to view and locate a new road beginning for the same at the south end of Garrett V. Moon's lane and running thence down Laurel Creek and through the lands of the Manor Mining and Manufacturing Company, James L. Harvey and J. B. Lipscomb and along the lines of said Lipscomb and Chas. Cooper and through the lands of the said Mining and Manufacturing Company to the town of Schell, a distance of about three miles.

J. L. HARVEY,
J. O. O'HARE,
J. B. LIPSCOMB and others,
Petitioners.

22¾5t*

The Maryland Agricultural College

COLLEGE PARK, MARYLAND.

Maryland's School of Technology. Four Courses of Instruction.

AGRICULTURAL — MECHANICAL
SCIENTIFIC — CLASSICAL

Each department supplied with the most modern and approved apparatus. Practical work emphasized in all departments. Graduates qualified at once to enter upon life's work; graduates in Mechanical Engineering and Chemistry this year, all secured positions upon graduation. Boarding Department supplied with all modern improvements—bath rooms, closets, steam heat and gas.

Tuition, Books, Heat, Light, Washing, Board and Medical Attendance, $154.00 for scholastic year. Catalogue giving full particulars sent on application. Daily visit by physician to college.

Attention is called to the Short Course of Ten Weeks in Agriculture. Particulars sent upon application.

Term commences September 23rd. Early application necessary for admittance.

R. W. SILVESTER,
President M. A. C.

Order of Publication.

Noah Bowman, Plaintiff, vs. Elizabeth Bowman et al, Defendants.

No. 1118 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this bill is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate of which Samuel Bowman, late of Garrett county, deceased, died seized and possessed.

The Bill states—

1st. That a certain Samuel Bowman was in his lifetime seized and possessed of a parcel of land situated in Garrett county, Maryland, containing about sixty-four and one-half acres.

2nd. That being so seized, the said Samuel Bowman some twenty years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving him a widow (who has since died) and the following children, viz., Noah Bowman, Joseph Bowman, Cornelius Bowman and Lydia Bowman.

3rd. That the said Lydia intermarried with one J. H. Pitzer, and some years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving her her husband and the following children, viz., Maggie B., who intermarried with W. G. Rogers; Annie, who intermarried with S. J. Neil (the said Annie now being dead, dying intestate, leaving surviving her her said husband and one child, Conova, a minor); Harriet, who intermarried with Alex. McAnear; Frances L., who intermarried with W. W. Brown; Sarah A., who intermarried with L. L. Cooper; Noah C. Pitzer, a minor, and J. R. Pitzer.

4th. That Cornelius Bowman is also dead, dying intestate, leaving a widow, Elizabeth Bowman, and the following children, viz., James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman and Mattie, who intermarried with W. H. Morgan.

5th. That the said Joseph Bowman died intestate some years ago, leaving a widow, Lizzie Bowman, a son, N. E. Bowman, and other children, whose names and ages are unknown.

6th. That the real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury, and that in order to make division thereof the property will have to be sold and the proceeds divided.

7th. The Bill then prays for a decree for the sale of said property and for a distribution of the proceeds, for general relief, and also for an order of publication against the non-residents and unknown heirs.

It is thereupon, this 12th day of August, 1901, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 13th day of September, 1901, give notice to the defendants, the said Elizabeth Bowman, James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman, Mattie Morgan and W. H. Morgan, her husband, J. H. Pitzer, Maggie B. Rogers and W. G. Rogers, her husband, S. J. Neal, Conova Neal, Harriet E. McAnear and Alex. McAnear, her husband, Sarah Cooper and L. L. Cooper, her husband, Noah C. Pitzer, Frances L. Brown and W. W. Brown, her husband, J. R. Pitzer, Lizzie Bowman, N. E. Bowman and the unknown heirs of Joseph Bowman, deceased, of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 30th day of September, 1901, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy—test:
E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE
COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO.,
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 22, 1901.

The Board of County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Monday, Sept. 9, 1901,

as required by law, for the purpose of transacting all routine business.

By order of the Board,
A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

Your Best Fellow

Will like you better for having white, smooth hands, free from chaps and such like detracting things—

GIRLS GET
LILY CREAM

An article that cures skin—soothes and feels good—dries instantly and is perfectly invisible.

A LOGAN DRUG COMPANY
WHEELING, W. VA.
15 and 25 cents. At your Druggist.

The Garrett County Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank

OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE
SECOND NATIONAL BANK

of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital.....$100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits.. 250,000
Liability of Shareholders..... 100,000
Additional Security to Depositors...$450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart,
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St.Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent, 632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS

cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain, No Griping, No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.

A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for

ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.

FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy

MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the ullest extent of the law.

Call on or address:
C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.

Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

153½ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale.

House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187½ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26½ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of peaches, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swanger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to

JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent,
OAKLAND, MD

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,

Office 7 North Liberty St.
CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—REPUBLICAN Building,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
OAKLAND, MD.
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. fe14-1y

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW.
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 10 f

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice,
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

M. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

W. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 16-'99

H. W. McCOMAS, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to 9 p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county, Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 5 22 6m

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J. HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md.
Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26t*

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats, descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42	A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.35	A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01	A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52	P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07	P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50	A. M
No. 2—Daily	6.52	A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41	P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12	P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35	P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37	A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.

IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3 P. M.	SOUTHWARD No. 1 A. M.	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2 NOON	NORTHWARD No. 4 P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 06
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. June.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 28	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 65	3 05
6 31	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 50	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 01	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 43	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 28
8 00	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15 *
	NOON			P. M.
8 35*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv *7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.			A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager. G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agent

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1901. NUMBER 27.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY IS SHOT TWICE, BUT HIS LIFE MAY BE SAVED.

Bright Hopes For His Recovery Lighten the Gloom Of An Awful Tragedy at the Buffalo Exposition.

THE ASSAILANT WAS LEON CZOLGOSZ, AN ANARCHIST.

A Murderous Attack While the Chief Executive Was Holding a Reception in Temple of Music—One Bullet Produced a Light Wound, But Other Passed Through Stomach and Has Not Been Extracted.

LATEST NEWS FROM THE SCENE OF THE SHOOTING.

William McKinley, President of the United States, was shot twice while holding a reception in the Temple of Music on the Pan-American Exposition grounds, Buffalo, at 4.12 o'clock on Friday afternoon.

One bullet took effect in the right breast and the other in the abdomen. The first wound was not of a serious nature and the bullet was extracted. The second bullet went through the President's stomach and lodged in the muscles of the back.

Strong hopes that the President will recover are felt by his physicians and the President's friends and admirers. The rents in the stomach were sewed up, but the second bullet has not been extracted.

The assassin is Leon Czolgosz. He was born in Detroit and went to Buffalo from Cleveland. He is an anarchist.

The President after the shooting was taken to the Emergency Hospital, on the Exposition grounds, and later to the residence of John G. Milburn, president of the Exposition.

SCENE AS HE WAS SHOT.

President Showed Great Bravery, and Said "May God Forgive Him" As He Looked at Assailant.

Five minutes before the President was shot the crowd was in the most cheerful humor in the Temple of Music. The police had found no trouble of any kind, and when the President's carriage, containing besides the Chief Executive President John G. Milburn, of the Pan-American Exposition, and Private Secretary George B. Cortelyou, drove up to the side entrance to the Temple it was met by a mighty salute of cheers and applause.

The three alighted and were escorted to the door of the building.

Almost immediately a carriage containing Secret Service Men George Foster and Samuel R. Ireland drove up, and these detectives, with several other Secret Service men, entered the building together. Inside they were met by Director-General Buchanan, who had arrived but a moment before, and he directed them as to where to stand.

In passing to the place the President took off his hat and smiled pleasantly to a little group of newspaper men and to the guards who had been stationed in the place. To one of the reporters he spoke smilingly, saying:

"It is much cooler in here, isn't it?"

PRESIDENT STOOD IN AISLE.

The interior of the building had been arranged for the reception. From the main entrance, which opens to the southeast from the temple into the wide esplanade, where thousands had gathered, an aisle had been made through the rows of seats in the building to a point near the center. This aisle was abont eight feet wide and turned near the center to the southwest door of the temple, so that there was a passage dividing the south part of the structure into a right angle.

It was so arranged that the people who would shake hands with the President would enter at the southeast door, meet the President in the centre and then pass on out at the southwest door. Where the aisle made the curve in the centre of the building the corner had been decorated with tall palms and green plants, so the President stood under a bower. Both sides of the long aisle were covered with continuous strips of purple bunting.

SOLDIERS WERE AT HAND.

From the southeast door and extending on up to and around the curve was a line of soldiers from the Seventy-third Seacoast Artillery on each side. These were interspersed with neatly uniformed guards from the Exposition police, under the command of Captain Damar.

When the Presidential party was within the building the soldiers came to "attention" and all took their places. The President was escorted to the centre of the palm bower, and Mr. Milburn took a position on his left, so as to introduce the people as they came in.

Secretary Cortelyou stood by the President to the right. Secret Serviceman Foster, who has traveled everywhere with the President, took a position not more than two feet in front of Mr. Milburn and Secret Serviceman Ireland stood on his left, so that Ireland was the same distance in front of the President as was Foster in front of Mr. Milburn.

WAS IN FINE HUMOR.

Through this passage the people who would meet the President must pass. When all was ready, with detectives scattered throughout the aisle, the President smiled to Mr. Buchanan, who was standing near the corporal in charge of the artillerymen, and said that he was ready to meet the people. He was very pleasant and as he waited for the doors to open he rubbed his hands together, adjusted his long Prince Albert coat, and laughingly chatted with Mr. Milburn. Secretary Cortelyou gave a few last instructions to the officers as to the manner in which the crowds were to be hurried on through, so that as many as possible could meet the Executive.

Mr. Milburn ordered the door to open, and a wavering line of people, who had been squeezed against the outside of the door for hours, began to wend its way up through the lines of soldiers and police to the place where the President stood. An old man with silver-white hair was the first to reach the President, and on his shoulder the little girl he carried received a warm salutation.

Organist W. J. Gomph started on a sonata, low at first, and swelling gradually to more majestic proportions until the whole auditorium was filled with the melodious tones of the big pipe organ.

The crowd had been pouring through hardly more than five minutes when the organist brought from his powerful instrument its most roaring notes, drowning even the scuffle of feet.

Fully half of the people who passed the President were women and children. To every child the President bent over, shook hands warmly and said some kind words, so as to make the young heart glad. As each person passed he or she was viewed critically by the secret service men. Hands were watched, faces and actions noted.

A SUPPOSED ACCOMPLICE.

Far down the aisle a man of unusual aspect appeared taking his turn in the line. He was short, heavy, dark, and between a heavy dark mustache was a pair of straight bloodless lips. Under the black brows gleamed a pair of glistening black eyes.

He was picked at once as a suspicious person and when he reached Foster the secret service man held a hand on him until he had gotten to the President and had clasped the Chief Executive's hand. Ireland was equally alert and the slightest move on the part of this man, who is now supposed to have been an accomplice, and for whom a search is being made, would have been checked by the officers.

THE ASSAILANT ENTERS.

Immediately following this man was the President's assailant. He was a rather tall, boyish-looking fellow, apparently 25 years old, and of German-American extraction. His smooth, rather pointed face would not indicate his purpose in slaying the nation's Executive.

The secret service men noted that about his right hand was wrapped a handkerchief. As he carred the hand unlifted, as if supported by a sling under his coat, the officers believed his hand was injured, and especially as he extended his left hand across the right so as to shake hands with the President. It was noticed that the person who was in front of the assassin held back, apparently to shield the young man, so it was necessary for Ireland to push him on.

The organist had now reached the climax to the wild strains of the sonata. A more inspiring scene could hardly be imagined. Innocently facing the assassin the President smiled a smile of dignity and benevolence as he extended his right hand to meet the left of the supposedly wounded fiend.

TWO RAPID SHOTS.

As the youth extended his left hand he, quick as a flash, as if trained by long practice, whipped out his right hand—the one which held the pistol. Before anyone knew what was transpiring two shots rang out, one following the other after the briefest portion of a second.

For the first moment there was an awful hush. The sonata died instantly, the people stopped and could not breathe. Then there was pandemonium. The Chief Executive, it was known, had been shot.

The President drew his right hand quickly to his chest, raised his head and his eyes rolled. He swerved a moment, reeled and was caught in the arms of Secretary Cortelyou, to his right.

"MAY GOD FORGIVE HIM."

Catching himself for the briefest second the President, whose face was now of the whiteness of death, looked at the assassin as the officers and soldiers bore him to the floor and said feebly and with the most benevolent look it is possible to imagine:

"May God forgive him."

The President was carried first one way, then a step in another direction. The excitement was so sudden that for a moment no one knew what to do. Finally someone advised carrying him inside the purple edge of the aisle and seating him on one of the chairs.

The bunting was in a solid piece. No one had time to produce a knife had he been able to think of such a thing. A couple of men tore the benches aside and trampled the bunting down, while Mr. Milburn and Secretary Cortelyou half carried the President over the line and into the passageway leading to the stage, which had not been used.

The President was able to walk a little, but was leaning heavily on his escorts. In passing over the bunting his foot caught and for a moment he stumbled. A reporter extricated his foot, and the President was carried to a seat, where a half dozen men stood by and fanned him vigorously. Quick calls were sent for doctors and to the ambulance.

"THIS WOUND PAINS GREATLY."

While seated for a moment Secretary Cortelyou leaned over the President and inquired:

"Do you feel much pain?"

White and trembling, the President slipped his hand into the opening of his shirt front near the heart and said:

"This wound pains greatly."

As the President withdrew his hand the first and second fingers were covered with blood. He looked at them, his hand dropped to his side, and he became fainter. His head dropped heavily to his chest and those about him turned away.

During this pathetic scene, while tears were filling the eyes of those about the President, who realized their utter powerlessness to help him, Minister Aspiros, of Mexico, broke through the little crowd excitedly and awakened the faint into which the President had sunk by dramatically exclaiming in English:

"Oh, my God, Mr. President, are you shot?"

While the excited diplomat was being restrained from caressing the Executive and falling at his feet, the President replied, gasping between each word:

"Yes——I—believe——I——am."

BORE HIMSELF BRAVELY.

The President's head then fell backward and he partially fainted. Mr. Milburn placed his hand back of the wounded man's head and supported it. This seemed to resuscitate the President and he sat stoically in the chair, his legs spread out on the floor, his lips clinched firmly, as if he would fight determinedly against death. He was giving the fight of a soldier, and more than one turned away tremblingly—all in the building trembled and shook, not from fear, but the tension—and remarked:

"He is certainly a soldier."

ASSAILANT OVERPOWERED.

While all this was transpiring the tragedy had not yet ended on the scene of the shooting. The shots had hardly been fired when Foster and Ireland were on top of the assailant. Ireland quick as thought had knocked the smoking weapon from the man's hand and at the same time he and his companion officer, with a dozen Exposition police and as many artillerymen, were upon the assailant. He was literally crushed to the floor.

While the President was being led away the artillerymen and guards cleared the building in a few moments of those who had entered to meet the Executive, but to do this it was necessary to draw their saber bayonets and use extreme force.

KNOCKED DOWN BY A DETECTIVE.

Foster had reached under the crowd and by almost superhuman strength pulled the intending murderer from under the heap. The man was grabbed by half a dozen guards and soldiers and by the secret service men who were near the scene at the time. Forcing the youth—for that is what he is—to the open, Foster clutched him by the throat with his left hand saying:

"You murderer"——

Then he struck the assailant a vicious blow with his rock-hard fist squarely in the face.

The blow was so powerful that the man was sent through the guards and sprawling upon the floor. He had hardly touched the floor when he was again set upon, this time by the guards and soldiers. He was kicked repeatedly until Captain Damer rushed in and drew back the guards. Foster made another attempt to get at the assailant, but he was held back, although he protested that he had possession of his mind and that he knew what he was doing.

COLLAPSED AFTER CRIME.

The assailant was not given time to say a word. He was as white as his illustrious victim, and was shaking from head to foot. He had not the power to beg to be saved from the lynchers.

Weak with the excitement, he was unable to stand on his feet, and he fell to the floor.

A half dozen guards, as many soldiers and several secret service men grabbed him—several at his feet, more at his head, but none to support his body. He was rapidly dragged over the floor up a short flight of stairs and into a room back of another to one side of the stage. There he was locked in with the soldiers, guards and detectives, most of whom drew their revolvers ready to withstand any attempt which might be made by a mob.

This was a dramatic scene. The assassin had been hurled into a far corner of the room, where he lay in an apparently lifeless heap, his clothes torn, his face bleeding and his breath coming short. He shook all over like a mass of gelatin. His eyes rolled now and then to the ceiling and his limbs twitched nervously. Thus he was kept waiting until steps could be taken for removing him to a police station.

ASSAILANT OFF TO PRISON.

After the arrest of the assailant he was hurried into a little room just off the west stage of the Temple of Music, being dragged through the crowd by Patrolmen James and McCauley.

His lip was bleeding and his face was swelling. Around him there was a group of officers. Once inside, the door was closed with a bang, and the crowd surging against that part of the building with a blind impulse to get near him fairly made the walls creak.

The entire scene in the room was for a moment confusion. There were busy officials going in and out of the door. Some were trying to conceal the fact that the prisoner was there and others betrayed the fact in a loud voice as soon as they had left the room. One excited Exposition official invited the people to "go in and get the man."

In the room with the prisoner were Colonel Byrne, commandant of the Exposition police; Captain Vallely, chief of the Exposition detective bureau; Detective Zeigler, Buffalo Police Detectives Solomon and Geary, Secret Service Men Ireland and Foster, Major Robertson and Captain Damer, of the Exposition police; Mr. John N. Scatcherd and a few others coming and going.

ASSAILANT WAS NERVOUS.

The prisoner was set on the table in the room and sat there, now and then putting his sleeve up to his lip. At other times he was looking at the floor or keeping his shoe soles close together, rubbing them nervously. He would now and then breathe deeply with nervous agitation, but of other signs there were none. The man remained silent.

Outside the building could be seen a great, tumultuous throng of people. From all quarters of the grounds they were gathering toward the common center. Now and then a woman's face could be seen peering up over the heads of those in front and struggling to raise her hand so she could wipe away the tears from her eyes.

On a lofty perch on one of the great staff flower jardinieres an old man with a long white beard, a broad-brimmed veteran's hat, and a G. A. R. button in his lapel, sat shaking his head in sorrow. Now and then some man's voice would call out: "Don't let him get away," and there would be a score of answering shouts of "Kill him; hang him!" "Take him up on the arch and burn him!"

A mail wagon, only the top of which was visible above the crowd, appeared coming from the direction of the Government Building. The angry crowd thought it was the conveyance which was coming to get the man.

"Guard the door and stop that wagon," yelled a big man who is a Midway character and who stood on one of the pillar bases, clinging on to have a better point of view. The wagon was stopped, but a moment after proceeded, taking a circuitous route.

MARINES LOAD RIFLES.

Around the main doors was a squad of 15 police and a detachment of United States marines. They had just arrived at that station and were in command of Captain Leonard. The marines formed in line and in a loud, clear voice soon came the order "Load rifles." The breeches clicked and the men held up to plain view the hard steel as they filled the Lee-Metfords with cartridges.

The moral effect was obvious, for the women started a movement to draw back and the tense wave of vengeance seemed broken. Men and women who had been dry eyed began to cry.

The lips of soldiers and policemen were twitching, but the heads on the broad shoulders were motionless, as the breath was held firm and steady. So men look when facing a mighty duty with a mighty heart.

GETTING A VEHICLE.

The little room where the prisoner was contained a quantity of rope of different sizes and sorts. It is the rope used for shutting off the esplenade at times of drill and especial fetes.

"Rope off the south approaches to the building, so that we can get the wagon in here," said Colonel Byrne, referring to an automobile police wagon.

"You will never get that wagon with him in it 40 feet away," said Detective Ireland. "We must have a carriage and horses. The people can stop an automobile better then they can horses."

Some distance away was the carriage in which a portion of a committee had come to the Temple of Music.

"Get that carriage over there—or here, never mind, I will," said Mr. Stratcheard to the sergeant of the police at the southwest door.

On the box of the carriage was a stockily built little Irish coachy. As he received his orders that it was to be his carriage which was to take the would-be assassin through that eager, bloodthirsty, vengeful mob a slow smile of pleasure spread into a delighted grin.

"All right," he said curtly, and never another word until the prisoner was safely behind bars.

"The best plan is to jump the man right into the carriage and get right out of here," said Detective Ireland.

Captain Damer and Colonel Byrne quietly directed exterior movements of the police and informed the military guards, both marines and artillerymen.

REMOVING THE PRISONER.

The roped-off space was sufficient to admit the carriage. Colonel Byrne gave the signal. Guards James and McCauley were on each side of the prisoner as they took him to the door. Captain Vallely led the way, with Detectives Solomon and Geary just behind.

The Irish coachy whipped up his team and dashed to the door, the marines and artillerymen dropped their guns until the bayonets were at "charge." A policeman swung open the carriage door. The door of the southwestern entrance to the little room opened, and out came the prisoner and his convoy. He was literally hurled into the carriage by the burly patrolmen. Secret Service Man Foster slammed the door and the carriage was off on a mad dash for the triumphal causeway and the Lincoln Park gateway beyond.

At the minute the carriage drew up a wild, mad surge of people came from all the other doors, for a yell had gone up:

"Here he comes! This door! This door!"

The lines of soldiers and policemen swayed, but held firm.

AWFUL ROAR OF CROWD.

"There he is, there he is! Kill him, kill him! Hit him, hit him! Aye, aye! Don't let that carriage get away, you cowards—stop it. Kill the bloody anarchist!" It was a bedlam of curses and yells from people fighting in closer, waving their fists, with here and there a revolver gleaming as its bearer threw it up in the sunlight above his head. The roar of that crowd was a sound never to be forgotten by any who have heard it. It had the deadly, intense growl, the wild bloodthirsty shriek and the savage note that are heard only in the voices of an angered mob.

As the carriage moved away Captain Vallely swung himself free from the crowd of officers and leaped with one bound to the seat beside the coachman. Men, and even women, sprang forward, caught the fenders or snatched at the horses' harness.

(Continued on Page Eight.)

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1901. NUMBER 27.

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY IS SHOT TWICE, BUT HIS LIFE MAY BE SAVED.

Bright Hopes For His Recovery Lighten the Gloom Of An Awful Tragedy at the Buffalo Exposition.

THE ASSAILANT WAS LEON CZOLGOSZ, AN ANARCHIST.

A Murderous Attack While the Chief Executive Was Holding a Reception in Temple of Music—One Bullet Produced a Light Wound, But Other Passed Through Stomach and Has Not Been Extracted.

LATEST NEWS FROM THE SCENE OF THE SHOOTING.

William McKinley, President of the United States, was shot twice while holding a reception in the Temple of Music on the Pan-American Exposition grounds, Buffalo, at 4.12 o'clock on Friday afternoon.

One bullet took effect in the right breast and the other in the abdomen. The first wound was not of a serious nature and the bullet was extracted. The second bullet went through the President's stomach and lodged in the muscles of the back.

Strong hopes that the President will recover are felt by his physicians and the President's friends and admirers. The rents in the stomach were sewed up, but the second bullet has not been extracted.

The assassin is Leon Czolgosz. He was born in Detroit and went to Buffalo from Cleveland. He is an anarchist.

The President after the shooting was taken to the Emergency Hospital, on the Exposition grounds, and later to the residence of John G. Milburn, president of the Exposition.

SCENE AS HE WAS SHOT.

President Showed Great Bravery, and Said "May God Forgive Him" As He Looked at Assailant.

Five minutes before the President was shot the crowd was in the most cheerful humor in the Temple of Music. The police had found no trouble of any kind, and when the President's carriage, containing besides the Chief Executive President John G. Milburn, of the Pan-American Exposition, and Private Secretary George B. Cortelyou, drove up to the side entrance to the Temple it was met by a mighty salute of cheers and applause.

The three alighted and were escorted to the door of the building.

Almost immediately a carriage containing Secret Service Men George Foster and Samuel R. Ireland drove up, and these detectives, with several other Secret Service men, entered the building together. Inside they were met by Director-General Buchanan, who had arrived but a moment before, and he directed them as to where to stand.

In passing to the place the President took off his hat and smiled pleasantly to a little group of newspaper men and to the guards who had been stationed in the place. To one of the reporters he spoke smilingly, saying:

"It is much cooler in here, isn't it?"

PRESIDENT STOOD IN AISLE.

The interior of the building had been arranged for the reception. From the main entrance, which opens to the southeast from the temple into the wide esplanade, where thousands had gathered, an aisle had been made through the rows of seats in the building to a point near the center. This aisle was abont eight feet wide and turned near the center to the southwest door of the temple, so that there was a passage dividing the south part of the structure into a right angle.

It was so arranged that the people who would shake hands with the President would enter at the southeast door, meet the President in the centre and then pass on out at the southwest door. Where the aisle made the curve in the centre of the building the corner had been decorated with tall palms and green plants, so the President stood under a bower. Both sides of the long aisle were covered with continuous strips of purple bunting.

SOLDIERS WERE AT HAND.

From the southeast door and extending on up to and around the curve was a line of soldiers from the Seventy-third Seacoast Artillery on each side. These were interspersed with neatly uniformed guards from the Exposition police, under the command of Captain Damar.

When the Presidential party was within the building the soldiers came to "attention" and all took their places. The President was escorted to the centre of the palm bower, and Mr. Milburn took a position on his left, so as to introduce the people as they came in.

Secretary Cortelyou stood by the President to the right. Secret Serviceman Foster, who has traveled everywhere with the President, took a position not more than two feet in front of Mr. Milburn and Secret Serviceman Ireland stood on his left, so that Ireland was the same distance in front of the President as was Foster in front of Mr. Milburn.

WAS IN FINE HUMOR.

Through this passage the people who would meet the President must pass. When all was ready, with detectives scattered throughout the aisle, the President smiled to Mr. Buchanan, who was standing near the corporal in charge of the artillerymen, and said that he was ready to meet the people. He was very pleasant and as he waited for the doors to open he rubbed his hands together, adjusted his long Prince Albert coat, and laughingly chatted with Mr. Milburn. Secretary Cortelyou gave a few last instructions to the officers as to the manner in which the crowds were to be hurried on through, so that as many as possible could meet the Executive.

Mr. Milburn ordered the door to open, and a wavering line of people, who had been squeezed against the outside of the door for hours, began to wend its way up through the lines of soldiers and police to the place where the President stood. An old man with silver-white hair was the first to reach the President, and on his shoulder the little girl he carried received a warm salutation.

Organist W. J. Gomph started on a sonata, low at first, and swelling gradually to more majestic proportions until the whole auditorium was filled with the melodious tones of the big pipe organ.

The crowd had been pouring through hardly more than five minutes when the organist brought from his powerful instrument its most roaring notes, drowning even the scuffle of feet.

Fully half of the people who passed the President were women and children. To every child the President bent over, shook hands warmly and said some kind words, so as to make the young heart glad. As each person passed he or she was viewed critically by the secret service men. Hands were watched, faces and actions noted.

A SUPPOSED ACCOMPLICE.

Far down the aisle a man of unusual aspect appeared taking his turn in the line. He was short, heavy, dark, and between a heavy dark mustache was a pair of straight bloodless lips. Under the black brows gleamed a pair of glistening black eyes.

He was picked at once as a suspicious person and when he reached Foster the secret service man held a hand on him until he had gotten to the President and had clasped the Chief Executive's hand. Ireland was equally alert and the slightest move on the part of this man, who is now supposed to have been an accomplice, and for whom a search is being made, would have been checked by the officers.

THE ASSAILANT ENTERS.

Immediately following this man was the President's assailant. He was a rather tall, boyish-looking fellow, apparently 25 years old, and of German-American extraction. His smooth, rather pointed face would not indicate his purpose in slaying the nation's Executive.

The secret service men noted that about his right hand was wrapped a handkerchief. As he carred the hand unlifted, as if supported by a sling under his coat, the officers believed his hand was injured, and especially as he extended his left hand across the right so as to shake hands with the President. It was noticed that the person who was in front of the assassin held back, apparently to shield the young man, so it was necessary for Ireland to push him on.

The organist had now reached the climax to the wild strains of the sonata. A more inspiring scene could hardly be imagined. Innocently facing the assassin the President smiled a smile of dignity and benevolence as he extended his right hand to meet the left of the supposedly wounded fiend.

TWO RAPID SHOTS.

As the youth extended his left hand he, quick as a flash, as if trained by long practice, whipped out his right hand—the one which held the pistol. Before anyone knew what was transpiring two shots rang out, one following the other after the briefest portion of a second.

For the first moment there was an awful hush The sonata died instantly, the people stopped and could not breathe. Then there was pandemonium. The Chief Executive, it was known, had been shot.

The President drew his right hand quickly to his chest, raised his head and his eyes rolled. He swerved a moment, reeled and was caught in the arms of Secretary Cortelyou, to his right.

"MAY GOD FORGIVE HIM."

Catching himself for the briefest second the President, whose face was now of the whiteness of death, looked at the assassin as the officers and soldiers bore him to the floor and said feebly and with the most benevolent look it is possible to imagine:

"May God forgive him."

The President was carried first one way, then a step in another direction. The excitement was so sudden that for a moment no one knew what to do. Finally someone advised carrying him inside the purple edge of the aisle and seating him on one of the chairs.

The bunting was in a solid piece. No one had time to produce a knife had he been able to think of such a thing. A couple of men tore the benches aside and trampled the bunting down, while Mr. Milburn and Secretary Cortelyou half carried the President over the line and into the passageway leading to the stage, which had not been used.

The President was able to walk a little, but was leaning heavily on his escorts. In passing over the bunting his foot caught and for a moment he stumbled. A reporter extricated his foot, and the President was carried to a seat, where a half dozen men stood by and fanned him vigorously. Quick calls were sent for doctors and to the ambulance.

"THIS WOUND PAINS GREATLY."

While seated for a moment Secretary Cortelyou leaned over the President and inquired:

"Do you feel much pain?"

White and trembling, the President slipped his hand into the opening of his shirt front near the heart and said:

"This wound pains greatly."

As the President withdrew his hand the first and second fingers were covered with blood. He looked at them, his hand dropped to his side, and he became fainter. His head dropped heavily to his chest and those about him turned away.

During this pathetic scene, while tears were filling the eyes of those about the President, who realized their utter powerlessness to help him, Minister Aspiros, of Mexico, broke through the little crowd excitedly and awakened the faint into which the President had sunk by dramatically exclaiming in English:

"Oh, my God, Mr. President, are you shot?"

While the excited diplomat was being restrained from caressing the Executive and falling at his feet, the President replied, gasping between each word:

"Yes——I—believe——I——am."

BORE HIMSELF BRAVELY.

The President's head then fell backward and he partially fainted. Mr. Milburn placed his hand back of the wounded man's head and supported it. This seemed to resuscitate the President and he sat stoically in the chair, his legs spread out on the floor, his lips clinched firmly, as if he would fight determinedly against death. He was giving the fight of a soldier, and more than one turned away tremblingly—all in the building trembled and shook, not from fear, but the tension—and remarked:

"He is certainly a soldier."

ASSAILANT OVERPOWERED.

While all this was transpiring the tragedy had not yet ended on the scene of the shooting. The shots had hardly been fired when Foster and Ireland were on top of the assailant. Ireland quick as thought had knocked the smoking weapon from the man's hand and at the same time he and his companion officer, with a dozen Exposition police and as many artillerymen, were upon the assailant. He was literally crushed to the floor.

While the President was being led away the artillerymen and guards cleared the building in a few moments of those who had entered to meet the Executive, but to do this it was necessary to draw their saber bayonets and use extreme force.

KNOCKED DOWN BY A DETECTIVE.

Foster had reached under the crowd and by almost superhuman strength pulled the intending murderer from under the heap. The man was grabbed by half a dozen guards and soldiers and by the secret service men who were near the scene at the time. Forcing the youth—for that is what he is—to the open, Foster clutched him by the throat with his left hand saying:

"You murderer"——

Then he struck the assailant a vicious blow with his rock-hard fist squarely in the face.

The blow was so powerful that the man was sent through the guards and sprawling upon the floor. He had hardly touched the floor when he was again set upon, this time by the guards and soldiers. He was kicked repeatedly until Captain Damer rushed in and drew back the guards. Foster made another attempt to get at the assailant, but he was held back, although he protested that he had possession of his mind and that he knew what he was doing.

COLLAPSED AFTER CRIME.

The assailant was not given time to say a word. He was as white as his illustrious victim, and was shaking from head to foot. He had not the power to beg to be saved from the lynchers.

Weak with the excitement, he was unable to stand on his feet, and he fell to the floor.

A half dozen guards, as many soldiers and several secret service men grabbed him—several at his feet, more at his head, but none to support his body. He was rapidly dragged over the floor up a short flight of stairs and into a room back of another to one side of the stage. There he was locked in with the soldiers, guards and detectives, most of whom drew their revolvers ready to withstand any attempt which might be made by a mob.

This was a dramatic scene. The assassin had been hurled into a far corner of the room, where he lay in an apparently lifeless heap, his clothes torn, his face bleeding and his breath coming short. He shook all over like a mass of gelatin. His eyes rolled now and then to the ceiling and his limbs twitched nervously. Thus he was kept waiting until steps could be taken for removing him to a police station.

ASSAILANT OFF TO PRISON.

After the arrest of the assailant he was hurried into a little room just off the west stage of the Temple of Music, being dragged through the crowd by Patrolmen James and McCauley.

His lip was bleeding and his face was swelling. Around him there was a group of officers. Once inside, the door was closed with a bang, and the crowd surging against that part of the building with a blind impulse to get near him fairly made the walls creak.

The entire scene in the room was for a moment confusion. There were busy officials going in and out of the door. Some were trying to conceal the fact that the prisoner was there and others betrayed the fact in a loud voice as soon as they had left the room. One excited Exposition official invited the people to "go in and get the man."

In the room with the prisoner were Colonel Byrne, commandant of the Exposition police; Captain Vallely, chief of the Exposition detective bureau; Detective Zeigler, Buffalo Police Detectives Solomon and Geary, Secret Service Men Ireland and Foster, Major Robertson and Captain Damer, of the Exposition police; Mr. John N. Scatcherd and a few others coming and going.

ASSAILANT WAS NERVOUS.

The prisoner was set on the table in the room and sat there, now and then putting his sleeve up to his lip. At other times he was looking at the floor or keeping his shoe soles close together, rubbing them nervously. He would now and then breathe deeply with nervous agitation, but of other signs there were none. The man remained silent.

Outside the building could be seen a great, tumultuous throng of people. From all quarters of the grounds they were gathering toward the common center. Now and then a woman's face could be seen peering up over the heads of those in front and struggling to raise her hand so she could wipe away the tears from her eyes.

On a lofty perch on one of the great staff flower jardinieres an old man with a long white beard, a broad-brimmed veteran's hat, and a G. A. R. button in his lapel, sat shaking his head in sorrow. Now and then some man's voice would call out: "Don't let him get away," and there would be a score of answering shouts of "Kill him; hang him!" "Take him up on the arch and burn him!"

A mail wagon, only the top of which was visible above the crowd, appeared coming from the direction of the Government Building. The angry crowd thought it was the conveyance which was coming to get the man.

"Guard the door and stop that wagon," yelled a big man who is a Midway character and who stood on one of the pillar bases, clinging on to have a better point of view. The wagon was stopped, but a moment after proceeded, taking a circuitous route.

MARINES LOAD RIFLES.

Around the main doors was a squad of 15 police and a detachment of United States marines. They had just arrived at that station and were in command of Captain Leonard. The marines formed in line and in a loud, clear voice soon came the order "Load rifles." The breeches clicked and the men held up to plain view the hard steel as they filled the Lee-Metfords with cartridges.

The moral effect was obvious, for the women started a movement to draw back and the tense wave of vengeance seemed broken. Men and women who had been dry eyed began to cry.

The lips of soldiers and policemen were twitching, but the heads on the broad shoulders were motionless, as the breath was held firm and steady. So men look when facing a mighty duty with a mighty heart.

GETTING A VEHICLE.

The little room where the prisoner was contained a quantity of rope of different sizes and sorts. It is the rope used for shutting off the esplenade at times of drill and especial fetes.

"Rope off the south approaches to the building, so that we can get the wagon in here," said Colonel Byrne, referring to an automobile police wagon.

"You will never get that wagon with him in it 40 feet away," said Detective Ireland. "We must have a carriage and horses. The people can stop an automobile better then they can horses."

Some distance away was the carriage in which a portion of a committee had come to the Temple of Music.

"Get that carriage over there—or here, never mind, I will," said Mr. Stratcheard to the sergeant of the police at the southwest door.

On the box of the carriage was a stockily built little Irish coachy. As he received his orders that it was to be his carriage which was to take the would-be assassin through that eager, bloodthirsty, vengeful mob a slow smile of pleasure spread into a delighted grin.

"All right," he said curtly, and never another word until the prisoner was safely behind bars.

"The best plan is to jump the man right into the carriage and get right out of here," said Detective Ireland.

Captain Damer and Colonel Byrne quietly directed exterior movements of the police and informed the military guards, both marines and artillerymen.

REMOVING THE PRISONER.

The roped-off space was sufficient to admit the carriage. Colonel Byrne gave the signal. Guards James and McCauley were on each side of the prisoner as they took him to the door. Captain Vallely led the way, with Detectives Solomon and Geary just behind.

The Irish coachy whipped up his team and dashed to the door, the marines and artillerymen dropped their guns until the bayonets were at "charge." A policeman swung open the carriage door. The door of the southwestern entrance to the little room opened, and out came the prisoner and his convoy. He was literally hurled into the carriage by the burly patrolmen. Secret Service Man Foster slammed the door and the carriage was off on a mad dash for the triumphal causeway and the Lincoln Park gateway beyond.

At the minute the carriage drew up a wild, mad surge of people came from all the other doors, for a yell had gone up:

"Here he comes! This door! This door!"

The lines of soldiers and policemen swayed, but held firm.

AWFUL ROAR OF CROWD.

"There he is, there he is! Kill him, kill him! Hit him, hit him! Aye, aye! Don't let that carriage get away, you cowards—stop it. Kill the bloody anarchist!" It was a bedlam of curses and yells from people fighting in closer, waving their fists, with here and there a revolver gleaming as its bearer threw it up in the sunlight above his head. The roar of that crowd was a sound never to be forgotten by any who have heard it. It had the deadly, intense growl, the wild bloodthirsty shriek and the savage note that are heard only in the voices of an angered mob.

As the carriage moved away Captain Vallely swung himself free from the crowd of officers and leaped with one bound to the seat beside the coachman. Men, and even women, sprang forward, caught the fenders or snatched at the horses' harness.

(Continued on Page Eight.)

Her Last Appearance

What Befell at a Benefit of a Former Pet of Paris.

MME. DE MIRAMOY had been a very pretty woman. More than that, she had been an actress of the first rank—an artist, in fact, who had been the petted idol of the Parisian public. But Mme. de Miramoy had married a baron and been left a penniless widow, and she had made the further mistake of growing old; and the public—which is a philosopher after its fashion, giving only when it receives—forgot her. So the great artist of a former day was slowly dying of loneliness and ennui, struggling alone but with all the strength of an embittered little old woman against poverty, in a small room on the sixth floor of a dark and cheerless house, among memories that made her age seem only the greater.

Sometimes it happened that, absorbed in these sad memories of her former greatness, she forgot to pay her rent. At such times it seemed to her that she could never drag herself out of her miseries, and, if she had not had a great horror of ridicule—for she was beginning to know life—she would have set the world to talking of her death. Her concierge, a pitiless Cerberus in steel spectacles, with a black cap and blue apron, added to her misery, for they were like two enemies who watch each other ceaselessly and seek only to annoy each other.

Even sleep deserted her; but at last, on one of these wakeful nights, the old actress jumped quickly up, found pen and paper, and wrote a letter. Then she crept back into bed and slept like a tired child.

A few days later a gentleman of a certain age, but of the most elegant appearance, presented himself at her house—at a very early hour, it must be confessed—and inquired of the ferocious Cerberus: "Mme. de Miramoy, if you please?"

The concierge eyed him from head to foot, threw him a short "sixth floor, third door to the left," and as the gentleman passed in, concluded: "The idea! At seven o'clock in the morning! Well, the old cat won't be cutting up her didoes long here, I can tell you."

"Poor little Honorine," thought the visitor, as he ascended the narrow stairway where his elbows touched wall and banister, and the close atmosphere of an ill-ventilated house assailed his nostrils. At last he reached the sixth landing, which was lighted by a very small and high window cut through the thick wall, and covered with an iron grating that was utterly useless, for no one could have climbed the wall to get in, or have passed out through such a narrow opening. The gentleman knocked gently, almost apologetically, at the third door to the left.

"Who is there?" demanded a tremulous voice.

"It is I, madame—M. Delisle."

"Heavens! M. Delisle himself! Wait a moment, wait a moment."

The visitor waited, amused by the sound of a pair of old shoes pattering over the bare floor, coming and going in every direction, of objects being moved about, of a window being opened, of a shrill voice that kept repeating: "Good heavens! M. Delisle himself! In a moment, in a moment."

Presently the chain was taken down and the bolt slipped back, the door was opened a little, two shining eyes appeared, looking like black holes pierced in a white face, with a pinch of rouge forgotten in a wrinkle on one of the cheeks, and finally a small figure appeared, clasping with one hand the folds of a scarlet dressing gown that threatened to fly open during a profound and reverential bow.

"M. Delisle! What an honor—"

M. Delisle entered the room and sat down on a velvet arm-chair near a window, from which only a patch of blue sky was visible, and, casting a glance about him, saw in one corner a disordered bed, a table cumbered with some cups and a run-down slipper, and on the walls a tumultuous array of portraits yellow with age, famous faces and others still unknown, some of them half-hidden under the leaves of a faded laurel wreath, all scrawled over with enormous dedications. A cat, purring amiably, came and rubbed his rounded back against the gentleman's legs.

"My dear madame—"

"Oh, M. Delisle," almost implored the little old woman, who had taken a seat opposite her visitor.

"Well, my dear Honorine, then; I have come as soon as possible to tell you that I have received your letter, that my theater is at your disposal for your benefit, and that your old friends have promised their assistance. Here is what Coquelin writes me—"

"Coquelin!"

"Mounet-Sully, Sarah—"

"She, too," and the little woman jumped from her seat like a young girl, and, with sparkling eyes, seized the letters M. Delisle held toward her.

"There is nothing more to arrange, except for you to select your role."

"I shall choose my great success. It is true that I have embodied all the roles as no one else ever did—no one of the present day has had such triumphs as I had, because—you will understand me, for you have always been a true critic—none of them knows how to give her whole soul to the service of her art. Not one of them sheds real tears as I shed them, not one of them trembles with passion as I trembled. And when I tore my hair and my clothing in a rage—it was real, it was real!"

"Yes, it was real," repeated M. Delisle, nodding his head, as the little woman, become young again, poured out a flood of words on his head. "Our day is far away and yet so near. Sarah, La Duse, Rachel even—"

"No, no, they were never able to declaim like me," and she recited a favorite passage with tragic emphasis, the grace of youth in her gestures and her voice firm and full of reserve power. "No, no, you know, Robert Delisle—But forgive me. This night will be the last flowering of my life. How grateful I am! Your portrait is always there," she broke off, inconsequently, indicating with her finger a portrait with a glowing dedication.

"How I have changed!" exclaimed M. Delisle.

"But not to me," sighed Mme. de Miramoy.

"Can you come to the theater tomorrow at two?"

"Yes, indeed. Oh, the thought of seeing all that I have loved so much!"

"Good-by, then, until to-morrow."

"I am your servant, as always," said the little old woman, with a low bow, as she accompanied the manager to the stair; and she stood there looking after him for a long, long time. But her emotion made her forget that the house was still asleep and that it was not yet eight o'clock, for she slammed the door noisily after her, and, stretching herself on the sofa, began to hum a love-song. Then she sighed. "Thank God, there is still some good in life."

They were exciting days that preceded the great night. Under the influence of her jealous emotion Mme. de Miramoy seemed to be no more than 30. She floated as if in a dream, and, calling up all the warmth and youth there was in her heart, she was not idle a minute. Visits, rehearsals, nothing tired her. She had insisted that large and striking posters, bearing her name in flaming letters, should be displayed in her street and in her room; there she recited her lines over and over again before the mirror, until she obtained the desired effect, studying her poses and expressions, scolding, even striking herself, or approving, smiling amiably at herself with eyes and lips.

The longed-for evening arrived. The little old woman seemed like one awakening from a long sleep as she entered her brightly lighted dressing-room, with its mirrors all about the walls. Mme. de Miramoy ran from one arm-chair to another, trying them all.

Suddenly she stopped still in the center of the room.

"Why, I have forgotten to eat my dinner! But then I have my flask of port."

Then, hearing the thousand noises of the theater, she went out, threaded her way through the throng of costumed personages who stood about in groups or wandered alone, mumbling their parts; passed open doorways where men and women chatted as they dressed; avoided the machinists, who were manipulating a tangled mass of pulleys and scenery in a bewildering confusion of orders, calls, cries, laughter and muffled clatter; and, more and more intoxicated, found her way to the front of the immense stage and looked through the peep-hole at the audience.

Under the lights moved a sea of blonde beards and bald pates, shining shirt-fronts and bared shoulders unwillingly veiled behind a waving cloud of soft feathers. Scarcely a familiar face among them, and how changed!—only the merest vestiges of the old days.

Mme. de Miramoy, feeling a sudden chill at her heart, hurried back to her dressing-room. Passively she let herself be dressed and made ready for her part.

"Why is it all so changed, and so quickly?" she wondered.

But at last she stood arrayed in all the glory of her peplum, looking as young as in her palmiest days. When she stood before the glass, she could scarcely believe her eyes. She stepped back and then went close up to the mirror, which seemed to have acquired magical properties; she smiled, she showed her teeth, she examined herself closely. Heavens! Was it possible? was she dreaming? No. She shivers like a wet little bird in a ray of sunshine. Her heart is beating wildly. She asks to be left alone for a moment, and once alone, she casts a swift glance around, hurries to her poor, every-day gown, searches hurriedly in the pockets, takes out a little flask, turns to a corner, and stoops down the better to conceal herself—and drinks. It is the port, which she has not forgotten, and which will give her strength. She stands up and waits. She tries her great scene:

"Rome, who has seen your birth."

Alas! her voice is no longer sure. Mme. de Miramoy shivers and sinks into a chair to think.

"Mme. de Miramoy," they call, presently, "it is your turn to go on."

But she does not move. There is a knock. She decides, rises, opens the door.

"Oh, M. Delisle, what a night!" she murmurs a little huskily, and, taking his arm, she allows herself to be led forth. Those who watch her as she passes think from her manner that she is frightened and dares not confess it. Her knees even seem to be weak under her as she walks. They all encourage her, and she is forced gently on the stage. As she appears, the entire house bursts into a great salvo of applause. Mme. de Miramoy advances, with one hand on her heart. Suddenly she stops and casts an uncertain glance about. Then, smiling weakly, she starts slowly to advance again, makes a false step, and tumbles prone and helpless on the stage.

—Translated for the San Francisco Argonaut from the French of Beppo de Casimi, by L. S. Vassault.

Australia's commerce is £30 per inhabitant a year; that of India, ten shillings only.

A SAGACIOUS BARBER.

How He Keeps His Customers in Willingness to Await Their Turn.

A barber in Brooklyn has solved the problem of keeping customers who are in a hurry from running away when they see all the chairs occupied. He has fitted up a gorgeous new shop, and back of it has arranged a gorgeous waiting-room, decorated in very good taste. It has heavy mahogany tables and luxurious easy chairs, and scattered around are not only all the chief illustrated periodicals of the day, but also well-bound popular novels, Macaulay's history, some of the poets, and two or three foreign comic papers and illustrated art journals. A customer on taking his seat, is asked politely if he would like to see a comic paper, a daily, "or, perhaps," says the next hair-trimmer, "you would prefer a history or a book of poems." The shop is a great success.

"You see," said the proprietor, "I used to make my men nervous to know that their particular patrons were sitting on the anxious seat waiting for their turn. Not only did the man in the chair get less attention, but I often lost customers who were too impatient to wait. Now, a man comes in a hurry, sees the chairs are full; and goes into the parlor, takes up a book, finds a nice easy chair and a cool corner, and forgets all about his hurry. I have ordered some games of chess and draughts, which will help still more to lighten the tedium of waiting for the cry of 'Next!' "—N. Y. Commercial Advertiser.

Doesn't Mind Snake Bites.

Antonio Adabio, foreman of a gang of Italian track hands on the New York Central railroad, has not the slightest fear of rattlesnakes. Last fall Adabio stepped on a snake, which sunk its fangs into the calf of his leg. The leg did not swell a particle. One morning lately, while at work at Jersey ShoreAdabio's men came upon a den of snakes, and all retreated with the exception of the charmed foreman, who managed to kill 11 of the reptiles. Blood flowed from the slight wounds on Adabio's legs, but he refused to accept medical aid and was working as usual next day.

Czarewitch After a Wife.

According to society gossip at London the Connaught household is the Mecca of marriageable princes. In addition to the report that the crown prince of Germany is there to court one of the daughters of the duke and duchess of Connaught, it is said that the betrothal of Princess Margaret of Connaught to the czarewitch (Grand Duke Michael, brother of the czar) will shortly be announced.

WEIGHING GOLD COIN.

New Machine That Does the Work of Six Men Used in Chicago Banks.

A machine which does the work of six bank clerks in weighing gold coins has been introduced in several Chicago banks, and its operation caused consternation among the bank employes. George Sites, of the First national bank, is one of the two inventors of the machine. Under his direction 3,000 gold coins at the Commercial national bank the other day were weighed, sorted and counted, says a Chicago special to the New York Times.

The fact that gold coins are accepted at weight value and not at face value is responsible for the invention of the machine. For some time banks have been receiving gold by weight, and the work of the teller has become arduous. Every grain that has been worn from a gold piece in circulation means a loss of four per cent. in value, and this amount has to be deducted.

Mr. Sites conceived the idea that the work of weighing the coin might be done by machinery. With the assistance of his brother-in-law, C. M. Reeves, he worked out the delicate mechanism. The coins are fed to the machine much as wheat to a mill. The standard weight coins are returned to one compartment and the underweight coins to another. The machine makes no mistakes.

QUEEN SOPHIA OF SWEDEN AND NORWAY.

Among the crowned ladies of Europe none is more simple in her ways of living and thinking than the charming queen of Sweden. Before her marriage to King Oscar, in 1857, she was a princess of the house of Nassau, and noted for her beauty, traces of which are still discernible in her regular features. Queen Sophia is the mother of four sons, the eldest of whom is the Crown Prince Gustavus, born in 1858. One of her other sons, Prince Oscar, married a commoner, Miss Ebba Munck, and relinquished his rights to the throne. His action, it is said, was sanctioned by his queen mother.

SOME GOOD SIGNS.

Teeth, Ears and Thumbs Furnish an Index to the Character of People.

Teeth that are long and not narrow denote large, liberal views, strong passions, and heroic virtues. If they are long and narrow, a weak character is denoted. Long noses are cautious and prudent; short ones impulsive; and tip-tilted ones hopeful, impulsive and joyous. Deep-colored eyes, with well-arched lids, both upper and lower, show a truthful and affectionate nature. An eyebrow slightly curling at the outer edge indicates a jealous nature.

If the apex of the ear lies close to the head the owner possesses a refined nature. But if the top starts away from the head at a well-defined angle that person has an uneven disposition, and is not to be relied upon.

If a girl's thumb lies flat or droops a little, marital submission to the master mind is indicated. If the thumb has a tendency to stand at right angles to the hand, the damsel owning it is headstrong.

A strong character has a strong, erect thumb. Fingers which bend backward mean powerful determination. If they are round, strength, both physical and mental, is indicated.

WOMAN CATCHES GIANT FISH.

Mrs. A. W. Barrett, a California woman, has the record of having caught the largest fish ever taken, without assistance, with a hook and line. The fish was a black sea bass. It required three hours and five minutes of work after the fish took the hook to land it, and it towed Mrs. Barrett's boat far out to sea and back again before it succumbed. The fish weighed 416 pounds, was seven feet long and five feet eight inches in diameter. It is being mounted and will be presented to the Los Angeles chamber of commerce by the president of the California Tuna club.

SWEDES IN AMERICA.

Established a Colony in Delaware as Early as 1638.

Some of Their Descendants Did Valiant Service for the Cause of Liberty — Maintain Many Churches and Journals.

As is well known, the Swedes founded a settlement on the Delaware in 1638, and the remembrance of this first Swedish emigration to America teems with interesting episodes. In an article in the Chicago Record-Herald Prof. Rasmus B. Anderson says that the Swedish language was used in a Philadelphia church as late as 1823 and then continues: I cannot here enter more fully into the details of this settlement, but I may be permitted to call attention to the fact, probably not generally known, that John Morton, one of the signers of the declaration of independence, and an active member of the continental congress, born at Ridley, Pa., in 1724, was a descendant of the Swedes on the Delaware. Robert Anderson, the gallant defender of Fort Sumter, against which the first gun of the rebellion was fired, was also a scion of the Swedes on the Delaware. Thomas F. Bayard, who served our country as senator, secretary of state and ambassador to England, repeatedly told me how proud he was of the fact that he was descended on his mother's side from these same Swedes. And so we see that love of freedom, patriotism, statecraft and all that makes for good citizenship came over to America not only in the Mayflower, but also in the Kalmar Nyckel and Vogel Grip. The first Swedish settlers on the Delaware came in the ship Kalmar Nyckel and in the yacht Vogel Grip, in 1638, just as the first Norwegian immigrants in this country left Norway in 1825 in the sloop Restoration.

Among the distinguished representatives of the Swedish-American group of our population I may also mention the famous rear admiral of the United States navy, John A. Dahlgren, who was born in Philadelphia in 1809. During the war of the rebellion he silenced Fort Sumter and secured a safe anchorage for the Monitor inside the bar of Charleston, and in this manner effectually put a stop to the blockade running, which had been so successfully practiced. His name is thus linked with that of the world-renowned John Ericsson, the inventor of the Monitor, and our navy is largely indebted to Dahlgren for the great improvements in its ordnance made since 1840. It is hardly necessary to add that John Ericsson, whose invention of the Monitor in 1862 made the north supreme on the sea and shortened the war of the rebellion, was a Swedish immigrant, born in Sweden July 31, 1803. He emigrated to England in 1826 and to America in 1839. In 1829 he invented the fire engine for extinguishing fires, and in 1834 he applied the screw instead of wheels for propelling vessels.

HON. JOHN LIND.
(One of the Most Distinguished Swedes Living in America.)

A large number of Swedes served in the war of the rebellion, and going back to the war of the revolution we find a brilliant Swede, Col. (afterward field marshal) Axel Fersen, who in 1779 went to France, where he was appointed colonel of the royal regiment of Swedes. At the head of his regiment he served in the later campaigns of the American war, and distinguished himself on various occasions, particularly in 1781, during the siege of Yorktown. Axel Fersen also took part in the negotiations between Gen. Washington and Gen. Rochambeau. He afterward became marshal of the kingdom of Sweden.

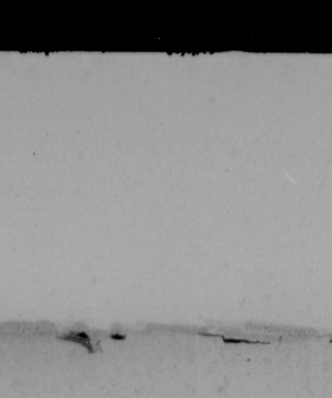
One of the most distinguished Swedes now living in this country is John Lind. He was born in Sweden March 25, 1854; came with his parents to Minnesota; was a member of congress from 1887 to 1893 and governor of Minnesota from 1899 to 1901.

The great and flourishing Swedish Lutheran Augustana synod was organized in 1851, and Rev. L. P. Esbjorn is regarded as the father of the Swedish Lutheran church in this country. The Augustana synod has a large college at Rock Island, Ill., and a flourishing college at St. Peter, Minn. It has a large number of fine church edifices and a host of able pastors and teachers. The Swedes in this country maintain a number of weekly newspapers which are edited with signal ability. They are loyal to American institutions and at the same time devoted to their Swedish inheritance. It may be said of the Swedes, as of the other representatives of the Scandinavian peoples, that they make excellent American citizens, and that the value of their citizenship is greatly enhanced by the interest they take in the language, history and literature of Sweden.

MISS EMILY HOBHOUSE.

English Girl Who Exposed the Horrors of British Concentration Camps in South Africa.

Miss Emily Hobhouse, the young Englishwoman who has come into prominence on account of her disclosures of cruel and inhuman practices in the British concentration camps in South Africa, is the youngest daughter of the late Archdeacon Hobhouse. Her childhood was spent in an ordinary parsonage house, and she continued to reside there after the marriages and departures from it of her brothers and sisters, until the death of her father in 1895, busying herself in parish work under his surveillance. When he died she came to the United States, going to Minnesota, whither many Cornish miners, with whom at St. Ives she had been closely acquainted in earlier days, had emigrated, and there looked after their spiritual and temporal welfare in the village of Virginia. She visited hospital and jail there, and preached temperance with some effect. But bad times came on; the mines were closed, and the population dispersed.



MISS EMILY HOBHOUSE.
(English Girl Who Opposes British Policy in South Africa.)

After her return to England Miss Hobhouse busied herself in unpaid work under the Women's Industrial council. She wrote an article on the conditions of the women who work in the great dustyards of London, and also one on the housing of single women. The war in South Africa interested her greatly, and she found herself in sympathy with the "Friends," who make it one of their duties to alleviate the horrors of every war. She learned something of the customs and language of the Boers from Dutch residents or visitors, and eventually determined to go out and personally distribute the clothing which had been collected from pitying souls. Her unofficial report, which has caused so much comment, was originally written in the shape of letters to her nearest relatives.

ADMIRAL CROWNINSHIELD.

Head of the Bureau of Navigation and One of the Central Figures in Schley Inquiry.

Capt. Arrant Schuyler Crowninshield, who is held responsible in some quarters for the bitterness of the controversy over the battle of Santiago bay, is chief of the bureau of navigation and as such has the rank and pay of a rear admiral. His position gives him the same power and influence possessed by the adjutant general of the army. He is the naval officer who advises the civilian head of the navy department on the technical management of the department. During the war he was practically the head of the navy. He prepared orders to ships and officers and Secretary Long signed them. When Schley failed to execute Crowninshield's orders as he thought they should be he criticised him to the secretary, particularly when Schley turned back from Santiago to go to Key West to coal. That criticism constituted the beginning of the Sampson-Schley controversy. Crowninshield was born in New York in 1843, was graduated from the naval academy in 1863 and was immediately assigned to the Ticonderoga. He participated in both attacks on Fort Fisher, became lieutenant in 1866, lieutenant commander in 1868, commander in 1880 and captain in 1894. He commanded the Maine in 1897 and was relieved by Capt. Sigsbee. Senator Lodge has been a warm friend of the captain for years, and Crowninshield's appointment to the chiefship of the bureau of navigation in 1897 is attributed to the influence of the Massachusetts senator. During the war with Spain Crowninshield was a member of the board of strategy.

CAPT. A. S. CROWNINSHIELD.
(Chief of the United States Bureau of Navigation.)

New Name for Potatoes.

A Chicago grocer has his potatoes ticketed: "Irish grape fruit."

PORTABLE SELF-FEEDER.

When Cattle Are Fed on Grass This Contrivance Will Be Found of Much Use.

A reader in Illinois sends us a sketch and description of a portable feeder he uses for cattle on grass. It is 12 feet long, 5 feet wide and 6 feet high. The bottom or floor (C) consists of two inclined planes, carrying the corn, etc., down to the openings A, B, and into the troughs outside. The sides are made to slide up and down a few inches, so that the feed can be shut off if desired, or the spaces A and B can be adjusted to deliver the grain in small or liberal quantities. A board roof keeps the grain dry. Sled-runners under this feeder enables it to be hauled around to any points desired. In the illustration the end is left open to show the construction. It must be boarded up tight. A part of the roof, or all of one side, can be hinged so as to throw back for putting in the grain. The illustration shows how the feeder is made, and anyone can make the dimensions to suit his wants.—Ohio Farmer.

HANDY SELF FEEDER.

FAIR PROFIT IN VEAL.

A Source of Income That Is Completely Neglected by Many Western Dairymen.

Too many make a mistake in not raising calves until of an age to sell for veal. It is a question with me whether it does not pay better to keep calves until near Christmas and then sell. One thing is sure. Let a farmer once work up an honest trade for such meat, and, like genuine fresh eggs or gilt-edged butter, he could put on a stiff price and still find a ready market.

Most farmers in this section kill their calves when a day or two old, and sell the hides for 60 cents or $1, according to size and weight, while the mother's milk must go to the pigs for some time, as it is not fit for butter or cheese. Now, why not adopt the practice that is beginning to come in vogue here of feeding this milk to calves until fit for use anywhere, then giving warm, sweet skimmilk with a little finely ground grain mixed in as the calf grows older? Soon one will have an animal on hand with a decided market value.

Calves must be kept dry if they are to thrive, and a run on the ground in the open air is as good for them as an occasional tonic is for their owners. My father always fed a little sulphur about once a week, and I never remember his losing a calf with the disease called blackleg. A little salt in the feed once in awhile is also good for them. We turn them out into a dry, well-fenced piece of meadow as soon as the weather is warm enough, and provide a good shelter from the sun and storm. Unless there can be running water in their quarters it is kept in a trough for them and removed every day. They are well fed, and it is surprising how soon they attain marketable size.—Farm and Home.

ROADS WITHOUT DUST.

They Are Pleasant to Travel Over, But Only When They Rest on a Solid Foundation.

It seems just possible that automobiles, rubber tires and the desire for traveling fast, in conjunction with the fact that these three factors produce an intolerable amount of dust on the best roads of to-day, may lead to new methods in road building which eventually will supersede macadamizing in the ordinary sense of this word. Experiments with this end in view, such as those made in California with crude petroleum for smoothing the roadway and rendering it "dustless," may be of the highest interest for the development of motor traffic, but a dangerous tendency to overlook the fixed data of the road-building art crops out too frequently in the experiments made in this country. It was one of the greatest merits of MacAdam that he never tired of resisting propositions for cheap and unscientific compromises in road construction but stoutly and successfully maintained that there is one principle which must be absolutely adhered to if the good quality of any new road shall be permanent, viz.: a foundation resting as a solid and impermeable crust on the natural soil protecting it against all changes due to rain or frost and supporting a porous layer which will absorb or shed water and to which all subsequent repairs should be confined. This requirement has never been successfully dispensed with and it seems more than doubtful whether it can be dispensed with now or in the future, whatever other changes may be inaugurated to remedy the dust evil which is the worst enemy of ordinary macadamizing.—Automobile Topics.

THE KOCH SENSATION.

German Bacteriologist's Tuberculosis Ideas Are Not Accepted by the World of Science.

The statement of Dr. Robert Koch, the eminent bacteriologist and physician, at the recent British congress on tuberculosis, that human tuberculosis and bovine tuberculosis were radically different diseases has created a stir among physicians and dairymen. Dr. Koch said he has amply demonstrated that cattle could not be infected with human tuberculosis. The counter proposition that human beings were not liable to infection from bovine tuberculosis was harder to prove, but he stated that personally he was satisfied that this was the case. Post-mortem evidence supporting this belief was recited at length. Human immunity from bovine infection disposes of the belief of infection from dairy products, and he considers this source of danger so slight as to be unworthy of precautionary measures. These statements, coming from the most eminent authority living, carry much weight and are greeted with much joy by dairymen, although they are not accepted by all scientists. Indeed, they are bitterly repudiated by Virchow and others almost as prominent as Koch, and the weight of professional opinion in the United States will be against Koch's latest views until they are at least fully substantiated by experience.

The absurd positions which some of our state boards of health and other officials have taken regarding tuberculous cattle are again emphasized, and it is shown that there has been needless slaughter of many animals. One of the strongest props of pure milk venders and tuberculin users will be knocked out from under them if Koch's views are sustained—that milk from infected cows is not dangerous to use. Already an agitation has been started in some states to repeal existing laws requiring the inspection and use of the tuberculin test on cattle.

There is no need to go to the other extreme and relax all vigilance in respect to tuberculosis among cattle. While a mild form of the disease does not affect the general usefulness of an animal, a badly infected herd never has and never can be profitable to the owner, because of the large death rate and great loss from diminished production of sick animals. It is evident to all that the most healthful surroundings, cleanliness and best care of the animals pays in increased production and better general health of the herd, and for this reason, if for no other, all badly affected animals should be disposed of. Dairymen and cattlemen must come to look upon tuberculosis in the same way as they do toward lumpy jaw, anthrax and other contagious diseases—that is disastrous to the herd and unprofitable to the owner. —Orange Judd Farmer.

SIMPLE MILK COOLER.

How to Make the Ends of a Large Hogshead Serve as a Tank for Milk Cans.

The illustration shows the end of a large hogshead cut off and fitted with a cover to serve as a tank for putting milk cans in ice water. A row of cans are set about the outside, while ice occupies the center space. A close fitting cover keeps out the heat. A wooden faucet or plug can be used for drawing off the water when desired. This is designed particularly for small cans holding 8½ or 10 quarts, but may be adapted for 40 and 50-quart cans.—Orange Judd Farmer.

IMPROVED MILK COOLER.

Dairy Wisdom in Granules.

Never use "butter increasers," for anything that will recover the casein as well as the fat from milk, is a fraud, and the product is not butter. Never milk in a rusty tin pail, or put milk into any receptacle that is rusty. Coloring matter does not affect the wholesomeness of butter. Never put ice into cream to cool it. If you let butter freeze it will soon go off flavor. The cow and not feed, gives the richness to milk. Ensilage does not affect the quality of butter, though to a very highly cultivated taste it may slightly flavor the butter. Milk contains from four to five per cent. of sugar. Cream is often kept too long in winter, and poor butter is the result. A good cheese ought to be one-third fat. Feed the cow the same for cheese as you would for butter.—Horace Benton, in Agricultural Epitomist.

Annual Butter Production.

It is reported that the annual output of butter in the United States has now reached the grand total of 1,400,000,000 pounds, which seems at first glance an aggravated case of overproduction, but when the amount is divided among our population it gives each one less than 18½ pounds for a whole year, or less than seven-ninths of an ounce a day. If everybody is able to eat as much butter as he wants, then we are among the lightest eaters of butter of the so-called civilized countries, and instead of trying to build up a foreign demand for butter we would better try to enlarge the appetite of our own people for that product.—Rural World.

FARM HOUSE CELLAR.

It Should Be Built or Repaired in Summer When the Soil Water Is at Its Lowest.

The farm house cellar is an important factor in the management of the farm. A poor cellar hastens the deterioration of the farm produce that may be stored in it for preservation during the winter. If any improvements are to be made in it, now is the time when they must be considered; as they should certainly be made during summer time and when the soil water is below the bottom of the cellar. If a cellar is to be valuable, dampness must be eliminated. There is no doubt that a cement floor is a desideratum in most cellars. The exceptions are the cellars where the natural texture and lay of the land are such that the bottom of the cellar is perfectly dry. Such cases are not, however, numerous in the prairie states where the ground is level. Generally the moisture in the ground works sideways enough to get under the cellar and then works upward.

Two results come from this: the cellar gets wet in spots and in rainy weather even pools form in the low places; the walls have their support softened and settle enough to cause cracks to appear in the ceilings and around the chimneys. The moisture once present is with difficulty removed, no matter how much the windows and doors are opened. This condition of affairs in the fall causes considerable loss. The fruits and vegetables are put into the cellar and should be kept cool. To do this the doors and windows should be opened during a part of the night to let in the cool air and should be closed during the day to prevent the cool air being displaced by the warm air. But in the numerous damp or wet cellars this is not possible. The doors and windows must be kept open during the day to assist in drying out the water that has soaked in during the time of the fall rains. This, of course, renders the cellar of very little value during the whole autumnal season. Just when the farm products should be kept cool they are repeatedly exposed to conditions of heat and moisture that start the life principles into activity. Not only so, but in the fruits and vegetables the molds and germs that make rot multiply and begin their destructive work.

It is therefore manifestly to the interest of the farmer to have a dry cellar and one that can be kept cool in the manner indicated. The first principle is to have a cellar that will not have to be kept open to insure freedom from moisture. A small sum of money spent in improving the cellar is sure to be a paying investment, to say nothing of the improvement in the sanitary conditions of the farm home.—Farmers' Review.

A RIGID FARM GATE.

How to Arrange One That Will Not Sag at the Outer End After a Little Use.

A good farm gate is a joy forever. The trouble with most farm gates is that they begin to sag at the outer end after a little use. This causes much, and oftentimes serious, inconvenience. Now, if the upright at the hinges can be kept rigidly in place, there is no reason why a gate should sag, provided it is properly constructed; and a proper construction is shown in the accompanying illustration, two braces being used, both of which hold the outer end of the gate exactly where it should be.

SECURELY BRACED GATE.

Another mistake with farm gates is that they are too frequently made of material not heavy enough to be strongly pinned at the ends of the bars. Secure pinning is always necessary in order to give the braces a chance to do their work thoroughly.—Frederick O. Sibley, in N. Y. Tribune.

HORTICULTURAL HINTS.

Plant no fruit trees unless you intend to feed and cultivate them. Set out first a diverse supply for home use; there is as much profit in these as in those planted for sale.

Radishes should not be allowed to go to seed the first season and scatter over the garden. Seed grown from the plants the first year is not apt to produce sound, brittle roots.

The peach will not thrive on low ground, preferring an elevated situation. Plums prefer a stiff, damp soil, therefore, plum stocks are often used for an orchard of peaches where the latter are to be planted on low ground.

According to a conservative estimate there will be 42 beet sugar factories in operation in the United States by the end of next autumn. Everything indicates that the industry is thoroughly established throughout the country.

While a weak solution of copperas will rid the cabbage plants of worms, if sprinkled upon them, a solution of pine tar will be found preferable. Prepare a quantity in a barrel, and have but little care as to the proportions, as the water will take up just so much of the tar, and no more.

If an old apple orchard is composed of trees having sound, vigorous trunks, it is well worth caring for, even if it bears poor kinds of fruit. It does not take more than three or four years to regraft and will then be more profitable than a young orchard is likely to be ten years after planting.—Midland Farmer.

Lamentable Forgetfulness.

As the steamer pitched and rolled in the waves the traveler heard through the thin partition a wailing voice in the next stateroom exclaim:

"Oh, mamma, it's coming on again, worse than ever!"

Then he heard a sleepy voice in reply:

"Marie, why don't you follow the directions you told me about before we came on board?"

"Because I've forgotten whether I ought to breathe in as the vessel rises and let the breath go out as it moves downward, or whether it ought to be the other way, and O! O! O! I wish I was dead!"—Chicago Tribune.

A Scholarly Retort.

A famous scholar, whose hobby was the derivation of words, had occasion to store his furniture while proceeding to the continent in quest of the origin of the term "Juggins." During his researches in Berlin he received from the warehouse company the following letter: "Sir—We have the honor to inform you that the mattrass you sent to our store had the moth in it. Since the epidemic would expose the goods of other clients to injury, we have caused your mattrass to be destroyed."

The scholar replied: "Dear Sir—My mattress may, as you say, have had moth in it, but I am confident that it had an 'e' in it also."—London King.

All Servants Alike.

Towne—I could never understand why political officeholders are called public servants.

Browne—Why not?

"Because they're really our bosses."

"Well? I guess you never kept house, did you?"—Philadelphia Press.

His Scheme.

Tigg—Did you hear what Count Dedbroke tried to do when he came over here in search of an heiress?

Nigg—No. What was it?

"Wanted a position as tax assessor, so he could get inside information."—Baltimore American.

So Timely!

"I think it is so nice," said the fair young thing at the boarding house table during a labor discussion, "that the men can have their strikes during the hot months, when they would be wanting vacations, anyway." Baltimore American.

It is always easier to praise virtue than to pursue it.—Ram's Horn.

Big words do not always carry great weight of meaning.—Ram's Horn.

Every man thinks he does an honest day's work.—Washington (Ia.) Democrat.

It is because only the first step counts that the following ones are so easy.—Town Topics.

Tastes change in many respects, as we grow older, but we steadily prefer the unobtainable.—Puck.

Being ignored altogether is no more odious to a sensitive woman than forced gallantry. —Town Topics.

It is better to be able to talk sense in one language than to chatter rubbish in two.—Ally Sloper.

If you cannot have what you prize it is a good thing to prize what you have.—Ram's Horn.

Miss Gabbeigh—"I had 15 proposals yesterday." Miss Sezzit—"Did the man stutter?"—Baltimore American.

Our latest submarine is named the Adder. Her business will be to subtract from the numbers of the enemy.—Boston Transcript.

No man can avoid his own company—so he had best make it as good as possible.—Atlanta Constitution.

Mrs. Bingo—"I wonder who sent us this book: 'What can be done with a chafing dish?'" Bingo—"I guess the doctor did." —Town and Country.

Not "Burke's Peerage."—"What's the name of that book that shows the social standing of the aristocratic families?" inquired the seeker after knowledge. "'Bradstreet's,'" promptly replied the man who knew.—Philadelphia Press.

Sorrow in a Side Show.—"How did the bearded woman take it when the manager discharged her?" "She faced it like a man till she went in the dressing-room, and got her false whiskers off, then she broke down and cried like a woman."—Philadelphia Evening Bulletin.

How He Loved Her.

A negro man went into Mr. E——'s office for the purpose of instituting a divorce suit against his wife. Mr. E—— proceeded to question him as to his grounds for complaint. Mr. E—— looked up from his papers, and saw that big tears were running down over the cheeks of the applicant for divorce.

"Why," said the lawyer, "you seem to care a great deal for your wife? Did you love her?"

"Love her, sir? I jest analyzed her!!"

This was more than professional dignity could withstand, and Mr. E—— laughed until the negro, offended, carried his case elsewhere.—Short Stories.

Seeking to Solve a Mystery.

The little East end girl who had hash for breakfast the other morning looked at the last mouthful of her share long and earnestly as she poised it on her fork. Then she passed it out of sight. But the mystery still engrossed her mind.

"Daddy," she said, "what was hash when it was alive?"—Recollections of Mrs. Minnie E. Leo, in What to Eat.

At Norumbega Park.

First Monkey—What is that standing out there with its hair parted in the middle and sucking a cane?

Second Monkey—That's a man.

"Just to think that such a looking thing as that should have descended from us!"—Boston Post.

An Answer for the Anxious.

Marie B., of Waverly—No, Marie, just because the young man writes you a letter on fly paper, you need not jump at the conclusion that he is stuck on you. No, indeed.—Baltimore American.

Ask Your Dealer for Allen's Foot-Ease, A powder to shake into your shoes. It rests the feet. Cures Swollen, Sore, Hot, Callous, Aching, Sweating feet and Ingrowing Nails, Corns, Bunions. Allen's Foot-Ease makes new or tight shoes easy. Sold by all druggists and shoe stores, 25c. Sample mailed FREE. Address Allen S. Olmsted, LeRoy, N.Y.

Another Record Smashed.

Finding undigested food in the stomach of a Siberian mammoth that had been dead 50,000 years breaks the record for chronic dyspepsia.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

Piso's Cure for Consumption is an infallible medicine for coughs and colds.—N. W. Samuel, Ocean Grove, N. J., Feb. 17, 1900.

Far from Sufficient.

Her Admirer—You know I would do anything in reason to please you.

She—Anything in reason? I knew you only imagined yourself in love!—Puck.

Check Coughs, Colds and Croup With Hoxsie's Croup Cure. No opium. 50 cts.

He who slanders another smuts himself. —Ram's Horn.

STARK TREES best by test—47 YEARS. LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. We WANT MORE SALESMEN PAY CASH Weekly STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Co.

OPIUM WHISKY and other drug habits cured. We want the worst cases. Book and references FREE. Dr. B. M. WOOLLEY, Box 3, Atlanta, Ga.

WISCONSIN and MICHIGAN HOMESTEAD and SCHOOL LANDS. You can locate 160 acres near Railroad and Markets. For particulars address W. W. Light, Racine, Wis.

ABSOLUTE SECURITY.

Genuine Carter's Little Liver Pills.

Must Bear Signature of

Brent Good

See Fac-Simile Wrapper Below.

Very small and as easy to take as sugar.

CARTER'S LITTLE LIVER PILLS.

FOR HEADACHE. FOR DIZZINESS. FOR BILIOUSNESS. FOR TORPID LIVER. FOR CONSTIPATION. FOR SALLOW SKIN. FOR THE COMPLEXION

Price 25 Cents | GENUINE MUST HAVE SIGNATURE. Purely Vegetable. Brent Good

CURE SICK HEADACHE.

20,000 HARVEST HANDS

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Required to harvest the grain crop of Western CANADA. The most abundant yield on the Continent. Reports are that the average yield of No. 1 Hard Wheat in Western Canada will be over thirty bushels to the acre. Prices for farm help will be excellent. Splendid Ranching Lands adjoining the Wheat Belt. EXCURSIONS will be run from all points in the United States to the FREE GRANT LANDS. Secure a home at once, and if you wish to purchase at prevailing prices, and secure the advantage of the low rates, apply for Literature, Rates, etc., to F. PEDLEY, Supt. Immigration, Ottawa, Canada, or to JOS. YOUNG, 315 State St., Columbus, O., Canadian Government Agent.

☞ When visiting Buffalo, do not fail to see the CANADIAN EXHIBIT at the Pan-American.

READERS OF THIS PAPER DESIRING TO BUY ANYTHING ADVERTISED IN ITS COLUMNS SHOULD INSIST UPON HAVING WHAT THEY ASK FOR, REFUSING ALL SUBSTITUTES OR IMITATIONS.

RHEUMATISM Van Buren's Rheumatic Compound is the only positive cure. Past experience speaks for itself. Depot 58 S. California Ave., Chicago.

WANTED GENTLEMAN or LADY AGENT, only one in each town, to SELL TEA at importer's prices. WRITE QUICKLY to HOME TEA CO., 32 Pearl Street, New York.

PISO'S CURE FOR CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS. Best Cough Syrup. Tastes Good. Use in time. Sold by druggists. CONSUMPTION 25 CTS.

A. N. K.—C 1880

PENSIONS on age, disability and Widowhood; P. L. or any U. S. Service. LAWS FREE. A. W. McCORMICK & SONS, Cincinnati, O.; Washington, D. C.

SOZODONT for the Teeth and Breath 25c At all Stores, or by mail for the price. HALL & RUCKEL, New York.

A DEAD LIVER

He thinks he lives, but he's a dead one. No person is really alive whose liver is dead. During the winter most people spend nearly all their time in warm, stuffy houses or offices or workshops. Many don't get as much exercise as they ought, and everybody knows that people gain weight in winter. As a rule it is not sound weight, but means a lot of flabby fat and useless, rotting matter staying in the body when it ought to have been driven out. But the liver was overburdened, deadened—stopped work. There you are, with a dead liver, and spring is the time for resurrection. Wake up the dead! Get all the filth out of your system, and get ready for the summer's trials with clean, clear blood, body, brain free from bile. Force is dangerous and destructive unless used in a gentle persuasive way, and the right plan is to give new strength to the muscular walls of the bowels, and stir up the liver to new life and work with CASCARETS, the great spring cleaner, disinfectant and bowel tonic. Get a box to-day and see how quickly you will be

BROUGHT BACK TO NEW LIFE BY

Cascarets CANDY CATHARTIC

BEST FOR THE BOWELS

10c. 25c. 50c. ALL DRUGGISTS

To any needy mortal suffering from bowel troubles and too poor to buy CASCARETS we will send a box free. Address Sterling Remedy Company, Chicago or New York, mentioning advertisement and paper. 424

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 12, 1901.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET

For Comptroller of the Treasury:
HERMAN S. PLATT,
Of Baltimore City.

For Clerk of the Court of Appeals:
THOMAS PARRAN,
Of Calvert County.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY TICKET.

For State Senator:
ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

For House of Delegates:
PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.
CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

For Sheriff:
WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

For Treasurer:
JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 14.

For County Commissioners:
TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.
JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

For Register of Wills:
EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

For County Surveyor:
FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

The Wounded President.

In the words of the Immortal Garfield, himself the victim of a foul assassin, "The President and the government at Washington still live." Hope always ascendant in the human breast is kindled anew. An All Wise Providence gives ear to the united prayer of a suppliant people. Though yet within the confines of danger, divine and mortal influences are directed toward the rescue. The assurance from a corps of learned surgeons that the President will live constitutes the happiest tidings of this most anxious hour. Enabled by a superb physique and surpassing fortitude to hold his own against the murderous menace of his wounds, the further hope is born, that anarchical revenge shall not triumph. No untoward complications or symptoms have been revealed and while there is a marked disturbance of physical functions, the President is resting quietly.

Ministered to by the most skilled physicians and tenderly waited upon every moment of the day, nothing is being left undone to aid the wounded President in his gallant struggle with the advance guard of Death. But the suspense is terrible and yet it must be. It seems so like an age and yet the actual time of waiting will be of short duration. Meanwhile the national heart prays for the President's recovery through earnest affection for the man, and find solice in the divine declaration of the efficacy of prayer. Party strife, ashamed and silenced, is submerged by the boundless sympathy of the nation.

Mingled with that limitless wave of sympathy and hope for the best is the fierce and involuntary outcry for vengeance, fearlessly spoken by a nation of eighty millions of people. It is high time that anarchy shall be suppressed. Within a life time three of America's ablest rulers have been stricken down by assassins. Abraham Lincoln fell amid the dying passions of civil strife, murdered by a fanatical desperado. James A. Garfield died during a period of political excitement, the victim of a half deranged partisan. But this is an instance, most ominous of all, for the life of William McKinley has been sought in a period of most profound peace and prosperity by one of a league of professed murderers and avowed enemies to government. No man for an instant doubts that this is the culmination of an organized anarchist plot. It is but the sequel of the ravings of Most, Goldman and others of that ilk in their glorification of the Haymarket horror and the killing of King Humbert. Such outrages have been tolerated by a peace loving, charitable people. The result of that toleration is seen to-day in Buffalo.

Those in the high stations and eminent places, who for a partisan purpose, though without personal enmity, have openly denounced the President's policy and administration of public affairs, let them pause to consider if their utterances may not have had an indirect influence in the commission of this crime. Granted that their sympathy is most genuine and that their lament comes from the innermost recesses of their hearts, but have their criticisms been sufficiently guarded? May their consciences be purged of remorse or blame.

Reverting to that detestible enemy of society, the anarchist, the imperative need of an organized effort to destroy organized assassins, is more than ever apparent. The peace-loving and law-abiding element must eliminate the element formed for murder. Anarchy is synonomous of murder, in deed or in thought. Let the punishment fit the crime.

Is Gorman a Democrat?

We copy the following from the Peninsula Democrat, one of the leading Democratic papers of Talbot county:

Gorman claims to be a Democrat.
The betrayer of the principles of his party—and still a Democrat!
The betrayer of the Platform of his party—and still a Democrat!!
The betrayer of the Presidential candidate of his party—and still a Democrat!!!
The betrayer of 15,000 white voters of Maryland, in the hope of disfranchising an uncertain number of negro voters—and still a Democrat!!!!
No, simply a trimming, tumbling, dodging politician, in the service of the Plutocrats. That is all.

AN exchange advises all to get sample ballots and teach illiterate men—white and colored—how to mark them so that they may vote against the party that would take their rights from them by denying them the privilege of an American citizen—that of voting. It is good advice. Because a white man, from no fault of his own, was deprived of the benefits of an education, is that a reason why he should now have his right to vote taken from him?

The Maryland Campaign.

Republicans and Democrats in Maryland have now entered upon a political campaign which promises to be one of the most notable in the history of the State. Though it will be full month and more before the hardest work will begin, yet already have the leaders begun to take counsel with each other and lay their plans for bringing out the full strength of their parties on election day. Some of the nominations have already been made, and others will follow soon. The party that dares to put in the field candidates unworthy to fill the positions for which they are nominated will only invite defeat, for the majority of Maryland voters will not give their suffrages to men known to be unworthy.

At the gathering of Democrats in Baltimore on Tuesday leaders in a number of the counties made predictions regarding November results which reminded one very much of the rainbows Chairman Jones used to paint regarding the way Bryan was going to carry nearly every State in the Union. Every astute politician knows of how little value such predictions are, and they are generally given out for the sake of stirring up party enthusiasm and affecting the votes of those who are always anxious to be on the winning side. Here, two months before the election, Democrats who predict that they are going to carry counties that have for years been giving Republican majorities are simply giving out statements which make the thoughtful laugh. Nor is there any proof of the statement that the Maryland Democrats are united and will go into this campaign with solid ranks. The Bryan wing of the Maryland Democracy is by no means dead, nor are the members of the party a unit on the work done by the Maryland legislature at its extra session.

In fact, the election law of Maryland is sure to be a leading issue in this campaign. Democrats will have to meet the charge that a special session was called at the instance of their party bosses to change the election law in the hope of continuing the reign of these bosses in the State. The defenses that have been made of the action of the extra session have been very weak and very unsatisfactory. The little tests that have been made of the law at the local elections held since its passage have shown that it has done no good to the party that made it, but has kept from the polls a large number of citizens who have heretofore been classed as among the most upright and conscientious voters in the State.

Republicans have every reason to feel encouragad at the outlook. The people of Maryland will not tolerate the thoroughly dishonest election law now on the statute books, and must look to a Republican legislature to wipe it off. A Democratic victory in Maryland this fall will mean a triumph of the old regime, and a return to those methods which were once condemned and repudiated by the people.

PENALTY OF DEATH.

Move to Amend the Treason Clause in National Constitution—Marylander to Make It.

CUMBERLAND, MD., Sept. 8.—Representative George A. Pearre, of the Sixth Maryland Congressional district, said this evening:

"The awful calamity that has befallen the country in the attempted assassination of the President thrusts upon the attention of the country and Congress several questions as to immigration, naturalization and the adequacy of the present laws punishing such attempts. So absolutely inexcusable are they in a free land like this that the framers of the Constitution in their far-seeing wisdom seemed never to have considered their possibility.

"If the President should live it is appalling to contemplate that the fiend who struck him down, could, under the laws of the State of New York, be confined in the penitentiary for 10 years at most. The State doubtless allows some reduction of sentence for good behavior, perhaps, two months in the year, which would make the total confinement eight years and two months. This is palpably inadequate and demands Congressional action. The present case cannot, of course, be reached, but fit penalty can be provided in the future for such a henious crime.

"The man who makes a murderous assault upon the head of the nation is a traitor, and his act should be treason. This, in my judgment, can be accomplished only by way of amendment to the Constitution of the United States, which, in Section 3 of Article 3, now defines what acts shall constitute treason, as follows: 'Treason against the United States shall consist only in levying war against them or in adhering to their enemies, giving them aid and comfort.' This section should be so amended as to cover all murderous assaults upon the President not resulting in death. The amendment might even go so far as to cover conspiracies to murder the President, such as anarchist plots.

"I shall introduce a bill in the next Congress amending the Constitution so as to make such assaults treason and the penalty death. It will receive the necessary votes in both houses without doubt and the ratification of every State."

Chamberlain's Pain Balm applied to a cut, bruise, burn, scald or like instantly allay the pain and will heal the parts in less time than any other treatment. Unless the injury is very severe it will not leave a scar. Pain Balm also cures rheumatism, sprains, swellings and lameness. For sale by all druggists.

E. W. Grove

This signature is on every box of the genuine Laxative Bromo-Quinine Tablets the remedy that cures a cold in one day

Call for Your Letters.

Mrs. C. R. Haller, Miss Mae Davis, Miss Sadie Carter, Miss Carrie Broadwater, Miss Lina Johns, Mr. W. T. Ganchmen, Mr. S. C. Clark, Mr. D. Cochrun, Master Philip Ewing Easter.

Oil for the Children.

Give them oil—cod-liver oil. It's curious to see the result.

Give it to the peevish, fretful child, and he laughs. Give it to the pale, anæmic child, and his face becomes rosy and full of health. Take a flat-chested child, or a child that has stopped growing, give him the oil, and he will grow big and strong like the rest.

This is not a new scheme. It has been done for years. Of course you must use the right oil. Scott's Emulsion is the one.

Scott's Emulsion neither looks nor tastes like oil because we are so careful in making it pleasant to take.

Send for free sample.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 409 Pearl St., N. Y.
50c and $1.00; all druggists.

APPOINTMENT OF Judges and Clerks of Election.

OFFICE OF
THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., Sept. 7, 1901.

The Board of Supervisors of Election for Garrett county, Maryland, having selected the following named persons to be Judges and Clerks of Election in and for the several election districts of said county in accordance with the provisions of Section 7 of Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws of the State of Maryland for the year 1897, hereby give notice of the names and postoffice address of each person so selected as Judges and Clerks and also the political party which the Board of Supervisors of Elections intends each of said person to represent, respectively.

The law makes it the duty of the Board to examine promptly into any complaints which may be preferred to them in writing against any person so selected and to remove any such person whom upon inquiry they find to be unfit or incapable to discharge the duties incumbent upon them as election officials.

Election District Number One—Swanton.

Peter J. Lohr, Democrat, Judge of Election, Beckman; John L. Fitzwater, Republican, Judge of Election, Beckman; Patrick Hamill, Democrat, Clerk of Eleetion, Thayerville; Alfred B. Mason, Republican, Clerk of Election, Beckman.

Election District Number Two—Friendsville.

Augustine Friend, Democrat, Judge of Election, Friendsville; A. M. Chisholm, Republican, Judge of Election, Friendsville; D. A. Turney, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Friendsville; George W. Sterling, Republican, Clerk of Election, Krug.

Election District Number Three—Grantsville.

Francis Garlitz, Democrat, Judge of Election, Avilton; Samuel J. Beachy, Republican, Judge of Election, Grantsville; John Custer, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Grantsville; Frank J. Foulk, Republican, Clerk of Election, Grantsville.

Election District Number Four—Bloomington.

Peter Fitzwilliams, Sr., Democrat, Judge of Election, Bloomington; Jesse Harris, Republican, Judge of Election, Bloomington; Stephen F. Broadwater, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Floyd; Floyd Duckworth, Republican, Clerk of Election, Westernport.

Election District Number Five—Accident.

Valentine Kahl, Democrat, Judge of Election, Accident; Tarleton O. Collier, Republican, Judge of Election, Cove; S. K. Schlossnagle, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Accident; Chauncey Bittinger, Republican, Clerk of Election, Cove.

Election District Number Six—Sang Run.

Lewis Kahl, Democrat, Judge of Election, Accident; John Sines, Republican, Judge of Election, Sines; William A. DeWitt, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Hoyes; Thomas P. Savage, Republican, Clerk of Election, Sang Run.

Election District Number Seven—Oakland.

William Broderick, Democrat, Judge of Election, Oakland; John Close, Republican, Judge of Election, Mountain Lake Park; Richard F. Bartlett, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Oakland; William P. DeHerry, Republican, Clerk of Election, Oakland.

Election District Number Eight Ryan's Glade.

Samuel Miller, Democrat, Judge of Election, Sunnyside; John H. Sanders, Republican, Judge of Election, Gortner; John A. Hughes, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Oakland; Warner T. Harvey, Republican, Clerk of Election, Gormania, W. Va.

Election District Number Nine—Johnsons.

Floyd Crow, Democrat, Judge of Election, Finzel; William Finzel, Republican, Judge of Election, Finzel; M. H. McKenzie, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Finzel; Richard McKenzie, Republican, Clerk of Election, Frostburg.

Election District Number Ten—Deer Park.

Joseph Lashorn, Democrat, Judge of Election, Deer Park; James Lish, Republican, Judge of Election, Deer Park; Michael J. Garrett, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Deer Park; W. W. Thrasher, Republican, Clerk of Election, Deer Park.

Election District Number Eleven The Elbow.

Peter F. Michael, Democrat, Judge of Election, Barton; Simon W. Green, Republican, Judge of Election, Lonaconing; Patrick S. Fazenbaker, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Barton; Johnson Broadwater, Republican, Clerk of Election, Merrill.

Election District Number Twelve—Bittinger.

Aaron Pritts, Democrat, Judge of Election, Beckman; James P. Wiley, Republican, Judge of Election, Grantsville; J. Turner Lohr, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Bittinger; Elias Orendorf, Jr., Republican, Clerk of Election, Bittinger.

Election District Number Thirteen—Kitzmillersville.

William H. Pool, Democrat, Judge of Election, Blaine, W. Va.; James H. Wilson, Republican, Judge of Election, Blaine, W. Va.; Cleaver Pool, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Blaine, W. Va.; George W. Kitzmiller, Republican, Clerk of Election, Blaine, W. Va.

Election District Number Fourteen—Oakland.

E. M. Spedden, Democrat, Judge of Election, Crellin; John A. Sowers, Republican, Judge of Election, Oakland; Jeremiah O. Browning, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Oakland; Samuel Lawton, Republican, Clerk of Election, Oakland.

C. E. ELLITHORP, Pres.,
FRANK WELCH,
A. G. STURGISS,
Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett County, Md.
EDMUND JAMISON, Clerk.

Special Rates to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition, Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Excursion tickets from Oakland, Md., to Buffalo and return via Pittsburg account Pan-American Exposition now on sale at ticket offices Baltimore & Ohio Railroad:

TEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

FIFTEEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $16.80.

SEASON TICKETS—On sale daily, good returning until Nov. 30th, 1901, $19.20.

For full details, time of trains, etc., call on Agent Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. til nov 1

Estray Notice.

There came to my place five miles north of Oakland on or about August 25 two hogs, both barrows, crops off left ears and holes in righ ears.

Owner will please come forward, pay all costs and damages and take same away.

27 3t ISAAC A. PAUGH.

Wealth

AND HOW TO ATTAIN IT

100,000 SHARES OF STOCK OFFERED AT 50c ON THE DOLLAR

For the purpose of further developing their holdings the Company has decided to place One Hundred Thousand shares of stock—par value one dollar—at Fifty cents a share. There is no oil proposition before the people to-day that offers such rich returns—with absolute safety of investment.

6 per cent. Guaranteed for 8 Years

The first one hundred thousand shares, besides being non-assessable, are guaranteed to pay 6 per cent. interest annually for eight years. Every single share of the one Hundred Thousand sold will bear the indorsement of The Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco, a trust company incorporated under the laws of California, for Twenty Millions of Dollars, guaranteeing that The Central Pacific Oil Company will pay a dividend of 6 per cent. per annum for 8 years.

Read what the Chic b g Western Trade Journal of July 2 has to say editorially:

"Greater fortunes have been made out of oil than any other product Mother Earth has yet given us. Rockefeller could not have acquired his hundreds of millions in a few years through any other source, nor the Standard Oil Company have paid dividends making hundreds and thousands of millionaires out of men who started with but the clothes they wore. California is about to take the lead among its sister states in the production of this great treasure. Such persons as Henry Crocker, Claus Spreckles, Mrs. Phoebe Hearst and other multi-millionaires are putting thousands into the newly-discovered oil fields.

Wise ones who get at the start are sure to make fortunes.

This being the situation, the question naturally arises, how and where an investment in oil development stocks should be made. Common justice to our readers requires that we should advise them as to a reliable company, whose stocks are offered on a basis which insures safety and speedy profits. Such a corporation is the Central Pacific Oil Company—611 to 617 Laughlin building, Los Angeles, California—which represents the biggest oil proposition before the world today—including, as it does, the consolidation of the cream of the Kern river, Bakersfield, Ventura, Sunset, McKittrick, Tehachapi, Kramer, Newhall, Los Angeles and Fullerton Fields. Each share of this stock will have attached the guarantee of the Continental Building and Loan Association of San Francisco—with a subscribed Capital Stock of Twelve Millions of dollars—that the Central Pacific Company will pay 6 per cent. interest for 8 years." — Western Trade Journal.

The following is from an article which appeared in the Los Angeles Herald of June 2:

"A large number of land holders have just succeeded in consolidating some of the best oil lands in Southern California, and have incorporated the Central Pacific Oil Company—Capitalized for Five Millions of Dollars. Two millions have been expended in securing proven oil lands. Three million shares have been set aside as treasury stock, which will be used for developing the properties of the monster company. The gilt edge part of the great enterprise is in the fact that all the purchasers of the first One Hundred Thousand Shares will have the right to surrender the same to the company at the expiration of one year and receive in cash the full amount paid for stock, with interest of 6 per cent.—less any dividends that may have been paid on said stock."—Los Angeles Herald.

If you want some of the First One Hundred Thousand Shares of Stock, send your orders to the Secretary of the Company, A. Samuel Parks, or through Wells, Fargo and Co. Express, or to the Broadway Bank and Trust Co., our Los Angeles depository---or direct to

CENTRAL PACIFIC OIL CO.

Rooms 611, 615, 617 Laughlin Building, Los Angeles, Cal.

BALTIMORE & OHIO RAILROAD.

Excursions to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del., at Very Low Rates, Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 7 and 25, August 8 and 23, and September 5.

The Baltimore & Ohio R. R. have arranged a series of Popular Seashore Excursions, to be run Thursdays, June 13 and 27, July 11 and 25, Aug. 8 and 22 and Sept. 5, to Atlantic City, Cape May, Sea Isle City and Ocean City, N. J., Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del. Tickets will be good sixteen (16) days, including date of sale.

Stop-overs will be allowed on the return trip at Philadelphia, Baltimore and Washington on tickets sold to New Jersey resorts, and at Baltimore on tickets sold to Ocean City, Md., and Rehoboth Beach, Del.

For tickets, time of trains, sleeping and parlor car accommodations, call on or address nearest Ticket Agent Baltimore & Ohio R. R. for full information. sep 15

The laws of health require that the bowels move once each day and one of the penalties for violating this law is piles. Keep your bowels regular by taking a dose of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets when necessary and you will never have that severe punishment inflicted upon you. Price, 25 cents. For sale by all druggists.

Go to Eagle Store, Grantsville, for ladies' tailor-made suits, jackets and capes. 27 8t*

Estray Notice.

Estrayed, from the farm of the undersigned about May 25, a light red, white spotted, dehorned heifer, with slit in right ear. Reward will be paid for her return.

UPTON CUPPETT,
26 3t* Thayerville, Md.

Cured of Chronic Diarrhoea After Thirty Years of Suffering.

"I suffered for thirty years with diarrhoea and thought I was past being cured," says John S. Halloway, of French Camp, Miss. "I had spent so much time and money and suffered so much that I had given up all hopes of recovery. I was so feeble from the effects of the diarrhoea that I could do no kind of labor, could not even travel, but by accident I was permitted to find a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy and after taking several bottles I am entirely cured of that trouble. I am so pleased with the result that I am anxious that it be in reach of all who suffer I have. For sale by all druggists.

Dr. Green, the dentist, will visit Friendsville on September 17th and remain until the 30th. Teeth extracted without pain. 24 4

FOR SALE:—The Lutheran parsonage, located on the corner of Fifth and Green streets, in Oakland, near the court house. Contains 8 rooms, hallway, cellar and porches; excellent well of water. Will be sold cheap. Apply to or address Rev. George I. Uhler, Oakland, Md.

Subscribe for THE REPUBLICAN.

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

Albert Bush, Esq., of Grafton, was in the city a few days this week.

Car load feed and flour just arrived at Eagle Store, Grantsville.

Silas C. Beachy, of Bittinger, was in town a few hours last Tuesday.

Miss Bessie Ault left Oakland Saturday for Ohio Pyle, Pa., to visit her grandmother, Mrs. Mitchell.

Jonas C. Beachy, of Bittinger, was a business visitor to Oakland Tuesday.

One-half bushel peaches and a large watermelon for 70 cents at C. B. Cropp's 26 2t

Mrs. D. Y. Morris and Byrne Thomas, of Kingwood, are the guests of the editor and wife this week.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds. Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

Republican candidate for sheriff W. A. Maffett, of No. 6, came up to Oakland yesterday, accompanied by Mr. William Callis, of Hoyes.

You can buy men's, boys' and children's clothing cheaper at N. Broadwater's, Grantsville, than any place in town. 27 8*

Attorneys Ferd. Williams, Jacob Brown, D. L. Sloan and S. T. Semmes, of Cumberland, are attending court here this week.

Prof. George B. Frazee, of Selbysport, is in Oakland. His many friends here are pleased to meet him. Mr. Frazee will be the principal of the Friendsville school this winter.

Mr. and Mrs. W. T. Sigler, of Hinton, W. Va., visited Mr. and Mrs. John Arnold in Oakland several weeks recently. They are now at Westernport visiting relatives.

Rev. W. C. Davis, pastor of the Buena Vista M. E. church, Allegheny, spent a part of Monday and Tuesday seeing friends here and attending to some business interests.—Brownsville corr. Uniontown Standard.

If you want to buy books and stationery of the latest issues visit the book room at Mountain Lake Park. The stock will be closed out on Saturday and Monday next at greatly reduced prices. Be sure to go and look over the bargains at Room 2, old Auditorium, Mountain Lake Park.

V. Compton Tasker, who was sent on a pleasure trip to Europe for the summer by his firm, the Ordnance Company, of Bridgeport, Conn., has returned safely and gives a glowing description of a delightful tour. He formerly resided in Oakland.

Jehu Turner, the first district passenger engineer, has again broken the record of going up the 17-mile grade. His former record with train No. 1, of six coaches, engine 2037, was 43 minutes from Piedmont to Altamont without the aid of a helper. Saturday night he made the same trip with the same number of cars with engine 2035 in 40 minutes.

Mr. William Frazee, of Elder, who recently recovered from a prolonged attack of typhoid fever, came up to Oakland last Friday on business. From here Mr. Frazee went to Morgantown with the intention of purchasing property in that growing town, where he will remove as soon as he can make the necessary arrangements. He was accompanied here by Edward Biddle, also of Elder.

The space we devote this week telling of the dastardly attempt upon the life of the President and the publication also of the court proceedings cuts down the space somewhat which is usually devoted to local news. The account of the assault on the chief magistrate of our land is of more importance than local happenings and as it is well written we know that it will be read with interest by many of our subscribers, especially those who do not have access to a daily paper.

The shirt waist man and the net waist girl go hand in hand to-day, and the people year after year keep throwing their clothes away. The coat and vest were laid to rest and where is the fleecy shawl? And clothes get thinner and fewer—what will be the end of it all? Oh what will the shirtwaist man take next from the things he has to wear? And what will the net waist girl throw off from her shoulders now so bare? The shirt waist man and the netwaist girl go rollocking down the way; have we started a trend that is going to end in the old fig leaf some day?

In accordance with the Governor's proclamation services of prayer for the restoration to health of the President were held in St. Paul's M. E. church, Oakland on Tuesday morning at 10.30 o'clock. Court adjourned for the service. Rev. Mick presided. The service was opened by singing hymn 707. Rev. Uhler, of the Lutheran church, led in prayer, and Rev. Osmond, of the Episcopal church, read the scripture lesson, after which Mrs. Heindel beautifully rendered the solo entitled "Abide With Me." This was followed by fitting remarks by each of the above named ministers. The service was closed with prayer and by singing "Nearer, My God, to Thee." The service throughout was beautiful and impressive and indicative of how near the President is to the hearts of the people.

Assemblyman Merritt Wilson was in town on Monday.

Mr. W. McCulloh Brown, of Bayard, was an Oakland visitor Monday.

Take your produce to N. Broadwater, who pays always the highest price.

Messrs. Will Whorton and Will Browning were at Kingwood last Friday on business.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

Mr. Jacob S. Meyers, of Friendsville, is in town this week attending court.

Buy the famous Cinderella Double Heater Cook Stoves and Ranges at N. Broadwater's, Grantsville, Md.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Whorton and Mr. and Mrs. Sigler, their guests, drove to Aurora last Sunday where they spent the day.

Miss Stella Hutson, of near Gortner, left here Saturday last for Fairmont, where she will enter the State Normal School.

N. Broadwater, Grantsville, has just returned from the city with the largest and most complete line of goods ever brought to town.

Miss Elizabeth Shrader, who spent the past two weeks in Oakland visiting friends, returned to her home at Independence, W. Va., today.

Corn at a dollar a bushel will make hominy the chief luxury of the coming winter and put hoecake into the angel's food class.

Messrs. Charles Brown, Ross Compton and Ralph Engle, of Grantsville, were in Oakland a day or two this week on business before the County Commissioners.

When you want a pleasant physic try the new remedy, Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They are easy to take and pleasant in effect. Price, 25 cents. Samples free at drug stores.

Dr. W. H. Bixler and sister, of Baltimore, who were guests of Mr. and Mrs. N. S. Heindell for some time, departed yesterday morning for their home.

Plans have been prepared for a new building to be erected on the site of the old Thayer house, corner Third and Oak streets. The proposed structure will be three stories high and will contain fifteen rooms.

Services will be held in the Lutheran church here Sunday morning and evening, notwithstanding the announcement made to the contrary last Sabbath. The services will be conducted by Rev. Uhler, the pastor.

Have you a sense of fullness in the region of your stomach after eating? If so you will be benefited by using Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets. They also cure belching and sour stomach. They regulate the bowels too. Price, 25 cents. Sold by all druggists.

Mr. and Mrs. G. Bertram Ryland have been critically ill of typhoid fever at their home in East Pittsburg since August 5th. At this writing they are slightly convalescent. His brother, Dr. W. H. Ryland, of Lonaconing, Md., is with him looking after his interests during his illness.—Meyersdale Commercial.

Rev. L. A. Rudisill, of Mountain Lake Park, who has been the guest of Mr. and Mrs. F. D. Jackson for several days, addressed the Epworth League at Ashton church Sunday night. His earnest and persuasive words upon "Acquaintanship with God" remain as a pleasant memory of his stay.—Montgomery Press.

A banker sauntering home for his dinner found a $10 bill lying on the curbstone. Of course he picked it up and took the number of it, in order to find its owner. While at home his wife remarked that the butcher had sent in a bill amounting to $10. The only money he had with him was this money, which he gave to her and she paid the butcher. The butcher paid it to a farmer for a calf. The farmer paid it to his clerk and the clerk owing the banker a note of $10, went to the bank and paid it off. The banker recognized the bill as the one he had found, which up to that time had settled $50 worth of debts. On careful examination he found the bill was counterfeit. Now will some of our financial friends tell what has been lost in the transaction, and by whom, if any?

Foot Mashed.

Arthur Frantz, aged 16 years, of Crellin, had a narrow escape with his life on Friday last. He attempted to board a moving train at Hutfon when his foot slipped and he was thrown between the cars. He fell with one foot on the rail and that member was badly crushed. He was brought to Oakland to the McComas Sanitarium where his injury was dressed. It is thought that amputation will not be necessary.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a Great Favorite.

The soothing and healing properties of this remedy, its pleasant taste and prompt and permanent cures make it a great favorite with people everywhere. It is especially prized by mothers of small children for colds, croup and whooping cough, as it always affords quick relief, and as it contains no opium or other harmful drug, it may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by all druggists.

SEPTEMBER COURT.

Judge Boyd and Judge Sloan on the Bench. The Latter Charges the Grand Jury.

The September term of the Circuit Court began Monday morning with Judges Boyd and Sloan on the bench.

The jurors who had been drawn all answered to their names.

The court appointed George L. Michael foreman and drew the following grand jurors: John A. Grant, Robert I. Anderson, David K. Herring, W. Scott Pugh, B. Frank Turney, Solomon D. Yoder, Edward Margroff, Louis F. Tasker, Conrad Queer, William S. Sharpless, Clark Rush, Herman Steiding, Henry C. Fawcett, Christian Durst, Charles C. Hanft, Calvin Anderson, Joseph F. Lewis, Columbus L. Paugh, Perry M. Stemple, John G. Robinson, George W. Kitzmiller, Henry A. Hardesty.

Judge D. W. Sloan charged the grand jury and called attention to the change which had been made in the method of selection. He said it was not the right, as some supposed, to serve on the jury, but it was a duty required of persons selected from the voters and taxpayers in accordance with the requirements of the law. It frequently happens, said his honor, that those who want to serve on the jury are the least qualified for that service. He urged upon the jury the necessity of keeping secret their proceedings. The judge then called attention to the law of abortion, defaulters, the local liquor license law, concealed weapons and also the law prohibiting the sale of cigarettes to minors. The attention of the court was called by the State game warden to the killing of fish with dynamite, and the court in turn gave the matter in charge to the grand jury.

The several dockets were then called over and judgments were entered in uncontested cases and entries made in others.

There are forty cases on the original docket, twelve appeals and sixty-two trials on the civil docket.

Ten appeals were set for trial and two were settled. Twenty-one cases were set for trial on the trial docket. The term will probably last about two weeks.

ORIGINAL DOCKET.

1, George W. Logue vs. J. M. Wolfenberger; Hamill.

2, John B. Varsant vs. Jos. Shaw; Hamill.

3, George W. Seibert vs. Hay & Wolfenberger; Peddicord—Hamill.

4, Russell & Co. vs. Andrew Kimmell; Peddicord.

5, Patrick Dorsey vs. G. W. Broadwater; Sincell—Hamill.

6, Thomas J. Moreland vs. the County Commissioners; Peddicord—Sincell.

8, James K. North et al vs. J. Reese Pantall et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

9, James K. North et al vs. J. Reese Pantall et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

10, James K. North et ux vs. J. Reese Pantall et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

11, Heeren Brothers vs. Homer C. Smouse; Hamill.

12, John T. Mitchell vs. Henry Bernard et al; Semmes and Mitchell—Hamill.

13, John T. Mitchell vs. Otho J. Paugh; Semmes and Mitchell—Hamill.

14, L. T. Yoder et al vs. Emma Hinebaugh; Hamill.

15, C. H. Holliday & Co., vs. John Wass, Hamill—Peddicord.

16, C. H. Holliday & Co., vs. Frank Wass; Hamill—Peddicord.

17, S. L. Townshend & Son vs. M. F. Moller; Hamill.

18, Jennie Short et al vs. B. H. Hollen; Thayer; dismissed.

19, James and Perry Bowser vs. Noah Pysell et al; Hamill.

20, Otho Paugh vs. Barbara E. Switzer et al; Mitchell—Hamill.

21, Herman Beckman vs. Arch C. Browning; Peddicord—Hamill and Semmes.

22, Philip T. Garthright vs. John Shartzer; Hamill.

23, John Bull vs. M. M. Fazenbaker; Sincell.

24, Joseph B. Adams vs. George Bittinger; Sincell—Hamill.

24, Joseph B. Adams vs. Lydia Barkholder; Sincell—Hamill.

26, John J. Winn vs. Henry Achenbach & Son; Sincell and Sloan; dismissed.

27, same; dismissed.

28, Eliza Sines vs. A. Knabb & Co.; Thayer, Peddicord—Hamill.

29, John J. Winn vs. Henry Achenback & Son; Sloan, Sincell—Mitchell.

30, same.

31, The Walter Robertson Drug Co. vs. John Reynolds.

32, William A. Nethkin vs. Thornton T. Perry; Peddicord.

33, same.

34, Elizabeth J. Wilson vs. Andrew J. Oester et al; Peddicord—Sincell.

35, Amy V. Wilson vs. same; same attorneys.

36, Amy V. Wilson vs. Levi Echard et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

37, Elizabeth J. Wilson vs. Andrew Oester et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

38, Agnes B. Forward vs. L. T. Yoder et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

39, R. N. Jones vs. L. T. Yoder et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

40, Louis A. Rudisill vs. L. T. Yoder et al; Peddicord—Hamill.

APPEAL DOCKET.

1, C. Holliday & Co. vs. Daniel P. Bloom; tried before the court; Peddicord—Sincell.

2, Robert Morehead et ux vs. A. J. Merrill; tried before the court; Thayer and Sincell—Renninger.

3, William Kitzmiller vs. C. L. Simmons; Peddicord—Renninger.

5, Jackson Griffith vs. John Comp; settled.

6, Thomas A. Nethkin vs. John Shartzer, receiver, &c.; settled; each party to pay his own costs; Peddicord—Hamill.

7, James Andrews vs. Andrew Shartzer; Peddicord—Sincell.

8, Robert Bowser vs. Joseph Patton; Hamill—Peddicord.

9, John B. Harmon vs. Jos. Glass; Peddicord—Sincell.

10, Jonas W. Johnson vs. Maggie Collins; Peddicord—Hamill.

11, Walter J. Keller vs. Elmer J. Beachy; Peddicord.

12, Narnie E. Burke vs. G. M. Gerver; Heindel—Sincell.

TRIAL DOCKET.

1, M. M. Bradford vs. John Shartzer et al; continued; Renninger—Sincell.

2, The Cumberland Cereal Co. vs. P. E. Finzel; judgment by confession for $293.22 with stay for six months; Hamill—Peddicord.

3, John Felty, Jr., vs. Elizabeth Friend; garnishee, &c, judgment for $33; Hamill—Sincell.

4, A. V. D. Waterson vs. Jos. Bowser; continued; Hamill—Semmes.

5, Harriet B. Paugh vs. G. S. Hamill; trial; Peddicord—Hamill.

6, John C. Beckman vs. Baltimore and Ohio Railroad; rule on sheriff and surveyor to return warrant of resurvey to next term of court and continued; Peddicord—Hamill.

7, Eleanor Fairall vs. B. & O. R. R.; rule on surveyor and sheriff to return warrant and continued; Peddicord—Hamill.

8, Joseph F. Friend vs. B. & O. R. R.; continued; Peddicord—Hamill.

9, Mary C. Stemple, executor, vs. Truman W. Casteel; trial; Peddicord—Hamill.

10, William Wilson vs. Blaine Coal Co.; plea in abatement; plea stricken out; case settled; Peddicord—Thayer.

11, E. K. Goldsborough vs. D. A. Stephens; trial; Hamill—Sincell.

12, Henry H. Chapman et al vs. O. Reynolds et al; dismissed by order of plaintiff; Thayer and Sincell—Peddicord.

13, J. H. Gordon vs. O. Reynolds et al; dismissed by order of plaintiff; Thayer and Sincell—Peddicord.

14, George W. Gist vs. Lewis Hardman; stet; Hamill—Peddicord.

15, Joseph T. Osborn vs. Elijah Livengood; continued; Sincell, Cook—Mitchell.

16, Charles F. Frazee vs. Jane F. Fike; non pros for failure to secure costs; Hamill—Thayer and Sincell.

MOUNTAIN TRIOLETS.

THE SUMMER DAYS ARE WANING.

The kayhdids are fiting shrill,
The summer days are waning:
All up and down the wooded hill
The katydids are fiting shrill
To doleful crickets striddling trill,
Old Winter's chills arraigning—
The katydids are fiting shrill,
The summer days are waning.

Good by to all the idle crew
The woodland deeps profaning:
Forever seeking something new—
Good by to all the idle crew
That never has a thing to do
But all the time complaining.
Good by to all the idle crew
The woodland deeps profaning.

THE LITTLE WIDOW.

She's fair, but forty and—oh, my,
She's really quite a charmer!
The buxom widow is so shy—
She's fair, but forty and—oh, my,
I got to kiss her on the sly—
No, no, I did'n't harm her!
She's fair, but forty and—oh, my,
She's really quite a charmer!

Jackson Park, August, 1901. —T. L. L.

THE CHORTLING CHORT.

NONSENSE RHYMES.

The whimbledy whing is a fearsome thing
And a prilp of a pinksome feather;
But the chortling chort with its squishful sqwort
Can snickle the squimps in tether;
Can snickle the squimps
Of the pashful frimps
And chortle the swish together.

In the crimply crools of the dooster schools
A bibbling lilyer is jicksey
To ribbet and rink for a zingtum zink
To whicket a piare so tricksey;
To whicket a piare
So pillicum bare
And blinkum the blankum blicksey.

So the zingtum zink with his plickful plink
Has scootled the squimping squinxes
To the tootling snort of the chortling chort
In a bibbling box of minxes:
In a bibbling box
With a prankum phlox
To foozle the lush with sphines.

The whimbledy whing is a fearsome thing
When he fribbles his quawks a-feather;
But the chortling chort is a pashful sport
To rillick the jinks together:
To rillick the jinks
Of the zingtum zinks
And smottle the ink in squether.

—JACKSON.

Miss Margaret Sincell went to Keyser, W. Va., on last Sunday afternoon and attended the dance given in honor of Miss Wellington, of Cumberland, on Monday night at the Music Hall.

FOR SALE.—$125 cash, horse, phaeton and harness complete; attractive outfit; gentle family horse. Apply to Dr. J. S. Stone, Mt. Lake Park. 1*

A Venerable Citizen Passes Away.

To the Editor of The Republican.

John Henry Wegman died at his quiet home in Grantsville on the 6th inst. after an illness of several weeks at the great age of 91 years and a few months over. His death was not an unexpected one on account of his extreme age and sickness, still it was a sad and lamented event to the whole community in which he had lived for so many years.

He was born in Germany, but came to this country in very early life; stopped for a time in Frederick county, this State. From there he went to Frostburg and took employment in the large tannery of George W. McCulloh, where he remained several years. From there he went to Grantsville and accepted employment in the tannery of Adam Shultz, where he remained for some years. Some years later he left the Shultz tannery and opened one on his own account just opposite the one left as an employe. He conducted his tannery successfully for many years, but quite awhile ago he closed out the business, still he kept it alive the rest of his life for his own gratification by doing some little jobs of work for friends. He also ran a store in connection with his tannery for some years, but that too was closed out years ago.

His wife was a daughter of the late Henry Ruckle. She has been dead a number of years. They had a considerable family of children, dead and alive—three sons, Henry, George and Charles. Henry died in Chicago some time ago. He was an extraordinary mechanical genius. He once constructed a clock which was a wonder to all who had the opportunity to see it. It was and perhaps is still a subject of exhibition George, too, was a genius in his life, a blacksmith by trade. Charles was the best known of the sons; was sheriff of Garrett county in recent years. He is now on the police force in Baltimore. There were two daughters. One married and lives in the State of New York. Annie remained single and staid with her aged father till life was no more. It was her pleasure as much as her duty to accompany, cheer, comfort and nurse him to his last and well and faithfully did she do her holy work.

Henry Wegman was stictly honest, upright and just in all his ways and dealings. No one can say he ever received a wrong or an injustice at his hands. He was an excellent citizen in all the relations and upon all the lines of practical life and usefulness. In religion he was a Catholic for religion's sake. In politics a Republican for the sake of the primitive creed of his party. Never an office-holder or seeker of office, always declined offers of political nominations. For 61 years he was continuously a citizen of Grantsville. He will be much missed, but kindly remembered by all.

ANCIENT ACQUAINTANCE.

September 9, 1901.

PROCLAMATION.

WHEREAS, at the January Session in the year nineteen hundred of the General Asembly of Maryland, bills were passed proposing amendments to the Constitution of the State:

First.—By amending section 9 of Article 5, of the Constitution of the State.

Second.—By amending section 4 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State.

Third.—By amending section 2 of Article 3, of the Constitution of the State, which said bills and amendments are in words following, to wit:

CHAPTER 185.

AN ACT to amend section nine, of Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and to provide for the submission of said amendment to the qualified voters of this State for adoption or rejection.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members elected to each of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to Article 5, of the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, herein and as by law provided, it shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section nine of said Article.

SECTION 9. The State's Attorney shall perform such duties and receive such fees and commissions or salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, as are now or may hereafter be prescribed by law; and if any State's Attorney shall receive any other fee or reward than such as is or may be allowed by law, he shall, on conviction thereof, be removed from office; provided that the State's Attorney for Baltimore city shall receive an annual salary of forty-five hundred dollars, and shall have power to appoint one deputy, at an annual salary not exceeding three thousand dollars, and such other assistants at such annual salaries not exceeding fifteen hundred dollars each, as the Supreme Bench of Baltimore City may authorize and approve; all of said salaries to be paid out of the fees of the said State's Attorney's office, as has heretofore been practiced.

SECTION 2. And be it further enacted, That the foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, shall be, at the next general election for members of the General Assembly, to be held in this State, submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the direction contained in Article 14, of the Constitution; and at said election the vote on said proposed amendment shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words "For the Constitutional Amendment" or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election one return shall be made to the Governor of the vote on said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 5, 1900.

CHAPTER 432.

AN ACT to amend section four, of Article 3, of the Constitution of this State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, as soon as may be after the taking and publishing of the National Census of 1900, or after the enumeration of the population of this State, under the authority thereof, there shall be an apportionment of representation in the House of Delegates, to be made on the following basis, to wit: Each of the several counties of the State, having a population of eighteen thousand souls or less, shall be entitled to two delegates; and every county having a population of over eighteen thousand and less than twenty-eight thousand souls, shall be entitled to three delegates; and every county having a population of twenty-eight thousand and less than forty thousand souls, shall be entitled to four delegates; and every county having a population of forty thousand and less than fifty-five thousand souls, shall be entitled to five delegates; and every county having a population of fifty-five thousand souls and upwards, shall be entitled to six delegates and no more; and each of the four legislative districts of the City of Baltimore shall be entitled to the number of delegates to which the largest county shall or may be entitled under the aforegoing apportionment, and the General Assembly shall have the power to provide by law, from time to time, for altering and changing the boundaries of the existing legislative districts of the City of Baltimore, so as to make them as near as may be of equal population; but said district shall always consist of contiguous territory.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution, shall, at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof, for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14, of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after the said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Article 14, of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

CHAPTER 469.

AN ACT to amend section two of Article 3 of the Constitution of the State.

SECTION 1. Be it enacted by the General Assembly of Maryland, (three-fifths of all the members of the two Houses concurring,) That the following section be and the same is hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution of this State, and if adopted by the legal and qualified voters thereof, as herein provided, said section shall supersede and stand in the place and stead of section two of Article 3 of said Constitution.

2. The City of Baltimore shall be divided into four legislative districts as near as may be of equal population and of contiguous territory, and each of said legislative districts of Baltimore City, as they may from time to time be laid out, in accordance with the provisions hereof, and each county in the State, shall be entitled to one Senator, who shall be elected by the qualified voters of the said legislative districts of Baltimore City, and of the counties of the State, respectively, and shall serve for four years from the date of his election, subject to the classification of Senators hereafter provided for.

SEC. 2. And be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, That the said foregoing section hereby proposed as an amendment to the Constitution shall at the next election for members of the General Assembly of this State, to be held on the Tuesday next after the first Monday in the month of November, nineteen hundred and one, be submitted to the legal and qualified voters thereof for their adoption or rejection, in pursuance of the directions contained in Article 14 of the Constitution of this State; and at the said election the vote on said proposed amendment to the Constitution shall be by ballot, and upon each ballot there shall be written or printed the words, "For the Constitutional Amendment," or "Against the Constitutional Amendment," as the voter shall elect, and immediately after said election due returns shall be made to the Governor of the vote for and against said proposed amendment, as directed by the said Fourteenth Article of the Constitution.

Approved April 7, 1900.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, JOHN WALTER SMITH, Governor of the State of Maryland, in pursuance of the provisions of section one of Article fourteen of the Constitution of the State, do hereby order and direct that a copy of said bills proposing said Constitutional Amendments be published in at least two newspapers in each county where so many may be published, and where not more than one may be published, then in that newspaper, and in three newspapers in the City of Baltimore, one of which shall be in the German language, once a week for at least three months preceding the next ensuing general election (which said general election will be held on Tuesday, the 5th day of November, nineteen hundred and one,) at which the said proposed amendments shall be submitted to the qualified voters of the State for adoption or rejection, so that each amendment shall be voted on separately.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of Maryland.

Done at the City of Annapolis on the 12th day of June, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and one.

[SEAL] JOHN WALTER SMITH,
Governor of Maryland.

By order of the Governor:
WILFRED BATEMAN,
Secretary of State

PERCY H. VEITCH,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.

General practice in all the Courts of Maryland and West Virginia.

Money loaned on Mortgage.

Special attention given to sale of real estate, investigation of titles, conveyancing and preparation of legal papers.

Agent for the Phœnix Mutual Life Insurance Co. of Hartford, Conn.

☞ Offices in McComas Building, opposite Garrett County Bank.

Treasury Department.

OFFICE OF
THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
WASHINGTON, D. C., August 20, 1901.

Whereas, by satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned, it has been made to appear that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, has complied with all the provisions of the Statutes of the United States, required to be compiled with before an association shall be authorized to commence the business of banking.

Now therefore I, Charles G. Dawes, Comptroller of the Currency, do hereby certify that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, is authorized to commence the business of Banking as provided in Section Fifty-one hundred and sixty-nine of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEAL

In testimony whereof witness my hand and Seal of office this twentieth day of August, 1901.

(Signed) CHARLES G. DAWES,
Comptroller of the Currency.

oct 31

No. 5943.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : : GARRETT CO., MD.

A FAMILY PARTY

By Eva Williams Malone.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

"THERE they go!"

"There who goes?" Mrs. Le Grand raised her eyes rather languidly from her Battenburg and vouchsafed a nonchalant glance in the direction indicated by her friend's bejeweled digit.

"Who goes? 'the Family Party,' of course! It's perfectly sickening to see Alfred Ralston prancing around with those two infants. Wonder if it's his latest device for renewing his youth!"

This from Miss Harcourt who, at twenty-six, had just given a "turning out party" to renew hers! Ralston, the ancient, had "rushed" her during the entire last season; and his antics with the "infants" proved less diverting to Miss Harcourt than, judging by appearances, they were either to himself or the infants.

Mrs. Le Grand, fresh and enticing at thirty in her widows' weeds, smiled serenely upon her unwedded friend and said in that provocative way some women affect:

"Why, Alfred Ralston is not such a relic of antiquity as you would have us suppose. He was barely on his primeval legs when you gave that first (with acute emphasis on the word) debut party of yours! That would make him—let me see—he can't be much over thirty-five. A man's just in the glory of perfected manhood at that age. A man's always young, so long as he isn't married—it's different with a woman, you know; the more she isn't married, the older she is! It's frightful how the momentum of a woman's years does increase after she passes twenty-five; unless she writes her name with a Mrs. prefixed. In that case, she can smile at Time. She has demonstrated the fact that she could, and she did, and the rest doesn't matter."

While this edifying conversation went on within the serene little widow's Fifth Avenue—but not New York—home, the incongruous party that had provoked it, passed out of sight. "The Family Party," as they had come to be called, never hovered long over the same flower-patch. When they went abroad, they went in search of honey; and, if one blossom refused to yield it, there were always plenty of others, you know—if only one does not mind the necessary flight. And, to "The Family Party," the flights seemed the very best part of the fun. They smiled upon each other in the most freshening manner — the two girls upon the one man, the one man upon the two girls. He tossed pretty verbal bouquets back and forth with the finished grace of a past grand master in the art.

"Lucky dog is Ralston!" commented one of his friends as the trio entered an uptown cafe and formed a triangular group around a table—"look at him now! Tete-a-tete with the two very prettiest girls that have come out this season. I'll venture he's making desperate love to each one of them at this very moment—right in the hearing of the other, too! And, instead of resenting it, as women generally do a divided homage, the sweet creatures actually seem to enjoy the play. I never could quite fathom that sort of a game. I tried it once; and, bless me! if both the girls didn't give me and each other, too, the G. B. in less than a week! But Ralston! by Jove! that fellow ought to go to Salt Lake City! Wouldn't he rush things out there—provided the Mormons didn't expel him from pure jealousy."

No wonder that the men marveled and rebelled to see one of their number monopolize with such daring grace so affluent a shore of youthful charms and beauty. One of the girls, tall and lithe, was the very spirit of willowy grace—with eyes that would have put twin pansies to shame, and a complexion that her dead black costume only rendered more glowing.

The other, fair as the first, but with the brown eyes and golden hair that one rarely sees in harmonious union, save among the daughters of the south. Each one was beautiful in her way and each sparkled with the dew of life's young May.

"Do you know," said she of the pansy eyes, "that mother declares she doesn't think our Family Party at all proper? She thinks we need a chaperone."

"A chaperone! What an aspersion upon me!" exclaimed Ralston in mock indignation. "Have I lived and suffered the pangs of baldness and bachelordom through all these years to have it now cast in my teeth that I, even I, am not a fit and proper chaperone for two spotless, unshorn lambs? Am I, Alfred Saxton Jerrold Ralston, a wolf in sheep's clothing that I should be thus traduced?"

He was a splendid specimen of manly beauty, and his pretense to decrepitude was the veriest bravado. The lion never feels himself quite so much the king of the forest as when he poses as the humblest of beasts.

"Papa said it couldn't hurt so long as there were three of us," protested Brown Eyes. "He said you wouldn't dare to make love to me while Lavice was around; and you couldn't kiss Lavice while I was looking!"

"Your father is a wise and reverend seignor; and, if he wants my vote for any office in the gift of the people, he has only to ring me up," replied this arch-conspirator as, with one hand, he filched a flower from Lavice's boutonniere, while his left was giving Edith's just the gentlest sort of pressure beneath the table.

"Don't forget, Dewdrops," he continued, as they prepared to leave the cafe, the girls for their dancing club, and he for some nebulous "business" of which, upon occasion, he made profert. "Don't forget, Dewdrops, it's to be Joe Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle to-night. The old man's not quite what he was a century or so ago, when I first heard him, but he's Joe Jefferson, nevertheless, and 'The Party' must be there. Tell Pater and Mater, both of you, that we'd be charmed to have them come along. Shall I send them tickets?"

The season was nearly over. Through its entirety "The Family Party" had flitted hither and thither; or, as Miss Harcourt phrased it, "pranced" in the most gossip-defying manner. There was an impartiality and thorough air of comradeship about the whole proceeding that put the sleuth-hounds utterly at bay.

"Which is it?" they asked with bated breath as "The Family Party" appeared at ball, opera, or club dance—always Ralston, debonair, devoted, impartial—always the two girls, fresh, fair, unruffled—smiling upon Ralston and upon each other.

"Which is it—which can it be?" queried Society.

"Which is it?" queried Ralston's own inner consciousness. The feeling that it only rested with himself to say which was as much a part of his inner consciousness as the question itself. The child, as it stands poised between two flowers, of which it only can possess one, never doubts that both flowers are alike, waiting to be plucked; and that each will yield up its sweetness uncomplainingly. If Ralston had admitted a doubt as to the possibilities of his own prowess, that doubt might have aided in solving the problem that was perplexing him.

"It's time I settled down," Ralston confided to his cigar. "A man can't go all the paces forever. I find that my mind hovers more and more over the Domestic Idea. Dressing-gown and slippers allure me in a way they did not several years ago. That tiny bald spot don't yield to treatment as I had hoped it would. Heigh, ho, old man! you are getting along in years, and you may as well face the fact. You'd better settle down with a pretty young wife before the lights go out."

This brought him back to the original dilemma: "Which should it be?"

Of course it couldn't be both, and it was hardly possible to maintain the present status much longer. He concluded to take a stroll, wind up at his club, and consider the matter quietly over a bottle of wine.

"SHE THINKS WE NEED A CHAPERONE."

As he entered the club-room, Ned Travers, the-fellow-who-knows-it-all, accosted him:

"Hello, Ralston! You must be debating questions of state from that serious mug you have on. So 'The Family Party' is broken up! Well, you carried it through admirably!"

"What do you mean?" queried Ralston, coming to a standstill. "I don't quite catch your drift."

"You don't mean you are not on to the very latest! I thought, being on the inside, you'd have an advance tip, of course."

Ralston's face was as blank as a dead wall.

"Why can't you say what you mean?" he cried, impatiently, "without beating about the bush?"

"Now, Ralston, that's rather overdoing the thing. Go tell it to the marines that you've stood looking over the garden wall while another man's shears were nipping the buds! You are too experienced a gardener to let a thing like that be done under your nose without your knowledge or consent."

"If you insist on talking in riddles, I'll admit that I'm not good at conundrums," and Ralston would have passed on in undisguised vexation; but Travers stood in his way and regarded him blankly.

"What's to pay, old man?" he said. "Your ideas seem rather dense to-day. You don't mean to say that you had not heard that Edith Westmoreland and Lavice Preston drove out to Neubert's this afternoon with Charlie Hobart and Van Kirkman and the couples came back—married!"

Ralston ground his heel into the moquette beneath it and ejaculated, as he turned away:

"Well, I'll be hanged!"

The next night, for the first time in two years, he rang the dainty little widow's doorbell.

Journalistic Prince.

The crown prince of Denmark may have a future as a journalist. A political controversy had given rise to a good many discussions in the papers, and one article particularly caused much comment, though nobody knew the name of the author. It has now transpired that the article was written by the crown prince.

CUNNING PET MONKEY.

The Clever Creature Kissed the Baby Instead of Pulling Its Ears.

Jack, my pet monkey, is full of mischief. One day he got into the kitchen, and when the cook was not paying particular attention to him he jumped up on the table, seized a pan of water that was standing there and emptied its contents on the sleeping cat, says a writer in the Cincinnati Enquirer. He never lost an opportunity to play a joke on old Tab, or on the younger cats, either, for that matter. He often succeeded, when he was caged, in enticing the cats close to the bars, when he would seize their ears and pull them until the victims fairly squealed.

This habit of his was well known to a neighbor of mine, and once, when she was visiting me with her baby, the little one, unnoticed for the moment, crawled up to the cage to have a good look at Jack. The mother saw it and rushed to rescue the child, but Jack was too quick for her and had grasped it by the shoulders before she could reach the spot. He had no intention of pulling its ears, however, for he drew it gently to the bars and kissed it right on the face.

SOUND KEEPS FLIES AWAY.

That Is Why Musicians Are Not Annoyed While They Are Playing.

"While listening to an open-air concert the other day," said a young man, reports the Philadelphia Record, "I was greatly annoyed by the flies, which were so persistent that I could hardly drive them away. I wondered how the musicians, with both hands busy playing, stood them, and I drew near the shell in which they sat to see. To my surprise I found that there was not a fly in the shell, and then, to my greater surprise, I discovered why this was. The sound waves of the music, rolling with tremendous volume from the shell, kept out the flies. The insects could not fly against the waves, though they tried hard. Hundreds of them were struggling frantically to reach the shell, but they might as well have tried to fly against a tornado as against those sound waves. Thus protected, inclosed by a magic curtain made of their own music, the musicians played Wagner, unannoyed by the sticky and pestering flies."

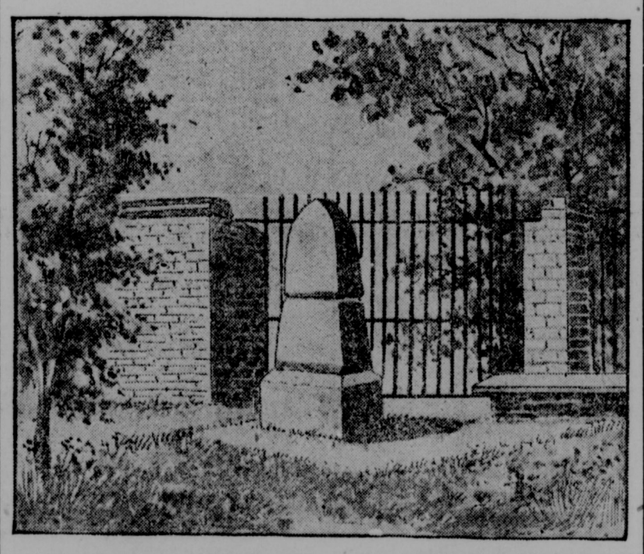
Great River Basin in Siberia.

The Irtish river in Siberia is 2,200 miles in length and drains 600,000 miles of territory.

MISS ANNA MORGAN.

This charming young lady, who is the eldest daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, the famous financier and trust organizer, has recently completed a two weeks' hunting trip through the Colorado mountains, in which lions, lynx, wildcats, foxes and coyotes fell before her gun. She is an excellent shot, and rarely misses her game. Miss Morgan was a member of the hunting party headed by Prof. Henry E. Osborn. The party spent most of the time in the vicinity of Marvin Lake, 25 miles from Colorado Springs.

BURIAL PLACE OF JEFFERSON AT MONTICELLO.



Monticello, Va., has often been called the shrine of democracy. The democrats of Missouri will erect a new monument over the grave of the immortal Thomas. More than 1,000 of the leading democrats of St. Louis and other parts of Missouri have already responded to the call of the Jefferson club, of St. Louis, to unveil a monument of red sienite on the sage's grave at Monticello on October 10. The promoters of the memorial exercises propose to make the unveiling one of the most memorable occasions in the history of the democratic party.

MINISTER WU TO THE WOMEN.

The Famous Chinese Official's Response to a Toast for "The Ladies."

The wise and facetious Minister Wu Ting-Fang made his appearance in a new role the other evening at a large gathering where both ladies and gentlemen were present, where he was the most conspicuous guest. He was asked to say a few words to the ladies, in response to a toast to them. He said: "When I see so many finely built women confronting me, and I am called upon to be the 'gallant' of the moment, what can I say but that I wish for that moment only I were not a Chinaman—I should like to be an American as I stand here, so that each one of you would appear as beautiful to me as you actually must be when seen through your countrymen's eyes. Alas! the slight difference in the formation of my orbs cannot do justice to the impression you make upon me, individually and jointly and severally. But there are some well-nourished figures and forms amongst you that really appear to be as fine as the best that my own fertile country has produced. And your intelligence and souls, I am told, which are hidden under your intricate fashionable apparel, are more beautiful even than your forms. May you all feel the depth and sincerity of my admiration, and may your youthful looks and honorable years always walk hand in hand."

Norwegian Storehouse.

A peculiarity of the Norwegian farm is the "stabbur," a sort of storehouse set upon posts, with either tin pan or a large sheet of slate on the top of each post to prevent the rats and mice and other depredators from obtaining admission. The "stabbur" is intended for the storage of the winter's supply of provisions for the family, such as flour, dried meat, fish, cured pork, "flatbrod," the bread which is baked only once or twice a year; butter and cheese, and the extra clothing and bedding that are not in daily use. An orthodox "stabbur" is usually built with two stories, one projecting over the other, and it is generally of artistic design, with an ornamental balcony.

Interesting But Unprofitable.

A Yale professor is out in Colorado spending time by demonstrating that the tail of an adder may be grafted onto a rattlesnake. Wouldn't it be more profitable, suggests the Chicago Record-Herald, for the professor to try to discover some means of exterminating potato bugs?

HUMOROUS

Had a Better Story.

"Did you see the account of that flash of lightning that burned the hair from a boy's head without otherwise hurting him?"

"I did," answered the cheerful liar, "and I was pained to note the incompleteness of the story. Now, I happen to know of a case that is really remarkable. The lightning entered a barber's shop and not only undertook the task of singeing a man's hair, but it rung up the proper amount on the cash register."—Chicago Post.

A Fatal Mistake.

Mrs. Isolate (of Lonelyville)—You say the new cook only stopped long enough at the Lonelyville railroad station to take the next train back to the city, Ferdinand? I fear you didn't show her enough little attentions on the trip out!

Isolate (miserably)—I bought her everything the train boy had; but I knew I had lost her when I didn't kiss her when the train went through the tunnel!—Brooklyn Eagle.

Too Effective.

"John," said Mrs. Billus, after the caller had gone away, "I wish you wouldn't bunch your blunders so."

"What do you mean, Maria?" asked Mr. Billus.

"I didn't mind your telling her that you were ten years older than I, but you followed it up a minute later by letting it slip out that you were 52."—Chicago Tribune.

It Would Seem So.

Some men work all night long,
And some from sun to sun;
But the bill collector has a snap—
His work is always dun.
—Chicago Daily News.

COMPARISON.

"Miss May, I do not know any better way to describe my embarrassment in your presence than to say that I feel as if I were about to be examined at school."—Bombe.

The Cynic's Misfortune.

This world's a place, when all is done,
By fond illusions ruled;
That man cannot have any fun
Who never can be fooled.
—Washington Star.

A Sure Indication.

"Oh, I visited such a woefully poverty-stricken family this morning," said the sympathetic member of the charity committee.

"Indeed!" asked the chairman of the committee. "Were they very, very poor?"

"Poor! Man, it is pitiable. Why, they are so poor that they keep 15 dogs."—Baltimore American.

Accounting for It Chemically.

"It may be merely fancy," remarked Mrs. Selldom-Holme, "but since my husband began drinking the water from that iron spring he has seemed to be ten times as obstinate as he used to be."

"Perhaps," suggested Mrs. Nexdore, "the water is tinctured with pig iron."—Chicago Tribune.

His Busy Day.

Quarryman—Biddy!

His Wife—Phwat do ye want now, sure?

Quarryman—Pour some kerosene on th' fire an' make it hot so Oi can thawout me dynamite.—N. Y. Weekly.

The Better Part.

The bachelors say that, on the whole,
Their independent homes will do;
But married men have better halves
And therefore better quarters, too.
—Good Housekeeping.

THOSE EQUINE HATS.

Uncle Hickorycrick—Whoa, thar, Betsy! Dang it! Whar ye gwine?

Betsy—There's a furniture van ahead with a mirror in the rear end. I want to see if my hat's on straight.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Very Exciting.

He—That must be a very interesting book you are reading.

She—Oh, it's awfully exciting! The heroine changes her gown six times in the first chapter."—Tit-Bits.

Quite a Difference.

"You announce in your paper," said the wrathful young woman, "that I would not be married, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding."

"Well, isn't that the report you sent in?" asked the society editor.

"No, it isn't," answered the wrathful young woman. "The inference is all wrong. I said I would not be married to the particular young man to whom I was reported engaged, which is quite a different matter."—Chicago Post.

At It Again.

Once more the lonely fisherman
Dusts off his book of flies;
Likewise his reel and pocket flask,
Also his last year's lies.
—Chicago Daily News.

THE LATEST COMPOSITE.

A composite picture of Mrs. Smith's cooks for a year. She had a run of poor luck, including a Chinaman, a negro and several rather strong-minded and buxom females.—Good Housekeeping.

Odd.

"Any odd job?" the tramp inquired.
The housewife answered with a nod.
"Were you to do most any job,"
She pleasantly observed, "'twere odd!"
—Detroit Free Press.

Probably Never Heard of It.

The theological argument waxed warmer and warmer.

"But, my dear sir," protested Deacon Ironside, aghast, "you don't pretend to know more about it than the Apostle Peter did, do you?"

"What did the Apostle Peter know," retorted the man with the aggressive pompadour, "about the higher criticism?"—Chicago Tribune.

A Mystery Solved.

Bessie and her father were sitting out on the lawn looking at the stars.

"That very red one," said her father, "is Mars, named after the god of war."

"The god of war!" cried Bessie. "Oh, papa, I wonder if that isn't where the shooting stars come from?"—Detroit Free Press.

He Is Still Looking.

"Here's a good chance for you, Jack," said the father of the young man just about to graduate from college, looking up from the "want" advertisement in the paper.

"A chance isn't what I want," said the young man, loftily. "I'm looking for an opportunity."—Somerville Journal.

Satisfactorily Explained.

"Why do you talk so much?" ma cried,
Reproving little May.
"I s'pose it's 'cause," the child replied,
"I'se got so much to say."
—Catholic Standard and Times.

FATHERLY ADVICE.

"Wot's de matter, Billy?"

"Me intented trew me over becuz I didn't have no automobile."

"Take an old man's advice, an' don't have nothin' more to do wid her. A woman wid extravigant ideas like dat would ruin any man."—Detroit Free Press.

Mental Activity.

The man whose mind is ne'er content
On one of two extremes is bent.
He pushes on to fame's front rank
Or else he gets to be a crank.
—Washington Star.

One Way of Telling.

Curley—See that fellow looking over there? He used to go to the same college that I did. I wonder if he remembers me?

Burleigh—Ask him for the loan of five dollars.

Curley—What for?

Burleigh—If he remembers you, you won't get it.—Judge.

Making Progress.

Miss Young (enthusiastically)—Oh, Miss Timer is so lovely, so intellectual! Not in her first youth, you know, but—

Miss Stager—No; but from what I have learned about her, I should think she must be well on in her second childhood.—Leslie's Weekly.

A Practical Guess.

"What makes that friend of yours keep clamoring for the young man in politics?"

"I don't know," answered Senator Sorghum, "unless he thinks that some of the older fellows are getting too wary and hard to handle."—Washington Star.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

A FAMILY PARTY

By Eva Williams Malone.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

"THERE they go!"

"There who goes?" Mrs. Le Grand raised her eyes rather languidly from her Battenburg and vouchsafed a nonchalant glance in the direction indicated by her friend's bejeweled digit.

"Who goes? 'the Family Party,' of course! It's perfectly sickening to see Alfred Ralston prancing around with those two infants. Wonder if it's his latest device for renewing his youth!"

This from Miss Harcourt who, at twenty-six, had just given a "turning out party" to renew hers! Ralston, the ancient, had "rushed" her during the entire last season; and his antics with the "infants" proved less diverting to Miss Harcourt than, judging by appearances, they were either to himself or the infants.

Mrs. Le Grand, fresh and enticing at thirty in her widows' weeds, smiled serenely upon her unwedded friend and said in that provocative way some women affect:

"Why, Alfred Ralston is not such a relic of antiquity as you would have us suppose. He was barely on his primeval legs when you gave that first (with acute emphasis on the word) debut party of yours! That would make him—let me see—he can't be much over thirty-five. A man's just in the glory of perfected manhood at that age. A man's always young, so long as he isn't married—it's different with a woman, you know; the more she isn't married, the older she is! It's frightful how the momentum of a woman's years does increase after she passes twenty-five; unless she writes her name with a Mrs. prefixed. In that case, she can smile at Time. She has demonstrated the fact that she could, and she did, and the rest doesn't matter."

While this edifying conversation went on within the serene little widow's Fifth Avenue—but not New York—home, the incongruous party that had provoked it, passed out of sight. "The Family Party," as they had come to be called, never hovered long over the same flower-patch. When they went abroad, they went in search of honey; and, if one blossom refused to yield it, there were always plenty of others, you know—if only one does not mind the necessary flight. And, to "The Family Party," the flights seemed the very best part of the fun. They smiled upon each other in the most freshening manner — the two girls upon the one man, the one man upon the two girls. He tossed pretty verbal bouquets back and forth with the finished grace of a past grand master in the art.

"Lucky dog is Ralston!" commented one of his friends as the trio entered an uptown cafe and formed a triangular group around a table—"look at him now! Tete-a-tete with the two very prettiest girls that have come out this season. I'll venture he's making desperate love to each one of them at this very moment—right in the hearing of the other, too! And, instead of resenting it, as women generally do a divided homage, the sweet creatures actually seem to enjoy the play. I never could quite fathom that sort of a game. I tried it once; and, bless me! if both the girls didn't give me and each other, too, the G. B. in less than a week! But Ralston! by Jove! that fellow ought to go to Salt Lake City! Wouldn't he rush things out there—provided the Mormons didn't expel him from pure jealousy."

No wonder that the men marveled and rebelled to see one of their number monopolize with such daring grace so affluent a shore of youthful charms and beauty. One of the girls, tall and lithe, was the very spirit of willowy grace—with eyes that would have put twin pansies to shame, and a complexion that her dead black costume only rendered more glowing.

The other, fair as the first, but with the brown eyes and golden hair that one rarely sees in harmonious union, save among the daughters of the south. Each one was beautiful in her way and each sparkled with the dew of life's young May.

"Do you know," said she of the pansy eyes, "that mother declares she doesn't think our Family Party at all proper? She thinks we need a chaperone."

"A chaperone! What an aspersion upon me!" exclaimed Ralston in mock indignation. "Have I lived and suffered the pangs of baldness and bachelordom through all these years to have it now cast in my teeth that I, even I, am not a fit and proper chaperone for two spotless, unshorn lambs? Am I, Alfred Saxton Jerrold Ralston, a wolf in sheep's clothing that I should be thus traduced?"

He was a splendid specimen of manly beauty, and his pretense to decrepitude was the veriest bravado. The lion never feels himself quite so much the king of the forest as when he poses as the humblest of beasts.

"Papa said it couldn't hurt so long as there were three of us," protested Brown Eyes. "He said you wouldn't dare to make love to me while Lavice was around; and you couldn't kiss Lavice while I was looking!"

"Your father is a wise and reverend seignor; and, if he wants my vote for any office in the gift of the people, he has only to ring me up," replied this arch-conspirator as, with one hand, he filched a flower from Lavice's boutonniere, while his left was giving Edith's just the gentlest sort of pressure beneath the table.

"Don't forget, Dewdrops," he continued, as they prepared to leave the cafe, the girls for their dancing club, and he for some nebulous "business" of which, upon occasion, he made profert. "Don't forget, Dewdrops, it's to be Joe Jefferson in Rip Van Winkle to-night. The old man's not quite what he was a century or so ago, when I first heard him, but he's Joe Jefferson, nevertheless, and 'The Party' must be there. Tell Pater and Mater, both of you, that we'd be charmed to have them come along. Shall I send them tickets?"

The season was nearly over. Through its entirety "The Family Party" had flitted hither and thither; or, as Miss Harcourt phrased it, "pranced" in the most gossip-defying manner. There was an impartiality and thorough air of comradeship about the whole proceeding that put the sleuth-hounds utterly at bay.

"Which is it?" they asked with bated breath as "The Family Party" appeared at ball, opera, or club dance—always Ralston, debonair, devoted, impartial—always the two girls, fresh, fair, unruffled—smiling upon Ralston and upon each other.

"Which is it—which can it be?" queried Society.

"Which is it?" queried Ralston's own inner consciousness. The feeling that it only rested with himself to say which was as much a part of his inner consciousness as the question itself. The child, as it stands poised between two flowers, of which it only can possess one, never doubts that both flowers are alike, waiting to be plucked; and that each will yield up its sweetness uncomplainingly. If Ralston had admitted a doubt as to the possibilities of his own prowess, that doubt might have aided in solving the problem that was perplexing him.

"It's time I settled down," Ralston confided to his cigar. "A man can't go all the paces forever. I find that my mind hovers more and more over the Domestic Idea. Dressing-gown and slippers allure me in a way they did not several years ago. That tiny bald spot don't yield to treatment as I had hoped it would. Heigh, ho, old man! you are getting along in years, and you may as well face the fact. You'd better settle down with a pretty young wife before the lights go out."

This brought him back to the original dilemma: "Which should it be?"

Of course it couldn't be both, and it was hardly possible to maintain the present status much longer. He concluded to take a stroll, wind up at his club, and consider the matter quietly over a bottle of wine.

"SHE THINKS WE NEED A CHAPERONE."

As he entered the club-room, Ned Travers, the-fellow-who-knows-it-all, accosted him:

"Hello, Ralston! You must be debating questions of state from that serious mug you have on. So 'The Family Party' is broken up! Well, you carried it through admirably!"

"What do you mean?" queried Ralston, coming to a standstill. "I don't quite catch your drift."

"You don't mean you are not on to the very latest! I thought, being on the inside, you'd have an advance tip, of course."

Ralston's face was as blank as a dead wall.

"Why can't you say what you mean?" he cried, impatiently, "without beating about the bush?"

"Now, Ralston, that's rather overdoing the thing. Go tell it to the marines that you've stood looking over the garden wall while another man's shears were nipping the buds! You are too experienced a gardener to let a thing like that be done under your nose without your knowledge or consent."

"If you insist on talking in riddles, I'll admit that I'm not good at conundrums," and Ralston would have passed on in undisguised vexation; but Travers stood in his way and regarded him blankly.

"What's to pay, old man?" he said. "Your ideas seem rather dense to-day. You don't mean to say that you had not heard that Edith Westmoreland and Lavice Preston drove out to Neubert's this afternoon with Charlie Hobart and Van Kirkman and the couples came back—married!"

Ralston ground his heel into the moquette beneath it and ejaculated, as he turned away:

"Well, I'll be hanged!"

The next night, for the first time in two years, he rang the dainty little widow's doorbell.

Journalistic Prince.

The crown prince of Denmark may have a future as a journalist. A political controversy had given rise to a good many discussions in the papers, and one article particularly caused much comment, though nobody knew the name of the author. It has now transpired that the article was written by the crown prince.

CUNNING PET MONKEY.

The Clever Creature Kissed the Baby Instead of Pulling Its Ears.

Jack, my pet monkey, is full of mischief. One day he got into the kitchen, and when the cook was not paying particular attention to him he jumped up on the table, seized a pan of water that was standing there and emptied its contents on the sleeping cat, says a writer in the Cincinnati Enquirer. He never lost an opportunity to play a joke on old Tab, or on the younger cats, either, for that matter. He often succeeded, when he was caged, in enticing the cats close to the bars, when he would seize their ears and pull them until the victims fairly squealed.

This habit of his was well known to a neighbor of mine, and once, when she was visiting me with her baby, the little one, unnoticed for the moment, crawled up to the cage to have a good look at Jack. The mother saw it and rushed to rescue the child, but Jack was too quick for her and had grasped it by the shoulders before she could reach the spot. He had no intention of pulling its ears, however, for he drew it gently to the bars and kissed it right on the face.

SOUND KEEPS FLIES AWAY.

That Is Why Musicians Are Not Annoyed While They Are Playing.

"While listening to an open-air concert the other day," said a young man, reports the Philadelphia Record, "I was greatly annoyed by the flies, which were so persistent that I could hardly drive them away. I wondered how the musicians, with both hands busy playing, stood them, and I drew near the shell in which they sat to see. To my surprise I found that there was not a fly in the shell, and then, to my greater surprise, I discovered why this was. The sound waves of the music, rolling with tremendous volume from the shell, kept out the flies. The insects could not fly against the waves, though they tried hard. Hundreds of them were struggling frantically to reach the shell, but they might as well have tried to fly against a tornado as against those sound waves. Thus protected, inclosed by a magic curtain made of their own music, the musicians played Wagner, unannoyed by the sticky and pestering flies."

Great River Basin in Siberia.

The Irtish river in Siberia is 2,200 miles in length and drains 600,000 miles of territory.

MINISTER WU TO THE WOMEN.

The Famous Chinese Official's Response to a Toast for "The Ladies."

The wise and facetious Minister Wu Ting-Fang made his appearance in a new role the other evening at a large gathering where both ladies and gentlemen were present, where he was the most conspicuous guest. He was asked to say a few words to the ladies, in response to a toast to them. He said: "When I see so many finely built women confronting me, and I am called upon to be the 'gallant' of the moment, what can I say but that I wish for that moment only I were not a Chinaman—I should like to be an American as I stand here, so that each one of you would appear as beautiful to me as you actually must be when seen through your countrymen's eyes. Alas! the slight difference in the formation of my orbs cannot do justice to the impression you make upon me, individually and jointly and severally. But there are some well-nourished figures and forms amongst you that really appear to be as fine as the best that my own fertile country has produced. And your intelligence and souls, I am told, which are hidden under your intricate fashionable apparel, are more beautiful even than your forms. May you all feel the depth and sincerity of my admiration, and may your youthful looks and honorable years always walk hand in hand."

Norwegian Storehouse.

A peculiarity of the Norwegian farm is the "stabbur," a sort of storehouse set upon posts, with either tin pan or a large sheet of slate on the top of each post to prevent the rats and mice and other depredators from obtaining admission. The "stabbur" is intended for the storage of the winter's supply of provisions for the family, such as flour, dried meat, fish, cured pork, "flatbrod," the bread which is baked only once or twice a year; butter and cheese, and the extra clothing and bedding that are not in daily use. An orthodox "stabbur" is usually built with two stories, one projecting over the other, and it is generally of artistic design, with an ornamental balcony.

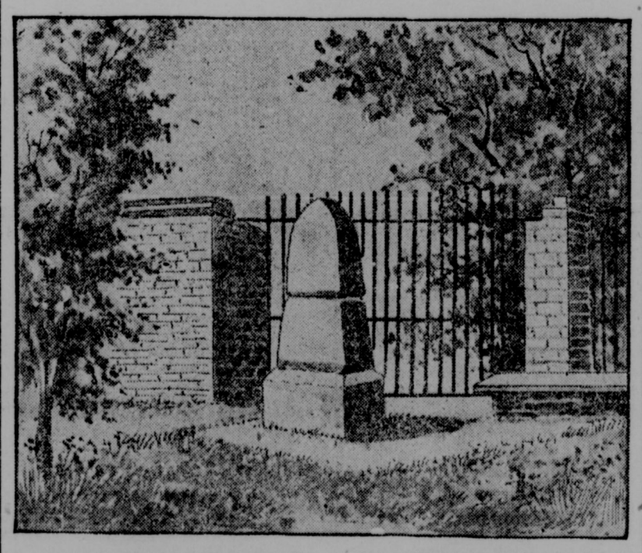
Interesting But Unprofitable.

A Yale professor is out in Colorado spending time by demonstrating that the tail of an adder may be grafted onto a rattlesnake. Wouldn't it be more profitable, suggests the Chicago Record-Herald, for the professor to try to discover some means of exterminating potato bugs?

MISS ANNA MORGAN.

This charming young lady, who is the eldest daughter of J. Pierpont Morgan, the famous financier and trust organizer, has recently completed a two weeks' hunting trip through the Colorado mountains, in which lions, lynx, wildcats, foxes and coyotes fell before her gun. She is an excellent shot, and rarely misses her game. Miss Morgan was a member of the hunting party headed by Prof. Henry E. Osborn. The party spent most of the time in the vicinity of Marvin Lake, 25 miles from Colorado Springs.

BURIAL PLACE OF JEFFERSON AT MONTICELLO.



Monticello, Va., has often been called the shrine of democracy. The democrats of Missouri will erect a new monument over the grave of the immortal Thomas. More than 1,000 of the leading democrats of St. Louis and other parts of Missouri have already responded to the call of the Jefferson club, of St. Louis, to unveil a monument of red sienite on the sage's grave at Monticello on October 10. The promoters of the memorial exercises propose to make the unveiling one of the most memorable occasions in the history of the democratic party.

Had a Better Story.

"Did you see the account of that flash of lightning that burned the hair from a boy's head without otherwise hurting him?"

"I did," answered the cheerful liar, "and I was pained to note the incompleteness of the story. Now, I happen to know of a case that is really remarkable. The lightning entered a barber's shop and not only undertook the task of singeing a man's hair, but it rung up the proper amount on the cash register."—Chicago Post.

A Fatal Mistake.

Mrs. Isolate (of Lonelyville)—You say the new cook only stopped long enough at the Lonelyville railroad station to take the next train back to the city, Ferdinand? I fear you didn't show her enough little attentions on the trip out!

Isolate (miserably)—I bought her everything the train boy had; but I knew I had lost her when I didn't kiss her when the train went through the tunnel!—Brooklyn Eagle.

Too Effective.

"John," said Mrs. Billus, after the caller had gone away, "I wish you wouldn't bunch your blunders so."

"What do you mean, Maria?" asked Mr. Billus.

"I didn't mind your telling her that you were ten years older than I, but you followed it up a minute later by letting it slip out that you were 52."—Chicago Tribune.

It Would Seem So.

Some men work all night long,
And some from sun to sun;
But the bill collector has a snap—
His work is always dun.
—Chicago Daily News.

COMPARISON.

"Miss May, I do not know any better way to describe my embarrassment in your presence than to say that I feel as if I were about to be examined at school."—Bombe.

The Cynic's Misfortune.

This world's a place, when all is done,
By fond illusions ruled;
That man cannot have any fun
Who never can be fooled.
—Washington Star.

A Sure Indication.

"Oh, I visited such a woefully poverty-stricken family this morning," said the sympathetic member of the charity committee.

"Indeed!" asked the chairman of the committee. "Were they very, very poor?"

"Poor! Man, it is pitiable. Why, they are so poor that they keep 15 dogs."—Baltimore American.

Accounting for It Chemically.

"It may be merely fancy," remarked Mrs. Selldom-Holme, "but since my husband began drinking the water from that iron spring he has seemed to be ten times as obstinate as he used to be."

"Perhaps," suggested Mrs. Nexdore, "the water is tinctured with pig iron."—Chicago Tribune.

His Busy Day.

Quarryman—Biddy!

His Wife—Phwat do ye want now, sure?

Quarryman—Pour some kerosene on th' fire an' make it hot so Oi can thawout me dynamite.—N. Y. Weekly.

The Better Part.

The bachelors say that, on the whole,
Their independent homes will do;
But married men have better halves
And therefore better quarters, too.
—Good Housekeeping.

THOSE EQUINE HATS.

Uncle Hickorycrick—Whoa, thar, Betsy! Dang it! Whar ye gwine?

Betsy—There's a furniture van ahead with a mirror in the rear end. I want to see if my hat's on straight.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Very Exciting.

He—That must be a very interesting book you are reading.

She—Oh, it's awfully exciting! The heroine changes her gown six times in the first chapter."—Tit-Bits.

Quite a Difference.

"You announce in your paper," said the wrathful young woman, "that I would not be married, all reports to the contrary notwithstanding."

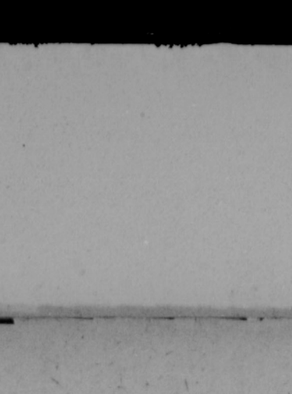
"Well, isn't that the report you sent in?" asked the society editor.

"No, it isn't," answered the wrathful young woman. "The inference is all wrong. I said I would not be married to the particular young man to whom I was reported engaged, which is quite a different matter."—Chicago Post.

At It Again.

Once more the lonely fisherman
Dusts off his book of flies;
Likewise his reel and pocket flask,
Also his last year's lies.
—Chicago Daily News.

THE LATEST COMPOSITE.



A composite picture of Mrs. Smith's cooks for a year. She had a run of poor luck, including a Chinaman, a negro and several rather strong-minded and buxom females.—Good Housekeeping.

Odd.

"Any odd job?" the tramp inquired.
The housewife answered with a nod.
"Were you to do most any job,"
She pleasantly observed, "'twere odd!"
—Detroit Free Press.

Probably Never Heard of It.

The theological argument waxed warmer and warmer.

"But, my dear sir," protested Deacon Ironside, aghast, "you don't pretend to know more about it than the Apostle Peter did, do you?"

"What did the Apostle Peter know," retorted the man with the aggressive pompadour, "about the higher criticism?"—Chicago Tribune.

A Mystery Solved.

Bessie and her father were sitting out on the lawn looking at the stars.

"That very red one," said her father, "is Mars, named after the god of war."

"The god of war!" cried Bessie. "Oh, papa, I wonder if that isn't where the shooting stars come from?"—Detroit Free Press.

He Is Still Looking.

"Here's a good chance for you, Jack," said the father of the young man just about to graduate from college, looking up from the "want" advertisement in the paper.

"A chance isn't what I want," said the young man, loftily. "I'm looking for an opportunity."—Somerville Journal.

Satisfactorily Explained.

"Why do you talk so much?" ma cried,
Reproving little May.
"I s'pose it's 'cause," the child replied,
"I've got so much to say."
—Catholic Standard and Times.

FATHERLY ADVICE.

"Wot's de matter, Billy?"

"Me intented trew me over becuz I didn't have no automobile."

"Take an old man's advice, an' don't have nothin' more to do wid her. A woman wid extravigant ideas like dat would ruin any man."—Detroit Free Press.

Mental Activity.

The man whose mind is ne'er content
On one of two extremes is bent.
He pushes on to fame's front rank
Or else he gets to be a crank.
—Washington Star.

One Way of Telling.

Curley—See that fellow looking over there? He used to go to the same college that I did. I wonder if he remembers me?

Burleigh—Ask him for the loan of five dollars.

Curley—What for?

Burleigh—If he remembers you, you won't get it.—Judge.

Making Progress.

Miss Young (enthusiastically)—Oh, Miss Timer is so lovely, so intellectual! Not in her first youth, you know, but—

Miss Stager—No; but from what I have learned about her, I should think she must be well on in her second childhood.—Leslie's Weekly.

A Practical Guess.

"What makes that friend of yours keep clamoring for the young man in politics?"

"I don't know," answered Senator Sorghum, "unless he thinks that some of the older fellows are getting too wary and hard to handle."—Washington Star.

SPOUTERS ARE RARE.

But Suckers Are Plentiful in the Texas Oil Country.

How Gullible Fortune Seekers Are Robbed by Greedy Adventurers—The Rice Fields of the Gulf Coast.

[Special Beaumont (Tex.) Letter.]

A NEWLY discovered oil field, like a mining camp, attracts three classes of people: The capitalist, the business man and the adventurer, or shark, who comes without any particular object in view, but relying upon his natural shrewdness to take advantage of the many who are seeking opportunities for investments. Seized with the idea that a fortune awaits whoever may come, many leave good positions for an uncertainty. They may have no capital, but they have a vague idea that all they have to do is to come where there is plenty of money and things are "lively." It is this class that furnishes the dark side to a prosperous new oil field or mining camp. Nor does the capitalist always fare well. He is game for the shark and the adventurer. Even the most experienced are sometimes defrauded by them. There are oil experts as well as mining experts, and there is also a way of "salting" an oil well, or rather a well where there is supposed to be oil. Oil may be mixed with the water in the drill, and on these "indications" a "duster" may be sold to the wise capitalist for a "spouter." A story is told of a shark who recently "salted" his "duster" with cotton seed oil. The capitalist knew nothing about the various kinds of oil, neither did his expert, whose knowledge was limited to a few weeks' work in the fields. The buyer has since been studying up on the difference between cotton seed oil and crude petroleum. The shark drills a well merely to sell, and resorts to tricks similar to those of the mining fakir. One of his tricks is to withdraw the drill, cap the well and maintain a mysterious silence, but throw out a hint in certain directions that oil has been encountered. Sometimes he sells his "duster" bring them luck in drilling for oil, but will not begin drilling a well on Friday.

Drilling for oil is more hazardous than sinking shafts for gold or silver. The formation of the earth indicates the possible existence of these metals, and to the miner there are indications that they exist. But, with the oil driller, there are no indications on the surface of what exists beneath, and he must be guided only by his theories of the formation of the country, and he reasons from those theories that oil should exist there. Accordingly, he drills a well, and after he has gone 100 feet, the indications are no more assuring than on the surface. He is in the dark until he strikes oil, or abandons the well as a "duster." He may have just missed the oil stream by a few feet. The man whom luck seems to follow persistently sinks a well near by and strikes it rich. In mining, ore of an inferior grade is usually found as the shaft progresses, and some of it at least is "pay ore," and thus the miner is encouraged by good indications, and frequently by the finding of good ore that partly recompenses his great losses. But the oil driller has no encouragement, and finds nothing until he reaches a "gusher," if at all. Thus many fortunes are lost, and only a few are made. Of the 15 gushers in the Beaumont oil field the reading public hears a great deal, but nothing is said of the 100 dusters. They will be heard of only when they strike oil. Nor does one hear of the miner who sinks his fortune in the earth. But the bonanza king is heard of, and thousands rush to the mining camp or oil field under the impression that it is "so easy" to make a fortune. The oil fever is as delusive as a mirage.

Rice culture is another industry that contains a large element of chance, but not so much as mining or drilling oil wells, nor is there as much chance to swindle the planter. However, his plantation may be "salted," and is, frequently. This proves detrimental to his crop. The flat, marshy lands of the gulf coast are specially adapted to rice culture, and being so near the gulf is the cause of danger to the growing crops. Rice must have water, and plenty of it, and the trouble is that on these false pretenses. There are also experts who profess to be able to tell where oil exists by surface indications, and also to tell how deep it lies under the surface.

GENERAL VIEW OF THE BEAUMONT OIL FIELD.

None of these experts have, however, taken advantage of their insight and sunk a well on their own account. Their theories of the extent of the field and the depth of the pool, or lake, are as varied as those regarding the cause of the existence of oil, which is no nearer solution than it was ages ago. Some of the local theorists hold that there are several strata of oil bearing sands in the Beaumont field, just as in the Russian fields, but as the wells here have not gone beyond the first stratum, or oil flow, their theories are mere guesses. Only when these wells have become exhausted, and sunk deeper, can the theory be settled.

ATTRACTED BY THE BOOM.

There is luck in drilling wells, as in mining. The driller of the first well here had gone 126 feet beyond the oil stratum, and an accident to the drill is the cause of the discovery of oil which made his fortune. He withdrew the drill and discovered indications of oil. In explanation it may be stated that in drilling the thick earthen formation and water often prevent the oil from coming to the surface, and unless one be an experienced driller he is likely to pass the oil stratum and not know it, as was the case with the first gusher, which has made Beaumont famous, and caused it to develop into the greatest oil field in the world. It is a curious fact that some of the drillers when nearing the distance at which oil may be encountered, usually 1,000 feet, hasten work, or progress slowly, as the case may be, so as to strike the oil-bearing sand on Friday. They superstitiously think that Friday will the brackish or salt waters of the gulf back up into the fresh water streams from which the rice plantations are irrigated. This prevents the rice from ripening, or kills it. Within the past few years about 10,000 farmers have come to this section of country, mainly from Illinois and Missouri, and are engaged in rice culture and truck farming. Their experience has accomplished wonders in the development of the prairie lands of this section. They have put in large pumping plants, run hundreds of miles of irrigating canals, and introduced the latest and most improved harvesting machinery. This immigration has added millions of dollars of taxable property to the states of Louisiana and Texas, and, in consequence, there are many villages and thrifty towns scattered over the country where a few years ago cattle ranged and the land was considered almost worthless. When the salt water runs into the bayous, the planter must dig wells from which to irrigate his rice fields, and as this is almost a yearly occurrence it will be seen that rice culture is attended with more chances for failure than perhaps any other crop. The rice farmer cannot replant, for the water is too high, and long remains so. Lands in the rice belt that sold for 15 and 25 cents an acre ten years ago, when the Illinois and Missouri farmers began coming, are now selling at $20 and $25 an acre.

It has required energy, perseverance and experienced farming to bring about this wonderful change—transforming marshy prairie lands into waving rice fields, and a country of wild grass into one of prosperity and wealth. Immigration agents are at work in Iowa, Kansas, Illinois and Missouri, securing farmers for the Louisiana and Texas coast country. Experience has shown that they are more desirable farmers than from most other states, as they seem to understand better the cultivation of prairie lands. Colonies of Japanese and Chinese are also being brought here, as they are much better field hands than the negro.

The Chinese are not quarrelsome, neither do they drink intoxicating liquors. They will smoke opium, however, but that injures only themselves, and, unlike whisky, so stupefies the victim to the habit that he is powerless for crime; consequently he is of no expense to the community. So far, the importation of Chinese has been in small colonies, but, like the Bermuda grass, when he once gets a foothold he is hard to uproot. They are favorably received, however, the people looking at the matter as one of expediency—they want the labor and do not care for the color or nationality of the man-machine that performs it. Chinese are quick witted and learn readily.

J. M. SCANLAND.

MISCELLANEOUS ITEMS.

Icing or powdered sugar is reduced to the consistency of fine flour by passing it through heavy rollers, set very close together.

Every known language contains such names as cuckoo, pewit, whippoorwill and others, in which the sound emitted by the animal is utilized as the name.

While in Canada there were no banking defaults during the first half of 1901, in the United States there were 45, with liabilities of nearly $16,000,000.

It is now an established fact that dates of a good quality and in commercial quantities can be produced in the warmer parts of Arizona, Mexico and California.

The Mic-Mac Indians of North America have an instrument known as the moose call. It is a birch-bark horn, and when blown by an expert gives a fairly good imitation of the bellowing of a moose.

Heliogabalus was the first Roman emperor to wear a silken garment. In the year 220 A. D. he had a silken gown made in which he appeared in public, and which caused grave scandal among staid elderly Roman citizens.

A good sympathetic ink is made with the chloride of copper. Writing or drawing on paper with this ink is invisible at ordinary temperatures, but when the paper or parchment is heated the writing or drawing at once appears of a beautiful yellowish color.

All modern writers on the art and science of war declare that no civilized nation should employ barbarian troops in warfare. This prohibition has, however, been frequently violated; by the English in India and in Africa; by the Russians in Asia Minor; by the French in Algeria, and by the Turkish government when it turned loose the Bashi-Bazooks, a ferocious soldiery, on the defenseless inhabitants of Bulgaria.

DR. LEYD'S STRONG ROOM.

Steel Safe That Became the Living Sepulchre of Its Former Owner.

Dr. Leyds, although not a Boer by birth, has spent so many years of his life with these strange people that he may be said to have assimilated much of their suspiciousness, says Stray Stories.

One of his most cherished possessions is a case-hardened, fireproof, steel strong room, which can be opened only by himself.

The safe was originally made for an Italian banker, who, to effectually safeguard the interest of his clients from the predatory instincts of banditti and secret societies, invented three dials which made it impossible even if a thief obtained access to the room, to get out again.

Two of the dials deal with the ingress, and each dial has two hands, which have to be placed opposite the correct numbers before the door opens. The third dial will reopen the door when the occupant wishes to leave, provided the hands are set opposite the same figures as the corresponding dial outside.

One day the banker omitted, when entering his strong room, to reset the hands of the third dial. As his memory failed to retain the figures employed on his last visit, the door refused to open, and, as the walls were too thick to allow of his cries being heard he was either stifled or starved to death.

The family of the unfortunate man, believing that he had been made prisoner by the local banditti, offered large sums for his restoration. When repeated rewards failed to restore him the banker was given up as lost.

As the strong room contained only the deceased's private papers, no attempt was made to enter the room. Some ten years later the manager determined to make use of the safe, and after considerable difficulty hunted up the workmen who had made the dials.

The banker's widow insisted, when the room gave up its ghastly secret, on the strong room being either destroyed or sold.

Mr. Kruger's factotum must have strong nerves, for it is said he frequently enters this death trap as many as a dozen times daily. Should the wires flash the news across, one day: "Disappearance of Dr. Leyds," it will not be difficult to guess the fate that has befallen him.

Accounting for Dreams.

An interesting lecture on dreams was recently given by Prof. Bergson in Paris. The professor says that dreams are only visual phenomena, that the circulation of blood in the retina and the pressure of the eyelid on the optic nerve has something to do with it, and produces color sensations. Our senses are not deadened in our slumbers; on the contrary they run riot; but the professor is convinced that we never invent anything in our dreams, and that the stories of musicians and poets composing wonderful things in their dreams are entirely unfounded. During sleep "all that we have ever seen, or heard or read is there to be evoked by the slightest sensation. To dream, consequently, is the natural state of the mind, which drifts into indifference to its surroundings."—Science.

Painful Memories.

"When was yer rale drunk last, Bill?"

"Dunno."

"Thin when was yer rale sober last?"

"Don't wyke these pyneful mem'ries, Ike, me childhood was not an 'appy one."—London Moonshine.

Serving Soup.

Soup may be served on the table or from a side table, or brought to the table in soup plates. The hostess usually serves the soup.—Ladies' Home Journal.

NOTES OF THE MODES.

The Latest in Gowns, Skirts and Fancy Waists for Followers of the Fashions.

Plaited skirts are everywhere en evidence, and many of the satin, taffeta and peau de soie boleros are plaited to correspond, the stitching added, giving them the effect of fine cords. The sweeping, clinging gowns of soft delicious creped satin and crepe de Chine in cream-color chartreuse green, Persian mauve citron and ciel blue are greatly enhanced in their svelte, graceful effect by their trimmings of costly netted fringes, which finish the edges of the long overdresses and Marie Antoinette fichus, shaped with scarf ends of extra lengh which add not a little to the artistic grace of the entire gown, says the New York Post.

One of the pretty modes of making a plaited skirt is to stitch down the plaits at the top in the shape of a pointed yoke, the stitching reaching its greatest lengths on the front and below the hips. The hem of the skirt is finished either with lines of horizontal tucking, or with rows of velvet or satin ribbon laid on flat, and about half an inch apart.

In the bewildering exhibit of fancy waists for the summer are those of all-over silk net or embroidery, through the meshes or open designs of which are run satin or velvet ribbons. These are put in to form many different effects, one of the most intricate being the deep corselet made by starting the ribbons at the side seams and carrying them to the center of the front, where they meet and form rosettes with many ends. Sleeves, boleros, guimpes, vest-fronts and revers are likewise made of these expensive all-overs threaded with ribbon of various widths and colors.

The beautiful gray gowns always favored by French women are greatly in evidence among summer costumes and toilets, many wholly gray, but formed of two materials like crepe de chine and creped satin sultan or repped silk and Henrietta cloth. More youthful creations from various French ateliers combine soft opal gray with a brilliant shade of coquelicot red or old rose with cut steel and opal bead trimmings, or more elaborate designs of gray silk applique with medallion centers of white lace or of colored silk embroideries in delicate Persian effects.

A very pretty gown of corn-colored barege is made with a tucked skirt trimmed with a graduated flounce edged with narrow black velvet ribbon and above it two bands of broad lace insertion. The bodice is tucked, and decorated with bands of the insertion going round the figure, and joined under bands of velvet ribbon whose ends in front cross over a lace blouse, and are caught by tiny gold buckles. The wired collar is of transparent lace, and narrow black velvet ribbon is strapped about it, fastening with little gold clasps. The sleeves are made of the insertion put together with velvet ribbon, and end at the elbow, in a frill of the velvet-edged barege with an inside frill of lace. A three-inch ribbon of black velvet is carried round the waist and drawn through a round gold buckle, the long ends falling to the hem of the skirt.

Summer Squash.

Summer squashes, if very young, may be boiled whole; if not, they should be pared, quartered and the seeds taken out. When boiled very tender take them up, put them in a strong cloth and press out all the water, mash them, salt and butter them to your taste. The neck part of the squash is the best. Cut it in narrow strips, take off the rind and boil the squash in salt and water till tender, then drain off the water, and let the pumpkin steam over a moderate fire for 10 to 12 minutes. It is good not mashed; if mashed, add a little butter.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

Cherry Soup.

Stem and wash one quart of sour cherries; put in a saucepan with one quart of water, and heat slowly to the boiling point. Rub through a sieve, add one-half a cupful of white sugar, and return to the fire. When boiling, add one tablespoonful of arrowroot rubbed to a paste with a tablespoonful of cold water. Let boil a little longer, take from the fire, add one tablespoonful of lemon juice, and set in a cold place. Serve with cracked ice in bouillon cups, with bread fingers friend in butter, dusted with sugar and glazed in the oven.—Ladies' World, New York.

Pickled Pears.

Seckel or Buffum pears, which are plentiful late in August, are the best for pickling. Do not pare them. For eight pounds of pears, dissolve four pounds of brown sugar in one quart of vinegar. Drop into it a muslin bag filled with four tablespoons of cinnamon and two grated nutmegs. Add the pears, cover closely and simmer very slowly till tender. Lift the fruit into a jar, cook the sirup half an hour, then pour boiling over the pears. Keep covered tightly. Leave the spices in the sirup.—Good Housekeeping.

Canape Sauce.

Rub the yolks of three hard-boiled eggs very fine; add one tablespoonful butter, stir until creamy; then add six canned anchovy fillets, mashed fine; one tablespoonful fine-chopped capers; one tablespoonful tarragon vinegar; one teaspoonful lemon juice; one teaspoonful English mixed mustard. Dip a sprig of parsley into boiling water, then chop it fine, add half teaspoonful of the parsley to the sauce.—Housekeeper.

THE ONLY SAFE GROUND.

Moderate Drinking May Lead to Excess, But Total Abstinence Never Does.

In discussing the distinctions between the terms "temperance" and "total abstinence" it is important to consider their influence on the young, whose opinions are still unformed and whose natural desire for pleasure will prompt them to choose the path which promises the greatest liberty. A rigid insistence on "moderation" as a synonym for "temperance" when applied to drinking makes it a dangerous principle to recommend. That kind of temperance looks very alluring at first, but it often leads by easy stages to all the helplessness and hopelessness of the inebriate. All drunkenness has its origin in moderate drinking, and while it is true that all moderate drinkers do not become inebriates it is equally true that every drunkard was once a moderate drinker. Each one started out with the intention of drinking occasionally—when he felt like it—or when sociability required it, but with the firm conviction that he could always let liquor alone when he wished to. The reason he failed, while his more fortunate brother continued along the line of moderation, was because he was more susceptible to the poison of alcohol. The difference was purely a physical one, but it emphasized the necessity for total abstinence in his case. Moderate drinking is always a trifle uncertain. One is never quite sure when he will pass the line of demarcation. Total abstinence contains no possibilities of harm. Questions of temperament do not enter into its consideration. It is not a breaker of hearts or a wrecker of homes. It does not cause a man to be discharged from a lucrative position or prevent his accumulating property. But it does enable a man to make the best use of his ability and is a recognized factor in his success. It is a prominent requisite on the part of all corporations or individuals whose interests necessitate the employment of large numbers of men, and it finds some of its best exponents in the most successful financiers and the ablest men of the present time. There is need of active work along educational lines to the end that the rising generation may thoroughly understand the dangers of moderate drinking and the great advantages that result from total abstinence.—Banner of Gold.

ITEMS.

Mrs. Lucy A. Coleman, of Chicago, has brought suit for $10,000 against C. J. McClellan, a saloon keeper, for selling liquor to her husband in violation of the dramshop act.

The young women of Rockford, Ill., have organized a social boycott against the young men who smoke cigarettes, visit the races and indulge in beer or other intoxicants.

Commander Seaton Schroeder, governor of Guam, has issued an official order in which he refers to the "terrorism, theft, gambling and drunkenness, which have brought the United States forces into disrepute." The order closes with an imposition of restrictions on the drinking habits of the marines.

Scotland has the largest number of criminals in the United Kingdom. Last year 1,386 persons were convicted in the courts for every 100,000 of the population. In England the ratio was only 581 and in Ireland 839. The explanation is that the Scots are very intemperate; that they drink whisky instead of beer, which induces crime.

The London commission appointed to inquire into the use of arsenic in beer has made a preliminary report, in which the opinion is expressed that the excess of arsenic in brewing is unavoidable with the use of certain ingredients. The committee will recommend ultimately that a standard test be established defining the proportion of arsenic that is to be regarded as wholly inadmissible.

Remarkable Temperance Revival.

A remarkable temperance revival is reported from Litchfield, Ill., where Capt. Jacob H. Hoffstitder has been holding a series of meetings. His eloquence has resulted in a panic among the 17 licensed saloon keepers of the place, who have been advertising free drinks as a counter attraction. The women of the local W. C. T. U. served ice cream and lemonade at the park and their efforts have added to the general dismay of the liquor venders, who declare that they cannot continue in business unless conditions are changed. A prohibition club has been organized with a large membership, and the temperance forces have the active support of the best people in the town.

Anti-Treat Movement.

Mr. Thomas B. Minahan, a prominent attorney of Columbus, O., and an official of the Roman Catholic organization known as the Knights of Columbus, has originated a plan for the abolition of the American custom of "treating." Columbus Council, Knights No. 1, has adopted resolutions pledging its members to refrain from the custom. Mr. Minahan hopes to extend the movement to the national organization, which has a membership of 80,000.

"OLD TIGHT."

Story of a Drunkard's Conversion and Cleansing—Wanted to Die Clean.

By Rev. Frances E. Townsley.

Poor old man! Even now I see him rising for prayers—that evening in the long ago, when I had preached to the unsaved, knowing nothing of him, nor that it was his first evening at our services.

Tall, bloated, white-haired and 82, he shook like an aspen leaf as he clung to the pew before him, while a pastor near me groaned: "O God," and people buried their faces in their hands and whispered: "It's Old Tight."

Yes, that was his only name in W——, where he had lived a genuine sot for 50 years, fiddling for low dances and given over to drunkenness and destruction by all but his aged wife.

Could he be helped? Pastors trembled and wept as he passed into the inquiry room the evening referred to, and his aged wife clung to his arm, for once without a rebuff. He told me he longed "to die clean;" that he knew appetite was his master, and he had been steeped in liquor for half a century. He seemed to sink down on the promises of Christ, and feeling his utter helplessness gave up all to simply let Christ and His people do what they would with him. And therein lay his only hope.

The struggle? There was none. Drunk most of the time for 50 years, an inveterate user of tobacco, with no holy habits of thought or action, Old Tight seemed to present a challenge to the Gospel of deliverance decidedly severe.

His friends, not his carousing cronies (they fled in dismay), fell

LET ME DIE CLEAN.

down before God and pleaded: "Thou hast said!"

The next morning after a strangely quiet night Old Tight told his wife that he wanted she should hide his tobacco box and pipe. She did so. He walked the floor; he trembled worse than ever; he prayed and wrung his hands and cried: "Let me die clean, O God, for Jesus' sake!"

Too old to toil he would have had a monotonous life had not Christians divided the time and left him but a little while alone each day. His wife suggested that he play his fiddle and try some hymns on it. He tried but once, saying: "Mary, it's a part of the old life in sin. It makes me desperately discouraged to see it. Besides, I can't use it for Jesus when I've used it for the devil so many, many years. Put it in the garret!" And to the garret it went.

One day she brought him his tobacco, hoping it might relieve a strange but much to be expected state of gloom. He gave one look at it, was seized with vomiting, cast the box and pipe into the stove and never wanted any more. The very thought of the weed made him faint, and ever after the smell of it set him to vomiting profusely.

He had some trying experiences. Satan attempted to argue with him on the ground of his extreme age, his poverty, his lack of children to aid him, his frequent inability to attend Divine worship. He even taunted him with "offering the Almighty the fag end of a long life of sin." All he could answer was: "I will, I will, I will die clean, by the help of God. If I knew I should be lost I'd still die clean. God said He'd help me. He said He'd save me. I'll let Him!"

One day there was nothing in the larder, winter was coming on and the enemy told him the church had forgotten him. He still cried: "I'll die clean!" That evening a wagon load of saints visited his humble home with food and money sufficient for all winter's needs. It broke the old man's heart. Tears of gratitude poured from his eyes and vows of trustful obedience rolled from his tongue. Thank God, "Old Tight" became Mr. Titus, was known as such a number of years and died clean. No! He still lives and is eternally pure, for "Jesus promised" everlasting life.

As I recall my experience with that man I realize that the barrier to newness of life with scores of drink victims is the lack of will to be helped. On the word of our Lord I am thoroughly convinced that, even with their will power so nearly gone, if like this very aged man they would give God the little they still possess of desire to be right, and willing to die clean, He would keep His word and deliver them.

Years after when I spoke of my story to a large congregation in a distant state a traveling man rose to corroborate my statements, saying he had visited the home of Mr. Titus and learned these details from his neighbors, and thanked God for their truth.

Christians, do not forget to minister continually to the penitent one, lest he lack some bitter day in trust and loyalty, and fail to die clean.—Union Signal.

THE PRESIDENT SHOT.

(Continued from Page One.)

Scores of them were struck by the horses' shoulders as the crowd behind refused to let them retire sufficiently to make passageway.

DRIVER HARD TO CHECK.

The driver had a long keen whip and played it alternately on the horses and the faces and heads of the crowd. Once as the carriage neared the Triumphal Causeway the crush became too dense for it to seem possible to force through. Strong-limbed angry men were in pursuit of the wake of the vehicle trying to find a hold on the smooth, polished surface and the rounded corners. They would slip and fall and be trampled on.

It looked as if the carriage was going to be stopped in front, but the coachman smiled and, standing up, sped his long lash out in front of his horses' heads. They increased their speed to a gallop and the crowd opened. Once on the causeway all was well, for the outer limits of the crowd had been reached and the narrowness of the way beyond as well as the down-hill slope facilitated movement.

The crowd soon gave up pursuit. Hard and fast the carriage went to the Lincoln Park gateway, which swung open as the carriage drew near. From this point straight down Delaware avenue the journey was uninterrupted except that three or four bicyclists followed and spread the news.

PRISONER COWERED.

The prisoner from the moment he had touched the cushions of the carriage cowered in the rear left-hand corner, now and then raising his hand as he would look out of the windows.

When the carriage moved through the crowd, and he could hear their awful imprecations as the people struggled to get near enough to take vengeance, convulsive shivers ran through his slender body and his eyes rolled with wide terror. His lips were dry and parched and he wetted them constantly with his tongue.

As the carriage passed the Milburn residence the guard who was nearest Nieman looked up at the front of the house in which Mrs. McKinley lay asleep. Clutching his club closer in his hand, he bent on the prisoner a look which made him cower deeper in the cushions.

Just south of Utica street the carriage met a light police wagon containing Captain Bull, superintendent of Buffalo police, who wheeled and followed the carriage down to headquarters at Station No. 1, at the junction of the terrace, Erie and Seneca streets.

LANDED AT POLICE STATION.

The carriage drew up sharply and the prisoner was taken out. A moment later the bicycle men who were following had told the crowd of idlers that the President had been shot and that the man who had done it was the prisoner who had just arrived. From that germ the mob fever grew and swelled.

All over the vicinity, into the neighboring saloons and railroad men's quarters, the tidings sped. The knots of people that formed the nucleus of the downtown mob began to collect.

Back of the Temple of Music the crowd continued to grow larger. Rumors spread that the man who had done the shooting was still in the building, and it was necessary to hold the guards there for hours. The fact that the guards remained convinced the people that they had been made victims of a ruse, and it was at a late hour that the last of the throng dispersed.

An innocent remark of a well-meaning man nearly cost him his life.

"Well, this is the result of Bryan's doctrine," said some one.

A well-meaning Bryan partisan answered:

"Bryan is not so far wrong after all, neighbor."

"He's an anarchist!" shouted a rowdy, and angry men seeking vengeance began to taunt the Bryan advocate. The hundreds back of the circle yelled till his protestations were drowned. Finally he left, followed by volleys of imprecations and threats.

Hundreds scrambled out on window ledges to look in at the police station. A cell door soon closed on the prisoner.

He Owes His Life to the Foreughthot of a Companion.

While on a camping trip in Webster county, Mr. S. I. Stump, of Normantown, W. Va., had a severe attack of bloody flux. He says, "I firmly believe I owe my life to the forethought of one of the company who had taken along a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy." Moral.—Procure a bottle of this remedy before leaving home. It cannot be obtained when on a hunting, fishing or prospecting trip. Neither can it be obtained while on board the cars or steamship, and at such times and places it is most likely to be needed. The safe way is to have it with you. Thousands of travelers never leave home on a journey without it. For sale by all druggists.

Wanted.

One hundred men for general woods work and grading railroad.

PRESTON LUMBER & COAL CO.,
22 tf Oakland, Md

35th Annual Encampment G. A. R., Cleveland, O., Sept. 10 to 14. Baltimore & Ohio Railroad, Rattlefield Route.

For the Annual Encampment G. A. R., at Cleveland, O., September 10 to 14, the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad will sell tickets from all points on its lines East of the Ohio River at the very low rate of ONE FARE for the ROUND TRIP. Tickets good going on all trains of September 8 to 12, inclusive, good to return until September 15, inclusive, except if tickets are deposited with Joint Agent on or before noon of September 15 and payment of fee of 50 cents, tickets may be extended for return to October 8, inclusive.

Call on agent Baltimore & Ohio Railroad for tickets and full information.

Money to Loan.

$4,000 to loan on first mortgage in n sums to suit upon town property or nearby farms.

EDWARD H. SINCELL.

Fall term CENTRAL COMMERCIAL COLLEGE, Cumberland, Md., Winchester, Va., begins Sept. 2nd. Write for catalog and free lesson in Gregg Shorthand. Scholarship $45.00

ILLINOIS CENTRAL RAILROAD — CENTRAL MISSISSIPPI VALLEY ROUTE

CALIFORNIA, COLORADO AND UTAH.

Special low Summer Excursion Rates to all points. Personally conducted Pullman Tourist Sleeping Cars.

Personally conducted tour to San Francisco, Cal., account General Convention Episcopal Cuhrch. Tickets on sale Sept. 22nd to 27th. Good returning until Nov. 5th, with stop-over privileges.

Quickest and best line to

OKLAHOMA AND INDIAN TERRITORY.

Only line with Double Daily Through Service. Dining Cars and Free Reclining Chair Cars. Fastest train service to the famous

BEAUMONT, TEXAS, OIL FIELDS.

Through sleeping car from Chicago without change and through sleeping car reservations from Cincinnati via Memphis, Tenn., to

HOT SPRINGS, ARK.

Special Homeseekers' Excursions to all points South, West and North West.

For FREE descriptive matter and full particulars regarding above, address

E. A. RICHTER,
Traveling Passenger Agent.
812 Park Building, Pittsburg, Pa.

Appointment of Judge and Registration Officer to Fill Vacancy.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., August 14, 1901.

Josias Bittinger, appointed Republican Judge and Registration Officer by this board, at a meeting held June 29, 1901, for Election District No. 12, is found to be disqualified to serve as such, and in his place and stead Geo. W. Engle is hereby appointed to fill said vacancy.

By order of the Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett county, Md.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President.

EXECUTORS' NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the subscribers of Garrett county, have obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber on or before the 15th day of March next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

W. W. FRAZEE,

Given under our hands this 10th day of September, 1901.

ELMIE FRAZEE,
OLIVER P. FRAZEE,
Executors.
Markleysburg, Pa.

EXECUTOR'S NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the subscriber, of Garrett county, hath obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett county, in Maryland, Letters Testamentary on the personal estate of late of Garrett county, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same, with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscriber, on or before the 15th day of March next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

JACOB SHARTZER,

Given under my hand this 10th day of September, 1901.

LEONARD SHARTZER, Executor,
27 3* Accident, Md.

ADMINISTRATORS' NOTICE.

This is to give notice, That the Subscribers, of Garrett county, Maryland, have obtained from the Orphans' Court of Garrett County, in Maryland, Letters of Administration on the personal estate of late of Somerset county, Pennsylvania, deceased. All persons having claims against the deceased are hereby warned to exhibit the same with the vouchers thereof legally authenticated to the subscribers, on or before the 15th day of March next; they may otherwise by law be excluded from all benefit of said estate. All persons knowing themselves indebted to said estate are requested to make immediate payment.

HANSON WALTER,

Given under my hand this 9th day of September, 1901.

ELIZA JANE FAUCETT,
GEORGE HENRY WALTER,
Administrators,
27 3* Selbysport, Md.

ROAD PETITION.

This is to give notice that thirty days after the first publication of this notice application will be made to the Board of County Commissioners of Garrett county, Maryland, for the appointment of viewers to view and locate a new road beginning for the same at the south end of Garrett V. Moon's lane and running thence down Laurel Creek and through the lands of the Manor Mining and Manufacturing Company, James L. Harvey and J. B. Lipscomb and along the lines of said Lipscomb and Chas. Cooper and through the lands of the said Mining and Manufacturing Company to the town of Schell, a distance of about three miles.

J. L. HARVEY,
J. O. O'HAVRE,
J. B. LIPSCOMB and others,
22 5t* Petitioners.

The Maryland Agricultural College

COLLEGE PARK, MARYLAND.

Maryland's School of Technology. Four Courses of Instruction.

AGRICULTURAL — MECHANICAL
SCIENTIFIC — CLASSICAL

Each department supplied with the most modern and approved apparatus. Practical work emphasized in all departments. Graduates qualified at once to enter upon life's work; graduates in Mechanical Engineering and Chemistry this year, all secured positions upon graduation. Boarding Department supplied with all modern improvements—bath rooms, closets, steam heat and gas.

Tuition, Books, Heat, Light, Washing, Board and Medical Attendance, $154.00 for scholastic year. Catalogue giving full particulars sent on application. Daily visit by physician to college.

Attention is called to the Short Course of Ten Weeks in Agriculture. Particulars sent upon application.

Term commences September 23rd. Early application necessary for admittance.

R. W. SILVESTER,
President M. A. C.

Order of Publication.

Noah Bowman, Plaintiff, vs. Elizabeth Bowman et al, Defendants.

No. 1118 Equity. In the Circuit Court for Garrett County, Maryland.

The object of this bill is to procure a decree for the sale of certain real estate of which Samuel Bowman, late of Garrett county, deceased, died seized and possessed.

The Bill states—

1st. That a certain Samuel Bowman was in his lifetime seized and possessed of a parcel of land situated in Garrett county, Maryland, containing about sixty-four and one-half acres.

2nd. That being so seized, the said Samuel Bowman some twenty years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving him a widow (who has since died) and the following children, viz., Noah Bowman, Joseph Bowman, Cornelius Bowman and Lydia Bowman.

3rd. That the said Lydia intermarried with one J. H. Pitzer, and some years ago departed this life intestate, leaving surviving her her husband and the following children, viz., Maggie B., who intermarried with W. G. Rogers; Annie, who intermarried with S. J. Neil (the said Annie now being dead, dying intestate, leaving surviving her her said husband and one child, Conova, a minor); Harriet, who intermarried with Alex. McAnear; Frances L., who intermarried with W. W. Brown; Sarah A., who intermarried with L. L. Cooper; Noah C. Pitzer, a minor, and J. R. Pitzer.

4th. That Cornelius Bowman is also dead, dying intestate, leaving a widow, Elizabeth Bowman, and the following children, viz., James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman and Mattie, who intermarried with W. H. Morgan.

5th. That the said Joseph Bowman died intestate some pears ago, leaving a widow, Lizzie Bowman, a son, N. E. Bowman, and other children, whose names and ages are unknown.

6th. That the real estate is not susceptible of partition without material loss and injury, and that in order to make division thereof the property will have to be sold and the proceeds divided.

7th. The Bill then prays for a decree for the sale of said property and for a distribution of the proceeds, for general relief, and also for an order of publication against the non-residents and unknown heirs.

It is thereupon, this 12th day of August, 1901, ordered by the Circuit Court for Garrett county, in Equity, that the plaintiff, by causing a copy of this order to be inserted in some newspaper published in Garrett county, once in each of four successive weeks before the 13th day of September, 1901, give notice to the defendants, the said Elizabeth Bowman, James F. Bowman, Samuel H. Bowman, Mattie Morgan and W. H. Morgan, her husband, J. H. Pitzer, Maggie B. Rogers and W. G. Rogers, her husband, S. J. Neal, Conova Neal, Harriet E. McAnear and Alex. McAnear, her husband, Sarah Cooper and L. L. Cooper, her husband, Noah C. Pitzer, Frances L. Brown and W. W. Brown, her husband, J. R. Pitzer, Lizzie Bowman, N. E. Bowman and the unknown heirs of Joseph Bowman, deceased, of the object and substance of this bill, warning them to appear in this Court in person or by solicitor, on or before the 30th day of September, 1901, to show cause, if any they have, why a decree ought not to be passed as prayed.

E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

True copy—test:
E. Z. TOWER, Clerk.

COMMISSIONERS' MEETING.

OFFICE OF THE
COUNTY COMMISSIONERS FOR GARRETT CO.
OAKLAND, MD., Aug. 22, 1901.

The Board of County Commissioners for Garrett county will meet at their office in Oakland on

Monday, Sept. 9, 1901,

as required by law, for the purpose of transacting all routine business.

By order of the Board,

A. G. ROSS, Clerk.

Cure That Cold

And it can be done for 25 cents—a dose or two and relief is instant—a few doses more and the cure is complete.

Pine and Terpin Cough Syrup

Is a new remedy—contains new drugs and new chemicals—a trial will convince anyone of its merit—it cures where all else fails.

LOGAN DRUG COMPANY,
At all Druggists. WHEELING, W. VA.

The Garrett County Bank

OAKLAND, MD.

Pays 3 Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Subscribed Capital, - $50,000.00
Liability of Stockholders, 100,000.00
Surplus Fund, - - 10,000.00

DIRECTORS:

DANIEL E. OFFUTT,
GILMOR S. HAMILL,
JOHN M. DAVIS,
GEORGE W. LEGGE,
JOHN T. MITCHELL,
JOHN M. FREELAND,
SCOTT T. JONES.

D. E. OFFUTT, President.
G. S. HAMILL, Vice-President.
S. T. JONES, Cashier.

Paid Up Capital $32,000.

The First National Bank

OF OAKLAND, MD.

Now Open for Business

Offers to its patrons every advantage consistent with sound Banking, and which their balances, business and responsibility warrant.

3 per cent. Interest Paid on Time Deposits.

WE SOLICIT YOUR BUSINESS.

DIRECTORS.

Ed A. Browning, - Oakland, Md.
C. E. Ellithorp, - Bittinger, Md.
L. E. Friend, - Friendsville, Md.
Wm. Moody, - Bloomington, Md.
U. G. Palmer, - Hutton, Md.
R. A. Ravenscroft, Accident, Md.
E. E. Sollars, - Oakland, Md.
U. M. Stanton, - Grantsville, Md.
F. A. Thayer, - Oakland, Md.
M. N. Wilson, - Wilson, W. Va.

OFFICERS.

F. A. THAYER, - President.
M. N. WILSON, - Vice-President.
R. E. SLIGER, - Cashier.
M. R. HAMILL, Assistant Cashier.

THE
SECOND NATIONAL BANK
of CUMBERLAND, MD.

Designated United States Depository.

SAFE DEPOSIT VAULTS.
BOXES FREE TO CUSTOMERS.

This Bank Pays Three Per Cent. Interest on Time Deposits.

Capital..... $100,000
Surplus and Other Undivided Profits.. 250,000
Liability of Shareholders..... 100,000
Additional Security to Depositors.. $450,000

LLOYD LOWNDES, President.
D. ANNAN, Cashier.

DIRECTORS:

Lloyd Lowndes, O. C. Gephart,
James Clark, L. M. Shepherd,
John Sheridan, A. Hunter Boyd,
David W. Sloan.

Burlington Route

It costs no more to ride on this beautiful train than on any other.

Chicago-St.Paul Minneapolis Limited Express

It is electric lighted and heated by steam, carries a library-buffet-smoking car, a dining car à la carte and everything there is to make one comfortable.

Leaves CHICAGO 6.30 p. m. Daily

We sell through tickets, reserve sleeping car berths, furnish maps and time tables, and can, perhaps, be of service in other ways. Kindly write or call.

H. E. HELLER, District Passenger Agent,
632 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

CONSTIPATION CURED!

Nearly everyone suffers in a greater or less degree from this dreadful disease. It is dangerous to neglect the bowels, and often by doing so a foundation is laid for serious ailments.

Those suffering from Constipation suffer from slow Poison.

OUR NATIVE HERBS

cures Constipation quietly and permanently.

No Pain. No Griping. No Binding effect afterwards. Its action is pleasant and sure.

200 DAYS' TREATMENT $1.00.
A CURE GUARANTEED OR THE MONEY BACK.

"When a girl I had Small Pox succeded by Typhoid Fever and Measels. I was left with Constipation and Sinking Spells. Sometimes I felt that I could not live. After having various physicians treat me with no benefit I bought a box of Our Native Herbs, which seems to be the only medicine that suits my case. I believe it saved my life." Mrs. M. MILLER, Crellin, Md.

No Case Too Stubborn for Our Native Herbs To Conquer.

THE ALONZO O. BLISS CO.,
SOLE PROPRIETORS,
WASHINGTON, D. C.

A. C. BROOKE,
Local Agent. Mountain Lake Park, Md.

A box of Tablets or Powder mailed to any address upon receipt of $1.00.

Midget Harness Riveter.

Complete repair shop in one tool. Will not wear out. Punches the hole, drives and clinches at one operation. Every horse owner, liveryman, teamster will buy on sight. Does the work of any $25 machine. Complete outfit with big bog of rivets will be sent for

ONLY 50 CENTS.

Agents Wanted.

HANDY ADJUSTABLE LIFTER. Handiest article ever invented for lifting hot pans, stove lids, etc. 15c, postpaid.

S. T. WILSON & CO.,
Box 103. Wilson, W. Va.

J. B. WILLIAMS CO.

FROSTBURG, MD.

Cheapest place to buy

MONUMENTS
HEADSTONES AND IRON FENCING

Send for prices

LAND FOR SALE!

I am now offering for sale in large or small quantities, 20,000 acres of a tract known as "Swanton," and better known as the "Anderson lands," situated in Garrett County, Md. This land is well timbered and underlaid with many valuable veins of mineral; also suitable for farming purposes and grazing.

All trespassing will be prosecuted to the utmost extent of the law.

Call on or address:

C. A. WILT, Agent, Elk Lick, Pa.

WILLIAM R. OFFUTT,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY.
OFFICE UPSTAIRS IN RAVENSCROFT BUILD'G.

Loans negotiated and Collections promptly made.

Practices in Courts of Maryland, West Virginia and Court of Appeals of Maryland.

VALUABLE REAL ESTATE FOR SALE.

133⅝ acres coal land on Youghiogheny river, 7 miles north of Oakland.

The Andrews property in Oakland for sale.

House on 5th street, opposite the jail for sale.

A farm one mile from Oakland, containing 187⅝ acres; about 50 or 60 acres cleared and under cultivation; has been thoroughly limed. Balance of land well timbered. On this farm is one of the best dwelling houses in the county; also stables, wagon sheds, spring house and all necessary outbuildings; water within five feet of kitchen door. This property will be sold cheap.

New house containing eight rooms, cellar, etc., and 26⅜ acres of ground; barn, stable, and all other outbuildings, adjoining the town of Grantsville, Garrett county. This property is known as the Samuel J. Beachy property, and will be sold cheap.

A farm five miles from Oakland on the Aurora road, containing 200 acres, well watered, fenced, etc.; a good dwelling house, a new barn built last year cost $1,000, and all other necessary outbuildings. This property will be sold on easy terms.

A farm 2½ miles southwest of Oakland, containing ninety acres of ground, well watered and fenced; has been thoroughly limed, and is under a high state of cultivation. First-class dwelling house; new bank barn put up this year; stone spring house and all other necessary outbuildings. One hundred and twenty-five bearing fruit trees of choicest variety. This farm can be bought on easy terms.

A farm five and two-third miles north of Swanton, containing one hundred and ten acres of land, comparatively level, well watered and under fence; eighty acres cleared and under a high state of cultivation; twenty-five acres of good timber; an orchard which never fails to produce fruit, consisting of pearses, pears, plums and apple trees. The buildings on this farm consist of an elegant dwelling house, containing six rooms and a cellar; a bank barn 40x60 feet; a spring house and all necessary outbuildings. This farm can be bought for part cash and balance on time to suit purchaser.

A farm known as the "Swauger Mill Property," containing eighty-six acres of land, partly cleared and balance in hemlock timber. The buildings consist of a dwelling house, small storehouse, a water-power grist mill, stable and all other necessary outbuildings. Besides being well watered by a stream running from one end of the place to the other it has on it a lake, covering about seven acres, which has been stocked with 40,000 brook and rain bow trout. This property can be bought at a low figure, part cash and balance on time, to suit purchaser, at five per cent. interest.

I have also houses to rent and sell in the town of Oakland.

For further particulars apply to

JOHN T. SINCELL,
Real Estate and Insurance Agent.
OAKLAND, MD

GEO. FLACK SANSBURY, ARCHITECT,

Office 7 North Liberty St.
CUMBERLAND, MD.

NORMAN S. HEINDEL,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
All business given prompt attention.
Office—REPUBLICAN Building,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND.

FRED A. THAYER,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MD.
STATE'S ATTORNEY FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
Office in McComas's Building, Main St.
Will be assisted in all important cases by Benjamin A. Richmond of the Cumberland bar.

GILMOR S. HAMILL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW
AND SOLICITOR IN CHANCERY
OFFICE ON ALDER STREET.
Particular attention given to Conveyancing, investigation of land titles and collection of claims. Loans negotiated. 1e14-1y

JULIUS C. RENNINGER,
ATTORNEY & COUNSELLOR AT LAW
Office opposite Bank, OAKLAND, MD.
Will practice in the courts of Maryland and West Virginia.
Real estate and mercantile law given special attention. Collections and investments made for clients. 45—1yr

EDWARD H. SINCELL,
ATTORNEY AT LAW,
OAKLAND, MARYLAND,
Will practice in the Courts of Garrett and Allegany counties, the Court of Appeals of Maryland, and the adjoining counties of West Virginia. '88 10

DR. R. F. BARTLETT,
DENTIST.
Office in McComas building, Second Street, Oakland, Md.
Special attention given to bridge and crown work. 18-98-tf.

DR. J. G. ROBINSON, DENTIST,
Felty Building, Opposite Postoffice,
OAKLAND, MD
GAS ADMINISTERED. 50-97

DR. C. HINEBAUGH, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON.
OAKLAND, MD.
Office and residence, Alder St., west of post office.

DR. H. RAVENSCRAFT, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON
OAKLAND, MD.
Residence on North 3rd Street.
Office in Shartzer's Block, Second Street.

DR. J. E. LEGGE,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
Offers his services to the citizens of Oakland and vicinity.
Prompt attention paid to day or night calls.
Office at McComas' Sanitarium. 16-'99

DR. H. W. McCOMAS, M. D.,
PHYSICIAN AND SURGEON,
OAKLAND, MD.
Office opposite Garrett County Bank.
Residence on Main Street, opposite Brown's Hotel.
Office hours, 8 to 10 a. m., 2 to 3 p. m., 8 to p. m., from June to October and from October to June, 7 to 8.30 p. m.

DR. D. O. McKINLEY,
RESIDENT DENTIST,
SALISBURY, PENNA.
Will visit regularly through Garrett county, Md., and offers his services to those wishing Dental Treatment. Charges moderate
P. O. address, Elk Lick, Pa. 5 22 6m

E. J. FRANTZ,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER,
Residence and P. O. Address,
SELBYSPORT, MD.

ANDREW J. HARNE,
AUCTIONEER.
Will sell real or personal property.
Residence Oakland, Garrett county, Md.
Oakland, Md., Feb. 21st, 1887.

W. McCULLOH BROWN,
SURVEYOR AND ENGINEER,
LAND SURVEYS PROMPTLY MADE.
Particular attention given to TOWN surveying, and the use of the LEVEL in laying out new roads, streets, water works, drains, and GRADE LINES generally, including tram ways and railroad work. Comparative elevations taken quickly by aneroid barometer. Address, box 41, Oakland, Md. 48 26t*

JONAS C. BEACHY,
LICENSED AUCTIONEER.
Will sell Real or Personal Estate
Residence and post office address, BITTINGER, MD. 51-1yr.

ALEX'R C. MASON,
PRACTICAL SURVEYOR,
OAKLAND, MD.
Long experience enables me to locate tracts and military lots promptly and accurately. Being thoroughly familiar with the beginning corners of the most important surveys both in Allegany and Garrett counties. Plats descriptions and estimates furnished. 40-1yr.

BALTIMORE & OHIO R. R. TIME TABLE IN EFFECT MAY 19, 1901.

The following time table on the B. & O. went into effect on Sunday, May 19, 1901. Trains now leave Oakland as follows:

GOING WEST.

No. 7.—Daily	3.42 A. M
No. 3—Daily	7.35 A. M
No. 71—Daily except Sunday	10.01 A. M
No. 55—Daily	4.52 P. M
No. 1—Daily	10.07 P. M

GOING EAST.

No. 8—Daily	5.50 A. M
No. 2—Daily	6.52 A. M
No. 46—Express, daily	4.41 P. M
No. 72—Accom daily except Sun	5.12 P. M
No. 12—Daily	8.35 P. M
No. 4—Daily	12.37 A. M

F. D. UNDERWOOD, General Manager
D. B. MARTIN,
Manager of Passenger Traffic.
D. M. MASON, Agent.

WEST VIRGINIA CENTRAL AND PITTSBURG RAILWAY CO.
IN EFFECT NOV 25, 1900.

SOUTHWARD No. 3	No. 1	STATIONS	NORTHWARD No. 2	No. 4
P. M.	A. M.		NOON	P. M.
3 15†	7 00† lv	Cumberland ar	†12 00	†7 00
3 43	7 29	Rawlings	11 31	6 31
4 06	7 52	Keyser	11 08	6 09
4 16	8 05	Westernport	10 58	5 57
4 20	8 09	W. Va. C. Junc.	10 51	5 50
4 39	8 35	Shaw	10 28	5 22
5 00	9 00	Harrison	†10 06	†5 00
5 45*	9 50* ar	Elk Garden	*8 10	*4 10
5 41†	9 35† lv	Gorman	†9 35	4 30
5 47	9 42	Bayard	9 29	4 25
5 59	9 54	Dobbin	9 19	4 15
6 02	9 58	Henry	9 15	4 11
6 27	10 27	Thomas	8 48	3 47
6 55	10 55 ar	Davis	8 05	3 05
6 31	10 34 lv	Coketon	8 41	3 40
6 50	11 01	Hendricks	8 10	3 10
7 02	11 04	Hambleton	8 07	3 07
7 05	11 07	Bretz	8 03	3 03
7 08	11 10	Parsons	8 00	3 00
7 43	11 45	Kerens	7 25	2 28
8 00†	12 00† ar	Elkins	lv †7 10	†2 15
	NOON
8 36*	12 45† ar	Beverly	lv *7 20	†1 40
9 05*	1 10† ar	Huttonsville	lv *6 30	†1 15
P. M.				P. M.
	3 15* ar	Bealington	lv	*11 40
	P. M.		A. M.	A. M.

†Daily. *Daily except Sunday.

C. L. BRETZ, Gen. Manager. G. W. HARRISON, Gen. Pas. Agen

THE REPUBLICAN.

VOLUME 25. OAKLAND, MARYLAND, THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1901. NUMBER 28.

PRESIDENT McKINLEY IS DEAD!

Theodore Roosevelt is Now President of the United States.

PEACEFUL CLOSE OF A GRAND CAREER.

In a Loving Farewell to His Devoted Wife the Dying President's Last Words Were "It is God's Way; His Will Be Done. Good-by." The Nation Bowed in Grief.

William McKinley, the twenty-fourth President of the United States, died at 2.15 Saturday morning.

The bullet fired by Leon Czolgosz, the anarchist assassin, has done its awful work.

The nation is bowed in grief.

Theodore Roosevelt, in accordance with the provisions of the constitution, is now the President.

President McKinley's end was peaceful. The noble courage and Christian spirit which had characterized his splendid public career and his sweet domestic life were pathetically shown in his last moments of consciousness. His one thought was of his wife, who held his hand in a loving, lingering farewell. His last words were to her. They were:

"Good-by. All, Good-by. It is God's Way. His Will Be Done."

Members of the Cabinet, Secretary Cortelyou and the others who had watched through the hours of suspense and anxiety from the time of the first sinking spell, caused by heart failure, early Friday morning, entered the chamber of the dying President, touched his hand and murmured a word of farewell. About 7.40 o'clock the President softly uttered the words of his favorite hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and then lapsed into unconsciousness.

From the time that the President experienced the first severe sinking spell, at 2 o'clock Friday morning, until 7 o'clock Friday evening digitalis was given and saline solution injected to stimulate the action of the enfeebled heart. Oxygen was also administered. It seemed that the dying man was being kept alive by artificial means. After he had bidden farewell to Mrs. McKinley and others near and dear to him the President requested the doctors to be allowed to die, and the use of oxygen was suspended.

The members of the family, with the exception of the bereaved widow, were at the deathbed. Mrs. McKinley was in an adjoining room. Dr. Rixey was the only physician present.

He had been unconscious since 7.30 p. m. His last conscious hour on earth was spent with the wife to whom he devoted a lifetime of care. He died unattended by a minister of the Gospel, but his last words were an humble submission to the will of God, in whom he believed. He was reconciled to the cruel fate to which an assassin's bullet had condemned him, and faced death in the same spirit of calmness and poise which has marked his long and honorable career.

His relatives and the members of his official family were at the Milburn house, except Secretary Wilson, who did not avail himself of the opportunity, and some of his personal and political friends took leave of him. This painful ceremony was simple. His friends came to the door of the sick room, took a longing glance at him, and turned tearfully away. He was practically unconscious during this time.

But the powerful heart stimulants, including oxygen, were employed to restore him to consciousness for his final parting with his wife. He asked for her, and she sat at his side and held his hand. He consoled her and bade her good-by. She went through the heart-trying scene with the same bravery and fortitude with which she has borne the grief of the tragedy which ended his life.

The announcement of the death to the members of the Cabinet was made by Webb Hayes, who said:

"It is all over."

Mrs. McKinley last saw her husband between 11 and 12. At that time she sat by the bedside holding his hand. The members of the Cabinet were admitted to the sick room singly at that time.

The actual death probably occurred about 2 o'clock, it being understood that Dr. Rixey delayed the announcement momentarily to assure himself.

The announcement of the news to those waiting below was postponed until the members of the family had withdrawn. Through Secretary Cortelyou the waiting newspaper men received the notification. In a trice there was the keenest excitement on the broad avenue, but there was no semblance of disorder.

With the momentary excitement incident upon the announcement of the end the entire scene became one of unmistakable and deep mourning. As if nature lent its aid to the grieving crowds a dense fog settled like a pall over the city. The Milburn house became a tomb of silence. Lights not extinguished were dimmed; visitors were denied admittance and the mourning family and their more intimate friends were speedily left alone with their distinguished dead.

OUR MARTYR PRESIDENT.

WILLIAM McKINLEY.

THE LAST FAREWELLS A PATHETIC SCENE.

Before 6 o'clock Friday evening it was clear to those at the President's bedside that he was dying, and preparations were made for the last sad offices of farewell from those who were nearest and dearest to him. Oxygen had been administered steadily, but with little effect in keeping back the approach of death. The President came out of one period of unconsciousness only to relapse into another. But in this period, when his mind was partially clear, occurred a series of events of profoundly touching character. Down stairs, with strained and tear-stained faces, members of the Cabinet were grouped in anxious waiting. They knew the end was near, and that the time had come when they must see him for the last time on earth. This was about 6 o'clock. One by one they ascended the stairway—Secretary Root, Secretary Hitchcock and Attorney General Knox. Secretary Wilson also was there, but he held back, not wishing to see the President in his last agony. There was only a momentary stay of the Cabinet officers at the threshold of the death chamber. Then they withdrew, the tears streaming down their faces and the words of intense grief choking in their throats.

After they left the sick room the physicians rallied him to consciousness, and the President asked almost immediately that his wife be brought to him. The doctors fell back into the shadows of the room as Mrs. McKinley came through the doorway. The strong face of the dying man lighted up with a faint smile as their hands were clasped. She sat beside him and held his hand. Despite her physical weakness she bore up bravely under the ordeal.

The President in his last period of consciousness, which ended about 7.40, chanted the words of the hymn, "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and his last audible conscious words, as taken down by Dr. Mann at the bedside, were:

"Good-by; all good-by. It is God's way. His will be done."

Then his mind began to wander, and soon afterward he completely lost consciousness. His life was prolonged for hours by the administration of oxygen, and the President finally expressed a desire to be allowed to die. About 8.30 the administration of oxygen ceased and the pulse grew fainter and fainter. He was sinking gradually, like a child, into the eternal slumber. By 10 o'clock the pulse could no longer be felt in his extremities, and they grew cold. Below stairs the grief-stricken gathering waited sadly for the end.

All the evening those who had hastened to Buffalo fast as steel and steam could carry them continued to arrive. They drove up in carriages at a gallop or were whisked up in automobiles, all intent upon getting there before death came. One of the last to arrive was Attorney General Knox, who reached the house at 9.30. He was permitted to go up stairs to look for the last time upon the face of his chief. Those in the house at this time were Secretaries Hitchcock, Wilson and Root, Senators Fairbanks, Hanna and Burrows, Judge Day, Colonel Herrick, Abner McKinley (the President's brother) and his wife, Dr. and Mrs. Baer (the President's niece and her husband), Miss Mary Barber, Mrs. McWilliams (Mrs. McKinley's cousin), the physicians, including Dr. McBurney, who arrived after 8 o'clock; John G. Milburn, John N. Scatcherd, Harry Hamlin, all of Buffalo; Secretary Cortelyou and a number of others.

Thus minutes lengthened to hours, and midnight came with the President still battling against death.

At the midnight hour the Milburn hour was the centre of a scene as animated as though it were midday, although a solemn hush hung over the great crowd of watchers. The entire lower part of the house was aglow with light, and the many attendants, friends and relatives could be seen moving about and occasionally moving in groups to the front door for a breath of air. In the upper front chambers the lights were low, and around on the north side, where the chamber of death is located, there were fitting lights, some burning brightly and then turned low.

Vice President Roosevelt had been notified early in the day of the critical state of affairs. There was no longer a doubt that in the approaching death of the President a complete change in the executive administration of the government would ensue. When Mr. Roosevelt would take the oath of office was wholly a matter of conjecture.

BEGUN IN HOPE, ENDED IN DESPAIR.

The President's last day, which ended in despair, began in hope. The ills that came on Friday afternoon, when the organs of digestion refused to handle the solid food that had been taken earlier in the day, had seemingly been overcome by midnight, and when the new day came it found the President relieved and resting. Hope that had suddenly dropped from the high place which it had held began to revive. The healing of the wounds had progressed favorably, general conditions were in the main quite satisfactory, and the immediate future of the case seemed to hold no threat.

The physicians, who had been in almost constant attendance during the night, parted, and the watch in the sick room was reduced. Suddenly there was a failure of the heart, which for several days had been manifesting signs of weakness, and the President sank toward unconsciousness. This was at 2 o'clock in the morning. There was an immediate application of restoratives and a general call went out to the absent physicians and nurses. Digitalis, strychnia and saline solution were administered to the patient, but there was no immediate response to treatment.

The physicians admitted that he was desperately ill, and Secretary Cortelyou decided to send for the relatives and close friends of the President, the Vice President and the members of the Cabinet.

(CONTINUED ON PAGE FIVE.)

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL. Publisher.

OAKLAND, : GARRETT CO., MD.

Tom's Miserable Luck

By JAMES C. PURDY.

"I DUNNO how 'tis our Tom always has such miserable luck. I'm sure no boy tries harder for a chance to work and no boy's capabler than he is, but things always seem to go against him, somehow.

Indeed, there seemed to be some ground for Mrs. Gill's complaint. Tom certainly did have a great many falls in his wrestle with the world. He was bright and active, not vicious and not lazy. He found plenty of opportunities to work, but the opportunities did not last.

"Tom hasn't got influence," his mother would sigh in explanation. "It takes influence to push a boy on, and how's a poor boy to get any influence?"

When Tom was discharged from the Electrical Works, he assumed that his place was wanted for the son of some stockholder. The manager's explanation was different, but Tom's mother believed Tom.

As winter approached, the need at home was more urgent than ever, for the mother herself had fallen down the cellar stairs, and was wofully lame in consequence.

"I ought to have remembered that broken step," she said, dolefully. "Tom was goin' to fix it when it first got broke, but he kept puttin' it off, somehow."

Under pressure of necessity, Tom announced himself as an odd jobber. He was handy and apt at many things; he could put an electric bell in order, rig up an electric gas-lighting attachment, put a new washer on a leaky spigot, contrive a kitchen shelf, mend a broken bracket, replace a shattered window-pane. All these things he undertook to do now, as well as to manage the furnace fires in people's cellars.

Mrs. Byrd gave him his first trial. She was not rich, she did not even keep a servant, but her word of commendation went far with the many rich people among her friends. Being interested in Tom's mother, she gave the boy two or three small jobs to do, and he did them well.

"You might try him," she said to her friends, "but don't promise any steady work till we see how he holds out. For he has had an unbroken run of what his mother calls 'miserable luck.' Perhaps his luck has changed now."

So Tom was given a good many jobs. Presently winter was close at hand, and furnace fires must be started.

"Build mine at once," Mrs. Boyd said to Tom. "I will tell you exactly how I wish it managed." And she concluded: "I take you on trial for two weeks. It depends on yourself

"BUT ISN'T A BARGAIN A BARGAIN?"

whether the trial shall last longer than that."

Then she was reminded that some boy had broken a pane of glass in the cellar window facing north.

"Put a whole pane of glass in there," she said, "before the first freeze. It won't do to have that water-pipe frozen."

"I'll put it in to-morrow morning," said Tom.

"Very well, I'll trust you for that."

The mild weather lasted nearly a fortnight after this, and furnace fires were kept as low as possible. Tom had several of them to attend to, but not quite so many as at first. Already his miserable luck had caught up with him again. Several of his new employers had dispensed with him. Mr. Crane told him bluntly that, since he had "skipped" a day, he need not come back to finish weather-stripping the windows. When he went to lay Mrs. Wilson's vestibule oilcloth, he found it already in place. It was discouraging, but still Tom did not give up.

The disappointment at Judge Grey's came near making him do that, however. He was called there to put an electric bell in order, and to put new wires to the gas-lighting attachment. He soon had the bell working perfectly, but when he went back, three days later, with the wire for the other job, he found that a regular electrician had been called in his stead, and that the work was already done. Why? Certainly no electrician in the city could do that job better than Tom Gill could do it; and just because he had put off doing it for a couple of days!

The cold weather came suddenly. People woke in the night shivering for more blankets, and the next morning all ponds were covered with ice. Then the wind rose, and came in an arctic gale straight from the north. It blew so all day and all night, and before the second morning dawned the cold was bitter.

That second morning Tom was a full half hour late in getting to Mrs. Byrd's. She was in the kitchen to receive him, and he noticed a certain unusual graciousness in her manner.

"I ain't just on the minute this morning," he said, with his pleasant laugh. "Bed felt so good, I lay a little too long."

"Just a little," said Mrs. Byrd, smoothly. "Now that you mention it, I think you have been a little late every morning; a half hour or so."

Tom gave her an apprehensive look. "Well, you see, them warm mornings I thought it wouldn't make any difference. You see—"

"But isn't a bargain a bargain?" she asked, calmly. "You know you agreed to be here every morning at half-past six, and don't you think I had a right to expect you at that time? I may be wrong, but it seems to me it was none of your business what the weather was."

"Oh, well, if you look at it that way—"

"And another thing," she interrupted him, in the same even tone. "Yesterday morning you left the furnace with only a very little coal in it, saying you would come back after breakfast. I am afraid your mother was worse, or you certainly would have come, especially as it was such a cold day."

"N-no, m'am, mother wasn't any worse, but—I'll tell you. One of our neighbors came in and wanted me to put up her stove—just a thank-you job—and I thought just for once maybe it wouldn't be any hardship for you to put on a shovelful or two, till—"

"No hardship at all, I assure you, for I didn't do it. I was out most of the day and all the evening. Didn't you find the fire rather low when you came in the evening?"

"Yes, ma'am, but I coaxed it up as well as I could, and I thought it would be—"

"I imagined so, for the house seemed cold to me when I came in. Don't you think it is a little below normal this morning, even?"

She led him into the dining-room; it was as cold as a sawmill. "Perhaps it would be as well to go down now and see what can be done to improve matters," she said, and with the same dangerous sweetness of manner she opened the cellar door and followed close behind him down the stairs.

"Oh! Oh! Oh!"

At the foot of the stairway Tom stopped, pale, speechless, overwhelmed. The cellar was flooded with water, and a small cataract was still pouring into it. The water pipe had burst.

Mrs. Byrd, close beside him, uttered a cry of fresh dismay. Bad as the situation had been 15 minutes earlier, it was worse now. Her voice roused Tom from his stupor, and he splashed away through the water to the cut-off, turned it, and so stopped the rush. Then he waded to the furnace; it was fireless, and had been so since the night before. There, staring him out of countenance, was the vacant space into which he had promised to put a pane two weeks ago.

"I—I thought a few more days wouldn't matter—and I wasn't expecting the freeze yet, and anyhow I put a board against it last night. It must have blown in," he muttered, trying to excuse himself.

"And you are the one that never went back on a bargain!"

"Never went back on a bargain!" she repeated. "You never did anything else! I knew your record, but I thought you might have learned a lesson at last, so I gave you one more chance; and this is the use you have made of it! You have cheated every friend I recommended you to. Even patient Judge Grey could not put up with your dilly-dallying! You are an out-and-out swindler from first to last!"

"No, ma'am, I ain't! Excuse me, but I ain't!" He came and looked straight into her angry eyes. There was a new sort of dignity in his respectful tone and in his pale face. "I was, but my luck's changed, and I ain't now."

"Go! I have no patience for any more experiments. Go!"

He went meekly up the stairs. She followed him slowly, with the uncomfortable feeling every sensible person has after a fit of anger; she had said more than she had meant to say, although no more than the occasion called for.

When she reached the kitchen Tom was at the door ready to go out. He faced her, and in a businesslike tone said the most unexpected thing possible: "What plumber shall I go for? That pipe must be fixed right away."

"What have you to do with that? Don't you understand? You are discharged."

"No, ma'am, I ain't. Excuse me, but really I ain't. You see, it's just this way. I've got to keep on working for you, and for all the rest of the folks that dropped me, so as to make up for the way I've been doing. Understand? I ain't asking pay from you or from them; only to make it up to you. I can see now that I'm in debt, and I want to pay up, that's all. And I want to prove that my luck's changed."

She wavered an instant, then laughed in spite of herself. "I really believe your luck has changed! It used to be that you wouldn't stay in a situation, and now you won't stay out of one! Well, run off and get Brown, the plumber, here as soon as you can. Then come back and build that furnace fire. The house is as cold as a barn, and I want my breakfast."

He went and came. And all winter he kept coming and going, not only to that house, but to one after another of the houses that had dispensed with him. His employers wondered if the reform would last; but long before spring all were convinced that his luck had changed indeed. Before another winter came he was back in the electrical works, and there he has stayed ever since.—Youth's Companion.

SCIENCE AND INDUSTRY.

The production of steel wire nails in the United States in 1900 was 7,233,979 kegs.

In Maryland sparrows have been known to raise six broods in one year. In England there are seldom more than three broods.

The health officer in St. Paul has decided that rank growths of weeds are generative of disease or of unsanitary conditions, and has ordered their extirpation.

Germany spends $15,000,000 a year on indigo. At a cost of $4,500,000, a chemical laboratory has been erected in Baden which expects to supply the entire domestic demand for this article.

Over 8,000 dealers carry on the world's diamond trade, with a stock exceeding $350,000,000. About 5,000 cutters and polishers, principally in Amsterdam, Antwerp, Paris and the Jura, prepare the stones for market.

An expedition to Kolynsk, Russia, is being made by Russian scientists in order to bring to St. Petersburg the mammoth which has recently been discovered. It is unique of its kind, its hair, skin and flesh being entirely preserved, and there are remains of undigested food in its stomach.

In 1900 in the Punjab, a section of India, where about 500,000 persons die annually, only 893 were killed by snake bites. Their bite is more often inflicted in houses than either in the fields or in the jungle. During the year in question 1,374 wild animals were slaughtered, including 11 tigers, 186 bears, 184 leopards and 99 wolves; 13,272 snakes were killed.

WHERE IS THE HAT-STRING?

It Is Noticed That the Straw Hats of This Summer Are Being Worn Without Them.

With an unusually large crop of straw hats in Chicago this summer, it has just occurred to some one to ask why it is that the black hat string, so popular and universal several years ago, has been discarded, says the Tribune.

The hat string was at the height of its popularity in 1895. It was a bit of black tape fastened to a man's hat behind, with the other end anchored securely to the lapel of his coat. Everybody took the precaution against winds, and it was quite common to see a man's hat blow off, while he walked on as if oblivious of the fact, slowly reeling it in behind him.

"Why are they discarded?" repeated a State street hatter. "I might ask you another question in answer: Why do women dispense with the handy little skirt-holder that they used to wear? It held up the skirt in excellent fashion and saved their appearances the awkward, obtrusive elbow that now mars their figures.

"As to the hat string, however, I have a theory that it was not meant for sensible men.

"Did you ever notice that most men who allow their hats to blow off are stupid? You just watch for a month and you'll agree with me. I venture that not one wideawake, quick, intelligent fellow in a thousand has his hat blown off under any circumstances.

"Nine hats out of ten are blown off at street corners where a man steps from the sheltering fronts of a row of buildings into the street at right angles, up which a wind is driving. A score of indications of the wind are in front of him. Dust is flying; women's skirts are blown about; awnings are flopping; men are holding on to their hats; scraps of paper are flying.

"But the stupid victim of the wind walks beyond the corner with no precautions—and away goes his hat.

"Make a study of the face of the next man you see whose hat has sailed away with the wind, and just consider if you would care to trust his judgment on any matter of consequence. I'll bet you wouldn't—not in a hundred years."

SPEED IS FAR TOO LOW.

Trains on the Siberian Railway Do Not Make More Than Nine Miles an Hour.

Traffic between Moscow and Port Arthur over the Siberian railway will be opened over the Trans-Siberian railway within a very few weeks, but the results seem likely to prove disappointing. According to the latest calculation the journey from Moscow to Port Arthur will take 28 days, even in favorable circumstances. Indeed, according to the Odessa Novosti, during practically half the year the railway administration refuses to guarantee arrival in Port Arthur from Moscow under a month and a half. People here are asking what has become of the promise of a seven days' trip from Moscow to the Asiatic termini of the Siberian railway in saloons rivaling in comfort and luxury even the trains de luxe of the continent, says a London exchange.

The average speed of the Siberian passenger trains was to be about 35 miles an hour at least. As a matter of fact, an average inclusive speed of from seven to nine miles an hour is the most the administration of the railway is prepared to guarantee. The difference between 35 miles an hour and nine is one which is puzzling Russians immensely, even when every allowance is made for difficulties during a portion of the year owing to storms on Lake Baikal and the vagaries of the ice on the Shilka and Amur. The opinion is general here that the utility—commercial, military or otherwise—of the gigantic undertaking sponsored by the Russian government and paid for with borrowed money will scarcely prove commensurate with its colossal proportions.

Papa Not in It.

Ascum—Hello! How's your baby?

Newpop—I have no baby. We're living with my wife's folks now.

Ascum — How do you mean? What's that got to do with the baby?

Newpop—It's "our Mary's baby" now.—Philadelphia Press.

Looking Backward.

Mrs. Nagg.—We were wedded in June, the marriage month.

Mr. Nagg—Yes. I fell in love in March, the mad month, and proposed in April, the fool month.—Town Topics.

A Real Benefactor.

"My dear doctor, I cannot thank you enough for performing that operation on my uncle."

"I did the best I could."

"I know, I know it. By his death two whole families are now living in comparative ease."—Judge.

Disqualified.

Mabel—There is the telephone call, Amy. I wish you'd answer it.

Amy—Why don't you answer it yourself?

Mabel—Well, you see, I've been eating onions.—Harlem Life.

Guilty as Charged.

Upgardson—I am told you have been talking about me behind my back.

Atom—That's the way I have always talked about you. I never talk about a man in front of his back.—Chicago Tribune.

Shirt Waists.

Henry—Are you partial to shirt waists?

David (absent-mindedly)—It depends upon what kind of young woman is inside of them.—Boston Transcript.

His Classification.

There was a rug on the line that needed attention, and she had been looking for some able-bodied man.

"Are you a carpet beater?" she asked of the hobo who applied for a little financial assistance.

"No, ma'am," he replied, honestly, as he hastily backed away. "I'm a dead beater."

"I don't believe you do any beating at all," she retorted.

"Just give me a chance," he said, "to beat a woman out of a little coin, and see what happens."—Chicago Post.

Progress Backward.

"I'm glad to observe that Mr. De Kanter has turned over a new leaf," remarked Mrs. Borden.

"How do you mean, ma'am?" inquired the observant chambermaid.

"He hasn't left his shoes on the hall rack these last few nights."

"No, ma'am, but you'd ought to see how muddy his sheets are."—Philadelphia Press.

A Social Sherlock Holmes.

"She claims to be from the east," we said, referring to the new arrival.

"I have my doubts," remarked the observant person. "Have you noticed that when she shakes hands she only raises her hand to her chin? I do not think she is from any farther east than Pittsburg."

It is well, when in society, to take note of these little things.—Baltimore American.

Recreant Member of the Flock.

"I trust, Brudder Eph'm," said the pastor, "you is still walkin' in de straight an' narrer path?"

"Ise sorry to say, paksun," replied Uncle Eph'm, deeply penitent, "Ise backslode a good deal lately."—Chicago Tribune.

Quite Proper.

Subbubs—I hear the small farmers out our way talking about their truck patches. Wonder why they call them patches?

Citiman—Why not? They're sowed on, you know.—Philadelphia Press.

Laying for the Parrot.

Mother—Tommy, a little bird tells me that you helped yourself to cake while I was out.

Tommy (aside)—I'll wring that parrot's neck!—Chicago News.

Piso's Cure is the best medicine we ever used for all affections of the throat and lungs.—Wm. O. Endsley, Vanburen, Ind., Feb. 10, 1900.

Microscopic Metaphysics.

Mrs. Hoyle—I can read my husband like a book.

Mrs. Doyle—You must have good eyes to read such a small type.—Smart Set.

If you want to be cured of a cough use Hale's Honey of Horehound and Tar.
Pike's Toothache Drops Cure in one minute.

"It seems strange to hear you speak so bitterly of him. You used to say you admired him for the enemies he had made."

"Yes, but I'm one of them now."—Philadelphia Press.

Bronchitis Can be Cured
With Hoxsie's Croup Cure, speedily. 50 cts.

Dead women tell no secrets.—Chicago Daily News.

PUTNAM FADELESS DYES are as easy to use as soap. No muss or failures.

Some people pay too much attention to the talk of the insane.—Atchison Globe.

Mirth is nature's best remedy for ills.—Chicago Daily News.

SOZODONT for the Teeth
A scientifically prepared and strictly pure Liquid Dentifrice in a New Size, handy to use. 25c
Large LIQUID and POWDER, ... 75c
SOZODONT TOOTH POWDER, . . 25c
At all the Stores, or by Mail for the price. Sample of Sozodont for the postage, 3 cents.
HALL & RUCKEL, NEW YORK

She Knew Amos Keeter.

She was a very talkative old aunty and her memory was remarkable. Her nephew from the city soon realized the strength of both of these characteristics.

"Say, aunty," he put in when he found an opening in the old lady's continuous chain of reminiscences, "did you ever know the Skeeter family that used to live around here somewhere?"

"Knew 'em all," cried the old lady, without a moment's hesitation. "Yes, indeed."

"Did you know Amos?" continued the joker.

"Amos Keeter!" cried the old lady again. "Well, I should say I did. Many's the party he's taken me to. Amos Keeter? Dear, dear, how his name does call up the good old times!"

And then the wicked nephew had to go out behind the woodshed to laugh.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

Too much honey is sometimes as bad as too much gall.—Chicago Daily News.

Be not merely good; be good for something.—Thoreau.

Tale bearers are just as bad as tale makers.—Sheridan.

Avarice increases with the increasing pile of gold.—Juvenal.

Lots of men marry young because they are not old enough to know better.—Chicago Daily News.

Lots of men are all right, only they stopped learning too long ago.—Washington (Ia.) Democrat.

Even during the worst drought things are soaked at the sign of the three balls.—Indianapolis News.

Some days a fellow could easily waste every bit of his time listening to fool stories.—Washington (Ia.) Democrat.

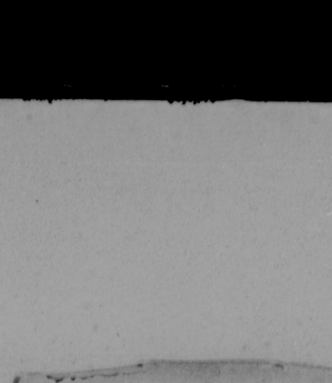
You can make an honest man trouble, but you can't make him as much trouble as you can make a thief.—Atchison Globe.

Boynton—"Harding tells me he is suffering from an operation." Sawyer—"I hadn't heard of it. Surgical, of course?" Boynton—"No, this was a financial operation. Gibbons borrowed ten dollars from him yesterday."—Boston Transcript.

"I made one hole in five strokes," announced the new golfer, gleefully. "The idea!" exclaimed the other golfer, who was even newer. "I invariably make a hole with every stroke. I never can hit the ground in the same place twice."—Philadelphia Press.

The New Reporter Again.—"Always," said the astute city editor to the new reporter, "always be on the lookout for any little touch of humor that may brighten up our columns." That evening the new reporter turned in a story about a burglary in a butcher's shop, which commenced: "Mr. Hiram Cleaver, the well-known butcher, is losing flesh rapidly these days."—Baltimore American.

$3.00 W. L. DOUGLAS SHOES $3.50
UNION MADE.
For More Than a Quarter of a Century
The reputation of W. L. Douglas $3.00 and $3.50 shoes for style, comfort and wear has excelled all other makes sold at these prices. This excellent reputation has been won by merit alone. W. L. Douglas shoes have to give better satisfaction than other $3.00 and $3.50 shoes because his reputation for the best $3.00 and $3.50 shoes must be maintained. The standard has always been placed so high that the wearer receives more value for his money in the W. L. Douglas $3.00 and $3.50 shoes than he can get elsewhere.
W. L. Douglas sells more $3.00 and $3.50 shoes than any other two manufacturers.
W. L. Douglas $4.00 Gilt Edge Line cannot be equalled at any price.



W. L. Douglas $3.00 and $3.50 shoes are made of the same high grade leathers used in $5 and $6 shoes and are just as good.
Sold by the best shoe dealers everywhere.
Insist upon having W. L. Douglas shoes with name and price stamped on bottom.
How to Order by Mail.—If W. L. Douglas shoes are not sold in your town, send order direct to factory. Shoes sent anywhere on receipt of price and 25 cts. additional for carriage. My custom department will make you a pair that will equal $5 and $6 custom made shoes, in style, fit and wear. Take measurements of foot as shown on model; state style desired; size and width usually worn; plain or cap toe; heavy, medium or light soles. A fit guaranteed. Try a pair.

Fast Color Eyelets used.
Catalog free. W. L. Douglas, Brockton, Mass.

STARK TREES best by Test—77 YEARS. LARGEST Nursery. FRUIT BOOK free. WE PAY CASH Weekly. WANT MORE SALESMEN STARK BRO'S, Louisiana, Mo.; Dansville, N. Y.; Etc

WISCONSIN and MICHIGAN HOMESTEAD and SCHOOL LANDS. You can locate 160 acres near Railroad and Markets. For particulars address W. W. Light, Racine, Wis.

FALLING HAIR

Prevented by Shampoos of CUTICURA SOAP and light dressings of CUTICURA, purest of emollient skin cures. This treatment at once stops falling hair, removes crusts, scales, and dandruff, soothes irritated, itching surfaces, stimulates the hair follicles, supplies the roots with energy and nourishment, and makes the hair grow upon a sweet, wholesome, healthy scalp when all else fails.

MILLIONS USE CUTICURA SOAP

Assisted by CUTICURA OINTMENT, for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, for cleansing the scalp of crusts, scales, and dandruff, and the stopping of falling hair, for softening, whitening, and soothing red, rough, and sore hands, for baby rashes, itchings, and chafings, and for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Millions of Women use CUTICURA SOAP in the form of baths for annoying irritations, inflammations, and excoriations, for too free or offensive perspiration, in the form of washes for ulcerative weaknesses, and for many antiseptic purposes which readily suggest themselves to women and mothers. No amount of persuasion can induce those who have once used these great skin purifiers and beautifiers to use any others. CUTICURA SOAP combines delicate emollient properties derived from CUTICURA, the great skin cure, with the purest of cleansing ingredients, and the most refreshing of flower odours. No other medicated soap is to be compared with it for preserving, purifying, and beautifying the skin, scalp, hair, and hands. No other foreign or domestic toilet soap, however expensive, is to be compared with it for all the purposes of the toilet, bath, and nursery. Thus it combines, in ONE SOAP at ONE PRICE, the BEST skin and complexion soap, and the BEST toilet and baby soap in the world.

Complete External and Internal Treatment for Every Humour,

Cuticura THE SET

Consisting of CUTICURA SOAP, to cleanse the skin of crusts and scales and soften the thickened cuticle; CUTICURA OINTMENT, to instantly allay itching, inflammation, and irritation, and soothe and heal; and CUTICURA RESOLVENT to cool and cleanse the blood. A SINGLE SET is often sufficient to cure the most torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, and scaly skin, scalp, and blood humours, rashes, itchings, and irritations, with loss of hair, when all else fails. Sold throughout the world. British Depot: F. NEWBERY & SONS, 27 Charterhouse Sq., London, E. C. POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, Sole Props., Boston, U. S. A.

United States Under Obligations to Exercise Police Control Over the Isthmus . . .

Trouble in Panama

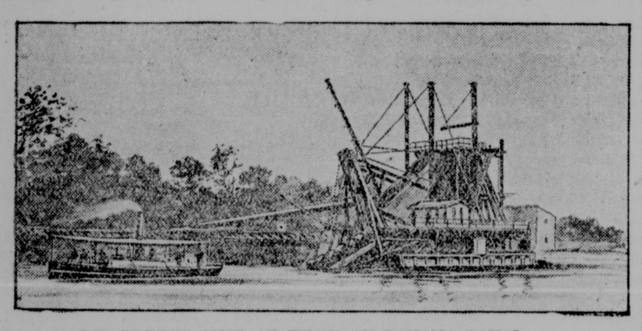
French Engineers and Laborers Still at Work on the Canal Planned by De Lesseps . .

REVOLUTIONS in Central and South America are of such frequent occurrence that they attract very little attention in Europe or the United States, unless international interests or property are jeopardized. Just at present the two little South American states of Colombia and Venezuela happen to be in a state bordering both on warfare and rebellion, and the government at Washington has dispatched several war vessels to the scene of the threatened conflict for the purpose of protecting the Panama railway and preventing any interruption of traffic. The United States is bound to perform police duty of this sort by the treaty of 1848, which not only provides protection of the railway, but also protection of the sovereignty of Colombia and neutrality of the isthmus. The Panama railway connects the Atlantic with the Pacific. It was built by American engineers, with American money, but soon after its completion passed into the hands of European capitalists. Several times in the past threatened raids upon the railway have been prevented by American marines and guns, and the commercial nations of the world have always looked to the United States to keep the road open for traffic. The only compensation we have received for exercising such expensive paternal care over Colombia is the guarantee that vessels flying our flag shall receive the same privileges in the ports of the isthmus as those allowed the vessels of Colombia.

It is not generally known that the famous Panama canal, which has swallowed up millions of French money, is being constructed under this same treaty; and should the stupendous engineering work planned by De Lesseps ever be completed it will be under the direct protection of the United States. An impression has been abroad for several years that the French canal project has been entirely abandoned. Such is by no means the case, however, for there are at the present time 4,000 laborers and engineers hard at work upon the gigantic waterway; and the men back of the enterprise claim that with the expenditure of $125,000,000 more the canal can be completed by 1910.

Active work on the canal was begun in 1881, and continued until 1889, when the company headed by De Lesseps was forced to go into liquidation. The enormous sum of $260,000,000, obtained by the sale of shares and bonds, mainly to the middle classes, and finally by lottery drawings, authorized by the French government, had been absorbed when the collapse came, and only about 14 miles of the ditch had been so far finished as to be navigable, this distance not including the six crossings of the Chagres river and the piercing of the Central Cordillera.

In 1894 a new company was formed to purchase the old one and complete the work. It began operations at once and just about one-half of the total distance of 46.2 miles is now completed. The new company has rejected the sea level plan, advocated by De Lesseps, and substituted a system of locks by which vessels are to be raised over Culebra hill. The Chagres river is to be utilized for filling the locks of the canal above the sea level (550 feet), and this will be done by creating two reservoirs or lakes, one across the valley of the Chagres at Bohio, the other at Alajueldo. These lakes are to be large enough to hold any ordinary flood, but in case of their being flooded the waters can be carried off by other channels than the canal.



BIG DREDGE NOW AT WORK ON PANAMA CANAL.

Progressive Engineers Positive That the Single Track Saves Time and Wear and Tear

Electric Monorailroads

For Rapid Passenger Service the Behr System Seems to Be Without an Equal . .

THE science of engineering, like other technical and professional callings, numbers among its exponents many conservative leaders who look askance at any proposition or invention calculated to revolutionize theories dear to the heart of old fogyism.

Because railroad trains have ever since their introduction been run on two tracks, the wiseacres of the past and present have fought the monorail with a vindictiveness, the vigor of which almost equaled its lack of logic. They have evidently forgotten the lesson learned in the technological school days that a thing is not intrinsically bad simply because it calls for the employment of new ideas, new materials and a change in the established order of things.

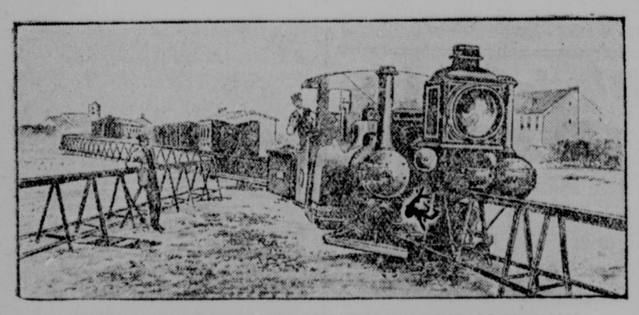
The monorail idea was originated by Mr. F. B. Behr, a European engineer of note. It does away with the two-rail track and substitutes for it a single elevated track. The center of gravity of the train is brought beneath the point of suspension. The monorail itself is a stout metal, borne at the apex of transverse A standards, upon which the wheels sit. On each side of the standards run supplementary guide rails, which engage corresponding rollers on the car frame. Thus the vehicle is kept upright and prevented from swaying unpleasantly when going around curves. The standards are bolted down to sleepers of the ordinary pattern so that the permanent way is one long, low metallic viaduct.

The monorail has passed successfully through the experimental stage. A short English line, known as the Ballybunion & Listowel Light railway, has been in successful operation for some time, and a longer line has been operated in Belgium, carrying both freight and passengers. Both are operated by steam, but a proposition is now before the British public for the immediate construction of an electric monorail line between Manchester and Liverpool, which is to develop a speed of between 110 and 120 miles per hour.

Some years ago it was proposed to build a monorail air line between Chicago and St. Louis, but the project was allowed to die out. Should the English line prove a success, however—and there is no scientific reason why it should not—the world would have to adopt the monorail system for rapid passenger service, in spite of the croakings of the hidebound conservatives. The public has ample reason to be interested in the monorail, because the saving in the cost of original construction and subsequent maintenance would make elevation not only possible, but advisable. It would do away with grade crossings and the killing of men and cattle, with coal smoke and dust, and promote communication between points that now seem far distant from each other.

By monorail express one could travel from Chicago to New York in eight hours; from Chicago to Milwaukee in 45 minutes; from Chicago to St. Louis in three hours. And what is quite as imporant, cars could be run at frequent intervals. An electric road has to have power distributed along its entire line, and it would be nearly as cheap to run 48 trains of one car each per day as 12 trains of four cars each. The only extra expense would be the wages of a few extra motormen and conductors, a mere trifle in the operation of a first-class railroad.

The monorail idea is based on correct principles, and that is why it will survive all attacks from interested sources, and monorail electric passenger service is an improvement that is bound to come, sooner rather than later.



STEAM MONORAIL TRACK AND ENGINE AT BALLYBUNION.

OBEYED HIS CHURCH

Utah Banker Gave Up Wealth to Serve Mormonism.

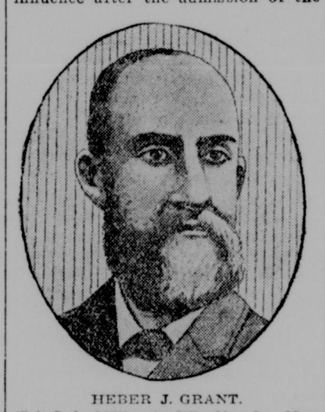
Heber J. Grant, Salt Lake Millionaire, Sacrificed a Fortune to Engage in Missionary Work in Japan.

Mormonism, sending as missionary to Japan a Salt Lake millionaire banker stripped of his wealth and dependent upon that which shall fall from the hands of his converts, is one of the anomalies of missionary work in the world. Heber J. Grant, one of the 12 apostles of the Mormon church, a power in former territorial politics, a former banker, worth $4,000,000, paying tithes upon an income of $200,000 a year, and otherwise one of the pillars of Mormonism, has sailed for the Flowery Kingdom with only his voice and his hands as spiritual and temporal capital.

Yokohama is the destination of the apostle, whither he has gone on a two-years' assignment by the church powers. Elders A. O. Taylor, H. S. Ensign, and L. A. Kelsch accompanied the apostle, the four breaking away from their worldly interests in the state capital, as if indeed, they were no part of the estate of the Latter-Day saint.

This dispatching of the Mormon apostle-banker on this mission is illustration of the power of the church which years ago was driven from habitation in Illinois.

When the admission of Utah as a state was under consideration and advisement and when the Mormon church found it expedient to treat with the United States authority, Heber J. Grant was one of the elect of the church. He was high in church councils, prominent in the affairs of the territorial capital, a banker, capitalist, and making money in half a dozen ventures. He kept place and influence after the admission of the territory to statehood, and he was making money still when he was chosen to spread the doctrines of Joseph Smith to Asia. He was asked how long it would require for him to drop worldly affairs for this mission of the elect. His reply was "eight months," and he has fulfilled the promise.



HEBER J. GRANT.
(Salt Lake Millionaire Who Now Is a Mormon Missionary.)

Grant's first act was to resign from his official position in the Deseret bank. No surprise was expressed at his willingness to lay down the office. It was a matter of course.

The Chicago Tribune says that as a capitalist, sharing in many legitimate ventures in the great west, he held thousands of dollars in promissory notes, drawn by western men. Grant went through these papers, classified them, stamped "Paid" across their faces, and mailed them to the makers, giving clear receipts for all moneys due him on contracts. Friends say these notes footed into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the man parted with them without a murmur. He gave up his splendid home in Salt Lake City, leaving his growing family to the care of the church body.

As indicating the wealth of the man, just before he left Salt Lake City he paid his tithes for six months, based upon his income, and the check was for $9,600.

From this state of affluence Grant has gone, with only bare traveling expenses, to a strange land, in which he will preach a new religion. He has never been a public speaker, and he has a natural diffidence, but in behalf of his religion he hopes to overcome difficulties.

Heber J. Grant is a native of Utah, 45 years old. He is of commanding figure and would pass better as a shrewd business man than as a missionary. His influence in the Mormon church could not be easily measured, yet heh as been called upon to serve it, not only without pay, but at the cost of a fortune. That he will be successful in the cause none of the faithful in Utah doubts for a moment.

Pudding Cooked Under Water.

A wager was made by a resident of London that he would cook a plum pudding ten feet beneath the surface of the Thames. He won the bet by placing the pudding in a tin case and putting the whole in a sack of lime. The heat of the lime, slacked when it came in contact with the water, was sufficient to cook the pudding in two hours.

Lobsters Afraid of Thunder.

Lobsters dread the sound of thunder, and during electric storms they seek deep water.

Poor Country for Milliners.

Few women, even of the wealthy classes, wear bonnets in Mexico.

LUMINOUS FLOWERS.

They Have Been Frequently Observed in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, Cal.

To a woman belongs the honor of having first discovered flowers that emit light. This woman was the daughter of Linnaeus, the celebrated Swedish naturalist. One evening, when the aged man and his daughter were walking in their gardens, she called his attention to some nasturtiums glowing with a faint phosphorescent light. They removed these to a perfectly dark room and there viewed the ghostly illuminated flowers for hours, trying to solve the mystery.

Since that time a number of different flowers have been found to give forth a light, among them being the corolla of the common sunflower; also a species of tagetes, called by the French botanists the "rose d'Inde," and the large and beautiful compound flower called in this country the dahlia.

FLOWERS THAT EMIT LIGHT.
(Observed in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, Ca.)

"Luminous nasturtiums," writes Prof. A. Frederick Collins, "have been frequently observed in Golden Gate park, San Francisco. I observed one evening a number of persons bending over an iron pot full of nasturtiums. Curious to know what the attraction was I fell into line until it became my turn to inspect the flowers at closer range.

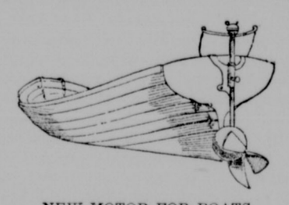
"I was surprised to see a flash of light dart repeatedly from the yellow petals. The next day I photographed it.

"A strange fact regarding the phosphorescent light emitted by certain flowers, it has been observed, is that those in which the yellow and orange predominate exhibit the greatest amount of light. Prof. Haggern, the naturalist, pronounces the light of electrical origin, declaring that when the pollen bursts electricity is produced, and light follows."

A MOTOR FOR BOATS.

Unique Electrical Contrivance That Is Situated Entirely Outside in the Water.

Practically all boats which are propelled by electric power have the motor, as well as the battery, inside, and a long, horizontal shaft, which carries the screw, passes through the stem. An innovation has been made by a western inventor. He incloses the motor in a water-tight, globular shell, which is combined with the rudder, rudder post and screws in such a manner that they all are outside. There is no shaft at all. The storage battery is inside, of course, and wires lead the current from it to the motor. The especial virtue of this arrangement is that the motor is portable, and can be attached to almost any boat having a square stern. It is not necessary to build expressly for the use of electricity. The apparatus can be attached to the boat in a few minutes, and removed in an equally quick fashion. The batteries are placed under the seats of the boat.



NEW MOTOR FOR BOATS.
(It is Portable and Situated Outside in the Water.)

The motor not only propels the boat, but steers it as well, the boat answering to it more readily than to an ordinary rudder.

The motor drives the boat forward or backward, and can be regulated to run at any speed up to four miles an hour, using two boxes of four cells, and will run from 20 to 30 miles on one charge. More cells may be used, and a speed of six miles an hour attained, if desired. Each battery box containing two cells weighs about 50 pounds, and is provided with a comfortable handle for carrying.

Tailor Bird Is Ingenious.

The tailor-bird of India is a shrewd and ingenious little fellow. To escape falling a prey to snakes and monkeys, the tailor-bird picks up a dead leaf and flies into a high tree, and with a fiber for a thread and its bill for a needle sews the leaf to a green one hanging from the tree, the sides being sewn up, and an opening left at the top. That a nest is swinging in the tree no snake or monkey or even a man would suspect.

THE DISOBEDIENT FLY.

In days gone by there lived a fly
Who longed the world to roam;
Declared he would seek better food
Than he could find at home.

His mother said, with soaking head:
"Now don't you dare to go;
Miss Spider Fair may leave her lair,
And she's a cruel foe."

"Ho! ho!" laughed he, "just let me see
Her ladyship's black head.
I'm pretty tough and big enough
To fight her till she's dead."

He washed his face, then into space
He flew with humming sound;
Above, below, now fast, now slow,
Till things seemed turned around.

Upon some wood a paper stood,
Not very far away.
Said Mr. Fly, with winking eye,
"Ah! here's the place to stay.

"This shining sheet looks good to eat,
I'll crawl along and see—
'Tis sugar paste, too nice to waste—
Perhaps 'twas meant for me."

He nearer came, as moth to flame—
He trod the thickest part—
When, lo! he found the sticky ground
Was neither pie nor tart.

"Buzz! buzz!" he cried (from side to side
He struggled to be free).
"Oh, mother dear, I want you here—
Ne'er more we'll disagree."

—Annie Josephine Levi, in Good Housekeeping.

AN INTELLIGENT DOG.

He Was Called "General Grant," Could Climb Trees and Had a Colt for a Chum.

It is not the hero of Appomatox of whom M. Fritz Austin writes in St. Nicholas, but of one of his namesakes, a dog. The dog was born July 15, 1885, his parents on both sides being descended from famed ancestors. That they had taken prizes at dog shows, and were peaceful, loving and kind, enhanced the value of the gift in our eyes.

The General grew by the inch, learned to "speak" if he wanted food, or the door opened, and, funniest of all, to climb trees.

Our old house in the country was built years and years ago.

The old trees are like the rocks among which they grow, staid and strong, and have stood the gales of nearly a century, and have given blossoms and birdlings in the spring, fruit for the babies in the fall, shade and beauty at all times. Children and squirrels had climbed the stout limbs, but never a dog until Grant was a year old. Then we found him perched up in one of the trees, barking at a squirrel. This was a wonderful feat for a terrier weighing about 45 pounds, for the lowest limbs were as high as a grown person could reach. He did his climbing quickly, and as often as the squirrels went after the apples, Grant went after the squirrels.

GRANT AND BEN ROE.

Everybody and everything on the place were friends of Grant; in his big heart there was love for the cow, the cats and the chickens. Still, his most intimate friend and campanion in games was "Ben Roe," the two-year old colt. Grant invented games and taught them to Ben Roe, who, in his turn, was quick to learn and of a retentive memory. Grant would take a barrel-hoop or a club in his mouth, and present Ben the opposite end; then they would start off at a gentle trot, Grant all the time saying, "Grew-ow, grew-ow." Now, when they played what Grant called "grew" they never exceeded a gentle trot; but when they raced, they ran side by side at a fearful rate, each panting and determined to win. The game was always brought to a close as soon as one of the family found that racing was the order of the day. We liked to see them play "grew," as we considered it an intellectual game, worthy of encouragement.

Terror Inspired by Lions.

The terror inspired by man-eating lions is well illustrated in the action of the Belgian Katanga company. This corporation, which is developing the rubber and other resources of a large district in the upper Congo basin, has abandoned the station of Kululu, which it had established on Lake Moero. Though a great deal of labor had been expended in making this station a large and desirable post, the region around it became infested with man-eating lions. It was therefore decided to seek another location. Quite a number of natives in the service of the state were killed by these lions within a few weeks. The victims were dragged into the jungle and eaten. Many men saved their lives only by climbing trees, thus getting out of reach of the howling beasts beneath them. Everywhere along the paths and brooks the lions lay in wait for their prey, and no man knew when he might be struck to earth by the terrible foe lurking in the jungle all ready for the fatal spring.

THE SMALLEST PONY.

Mustang Colt, Seven Months Old, That Weighs 24 Pounds and Is But 22 Inches High.

A colt seven months old, which weighs 24 pounds and is only 22 inches tall, is the freak which has been on exhibition at Louisville, Ky., for several days past. The colt is owned by G. H. Hackstead, a blacksmith near Ludlow, Ky.

The colt was foaled on a farm near Fountain Ferry park. Its owner considered it worthless and sent it to Mr. Hackstead. At birth it only weighed about 12 pounds, although it was perfectly formed. Since that time it has grown very slowly and for the past two months there has been almost no change in its height and weight.

SMALLEST PONY IN THE WORLD.

If it stops growing now there is no doubt that it is the smallest horse in the world.

The colt is perfectly healthy and is well formed and strong. Its dam was a mustang pony of average size and its sire was a good sized horse. The cross should have produced a medium-sized horse. The colt is good tempered, although very frisky. It has been taught to follow its master like a dog, and is very affectionate. The freak has attracted much attention since it has been on exhibition.

A DARING OPERATION.

How a Plucky Man Removed an Abscess from the Left Side of a Reptile's Jaw.

One of the most dangerous operations ever performed (for the person performing it) was done successfully in Bronx park, when Curator Ditmar removed an abscess from the left side of the king cobra's jaw. Nearly 20 minutes were occupied in performing the operation, and every instant of the time Curator Ditmar's arms and hand were within striking distance of the fangs of a snake whose venom is the most deadly of any poisonous reptile known to naturalists.

The Bronx king cobra is the largest snake of his species in captivity, nearly 16 feet long. He was brought from Singapore nearly a year ago. Several weeks ago a slight swelling was noticed on the right of the cobra's jaw. Ditmar was convinced that the cobra had a boil or an abscess, and, considering the value of the reptile, he began planning to remove it.

This was the cobra's feeding time. A six-foot coach whip snake, which had been starving itself lately, was killed and studded with a half-dozen fat frogs. The stuffed snake was taken to the door of the cage and thrown in. In a twinkling the cobra had him by the neck. He lashed around the cage with the dead snake for five minutes, and then slowly began to swallow it. In doing so he lay in such a position that the abscess on his jaw was easily visible, and within reach from his door.

Ditmar procured a long pair of tweezers and a glass syringe, and he and Keeper Snyder opened wide the door of the cobra's cage. At that the snake edged away into a corner with his prey and lashed his tail up and down the glass partitions. Snyder took hold of the dead snake's tail and pulled it toward him. The hungry cobra tightened his hold. Snyder used both hands and pulled until the head of the cobra was within four feet of the cage door. Ditmar filled the syringe from the snake's water pan, and reaching in his arm squirted the water all over the cobra's jaw and around the abscess to moisten it. The cobra did not like it, but hung on to the dead snake. Finally, Ditmar took the tweezers and leaned in. With his free hand he grasped the body of the coach-whip snake within a few inches of the cobra's head, and twisted until the shining white jaws of the cobra turned over, and then, with a deft turn of the tweezers, extracted the abscess and jumped away. The operation was performed, and the relief to the snake was obvious, for he gulped down the six-foot dainty in half a minute, shot over into his corner, curled himself up, and went to sleep.—New York Letter to Chicago Inter Ocean.

Electing a Seminole Chief.

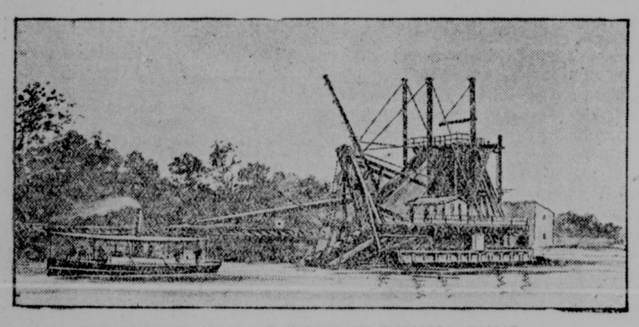
When the Seminole Indians of Florida elect a chief they choose the biggest fighter and most successful hunter of the tribe. If there happens to be a tie between two candidates their method of deciding it is to have each candidate place a live coal on his wrist. The one who flinches first loses the office.

United States Under Obligations to Exercise Police Control Over the Isthmus . . .

Trouble in Panama

French Engineers and Laborers Still at Work on the Canal Planned by De Lesseps . .

REVOLUTIONS in Central and South America are of such frequent occurrence that they attract very little attention in Europe or the United States, unless international interests or property are jeopardized. Just at present the two little South American states of Colombia and Venezuela happen to be in a state bordering both on warfare and rebellion, and the government at Washington has dispatched several war vessels to the scene of the threatened conflict for the purpose of protecting the Panama railway and preventing any interruption of traffic. The United States is bound to perform police duty of this sort by the treaty of 1848, which not only provides protection of the railway, but also protection of the sovereignty of Colombia and neutrality of the isthmus. The Panama railway connects the Atlantic with the Pacific. It was built by American engineers, with American money, but soon after its completion passed into the hands of European capitalists. Several times in the past threatened raids upon the railway have been prevented by American marines and guns, and the commercial nations of the world have always looked to the United States to keep the road open for traffic. The only compensation we have received for exercising such expensive paternal care over Colombia is the guarantee that vessels flying our flag shall receive the same privileges in the ports of the isthmus as those allowed the vessels of Colombia.



BIG DREDGE NOW AT WORK ON PANAMA CANAL.

It is not generally known that the famous Panama canal, which has swallowed up millions of French money, is being constructed under this same treaty; and should the stupendous engineering work planned by De Lesseps ever be completed it will be under the direct protection of the United States. An impression has been abroad for several years that the French canal project has been entirely abandoned. Such is by no means the case, however, for there are at the present time 4,000 laborers and engineers hard at work upon the gigantic waterway; and the men back of the enterprise claim that with the expenditure of $125,000,000 more the canal can be completed by 1910.

Active work on the canal was begun in 1881, and continued until 1889, when the company headed by De Lesseps was forced to go into liquidation. The enormous sum of $260,000,000, obtained by the sale of shares and bonds, mainly to the middle classes, and finally by lottery drawings, authorized by the French government, had been absorbed when the collapse came, and only about 14 miles of the ditch had been so far finished as to be navigable, this distance not including the six crossings of the Chagres river and the piercing of the Central Cordillera.

In 1894 a new company was formed to purchase the old one and complete the work. It began operations at once and just about one-half of the total distance of 46.2 miles is now completed. The new company has rejected the sea level plan, advocated by De Lesseps, and substituted a system of locks by which vessels are to be raised over Culebra hill. The Chagres river is to be utilized for filling the locks of the canal above the sea level (550 feet), and this will be done by creating two reservoirs or lakes, one across the valley of the Chagres at Bohio, the other at Alajueldo. These lakes are to be large enough to hold any ordinary flood, but in case of their being flooded the waters can be carried off by other channels than the canal.

Progressive Engineers Positive That the Single Track Saves Time and Wear and Tear

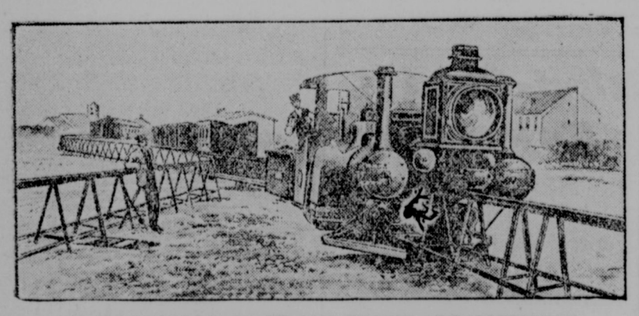
Electric Monorailroads

For Rapid Passenger Service the Behr System Seems to Be Without an Equal . .

THE science of engineering, like other technical and professional callings, numbers among its exponents many conservative leaders who look askance at any proposition or invention calculated to revolutionize theories dear to the heart of old fogyism.

Because railroad trains have ever since their introduction been run on two tracks, the wiseacres of the past and present have fought the monorail with a vindictiveness, the vigor of which almost equaled its lack of logic. They have evidently forgotten the lesson learned in the technological school days that a thing is not intrinsically bad simply because it calls for the employment of new ideas, new materials and a change in the established order of things.

The monorail idea was originated by Mr. F. B. Behr, a European engineer of note. It does away with the two-rail track and substitutes for it a single elevated track. The center of gravity of the train is brought beneath the point of suspension. The monorail itself is a stout metal, borne at the apex of transverse A standards, upon which the wheels sit. On each side of the standards run supplementary guide rails, which engage corresponding rollers on the car frame. Thus the vehicle is kept upright and prevented from swaying unpleasantly when going around curves. The standards are bolted down to sleepers of the ordinary pattern so that the permanent way is one long, low metallic viaduct.



STEAM MONORAIL TRACK AND ENGINE AT BALLYBUNION.

The monorail has passed successfully through the experimental stage. A short English line, known as the Ballybunion & Listowel Light railway, has been in successful operation for some time, and a longer line has been operated in Belgium, carrying both freight and passengers. Both are operated by steam, but a proposition is now before the British public for the immediate construction of an electric monorail line between Manchester and Liverpool, which is to develop a speed of between 110 and 120 miles per hour.

Some years ago it was proposed to build a monorail air line between Chicago and St. Louis, but the project was allowed to die out. Should the English line prove a success, however—and there is no scientific reason why it should not—the world would have to adopt the monorail system for rapid passenger service, in spite of the croakings of the hidebound conservatives. The public has ample reason to be interested in the monorail, because the saving in the cost of original construction and subsequent maintenance would make elevation not only possible, but advisable. It would do away with grade crossings and the killing of men and cattle, with coal smoke and dust, and promote communication between points that now seem far distant from each other.

By monorail express one could travel from Chicago to New York in eight hours; from Chicago to Milwaukee in 45 minutes; from Chicago to St. Louis in three hours. And what is quite as imporant, cars could be run at frequent intervals. An electric road has to have power distributed along its entire line, and it would be nearly as cheap to run 48 trains of one car each per day as 12 trains of four cars each. The only extra expense would be the wages of a few extra motormen and conductors, a mere trifle in the operation of a first-class railroad.

The monorail idea is based on correct principles, and that is why it will survive all attacks from interested sources, and monorail electric passenger service is an improvement that is bound to come, sooner rather than later.

OBEYED HIS CHURCH

Utah Banker Gave Up Wealth to Serve Mormonism.

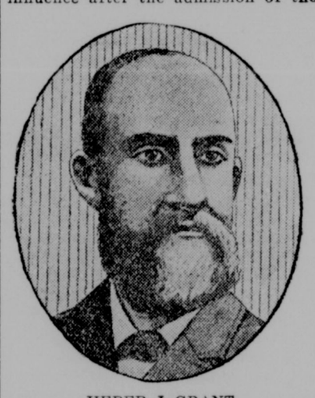
Heber J. Grant, Salt Lake Millionaire, Sacrificed a Fortune to Engage in Missionary Work in Japan.

Mormonism, sending as missionary to Japan a Salt Lake millionaire banker stripped of his wealth and dependent upon that which shall fall from the hands of his converts, is one of the anomalies of missionary work in the world. Heber J. Grant, one of the 12 apostles of the Mormon church, a power in former territorial politics, a former banker, worth $4,000,000, paying tithes upon an income of $200,000 a year, and otherwise one of the pillars of Mormonism, has sailed for the Flowery Kingdom with only his voice and his hands as spiritual and temporal capital.

Yokohama is the destination of the apostle, whither he has gone on a two-years' assignment by the church powers. Elders A. O. Taylor, H. S. Ensign, and L. A. Kelsch accompanied the apostle, the four breaking away from their worldly interests in the state capital, as if indeed, they were no part of the estate of the Latter-Day saint.

This dispatching of the Mormon apostle-banker on this mission is illustration of the power of the church which years ago was driven from habitation in Illinois.

When the admission of Utah as a state was under consideration and advisement and when the Mormon church found it expedient to treat with the United States authority, Heber J. Grant was one of the elect of the church. He was high in church councils, prominent in the affairs of the territorial capital, a banker, capitalist, and making money in half a dozen ventures. He kept place and influence after the admission of the territory to statehood, and he was making money still when he was chosen to spread the doctrines of Joseph Smith to Asia. He was asked how long it would require for him to drop worldly affairs for this mission of the elect. His reply was "eight months," and he has fulfilled the promise.



HEBER J. GRANT.
(Salt Lake Millionaire Who Now Is a Mormon Missionary.)

Grant's first act was to resign from his official position in the Deseret bank. No surprise was expressed at his williagness to lay down the office. It was a matter of course.

The Chicago Tribune says that as a capitalist, sharing in many legitimate ventures in the great west, he held thousands of dollars in promissory notes, drawn by western men. Grant went through these papers, classified them, stamped "Paid" across their faces, and mailed them to the makers, giving clear receipts for all moneys due him on contracts. Friends say these notes footed into the hundreds of thousands of dollars, but the man parted with them without a murmur. He gave up his splendid home in Salt Lake City, leaving his growing family to the care of the church body.

As indicating the wealth of the man, just before he left Salt Lake City he paid his tithes for six months, based upon his income, and the check was for $9,600.

From this state of affluence Grant has gone, with only bare traveling expenses, to a strange land, in which he will preach a new religion. He has never been a public speaker, and he has a natural diffidence, but in behalf of his religion he hopes to overcome difficulties.

Heber J. Grant is a native of Utah, 45 years old. He is of commanding figure and would pass better as a shrewd business man than as a missionary. His influence in the Mormon church could not be easily measured, yet heh as been called upon to serve it, not only without pay, but at the cost of a fortune. That he will be successful in the cause none of the faithful in Utah doubts for a moment.

Pudding Cooked Under Water.

A wager was made by a resident of London that he would cook a plum pudding ten feet beneath the surface of the Thames. He won the bet by placing the pudding in a tin case and putting the whole in a sack of lime. The heat of the lime, slacked when it came in contact with the water, was sufficient to cook the pudding in two hours.

Lobsters Afraid of Thunder.

Lobsters dread the sound of thunder, and during electric storms they seek deep water.

Poor Country for Milliners.

Few women, even of the wealthy classes, wear bonnets in Mexico.

LUMINOUS FLOWERS.

They Have Been Frequently Observed in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, Cal.

To a woman belongs the honor of having first discovered flowers that emit light. This woman was the daughter of Linnaeus, the celebrated Swedish naturalist. One evening, when the aged man and his daughter were walking in their gardens, she called his attention to some nasturtiums glowing with a faint phosphorescent light. They removed these to a perfectly dark room and there viewed the ghostly illuminated flowers for hours, trying to solve the mystery.

Since that time a number of different flowers have been found to give forth a light, among them being the corolla of the common sunflower; also a species of tagetes, called by the French botanists the "rose d'Inde," and the large and beautiful compound flower called in this country the dahlia.

FLOWERS THAT EMIT LIGHT.
(Observed in Golden Gate Park, San Francisco, Ca.)

"Luminous nasturtiums," writes Prof. A. Frederick Collins, "have been frequently observed in Golden Gate park, San Francisco. I observed one evening a number of persons bending over an iron pot full of nasturtiums. Curious to know what the attraction was I fell into line until it became my turn to inspect the flowers at closer range.

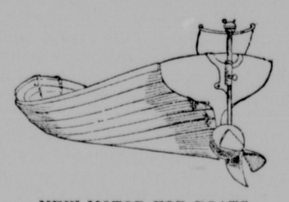
"I was surprised to see a flash of light dart repeatedly from the yellow petals. The next day I photographed it.

"A strange fact regarding the phosphorescent light emitted by certain flowers, it has been observed, is that those in which the yellow and orange predominate exhibit the greatest amount of light. Prof. Haggern, the naturalist, pronounces the light of electrical origin, declaring that when the pollen bursts electricity is produced, and light follows."

A MOTOR FOR BOATS.

Unique Electrical Contrivance That Is Situated Entirely Outside in the Water.

Practically all boats which are propelled by electric power have the motor, as well as the battery, inside, and a long, horizontal shaft, which carries the screw, passes through the stem. An innovation has been made by a western inventor. He incloses the motor in a water-tight, globular shell, which is combined with the rudder, rudder post and screws in such a manner that they all are outside. There is no shaft at all. The storage battery is inside, of course, and wires lead the current from it to the motor. The especial virtue of this arrangement is that the motor is portable, and can be attached to almost any boat having a square stern. It is not necessary to build expressly for the use of electricity. The apparatus can be attached to the boat in a few minutes, and removed in an equally quick fashion. The batteries are placed under the seats of the boat.



NEW MOTOR FOR BOATS.
(It is Portable and Situated Outside in the Water.)

The motor not only propels the boat, but steers it as well, the boat answering to it more readily than to an ordinary rudder.

The motor drives the boat forward or backward, and can be regulated to run at any speed up to four miles an hour, using two boxes of four cells, and will run from 20 to 30 miles on one charge. More cells may be used, and a speed of six miles an hour attained, if desired. Each battery box containing two cells weighs about 50 pounds, and is provided with a comfortable handle for carrying.

Tailor Bird Is Ingenious.

The tailor-bird of India is a shrewd and ingenious little fellow. To escape falling a prey to snakes and monkeys, the tailor-bird picks up a dead leaf and flies into a high tree, and with a fiber for a thread and its bill for a needle sews the leaf to a green one hanging from the tree, the sides being sewn up, and an opening left at the top. That a nest is swinging in the tree no snake or monkey or even a man would suspect.

THE DISOBEDIENT FLY.

In days gone by there lived a fly
Who longed the world to roam;
Declared he would seek better food
Than he could find at home.

His mother said, with soaking head:
"Now don't you dare to go;
Miss Spider Fair may leave her lair,
And she's a cruel foe."

"Ho! ho!" laughed he, "just let me see
Her ladyship's black head.
I'm pretty tough and big enough
To fight her till she's dead."

He washed his face, then into space
He flew with humming sound;
Above, below, now fast, now slow,
Till things seemed turned around.

Upon some wood a paper stood,
Not very far away.
Said Mr. Fly, with winking eye,
"Ah! here's the place to stay.

"This shining sheet looks good to eat,
I'll crawl along and see—
'Tis sugar paste, too nice to waste—
Perhaps 'twas meant for me."

He nearer came, as moth to flame—
He trod the thickest part—
When, lo! he found the sticky ground
Was neither pie nor tart.

"Buzz! buzz!" he cried (from side to side
He struggled to be free).
"Oh, mother dear, I want you here—
Ne'er more we'll disagree."
—Annie Josephine Levi, in Good Housekeeping.

AN INTELLIGENT DOG.

He Was Called "General Grant," Could Climb Trees and Had a Colt for a Chum.

It is not the hero of Appomatox of whom M. Fritz Austin writes in St. Nicholas, but of one of his namesakes, a dog. The dog was born July 15, 1885, his parents on both sides being descended from famed ancestors. That they had taken prizes at dog shows, and were peaceful, loving and kind, enhanced the value of the gift in our eyes.

The General grew by the inch, learned to "speak" if he wanted food, or the door opened, and, funniest of all, to climb trees.

Our old house in the country was built years and years ago.

The old trees are like the rocks among which they grow, staid and strong, and have stood the gales of nearly a century, and have given blossoms and birdlings in the spring, fruit for the babies in the fall, shade and beauty at all times. Children and squirrels had climbed the stout limbs, but never a dog until Grant was a year old. Then we found him perched up in one of the trees, barking at a squirrel. This was a wonderful feat for a terrier weighing about 45 pounds, for the lowest limbs were as high as a grown person could reach. He did his climbing quickly, and as often as the squirrels went after the apples, Grant went after the squirrels.

GRANT AND BEN ROE.

Everybody and everything on the place were friends of Grant; in his big heart there was love for the cow, the cats and the chickens. Still, his most intimate friend and campanion in games was "Ben Roe," the two-year old colt. Grant invented games and taught them to Ben Roe, who, in his turn, was quick to learn and of a retentive memory. Grant would take a barrel-hoop or a club in his mouth, and present Ben the opposite end; then they would start off at a gentle trot, Grant all the time saying, "Grew-ow, grew-ow." Now, when they played what Grant called "grew" they never exceeded a gentle trot; but when they raced, they ran side by side at a fearful rate, each panting and determined to win. The game was always brought to a close as soon as one of the family found that racing was the order of the day. We liked to see them play "grew," as we considered it an intellectual game, worthy of encouragement.

Terror Inspired by Lions.

The terror inspired by man-eating lions is well illustrated in the action of the Belgian Katanga company. This corporation, which is developing the rubber and other resources of a large district in the upper Congo basin, has abandoned the station of Kululu, which it had established on Lake Moero. Though a great deal of labor had been expended in making this station a large and desirable post, the region around it became infested with man-eating lions. It was therefore decided to seek another location. Quite a number of natives in the service of the state were killed by these lions within a few weeks. The victims were dragged into the jungle and eaten. Many men saved their lives only by climbing trees, thus getting out of reach of the howling beasts beneath them. Everywhere along the paths and brooks the lions lay in wait for their prey, and no man knew when he might be struck to earth by the terrible foe lurking in the jungle all ready for the fatal spring.

THE SMALLEST PONY.

Mustang Colt, Seven Months Old, That Weighs 24 Pounds and Is But 22 Inches High.

A colt seven months old, which weighs 24 pounds and is only 22 inches tall, is the freak which has been on exhibition at Louisville, Ky., for several days past. The colt is owned by G. H. Hackstead, a blacksmith near Ludlow, Ky.

The colt was foaled on a farm near Fountain Ferry park. Its owner considered it worthless and sent it to Mr. Hackstead. At birth it only weighed about 12 pounds, although it was perfectly formed. Since that time it has grown very slowly and for the past two months there has been almost no change in its height and weight.

SMALLEST PONY IN THE WORLD.

If it stops growing now there is no doubt that it is the smallest horse in the world.

The colt is perfectly healthy and is well formed and strong. Its dam was a mustang pony of average size and its sire was a good sized horse. The cross should have produced a medium-sized horse. The colt is good tempered, although very frisky. It has been taught to follow its master like a dog, and is very affectionate. The freak has attracted much attention since it has been on exhibition.

A DARING OPERATION.

How a Plucky Man Removed an Abscess from the Left Side of a Reptile's Jaw.

One of the most dangerous operations ever performed (for the person performing it) was done successfully in Bronx park, when Curator Ditmar removed an abscess from the left side of the king cobra's jaw. Nearly 20 minutes were occupied in performing the operation, and every instant of the time Curator Ditmar's arms and hand were within striking distance of the fangs of a snake whose venom is th most deadly of any poisonous reptile known to naturalists.

The Bronx king cobra is the largest snake of his species in captivity, nearly 16 feet long. He was brought from Singapore nearly a year ago. Several weeks ago a slight swelling was noticed on the right of the cobra's jaw. Ditmar was convinced that the cobra had a boil or an abscess, and, considering the value of the reptile, he began planning to remove it.

This was the cobra's feeding time. A six-foot coach whip snake, which had been starving itself lately, was killed and studded with a half-dozen fat frogs. The stuffed snake was taken to the door of the cage and thrown in. In a twinkling the cobra had him by the neck. He lashed around the cage with the dead snake for five minutes, and then slowly began to swallow it. In doing so he lay in such a position that the abscess on his jaw was easily visible, and within reach from his door.

Ditmar procured a long pair of tweezers and a glass syringe, and he and Keeper Snyder opened wide the door of the cobra's cage. At that the snake edged away into a corner with his prey and lashed his tail up and down the glass partitions. Snyder took hold of the dead snake's tail and pulled it toward him. The hungry cobra tightened his hold. Snyder used both hands and pulled until the head of the cobra was within four feet of the cage door. Ditmar filled the syringe from the snake's water pan, and reaching in his arm squirted the water all over the cobra's jaw and around the abscess to moisten it. The cobra did not like it, but hung on to the dead snake. Finally, Ditmar took the tweezers and leaned in. With his free hand he grasped the body of the coach-whip snake within a few inches of the cobra's head, and twisted until the shining white jaws of the cobra turned over, and then, with a deft turn of the tweezers, extracted the abscess and jumped away. The operation was performed, and the relief to the snake was obvious, for he gulped down the six-foot dainty in half a minute, shot over into his corner, curled himself up, and went to sleep.—New York Letter to Chicago Inter Ocean.

Electing a Seminole Chief.

When the Seminole Indians of Florida elect a chief they choose the biggest fighter and most successful hunter of the tribe. If there happens to be a tie between two candidates their method of deciding it is to have each candidate place a live coal on his wrist. The one who flinches first loses the office.

THE REPUBLICAN.

BENJ. H. SINCELL, Editor and Proprietor

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION:

THE REPUBLICAN is published every Thursday morning at the following rates:

One copy one year	$ 1.25
One copy six months	.75
One copy three months	.40
One copy one month	.15
Single copies	.05

ADVERTISING RATES.

First insertion for square of ten nonpareil lines, $1; each additional insertion after first, 50 cents per square of ten nonpareil lines.

REMITTANCES:

Remittances made by money order, bank draft, registered letter or express order will be at our risk; if made otherwise, at the risk of the sender. Address,

THE REPUBLICAN,
Oakland, Md.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 19, 1901.

REPUBLICAN STATE TICKET

For Comptroller of the Treasury:
HERMAN S. PLATT,
Of Baltimore City.

For Clerk of the Court of Appeals:
THOMAS PARRAN,
Of Calvert County.

REPUBLICAN COUNTY TICKET.

For State Senator:
ROBERT A. RAVENSCROFT,
Of District No. 5.

For House of Delegates:
PATRICK E. FINZEL,
Of District No. 9.
CHARLES A. ASHBY,
Of District No. 14.

For Sheriff:
WILLIAM A. MAFFETT,
Of District No. 6.

For Treasurer:
JAMES W. WHITE,
Of District No. 14.

For County Commissioners:
TAYLOR FRIEND,
Of District No. 2.
JACOB STUMP,
Of District No. 4.

For Register of Wills:
EDWIN E. FRIEND,
Of District No. 7.

For County Surveyor:
FRANKLIN P. GREEN,
Of District No. 11.

The Dead President.

The pathetic circumstances of the death of President McKinley, the simple manliness with which he faced "the doom we dread," the infinite cruelty and appalling injustice of his assassination and the profound sympathy felt for his invalid wife, make it difficult if not impossible to speak of the career of the dead ruler with the moderation of the careful historian. The critical spirit is dumb in the presence of the dead who die for the nation, as McKinley has died. In the hours of dire foreboding and of physical pain, as when he became conscious of the inevitable end, he was the patient, uncomplaining and brave man who meets the worst without bravado but also without fear, and who accepts the decree of death as the will of Heaven. At no time in his varied and successful career had his character seemed so admirable as in the last trying hours.

The careers of no public men better represent the possibilities of American life than those of the three Presidents who have fallen at the hands of assassins. All were poor boys, with no other aids to ambition than their own qualities of character. In his amiable frailties as a public man not less than in his strongest attributes the President whose death we now mourn was a representative American. Born in Ohio where the streams of transallegheny migration from North and South met and commingled and political agitation was ceaseless, at a time when the overshadowing sectional question pressed for final settlement, and having been educated chiefly in the public schools, where all the influence was democratic, it was natural and almost inevitable that the first ambition of the young man William McKinley should be political. He demonstrated the depth and sincerity of his youthful patriotism by enlisting as a private soldier in the volunteer army for the preservation of the Union. In that service he revealed an amiability of temperament which easily won the votes of his fellows in favor of his promotion and assured the popularity of his later years. He was a friendly man and he loved his fellow men.

At the time when as a young lawyer William McKinley entered actively into politics party lines were strongly drawn. Not to be a Republican was almost to be a traitor in the eyes of the leaders of "Ben" Wade's type. It would have been peculiar if young McKinley had been less devoted to his party or less submissive to its decrees. The spirit of that time continued to influence his political actions throughout his lifetime, and it will account for the degree to which the President was willing to recede from his own opinion whenever it was opposed by the aggressive leaders of his party. It was along party lines and by seizing the party standard and carrying it forward that McKinley in Congress became the particular representative of an economic policy of which events made a dominating issue. It is worthy of note, however, that after his highest ambition had been realized by his election to a second term as President Mr. McKinley advocated a policy of commercial reciprocity which was apparently far beyond the purpose of the immediate managers of his party. He was one of the shrewdest and ablest of political leaders, and foresaw better than his advisers what course would command popular approval.

Among the American people the supreme feeling of the hour touches only the personality of the dead President, and is nearly free from political concern. He is mourned as a good man, a peculiarly affectionate and considerate husband, who was shot to death because he was the first citizen, the Chief Magistrate, of the Republic. A whole nation shares the sorrow of the widow, whose loss is irreparable.

What the Party Promise.

The Republican platform promises the passage of the corrupt practices act, designed especially to prevent bribery at elections.

The Republicans promise to pass a primary election law which will give the independent and anti-machine Democrats a chance to voice their sentiments in the primaries and have a say as to who shall be put on the ticket, a privilege they have not enjoyed since the organization of the Ring, and which will result in the downfall of all bossism.

The Republican party gives you its past record in this State and is not afraid to stand on that record. On the other hand, the Democrats are silent as the grave as to their past record and well they might be, for their party record in this State is but the record of one mighty boss, and that—well, we hope to be able to publish some interesting facts later, just as we did in 1895.

FOR the benefit of the seventy-six millions of people who have been seriously handicapped in discussing Mr. Czolgosz by the impossibility of pronouncing his name, it may be stated that as near as a decent American tongue can come to it, the pronunciation is "Sholgosch." It is the unanimous opinion of the country that a man with such a name as that ought to be deported anyhow.

Making Schoolroom Patriots.

One sometimes wonders if the American schoolmistress realizes her opportunities for making good citizens for her country. Too often she does not, for she is frequently merely the machine to carry out the plans and put into execution the ideas of the head of an institution in which she is only one of many.

System is a great thing, but system seldom develops individuality, and school principals who are wise give their teachers as much freedom from routine as the success of a school as a whole will permit.

Very often it is the incidentals in life that have the greatest influence. The curriculum, no matter how entertaingly presented day after day, will sometimes pull on the student's taste, and then a quarter of an hour taken to rest the young minds will result in more and better work when the lessons are renewed.

The average child is not well enough acquainted with the happenings of the world in which he lives. News in the abstract interests him very little, but if he is told that the President, Admiral Dewey or some one whose name is familiar to him is doing such and such a thing he is at once interested.

The teacher can, one by one, introduce her pupils to the different public characters of the day, showing the school a picture of each man and telling what he has done, what sort of a boy he was, etc., until the chief actors in the world's drama are familiar friends instead of mere names. Children should be allowed to form opinions of public events, and when they understand them they will be capable of surprising the teacher by their clear judgment.

No better way of making patriotic citizens can be found than in this daily study of contemporary events. To be interested in public affairs one must understand them, and it is remarkable how few men and women comprehend the contents of the newspapers sufficiently well to give an intelligent opinion in regard to them.

THE papers are now full of propositions to stamp out anarchists. The best way to stamp out anarchists is to avoid the conditions which produce them. Europe has been engaged in stamping out anarchists for more than 30 years—and yet in the last three years an empress, king and a president of a republic fell by their hands. In this country, where the citizen is the sovereign, there should be no room for this atrocious sect. But the incursion of a great mass of voting slaves, unfamiliar with our institutions, has caused the ignorant to look upon our public servants as kings and lords. There is more need of wholesome education than repression.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

The Man Who is Called a Typical American.

Is Still Young, Though He Has Accomplished Much—Sketch of His Strenuous Career.

Theodore Roosevelt was born in New York on October 27, 1857. He will thus be 44 years old next month. He looks younger than 40. He is athletic. His eyes are blue and clear, his hand cordial in greeting, and his teeth, which his manner of speech habitually discloses, are marvelously regular and white. He is studious and zealous.

Mr. Roosevelt's ancestry made New York City history. It was Dutch and French-Huguenot. It was God-fearing and laborious. It had opinions and it clung to them. The Vice-President inherited all the family traits. At 20 he was almost an invalid. Close application to his studies in Columbia and Harvard had still further weakened him. He was a heavy reader of books, a patient student, a quick observer.

He tried a plunge into New York politics. In his city district was a Republican machine combination that showed no disposition to recognize his desire to become a member of the Legislature. He fought the machine and defeated it.

He went to Albany in 1881, nationally obscure, but indomitable. In three years he put through the State's civil service act and an act regulating primary elections. Party machine leaders frowned upon him, but he went on his way.

In 1884 Mr. Roosevelt went as a delegate to the National Convention of that year. His health troubled him and he sought a new life at Chimney Butte, Dak., where he grazed cattle and led the life of a cowboy. He became known from Medora to Dickinson as the boldest and bravest cattleman in the region. He did what the cow men did. He lived as they lived. He commanded the respect of even the desperadoes. His lungs expanded, his body developed and he gained a reserve of health that seems to have grown every year since.

He lost money on his cattle venture, but he returned to New York a strong man physically, and made the race for Mayor of that city. He was defeated, but he laughed. He understood that the corrupt elements of this city would not tolerate him, but he waited. Meanwhile he wrote books—books on hunting, books on Western life, books on Eastern cities. His style in literature was vigorous and pleasing. His books sold well and the magazines made great demands for his writings. The public liked his breeziness, his evident sincerity, his courage, and partially appreciated him before he became a National Civil Service Commissioner in 1889.

Once at Washington, he commenced an enforcement of the law of the most vigorous kind. He made himself disliked among the spoilsmen of both parties, but he held to the line of his duty. He took the law as he found it, lived true to his oath of office and made the measure respected in many quarters where it had been sneered at before.

From Washington he passed to a Police Commissioner in New York. His peculiar ability to work, and work on right lines, gave the corrupt police force such a shaking up as it had never had before. He was Police Commissioner in every sense of the word, unbribable, unapproachable, fair to the fair-minded, severe on the criminal. His books continued to sell in increasing number, and the public, through the press, began to have a broader view of him.

When the Spanish-American war came he was Assistant Secretary of the Navy by the authority of President McKinley. He had much to do with the organization of the navy for the conflict, and it has always been believed that his influence largely contributed to the sending of Admiral Dewey to Hongkong and thence to Manila bay.

When the war became a certainty, Mr. Roosevelt resigned his position in the Navy Department, and, with Gen. Leonard Wood, organized the First Volunteer Cavalry better known as the Rough Riders. General Wood was colonel of this regiment and Mr. Roosevelt lieutenant colonel. The members of the regiment came from the first families in the East, from ranches in the West; came from wherever good horsemen, daring men and good shots could be secured.

The regiment was the most unique of its kind ever organized, and was much scoffed at in the beginning. Before it had been two days in Cuba the wisdom of its organization was plainly seen. The men were fitted for any kind of campaigning. Their colonel and lieutenant colonel took what they took. The regiment practically foraged itself, and was first in the field and first to be baptized with fire. At Las Guasimas, Kettle Hill and San Juan it gave us its bravest and best and went on to victory.

Mr. Roosevelt was its colonel before the end of the war, and pronounced by the foreign military attaches who observed his conduct in the field as one of the first military officers of the day. He was in Santiago at the surrender, brought his regiment back to the United States and disbanded it at Montauk Point in the fall of 1898. It contributed among the volunteer troops more to the success of the American arms in Cuba than any other regiment formed.

The Colonel became Governor of New York immediately after his return to this country. As Governor he stood for radical taxation legislation and State control of the trusts. His term was marked by a pronounced fight on his part against the New York Republican machine. He did not seek the Vice-Presidential nomination last year, but had it forced upon him, and he accepted at the last moment. During the campaign he made a trip of over 21,000 miles, speaking for the ticket, and was received everywhere with popular acclaim. Since his inauguration he has presided over one extra session of the Senate, and made several trips throughout the country attending public functions. He was in Chicago within the last 10 days as the guest of Governor Yates.

In an interview in 1893 upon the subject of "Americanism," Mr. Roosevelt developed some of his ideas as follows:

"I naturally disapprove of the half-conscious spread-eagle Americanism which is ever exerting itself at the wrong moments. I dislike it, of course, when it is put forward as a plea to excuse moral shortcomings of a kind usually connected with public affairs. Nevertheless, in spite of this abuse, I am sure that no man can well play his part in our life who is not honestly American in heart, belief and instinct.

"If one wishes to find a typical American one may consider Francis Parkman. He always appealed to my admiration, because he made his life work largely of the description of that frontier warfare between our backwoodsmen and their foes which has been of such incalculable importance in our land's history."

In one of his published works he says: "In speaking to my own countrymen there is one point upon which I wish to lay especial stress; that is, the necessity for a feeling of broad, radical and intense Americanism, if good work is to be done in any direction. Above all, the one essential for success in every political movement which is to do lasting good is that our citizens should act as Americans, not as Americans with a prefix and qualification—not as Irish-Americans, German Americans, native Americans—but as Americans pure and simple.

"It is an outrage for a man to drag foreign politics into our contests and vote as an Irishman or German or other foreigner, as the case may be; and there is no worse citizen than the professional Irish dynamiter or German anarchist, because of his attitude toward our social and political life, not to mention his efforts to embroil us with foreign Powers. But it is no less an outrage to discriminate against one who has become an American in good faith merely because of his creed or birthplace."

Of caste he has written: "As for the upper social world, the fashionable world, it is much as it was when portrayed in the 'Portiphar Papers,' save that modern society has shifted the shrine at which it pays comical but sincere homage from Paris to London. Perhaps it is rather better, for it is less provincial and a trifle more American. But a would-be upper class, based mainly on wealth, in which it is the exception and not the rule for a man to be of any real account in the national life, whether as a politician, a literary man or otherwise, is of necessity radically defective and of little moment."

The titles of some of Mr. Roosevelt's best works are "Life of Thomas Benton," "Life of Gouverneur Morris," "Ranch Life and the Hunting Trail," "The Winning of the West," "History of New York City," "Essays on Practical Politics," "The Wilderness Hunter," "Hero Tales from American History," "Naval War of 1812."

He is an intimate of Jacob Riis, the tenement-slums reformer of New York; of Frederick Holls, secretary at The Hague Conference, and of Senator Henry Cabot Lodge. His habits are simple, his life most strenuous. He does not know the meaning of the words "idle" and "misapplication." He has often been called a "typical American."

Special Rates to Buffalo Pan-American Exposition, Baltimore & Ohio R. R.

Excursion tickets from Oakland, Md., to Buffalo and return via Pittsburg account Pan-American Exposition now on sale at ticket offices Baltimore & Ohio Railroad:

TEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $13.35.

FIFTEEN DAY TICKETS—On sale daily, $16.80.

SEASON TICKETS—On sale daily, good returning until Nov. 30th, 1901, $19.20.

For full details, time of trains, etc., call on Agent Baltimore and Ohio Railroad. til nov 1

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY DEAD.

(CONTINUED FROM PAGE ONE.)

Those within reach were called by telephone or messenger, and telegrams were rushed to those who had left the city. The first of the messages went out at 2.30 o'clock, and within half an hour Milburn House began to fill again. The serious condition of the President and the general call sent out gave rise to a general feeling of alarm that was never again allayed. Desperate measures were resorted to in order to stimulate the heart, and the sinking spell was over by 4 o'clock. It was decided to continue the treatment, and the physicians laid their greatest hope on weathering the day. It was agreed that if the wounded man could be carried for two hours that his chances would be very favorable, for the wounds were healing splendidly.

HEART SPECIALISTS.

It was decided to summon Dr. W. W. Johnston, of Washington, and Dr. E. J. Janeway, of New York, heart specialists, and telegrams were hurried out asking that they come at once. Before dawn a dozen of the relatives and friends of the President arrived at Milburn House. They assembled in the drawing-room, where they waited for tidings from the sick room above them. The physicians assured them that the President had a fighting chance for his life, and to the hope that in the end victory would be his they clung all day. Hundreds of visitors came during the morning, and if the police had not kept the streets clear and barred entrance to Delaware avenue, there would have been thousands. Senator Hanna, close personal and political friend of the President, hurried up from Cleveland by special train. Other friends arrived by regular trains, and all through the day they came in increasing numbers. Their regret and sympathy were profound.

The day developed but little encouragement for them, however. During the forenoon the President made a slight gain of strength and held it well into the afternoon. His physicians announced that they had again given him nourishment, and it was thought that possibly there was a chance for a further gain of strength. It was known, however, that he was in a very serious state, and every interest centered in the sick room in Milburn house, where the struggle was in progress. Suddenly at 5 o'clock in the afternoon there was a repetition of the heart attack and those in the presence of the stricken man knew that the end was at hand. This knowledge soon spread to the street and the waiting newspaper men bulletined it to the world. Everyone who came from the house was besought for an expression as to the state of the President. Each succeeding report was worse than its predecessor, and the official bulletins were absolutely without hope.

Monday night the body of the President was sent to Washington on a special train. It laid in state in the rotunda of the Capitol on Tuesday where it was viewed by thousands. Tuesday night over the Pennsylvania lines the body was conveyed to Canton, Ohio, where the funeral will take place to-day at 2 o'clock.

Estray Notice.

Estrayed from the Meadow Mountain range about July 1st, two black heifers, one red heifer, one red steer and one black steer, all 2 years old, and have round holes in each ear size of No. 12 gauge shot gun. One black heifer will be fresh this month. Any information leading to their recovery will be suitably rewarded.

FRANK O. GLOTFELTY,
McHenry, Md.

38 4*

N. Broadwater, Grantsville, has just returned from the city with the largest and most complete line of goods ever brought to town.

Bird-Shot For Tiger.

No use to hunt tigers with bird-shot. It doesn't hurt the tiger any and it's awfully risky for you.

Consumption is a tiger among diseases. It is stealthy—but once started it rapidly eats up the flesh and destroys the life. No use to go hunting it with ordinary food and medicine. That's only bird-shot. It still advances. Good heavy charges of Scott's Emulsion will stop the advance. The disease feels that.

Scott's Emulsion makes the body strong to resist. It soothes and toughens the lungs and sustains the strength until the disease wears itself out.

Send for free sample.

SCOTT & BOWNE, Chemists, 409 Pearl St., N. Y.
50c and $1.00; all druggists.

NOTICE OF REGISTRATION OF VOTERS.

OFFICE OF THE
BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTIONS
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.

OAKLAND, MD., Sept. 18, 1901.

Notice is hereby given that in accordance with the provisions of Article 33, Chapter 262 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland, 1896, the undersigned Officers of Registration of the respective Election Districts of Garrett county, Maryland, will hold their sittings from 8 o'clock a. m. until 7 o'clock p. m., on Tuesday, October 1st,

Tuesday, October 8th,
and on Tuesday, October 15th,
for revision only.

(No one can Register after Tuesday, Oct. 8.)

at their respective places of registration hereinafter named, for the purpose of registering in their respective registries of voters all persons who possess or will before the day of election next ensuing, possess the requisite qualifications under the Constitution of the State of Maryland and the laws made thereunder entitling them to vote in said Election Districts, and for the purpose of performing all other duties required of them by Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws of Maryland and Chapter 262 of the Acts of the General Assembly of Maryland of 1896.

Election District Number One—Swanton.

The Officers of Registration for the First Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid at the store room of Chas. S. May in the town of Swanton.

Election District Number Two—Friendsville.

The Officers of Registration for the Second Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid at Ed. Schlossnagle's Saddlery Shop in the town of Friendsville.

Election District Number Three—Grantsville.

The Officers of Registration for the Third Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in O'Hanley's Hall in the town of Grantsville.

Election District Number Four—Bloomington.

The Officers of Registration for the Fourth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in Thomas Garvey's house in the town of Bloomington.

Election District Number Five—Accident.

The Officers of Registration for the Fifth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in the house of Mrs. Susan Englehart in the town of Accident.

Election District Number Six—Sang Run.

The Officers of Registration for the Sixth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in the house of Nathan C. Browning in the town of Sang Run.

Election District Number Seven—Oakland.

The Officers of Registration for the Seventh Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in the Corrigan property, Third and Alder streets, in the town of Oakland.

Election District Number Eight—Ryan's Glade.

The Officers of Registration for the Eighth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid at the old Hove place on the Northwestern Turnpike.

Election District Number Nine—Johnson's.

The Officers of Registration for the Ninth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid at the shop of Samuel Johnson on the National Road.

Election District Number Ten—Deer Park.

The Officers of Registration for the Tenth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in the building owned by Dr. J. W. Laughlin in the town of Deer Park.

Election District Number Eleven—The Elbow.

The Officers of Registration for the Eleventh Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid at the residence of Joseph Warnick.

Election District Number Twelve—Bittinger.

The Officers of Registration for the Twelfth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in the shop of H. A. Groves in the village of Bittinger.

Election District Number Thirteen—Kitzmillersville.

The Officers of Registration for the Thirteenth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid in the house of Paul Shultz in the town of Kitzmillersville.

Election District Number Fourteen—Oakland.

The Officers of Registration for the Fourteenth Election District will attend and sit for the purpose aforesaid at the office of the Supervisors of Elections in the Opera House Building in the town of Oakland.

DANIEL E. BECKMAN,
L. H. FRIEND,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 1 of Garrett county.

WILLIAM WELCH,
WALTER W. SAVAGE,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 2 of Garrett county.

JAMES H. BEVANS,
C. C. DURST,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 3 of Garrett county.

ERVAN FAZENBAKER,
JAMES H. REYNOLDS,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 4 of Garrett county.

JOHN H. GATTERMAN,
ASA B. FRIEND,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 5 of Garrett county.

HARRISON SINES,
REUBEN M. ENLOW,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 6 of Garrett county.

JOSEPH H. SMITHMAN,
LINCOLN CALLIS,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 7 of Garrett county.

JOHN H. HARVEY,
GEORGE D. STAHL,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 8 of Garrett county.

MICHAEL CUNNINGHAM,
DANIEL B. LAYMAN,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 9 of Garrett county.

ARLA SOLLARS,
C. L. PAUGH,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 10 of Garrett county.

WALTER WARNICK,
JOHN MERRILL,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 11 of Garrett county.

JAMES BOWSER,
GEORGE W. ENGLE,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 12 of Garrett county.

L. C. HAMILL,
W. S. PEW,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 13 of Garrett county.

WADE H. HINEBAUGH,
SIMON MYERS,
Officers of Registration for Election District No. 14 of Garrett county.

C. E. ELLITHORP, President,
FRANK WELCH,
A. G. STURGISS,
Board of Supervisors of Elections for Garrett county, Maryland.

EDMUND JAMISON, Clerk. 38—5t.

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

Incidents and Events at Home and Nearby —Personal Mention, Etc.

George L. Sincell has returned to school at College Park.

Naylor still has some fertilizer for wheat on hand. 28 3*

Miss Anna Anderson is visiting friends in Piedmont this week.

Miss Arabelle Martin, who spent several weeks on a visit to friends at Baltimore, has returned to Oakland.

John Smith, who spent the summer with friends in and near Oakland, expects to soon return to Texas.

WHEAT FERTILIZER at Dixon & Kelso's cheap. Will take good potatoes at 75c bushel. 28 2*

The race course being constructed by local horsemen near Mountain Lake Park is assuming shape and will soon be ready for use.

Mrs. S. E. Bolden and son Harry returned home Tuesday evening after spending a week visiting relatives in Cumberland.

Miss Mary Mitchell left yesterday afternoon for Roanoke, Va., where she will again attend school this fall and winter.

The New England Bloomer Girl Baseball club will cross bats with the local team or "terrier" nine at Jack Oak Park next Monday afternoon.

Messrs. George and Judson Loar and their sisters, Misses Lottie and Grace, left on Thursday of last week for the Buffalo exposition.

Mrs. Dr. W. H. Ravenscraft left this morning for Pittsburg and Ridgeway, Pa., where she will visit her son Walter some weeks.

If you want a bargain in a nice family surrey or carriage you can get it at A. D. Naylor's. Closing them out for this season. Special low price and good terms. 28 3*

Mrs. Rebecca Firstone, of Frederick, who visited Mrs. Leah F. Sincell for several weeks, has gone to Terra Alta to be the guest of Mrs. Adair for a short time.

Semmes Hamill has returned to Princeton, N. J., where he will remain a few days and then return to Baltimore to enter the law department of the Maryland University.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Rush Snyder, who have been visiting the parents of Mrs. Snyder, Mr. and Mrs. Robert I. Anderson, returned on Saturday last to their home in Baltimore.

A number of people of Oakland who had planned to go to the Buffalo exposition this week have postponed their departure indefinitely owing to the death of the President.

Misses Grace Jones and Bessie Offutt have gone to Winchester, Va., to attend school this winter. The were accompanied thence by Mrs. D. E. Offutt.

Frank O. Glotfelty, of McHenry, was in town yesterday. He is on the hunt of some stray cattle, for which he offers a reward, notice of which appears elsewhere in this paper.

Mr. and Mrs. Peabody, of Bridgeport, O., who were here as guests of Mr. and Mrs. Austin Brown, returned to their home Monday morning, accompanied by Miss Dora Brown.

The prevailing sentiment is all against anarchists and one good thing seems destined to come out of the death of the President and that is it will serve in great measure to rid the country of this vermin by calling attention to its existence.

Judge E. Merrill, of Merrill, Garrett county, was in town Wednesday in the interest of the Black Lick Gold and Silver Mining Company, lately organized at his home. The ore is said to be good and is to be sent to New Jersey for refining.—Piedmont Independent.

About one hundred delegates to the National Lodge, I. O. O. F., which meets at Indianapolis, Ind., were entertained Sunday night at the Glades Hotel. The party arrived here Sunday evening on a special train which was sidetracked during the night. The journey westward was resumed Monday morning at 7.45.

It is rather surprising to note the lynch law tone of many old wise men including lawyers whose life work has been to uphold the majesty of the law. Some of them have gone so far as to say that immediate steps should be taken to summarily eliminate all anarchists from the United States.

Mrs. Dr. A. F. Speicher, together with her baby and son Robert and daughter Florence, started for Los Angeles, Cal., last Monday. They expect to rent a house there and remain until next June. Robert and Florence, we are informed, will attend the Los Angeles public schools during the winter.—Salisbury Star.

A joint meeting of the Republican County Committee and the candidates of the Republican party was held at Republican headquarters in Oakland on Saturday afternoon last when plans were made for the approaching campaign. Those in attendance at the meeting were Committeemen J. W. Laughlin, T. H. Bittinger and Chas. E. Hilleary and Candidates Ravenscroft, Ashby, Taylor Friend, Stump, Maffett, White and Edwin E. Friend.

G. A. Bolden, who has been employed in Offutt & Lakin's store for the past two years, resigned Saturday. He goes to Grafton next week to take charge of the Sentinel. He has many warm friends here who regret to see him leave.—Preston Republican.

Dr. D. O. McKinley will be at McHenry September 30; Sines P. O., October 1 to 4 p. m. on 2nd; Oct. 3 at Mrs. Ellen Lohr's, near Crellin; at J. P. Lipscomb's, near Kearney, Oct. 4 to 3 p. m. on 5th; at Mrs. Wm. Rodeheaver's, near Thayerville, Oct. 7; at Hoyes, Oct. 8; at Friendsville, Oct. 9 and 10. Teeth extracted without pain. 28 3

Fire Saturday night destroyed the lumber plant and saw mill of R. Chaffey, at Wallman, this county, on the West Virginia Central railroad, entailing a loss of $9,000, partly covered by insurance. The mill will be rebuilt at once by Mr. Chaffey, who is one of the largest lumber operators on the West Virginia Central road. The origin of the fire is a mystery.

Dr. W. M. Longstreth this week assumed charge of Dr. King's practice, having moved to Dr. King's old office. He will close Lakewood Hotel next week for this season and remove his family to town. While we are sorry indeed to see Dr. King leave us we are glad that so successful and gentlemanly a practitioner as Dr. Longstreth will take his place.—Preston Republican.

A handsome combination express and passenger car for Jennings Bros.' new railread arrived last week. The Messrs. Jennings are thoroughly up-to-date and they will give the people along their railway as good service as possible. When the Jennings train runs to the West Salisbury depot it will be a great convenience for the people here as well as all along the line. More power to Jennings Bros. They are the right kind of people.—Salisbury Star.

During the rounding up of cattle on Negro mountain near Addison, Pa., just across the State line from Garrett county, on Tuesday, Henry Fisher's attention was attracted to a lonely spot by his shepherd dog, where the remains of the little child of Moses Culp were found. She was lost August 1 while the family were picking berries. The child had traveled about one-half mile and must have crawled part of the way on its hands and knees owing to the dense forest. The remains were considerably scattered over the ground and not a particle of flesh remained. The long curly hair was all torn off the scalp, showing wild animals had eaten the child. Whether attacked before or after death will never be known.

Obituary.

Samuel C. Hoye was born January 14, 1833, and died September 14, 1901, aged 68 years.

Funeral services were held in the Lutheran church at Deer Park on Sunday, September 15, at 1.30 p. m., conducted by Rev. George I. Uhler. The sermon was from the appropriate text: "At evening time it shall be light." In spite of the inclement weather a large audience had assembled to pay the last tribute of respect to the memory of a kind-hearted neighbor and useful, progressive citizen. Had the weather been pleasant the church, though crowded, could not have held those who would have come to do him honor.

The music was conducted by Mrs. E. F. Droege, a life-long friend of the family.

The active pall bearers were W. W. Thrasher, C. H. Shreve, Sebastian Hinebaugh, J. W. Laughlin, S. P. Specht and Abraham Freeland. The honorary pall bearers: Squire E. F. Droege, Hon. A. Frederick George, Hon. R. T. Browning, Messrs. F. H. Thrasher, Thomas J. Browning and M. V. Grimm. Mr. George J. Walter acted as director and Mr. D. E. Bolden, of Oakland, as undertaker.

The clouds which had been dark and lowering all day broke away at "eventide" and the sunlight rested softly where we laid our friend and brother for his last dreamless slumber. As we left the cemetery a rainbow of promise glittered on each spray and the hope of a brighter resurrection comforted each sorrowing heart.

"Alas for him who never sees
The stars shine through the cypress trees,
Who hopeless lays his head away,
Nor looks to see the dawning day
Athwart the mournful cypress play."

Among the last words of Mr. Hoye were these: "All is well, all is well. I am ready to go. All is bright."

A political enemy but personal friend paid this tribute to his memory: "He was kind, considerate and courteous; a genial, generous gentleman of the old school."

Take him all in all, "we shall not soon look upon his like again."

A FRIEND.

Chamberlain's Cough Remedy a Great Favorite.

The soothing and healing properties of this remedy, its pleasant taste and prompt and permanent cures make it a great favorite with people everywhere. It is especially prized by mothers of small children for colds, croup and whooping cough, as it always affords quick relief, and as it contains no opium or other harmful drug, it may be given as confidently to a baby as to an adult. For sale by all druggists.

FATAL SHOOTING ACCIDENT.

A Boy Fatally Wounds Wm. E. Kight, Aged 45 Years, Near Eglon, W. Va.

William E. Kight, aged about 45 years, a farmer, who resides at Horse Shoe Run, Preston county, West Va., about 12 miles south of Oakland, was shot and fatally wounded on Monday afternoon about one o'clock by the accidental discharge of a Remington rifle in the hands of a boy of fifteen years named Rumors, who resides near the farm of Mr. Kight.

The latter was passing along a wooded path near his home when he met with Rumors who had a rifle which he had just loaded and in throwing it down it exploded. The ball, of 32 calibre, struck Mr. Kight in the side of the stomach and passed entirely through him.

He was brought to Oakland by Dr. Selby, of Eglon, and taken to the McComas Sanitarium, where an operation was performed upon him by Drs. McComas, Ravenscraft, Selby and Legge. There were fourteen punctures of the intestines which were sewed up by the physicians and the life of the sufferer thus prolonged until Tuesday afternoon at 3 o'clock.

The body was prepared for burial at the undertaking rooms of Messrs. Bolden & Co. and sent to the late home of the deceased Tuesday evening. He leaves a number of children, all of whom are grown.

MOUNTAIN LAKE PARK.

Since the closing of the Chautauqua many of our people have left us. Several families and a few guests are with us yet.

Our district conference from the 2nd to the 4th was a very interesting and profitable one.

The called meeting of the Community resulted in the election of Mr. Fred Martin instead of Mr. J. P. McKey, whose place was declared vacant on the annual committee. Quite a discussion was entered into about light and especially about water, which has since resulted in the formation of two companies. It is to be hoped that this vexed question will soon be settled as there are prominent business men of this place and Oakland in both companies.

It was found that more room was required to accommodate the people, so work is already begun. F. P. Arnold is putting an addition to his cottage. The Chautauqua Hotel is preparing to put up quite an annex. W. H. H. Sheets, of Pittsburg, who has spent several seasons here, has begun the foundation for a large and handsome cottage. Others are to follow.

The work of remodeling the building near the depot in Loch Lynn is being pushed along and will make a splendid appearance when completed.

The news of the death of our beloved President caused deep sorrow throughout this community. At the opening of our preaching service here Sabbath morning Mr. McKinley's favorite hymn, "Lead Kindly Light," was sung. Then in the evening a very interesting memorial service was held, in which different ones took part, making short addresses.

Dr. Davidson, who left us on the last day of the Chautauqua for Europe as a delegate to the Ecumenical Conference, expects to return in October. His family makes a short visit to Washington this week, but will return here before leaving for their home at Cuyahoga Falls.

FROM ANOTHER CORRESPONDENT.

Mrs. Margaret J. H. Grove, of Fairmont, W. Va., purchased the Thompson property on the corner of E street and Pennsylvania avenue. Consideration $1100.

Horace Fulton, of Washington, D. C., has purchased four lots on the corner of Oakland avenue and F street. Price $1100.

W. H. H. Sheets, of Pittsburg, is building a fine two-story house on the corner of F and Oak streets. It will have bath and toilet rooms, sanitary plumbing and will be wired for electricity. Mr. Bolden has contract.

Mrs. S. E. Blue, of Homer, Ohio, is getting the material together for a house to be erected at once on the corner of H and Spruce streets.

J. D. Carmody, of Washington, D. C., has purchased a lot on E street. Price $300.

The Miss Jennings, of Sewickley, Pa., are having considerable work done on their house.

Wesley H. Rudisill has entered the Ohio State University at Columbus, Ohio, and will take up a four years course in electrical engineering.

C. W. Hopkins went to Cincinnati for a few weeks last Monday.

Memorial services for Mr. McKinley were held in the Methodist church Sabbath evening last. Addresses were made by Manager Rudisill, Rev. Higley, of Washington, and Dr. Eldridge, of Baltimore. Mrs. D. W. Smith had charge of the music.

Rev. Chamberlain and family, of Washington, will spend a month in this place.

A 24-room addition will be put to Hotel Chautauqua this fall. A number of other improvements will be made by the hotel management.

Car load feed and flour just arrived at Eagle Store, Grantsville.

UNION SERVICES.

They Will Be Held This Afternoon at Two O'Clock.

In response to a proclamation issued on Saturday last by President Roosevelt that the people of the United States assemble in their respective places of worship to-day when the remains of our late beloved President are to be laid in their last earthly resting place, Mayor Hart has issued a call requesting the places of business in Oakland to close during the day or at least during the hours of the funeral which is to take place at two o'clock at Canton, Ohio.

The banks will be closed all day and in accordance with an order issued by the Postmaster General the postoffice will not be open after ten o'clock. Court adjourned yesterday afternoon and will not be again convened until to-morrow morning at 9 o'clock.

The religious services in memory of the late President will be held in St. Mark's Ev. Lutheran church. All ministers of the gospel in Oakland have been invited to take part in the service. Good music of an appropriate character will be rendered and a number of addresses suitable to the occasion will be delivered.

All are invited to attend.

MOUNTAIN TRIOLETS.

TO JESSIE.

With brimming cup of sparkling wine
That won Old Omar's praises,
I drink to Jessie—maid divine!
With brimming cup of sparkling wine—
And oh, the day that she'll be mine
I'll drink in all the phases,
With brimming cup of sparkling wine
That won Old Omar's praises!

ACCUMULATE THE CASH.

'Tis good advice I give—my son,
Accumulate the cash!
When everything is said and done,
'Tis good advice I give—my son,
If you would yank the warmest bun
The ready you must flash.
'Tis good advice I give—my son,
Accumulate the cash!

IN HAMMOCK TIME.

With a matchless pose of grace,
In the hammock swinging;
Pretty Polly holds her place
With a matchless pose of grace—
Just a glimpse of fluffy lace:
(Cupid's shafts go winging,)
With a matchless pose of grace,
In the hammock swinging.

Jackson Park, August, 1901. —T. L. L.

KRUG.

Mr. Henry Krug was in the city looking after the interests of the cooper business a few days last week.

Joseph Schriber, of Wankegan, Ill., moved into the Wagner cottage a few weeks ago and has improved the appearance by erecting a neat porch.

A party composed of Frank Raybeck and family, George Frazee and Jasper Fike spent Sunday last with friends at Selbysport.

Alfred Glover is attending G. A. R. encampment in Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. William Savage spent Saturday and Sunday with relatives at Elder Hill.

Clyde Hilliard and family are visiting relatives in Pennsylvania.

Wish Lingenfield went to Confluence last Thursday very sick and has not returned.

Lloyd and James Van Sickle were visiting friends near Markleysburg Saturday and Sunday.

Charles Hilliard, accompanied by his sister, Miss Maud, left for their home in Pennsylvania the 11th.

Lowry Burgess and family were visiting friends at Fearer Saturday and Sunday.

W. H. Krug and wife are visiting at Oil City, Pa., and Buffalo, N. Y.

D. H. Shank spent Sunday with his family in Confluence. UNO.

Circuit Court.

The following cases have been disposed of on the civil trial docket:

No. 11, E. K. Goldsborough vs. D. A. Stephens; tried before the court and verdict for the plaintiff for $32.18; Hamill, Semmes—Sincell.

18, A. M. Cunningham vs. Samuel E. Davis; tried before the court and judgment for the plaintiff for $100; Peddicord—Hamill, Semmes.

19, Benj. F. Bittinger vs. David T. Enlow; non pros; Peddicord—Thayer, Sincell, Heindel.

55, James Q. Robeson vs. William H. Michaels; continued on account of illness of witness; Peddicord—Sincell, Renninger.

56, James Q. Robeson vs. Wm. H. Michaels; continued on same ground; Peddicord—Sincell, Renninger.

62, William H. Michaels vs. James Q. Robeson; warrant of resurvey issued and case continued; Sincell, Renninger—Peddicord.

CRIMINAL DOCKET.

The criminal docket was taken up on Monday morning and disposed of as follows:

1, State vs. Michael Rice; stet.
2, State vs. Truman Wilt; recognizance forfeited; Thayer—Hamill.
3, State vs. Jesse Wilt; jury trial; verdict not guilty.
4, State vs. Cecil Ridings; stet; Thayer—Peddicord.
5, State vs. Frank Cushlog; demurer to indictment; demurer overruled; opinion by Judge Stake; Thayer—Hamill.
6, State vs. Geo. W. Logue; stet.
7, State vs. William Wilson; continued.
8, State vs. McClellan Thomas; plea of not guilty confessed by State; Thayer—Hamill.
9, State vs. Walter D. Collier; plea of guilty and fined $50 and costs.
10, State vs. Walter D. Collier; plea of guilty and fined $50 and costs.
11, State vs. Walter D. Collier; dismissed.
12, State vs. Charles Liston; continued.
13, State vs. James Sanders; stet.
14, State vs. John Pritts; dismissed.
15, State vs. William Jones; trial.
16, State vs. Russell Friend; plea of guilty, fined $50 and costs.
17, State vs. James Facenbaker; continued.
18, 19, 20, 21 and 22, State vs. Wash. Taylor; all set for trial.
23, State vs. Porter Fike; stet.
24, State vs. Edward Greaser; tried before the court; verdict guilty; fined $25 and costs; Thayer—Sincell.
25, State vs. Newton Ream; continued.
26, State vs. John Reynolds; plea guilty; fined $50 and costs.
27, State vs. John Reynolds; dismissed.
28, State vs. John Reynolds; plea guilty; fined $25 and costs.
29, State vs. John Reynolds; plea guilty; fined $25 and costs.
30, State vs. Thomas F. Burke; guilty; fined $20 and costs.
31, State vs. Thomas F. Burke; guilty; fined $20 and costs.
32, State vs. John Reynolds; dismissed.
33, State vs. John W. Hart; plea guilty; fined $10 and costs.
34, State vs. Thomas Little; plea guilty; fined $10 and costs.
35, State vs. Thos. J. Hughes; trial.
36, State vs. Thomas R. White; plea guilty; fined $50 and costs.
37, State vs. Joseph Ross; paroled for 3 years.
38, State vs. Patrick O'Brien; plea guilty.

CRIMINAL APPEALS.

1, Eliza L. Michaels vs. State; continued.
2, Forest Michaels vs. State; continued.
3, Bruce Hesen vs. State; trial before the court; verdict not guilty; Peddicord—Thayer.

Grand Jury Report.

To the Honorable, the Judges of the Circuit Court for Garrett county:—

The grand jury for the September term of nineteen hundred and one, respectfully report that they have carefully examined the witnesses in investigations of various cases, and complaints brought before them, and they have, wherever the evidence with a due regard to the circumstances in the premises appeared to justify, found presentments, and all such cases as they deemed either of a trivial nature or inadequately sustained by facts have been dismissed, and the witnessed discharged. Our work has been greatly lightened and assisted by the counsel of the State's attorney, and the attention of other court officers. But we regret that we were delayed by not being able to get witnesses, and we find a number who were to appeal before us were not summoned.

We have visited the county jail and also the offices in the court house and found everything in good condition. But we are impressed with the great need of new buildings. We heartily recommend the building of a new modern court house and think that it would reflect great credit to the citizens of Garrett county, besides being in our minds a necessity.

We found the jail in clean and comfortable condition, but consider it too antiquated and small to be used as a jail, and certainly think a new and properly constructed jail building very much needed. We found the treasurer's office in good order and books well kept, but we consider the room too small. The commissioners' office is in good order, but we also consider it too small for the use of a body of commissioners. The office and vault of the orphans' court was also in elegant condition and we think the manner in which the books and papers are kept reflects great credit. We found the clerk's office also well kept, and the vaults in which the books and records are kept to be in fine condition. Also, we were impressed with the fineness of the records and the system used in their keeping.

In connection with all the above we heartily indorse all the recommendations of the grand jury for the March term, 1901, and desire to call the attention of the county commissioners to their failure to carry out the matters as recommended by the said grand jury. We also desire to call the attention of the county commissioners to the fact of the general bad condition of the county roads; we have been informed of this fact by a number of citizens; also to the fact of roads being obstructed by fences and timber, &c., making them nearly impassable at many points.

We would thank all the officers in charge of the offices and jail for their kind attention to us in our inquiry.

Having now discharged all duties known to us as jurors, we pray that your honors dismiss us from further attendance.

GEO. L. MICHAELS,
J. A. GRANT, Foreman.
Clerk.

FOR SALE—One eight year old dark bay horse. 1250 pounds. Will work in all harness. H. CRUTZBURG.

You can buy men's, boys' and children's clothing cheaper at N. Broadwater's, Grantsville, than any place in town. 27 8*

FOR SALE.—$125 cash, horse, phaeton and harness complete; attractive outfit; gentle family horse. Apply to Dr. J. S. Stone, Mt. Lake Park. 1*

Take your produce to N. Broadwater, who pays always the highest price.

Dr. S. M. Hardman, eye, ear, nose and throat specialist, Grafton, W. Va. Spectacles and artificial eyes fitted.

APPOINTMENT OF Judges and Clerks of Election.

OFFICE OF
THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF ELECTION
FOR GARRETT COUNTY.
OAKLAND, MD., Sept. 7, 1901.

The Board of Supervisors of Election for Garrett county, Maryland, having selected the following named persons to be Judges and Clerks of Election in and for the several election districts of said county in accordance with the provisions of Section 7 of Article 33 of the Code of Public General Laws of the State of Maryland for the year 1897, hereby give notice of the names and postoffice address of each person so selected as Judges and Clerks and also the political party which the Board of Supervisors of Elections intends each of said person to represent, respectively.

The law makes it the duty of the Board to examine promptly into any complaints which may be preferred to them in writing against any person so selected and to remove any such person whom upon inquiry they find to be unfit or incapable to discharge the duties incumbent upon them as election officials.

Election District Number One—Swanton.

Peter J. Lohr, Democrat, Judge of Election, Beckman; John L. Fitzwater, Republican, Judge of Election, Beckman; Patrick Hamill, Democrat, Clerk of Eleetion, Thayerville; Alfred B. Mason, Republican, Clerk of Election, Beckman.

Election District Number Two—Friendsville.

Augustine Friend, Democrat, Judge of Election, Friendsville; A. M. Chisholm, Republican, Judge of Election, Friendsville; D. A. Turney, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Friendsville; George W. Sterling, Republican, Clerk of Election, Krug.

Election District Number Three—Grantsville.

Francis Garlitz, Democrat, Judge of Election, Avilton; Samuel J. Beachy, Republican, Judge of Election, Grantsville; John Custer, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Grantsville; Frank J. Foulk, Republican, Clerk of Election, Grantsville.

Election District Number Four—Bloomington.

Peter Fitzwilliams, Sr., Democrat, Judge of Election, Bloomington; Jesse Harris, Republican, Judge of Election, Bloomington; Stephen F. Broadwater, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Floyd; Floyd Duckworth, Republican, Clerk of Election, Westernport.

Election District Number Five—Accident.

Valentine Kahl, Democrat, Judge of Election, Accident; Tarleton O. Collier, Republican, Judge of Election, Cove; S. K. Schlossnagle, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Accident; Chauncey Bittinger, Republican, Clerk of Election, Cove.

Election District Number Six—Sang Run.

Lewis Kahl, Democrat, Judge of Election, Accident; John Sines, Republican, Judge of Election, Sines; William A. DeWitt, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Hoyes; Thomas P. Savage, Republican, Clerk of Election, Sang Run.

Election District Number Seven—Oakland.

William Broderick, Democrat, Judge of Election, Oakland; John Close, Republican, Judge of Election, Mountain Lake Park; Richard F. Bartlett, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Oakland; William P. DeBerry, Republican, Clerk of Election, Oakland.

Election District Number Eight Ryan's Glade.

Samuel Miller, Democrat, Judge of Election, Sunnyside; John H. Sanders, Republican, Judge of Election, Gortner; John A. Hughes, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Oakland; Warner T. Harvey, Republican, Clerk of Election, Gormania, W. Va.

Election District Number Nine—Johnsons.

Floyd Crow, Democrat, Judge of Election, Finzel; William Finzel, Republican, Judge of Election, Finzel; M. H. McKenzie, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Finzel; Richard McKenzie, Republican, Clerk of Election, Frostburg.

Election District Number Ten—Deer Park.

Joseph Lashorn, Democrat, Judge of Election, Deer Park; J. B. Shockey, Republican, Judge of Election, Deer Park; Michael J. Garrett, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Deer Park; W. W. Thrasher, Republican, Clerk of Election, Deer Park.

Election District Number Eleven The Elbow.

Peter F. Michael, Democrat, Judge of Election, Barton; Simon W. Green, Republican, Judge of Election, Lonaconing; Patrick S. Fazenbaker, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Barton; Johnson Broadwater, Republican, Clerk of Election, Merrill.

Election District Number Twelve—Bittinger.

Aaron Pritts, Democrat, Judge of Election, Beckman; James P. Wiley, Republican, Judge of Election, Grantsville; J. Turner Lohr, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Bittinger; Elias Orendorf, Jr., Republican, Clerk of Election, Bittinger.

Election District Number Thirteen—Kitzmillersville.

William H. Pool, Democrat, Judge of Election, Blaine, W. Va.; James H. Wilson, Republican, Judge of Election, Blaine, W. Va.; Cleaver Pool, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Blaine, W. Va.; George W. Kitzmiller, Republican, Clerk of Election, Blaine, W. Va.

Election District Number Fourteen—Oakland.

E. M. Spedden, Democrat, Judge of Election, Crellin; John A. Sowers, Republican, Judge of Election, Oakland; Jeremiah O. Browning, Democrat, Clerk of Election, Oakland; Samuel Lawton, Republican, Clerk of Election, Oakland.

C. E. ELLITHORP, Pres.,
FRANK WELCH,
A. G. STURGISS,
Board of Election Supervisors of Garrett County, Md.

EDMUND JAMISON, Clerk.

Treasury Department.

OFFICE OF
THE COMPTROLLER OF THE CURRENCY,
WASHINGTON, D. C., August 20, 1901.

Whereas, by satisfactory evidence presented to the undersigned, it has been made to appear that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, has complied with all the provisions of the Statutes of the United States, required to be complied with before an association shall be authorized to commence the business of banking.

Now therefore I, Charles G. Dawes, Comptroller of the Currency, do hereby certify that "The First National Bank of Grantsville" in the village of Grantsville, in the County of Garrett, and State of Maryland, is authorized to commence the business of Banking as provided in Section Fifty-one hundred and sixty-nine of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

SEAL

In testimony whereof witness my hand and Seal of office this twentieth day of August, 1901.

(Signed) CHARLES G. DAWES,
Comptroller of the Currency.

oct 31

No. 5943.

The Eyes of the Woman

By EDGAR WELTON COOLEY.

(Copyright, 1901, by Authors Syndicate.)

DURING the entire progress of the trial she had been present in the courtroom. She had listened to every word of the evidence and had marveled that men could so light-heartedly give utterance to words that were to end a brother's life.

She was not handsome; hardly pretty, but her eyes were like twin daggers, for they seemed to pierce one through and through. She was a slender woman, small and young and delicate, and her trim figure was gowned in somber black from head to foot.

Day after day she sat in the same rear seat, emotionless, calm, dispassionate, and rested her eyes upon the face of a man who sat opposite to her. Not once did she remove her gaze from his face; not once did she cease her cold, constant stare at his features.

He was a big, broad-shouldered fellow, with a bronzed face and a mass of hair. He kept his eyes riveted upon the court and the jury and the prisoner. He hung upon every word that was uttered, leaning anxiously forward, rigid and motionless.

But at intervals he turned his face towards the woman in black, only to be transfixed by the gleam of her eyes. Then he would start, turn a shade paler and grasp the arms of his chair.

The prisoner was a young man with fine, clear cut features and blue eyes, as beardless as a boy and as stoical as a graven image. Although he knew his life was in the hands of the 12 men at his right hand, not once did the expression of indifference leave his face, though against him was given the most damaging testimony.

Twice only, each day, did he show any interest in his surroundings. At the opening of each session, when he entered the courtroom handcuffed to the sheriff, he cast one quick, searching glance towards the rear of the room. His glance met that of the woman in black, and for a brief instant a softer gleam shone in the eyes of each.

Tightly and relentlessly was he bound with an unbroken chain of circumstantial evidence. Not a link was missing. Every movement, every utterance of his on the night of the murder were described in detail. From the moment that he had quarreled with the man who was afterwards murdered, to the hour when he was arrested, every step he had taken was traced.

It was shown that he had followed his victim with murder gnawing at his heart; that, in the presence of numerous witnesses, he had sworn to take the man's life; that after the quarrel the man who was slain had turned his steps towards his home, taking a roundabout route; that the prisoner had made use of a short cut and had lain in wait behind a thicket; that he had suddenly leaped upon him and had stabbed him to the heart with a knife that was afterwards found in the prisoner's possession, the blade still scarlet with blood, and that he was later seen running away from the scene of the murder.

Against this awful array of evidence, the defense made no resistance, introduced no testimony. The arguments were made. The attorney for the state welded anew the chain of guilt; the counsel for the defense weakly attacked the reliability of evidence purely circumstantial, and begged that the jury be slow to hang a man when all direct evidence of his guilt was lacking. Then the jury retired.

The sheriff unlocked the door and entered the cell. The prisoner was sitting on the edge of his cot. He had not been asleep. He had been pacing back and forth between the window and the door and had taken a seat only when he heard the officer's footsteps in the corridor.

"Well?" he said.

"The jury has agreed," replied the sheriff. "Come."

The prisoner held out his right arm. The officer snapped a handcuff on his wrist. Then they walked side by side out of the dark cell and along the half-illumined hall. When they reached the outer door, the sheriff pulled a bunch of keys from his coat pocket, inserted one in the lock and turned back the bolt. Then they stepped out into the night, and the officer locked the door behind them.

The courthouse was across the street from the jail. A new moon threw an unnatural light upon the earth, and here and there a lamp flickered in a window. The hands on the illuminated dial of the clock in the courthouse tower pointed to 15 minutes to midnight. The prisoner glanced upward at the star-spangled sky. The air was soft and pleasant, and a drowsy quiet hung everywhere.

"What a beautiful night," said he, in a voice steady, strong and emotionless.

"Yes," replied the sheriff, "a fine night."

Turning to their right they entered the courtroom. Two lights on a central chandelier sent feeble rays staggering through the darkness. The attorneys, newspaper reporters and a bailiff were seated inside the railing.

The prisoner, through force of habit, threw a glance towards the back of the room. The woman in black was in her accustomed seat, and opposite to her was the man with the bronzed face and the broad shoulders. She did not return the prisoner's glance, but kept her eyes upon the man. No one else was in the room, and the voices of the lawyers conversing pleasantly echoed strangely from the walls.

The prisoner took his seat beside his counsel. Presently the judge entered through a rear door and took his place upon the bench. He glanced at those in front of him and nodded at the bailiff, who withdrew.

After a few moments the sound of footsteps sounded along the corridor and the jury, with the bailiff at their head, entered solemnly through a side door. All eyes except those of the prisoner and the woman in black were turned upon them.

The prisoner gazed calmly at the wall back of the judge; the woman stared at the man with the bronzed face. The jurymen took their seats in the box and the judge said:

"Gentlemen, have you decided upon a verdict?"

"We have, your honor," replied the foreman.

The man with the broad shoulders glanced nervously at the woman in black. Calmly, intently, she was peering into his face, the gleam in her eyes seeming to pierce the darkness like the light from burning coals. He shrank from her gaze; his hands clutched the back of the chair in front of him so tightly that the nails cut the wood. He tried to turn his face away from her, but could not. Her eyes held him; their glimmer ate its way through him, and he grew pale and trembled.

"What is your verdict, gentlemen?" asked the judge.

Again the broad-shouldered man vainly struggled to tear his gaze from that of the woman. An icy coldness clung round his heart and cold perspiration sprang from his forehead. But still the woman in black gazed silently at him, and in her eyes was a sign of deadly reproach, of unpitying censure.

The foreman arose and began speaking. His voice, sounding loud and clear in the quiet room, startled the man with the bronzed face, and he sprang from his seat, white with fear.

"We, the jury," read the foreman from a paper in his hand, "find the defendant—"

"Hold, your honor!" cried the man with the broad shoulders, raising his hand as though commanding silence. "Hold, your honor!"

The voice, ringing through the darkness, sounded weird and ghost-like. Two of the jurymen visibly trembled.

All present, except the prisoner, turned to look at the man standing like a specter in the uncertain light.

For a moment he paused, covering his eyes with his hands. Then he staggered down the aisle and leaned against the railing. The clock in the tower began the stroke of 12.

"If your honor please," he said, with a voice that shook with fear, "if your honor please, let not this verdict be rendered. For I am guilty of this murder. I—I—my God, I killed that man!"

A sudden movement swept through the room as though each one present caught his breath.

"He had grievously wronged me," the man resumed, "so I waylaid him and stabbed him to death. The prisoner here, your honor, heard his dying yell and ran to his assistance. I had dropped the knife, but he picked it up. Then I pulled my gun, and he ran away."

Again there was silence—deep, awful silence. The judge spoke:

"Do you fully realize the consequences of this confession, sir?"

"I do, your honor," replied the man, slowly, deliberately. "I have tried to leave here, but something held me back. Some resistless power has dragged me into this courtroom every day of the trial; has compelled me to hang around to-night until the jury should agree, and has forced me back into this room to listen to a verdict that I knew would be a lie. I am guilty, your honor, I swear it."

Then the judge turned to the foreman of the jury.

"You will find for the defendant," he said. "Mr. Sheriff, release the prisoner and place that man under arrest."

When the shackles had been removed from his wrist, the young man with the clear-cut features walked calmly up the aisle with the light of a great joy on his face. In the rear of the room he found the woman in black leaning forward against the back of a chair, a handkerchief pressed against her eyes. He rested his hand tenderly upon her shoulder.

"Sweetheart," he said. "Brave little woman."

She arose to her feet and locked her arms around his neck.

"John," she sobbed, "John!"

When he had been locked in a cell, the sheriff said to the man with the bronzed face:

"What ever possessed you to voluntarily make that confession?"

And the man looked at him with a frightened face.

"The eyes of the woman," he answered. "The eyes of the woman! My God, they cut the secret out of my heart!"

Links.

"Behold!" cried the Savant. "I have discovered the missing link!"

The word paused only long enough to assure itself that the price of beef would not be affected, and passed on.

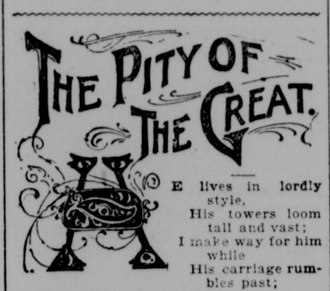
"It might better be a link of bologna!" the Savant muttered; and, then, drawing his mean robe about him, he starved to death with true philosophic fortitude.—Puck.

Candid.

"The payple Oi live wid before," said the new cook, "wor plain, ma'am."

"Well, are we not plain here?" asked the lady.

"Troth, ye are so, ma'am, but in a different way. The others wor plain in their way o' livin', not in their looks, ma'am."—Philadelphia Press.



He lives in lordly style,
His towers loom tall and vast;
I make way for him while
His carriage rumbles past;
His yacht rides on the bay,
His acres stretch away
Through fertile fields and dells—
But, held in check by shame,
He does not give his name
To the whisky that he sells.

I claim no broad domains,
No servants hear my call;
I toil for little gains,
My house is poor and small;
But I am proud to sign
These humble works of mine
So any man may see!
His calling brings him shame—
No bottle bears his name—
But Lord! he pities me!
—Chicago Record-Herald.

ALCOHOL AND RACE DECAY.

University Professor's Views Which Bear Out the Theories of Temperance Advocates.

President David Starr Jordan, of the Leland Stanford university, began in the Popular Science Monthly of May a series of articles entitled "The Blood of the Nation: A Study of the Decay of Races Through the Survival of the Unfit." That class of philosophers who are endeavoring to establish the theory that drunkenness and its attending vices and miseries are clearly a part of the progress of the human race will find little comfort in Dr. Jordan's article. Conceding to those gentlemen a certain amount of truth which it would be extremely difficult to prove in behalf of their theories, Dr. Jordan says:

"The effect of alcoholic drink on race progress should be considered in this connection. Authorities do not agree as to the final result of alcohol in race selection. Doubtless, in the long run, the drunkard will be eliminated, and perhaps certain authors are right in regarding this as a gain to the race. On the other hand, there is great force in Dr. Amos G. Warner's remark, that of all causties gangrene is the most expensive. The people of southern Europe are relatively temperate. They have used wine for centuries, and it is thought by Archdall Reid and others that the cause of their temperance is to be found in this long use of alcoholic beverages. All those with vitiated or uncontrollable appetites have been destroyed in the long experience with wine, leaving only those with normal tastes and normal ability of resistance. The free use of wine is, therefore, in this view, a cause of final temperance, while intemperance rages only among those races which have not long known alcohol, and have not become by selection resistant to it. The savage races which have never known alcohol are even less resistant, and are sooner destroyed by it.

"In all this there must be a certain element of truth. The view, however, ignores the evil effect on the nervous system of long-continued poisoning, even if the poison be only in moderate amounts. The temperate Italian, with his daily semi-saturation, is no more a normal man than the Scotch farmer with his occasional sprees. The nerve disturbance which wine effects is an evil, whether carried to excess in regularity or irregularity. We know too little of its final result on the race to give certainty to our speculations. It is moreover true that most excess in the use of alcohol is not due to primitive appetite. It is drink which causes appetite, and not appetite which seeks for drink. In a given number of drunkards but a very few become such through inborn appetite. It is influence of bad example, lack of courage, false idea of manliness, or some defect in character or misfortune in environment which leads to the first steps in drunkenness. The taste once established takes care of itself. In earlier times, when the nature of alcohol was unknown and total abstinence was undreamed of, it was the strong, the boisterous, the energetic, the apostle of 'the strenuous life,' who carried all these things to excess. The wassail bowl, the bumper of ale, the flagon of wine, all these were the attribute of the strong. We cannot say that those who sank in alcoholism thereby illustrated the survival of the fittest. Who can say that as the Latin races became temperate they did not also become docile and weak? In other words, considering the influence of alcohol alone, unchecked by an educated conscience, we must admit that it is the strong and vigorous, not the weak and perverted, that are destroyed by it. At the best, we can only say that alcoholic selection is a complex force, which makes for temperance—if at all, at a fearful cost of life which without alcoholic temptation would be well worth preserving."

Dr. Jordan, it is to be presumed, would not care to be understood as indorsing the idea that the wine-drinking countries of Europe have been made temperate by their wine-drinking. He is probably much too well acquainted with the current history of France and the other so-called "wine countries" to be in ignorance of the true state of affairs there.—New Voice.

ALCOHOLISM.

Strong Indictment of the Curse Given in the Graphic Language of Dr. Talmage.

In a recent discourse from the text: "Be ye angry and sin not," Rev. T. De Witt Talmage used the subject of "Alcoholism" to illustrate the importance of discriminating between the offense and the offender, the sin and the sinner. His remarks were a powerful argument against the use of intoxicants, but they were also a sympathetic appeal for a greater spirit of charity and helpfulness toward those who are in the bondage of inebriety. We publish the following extract from his sermon:

"Alcoholism has ruined more fortunes, blasted more homes, destroyed more souls, than any evil that I think of. It pours a river of poison and fire through the nations. Millions have died because of it, and millions are dying now, and others will die. Intemperance is an old sin. The great Cyrus, writing to the Lacedemonians of himself, boasted of many of his qualities, among others, that he could drink and bear more wine than his distinguished brother. Louis X. and Alexander the Great died drunk. The parliament of Edinburgh in 1661 is called in history 'the drunken parliament.' Hugh Miller, first stone mason and afterward a world-renowned geologist, writes of the drinking habits of his day, saying: 'When the foundation was laid, they drank. When the walls were leveled for laying the joists, they drank. When the building was finished, they drank. When an apprentice joined, they drank.' In the eigtheenth century, the giver of an entertainment boasted that none of the guests went away sober. Noah, the first ship captain, was wrecked—not in the ark, for that was safely landed—but he was wrecked with strong drink. Every man or woman rightly constructed will blush with indignation at the national and international and hemispheric and planetary curse. It is good to be aroused against it. You come out of that condition a better man or a better woman. Be ye angry at that abomination, and the more anger the more exaltation to character. But that aroused feeling becomes sinful when it extends to the victim of this great evil. Drunkenness you are to hate with a vivid hatred; but the drunkard you are to pity, to help to extricate.

"Just take into consideration that there are men and women who once were as upright as yourself who have been prostrated by alcoholism. Perhaps it came of a physician's prescription for the relief of pain, a recurrence of the pain calling for a continuance of the remedy; perhaps the grandfather was an inebriate and the temptation to inebriety, leaping over a generation, has swooped on this unfortunate; perhaps it was under an attempt to drown trouble that it was sought after; perhaps it was a very gradual chaining of the man with the beverage which was thought to be a servant, when one day it announced itself master. Be humble now, and admit that there is a strong probability that under the same circumstances you yourself might have been captured. The two appropriate emotions for you to allow are indignation at the intoxicant which enthralled and sympathy for the victim. Try to get the sufferer out of his present environment; recommend any hygienic relief that you know of, and, above all, implore the divine rescue for the struggle in which so many of the noblest and grandest have been worsted. Do not give yourself up to too many philippics about what the man ought to have been and ought to have done. While your cheek flushes with wrath at the foe that has brought the ruin, let your eye be moistened with tears of pity for the sufferer. In that way you will have fulfilled the injunction of the text: 'Be ye angry and sin not.'"

NOTES OF PROGRESS.

According to insurance statistics tectotalers may expect 17 years more life than drinkers.

Mayor Hart of Boston, in a talk before a temperance society of that city the other day, said that no gentleman ever went into a saloon.

Saloonists are objecting to the extension of the rural free delivery system. Taking the farmer's mail to his door daily obviates the necessity of his coming to town so often and hence, of course, "enjoying the privilege" of visiting the booze dispensary as often as he otherwise could, without going especially for that purpose. Public-spirited fellows these saloonists are!—Backbone.

The state liquor license law of South Dakota prohibits the sale of liquor to habitual drunkards, any violator of the law being liable for damages incurred by the drunkard while intoxicated. This clause in the law, which was practically a dead letter, has been brought to public attention by Mrs. Mary Garrison, of Sioux Falls, who has commenced suit against three saloonkeepers for selling liquor to her husband, resulting in his death.

Kittens as Drunkards.

Two maltese kittens, who make their home in a Third avenue saloon, go down into the cellar as soon as they can get there after the saloon opens up and come upstairs again scarcely able to walk. The proprietors offered them a saucer of beer, but they refused to drink it, but laid their noses over the edge of the saucer, inhaling the fumes of the beverage, and in a few minutes staggered away to fall asleep in some out-of-the-way place. An investigation showed that the cats had a nest in the cellar alongside a cask of ale. The kittens inhaled the fumes from the open bunghole and in that way got drunk every day.

A Future Financier.

"So you think your boy has what they call the business instinct, do you?"

"Yes. He sold his new jackknife to the Roberts boy for a nickel yesterday."

"I don't see much business about that. The knife must have been worth more than a nickel."

"It was; but you see he says he can borrow the knife and use it whenever he wants to and give it back when he's through, which he couldn't do with the nickel."—Chicago Record-Herald.

Proof of Blindness.

"Well, William, did you give the governor my note?" asked the gentleman of his rustic servant.

"Yes, sir, I gave it to him, but there's no use writing letters to him, he can't see to read 'em. He's blind, sir, blind as a bat.'

"Blind!"

"Yes, sir, blind. Twict he asked me where my hat was, and I had it on my head all the time. Blind as a bat, sir. No doubt about it!"—Chicago Tribune.

What Elsie Said.

"I'm afraid I can't interest my five-year-old Elsie in fairy tales any longer."

"And why not?"

"I was telling her about the 'Forty Thieves,' and when I got to the 40 oil jars with a thief in each jar, what do you suppose she said?"

"I give it up."

"She said: 'Wouldn't that jar you?"—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

A Fair Exchange.

A little boy was suffering from a severe cold, and his mother gave him a bottle of cough mixture to take while at school. On his return she asked him if he had taken his medicine.

"No," he answered; "but Bobby Jones did. He liked it, so I swapped with him for a handful of nuts."—Tit-Bits.

"Dolly Gray" Up-to-Date.

Good-by, Dolly! I must leave you,
Though it breaks my heart to go.
Something tells me I am needed
At the front, with "Cash & Co."—
Monday morning there's a "mark-down,"
My two weeks are up to-day
Hark! The ribbon counter's calling.
Good-by, Dolly Gray!
—Judge.

A SAD MISFORTUNE.

'Wunst I used ter wear jest as good clothes as them you've got."

"You did, eh? What brought you down to this?"

"Dey found out where I got de clothes an' pinched me."—Chicago American.

From Two Points of View.

Once more the olden glory
Of the golden rod is gleaming
O'er the meadows where the blossoms
Of the violets are dreaming—
Once more the hapless victim
Of hay fever's busy sneezing
At the scene the unafflicted
Fool imagines is so pleasing.
—Chicago Record-Herald.

Trying to Find Out.

"Tommie, is your mamma at home?" asked a lady caller coming up the gravel walk. Tommie, who was peeping around the corner of the house, gave a guilty start and then replied, meekly:

"That's jist wot I wuz tryin' t' find out; I've bin swimmin'."—Ohio State Journal.

Various Sorts.

Tess—Goodness; Miss Roxsie looks mad.

Jess—Yes, there's a certain puppy with a great pedigree that she wanted her father to buy for her, but he wouldn't do it.

Tess—What was it? A French count or a German baron?—Philadelphia Press.

Too Imperious.

Miss Struckile—Mother, you are too imperious in your behavior.

Mrs. Struckile—Too which?

Miss Struckile—You shouldn't order people around the way you do.

Mrs. Struckile—I'm rich enough.

Miss Struckile—Yes; but I m afraid folks will suspect that you began life as a cook.—N. Y. Weekly.

An Encouraging Setback.

Mr. Perkins—Miss Simpson, my heart holds a great secret, but I feel timid about confiding it to you.

Miss Simpson—Well, Mr. Perkins, I can't help you out any; the man who proposes to me, Mr. Perkins, shan't have a chance to throw it up to me that I led him on.—Chicago Record-Herald.

In His Own Defense.

"Those berries you sold me yesterday were not fresh."

"That's not my fault, ma'am. I had 'em four days ago. It's not my fault that you didn't come along until yesterday."—Yonkers Statesman.

Deeply Interested.

"Father," said the fair girl, "Harold has left me, never to return!"

"I am sorry to hear that," exclaimed the old gentleman, in softened tones.

"I am so grateful for your sympathy!"

"Are you sure he left, never to return?"

"Yes."

"Well, that's too bad; too bad. Day before yesterday he borrowed the best silk umbrella in the house."—Washington Star.

Gloom-Stealers.

All optimists put off their woe
Until to-morrow—as we know;—
But pessimists, to keep life gray,
Groan all to-morrow's groans to-day.
Puck.

DOWN BY THE SAD SEA WAVES.

"Now we are engaged, Gussie, I feel I must tell you an awful family secret—er—my grandfather was sentenced to a year's imprisonment."

"Oh, that's nothing, dearest girl. I've done five in my time."—Ally Sloper.

An Old Story in Verse.

When Mr. Rose's little girl
Was born, he named her Wild.
And thus it came to pass he had
A Wild Rose for a child.

But when she grew to womanhood
He felt almighty bad,
Because she married Mr. Hogg;
Then what a name she had.
—Detroit Free Press.

Wanted No Extremes.

Employment Agent—What was the matter with your last place?

Domestic—The couple had only been married a month, an' I cudn't stand th' love-makin'.

Agent—Well, here's a chance in a house where the couple have been married ten years.

Domestic—That's too long. I likes peace an' quiet.—N. Y. Weekly.

Wanted a "High Ball" Too.

The new arrival at the boarding-house proved to be a woman suffragist.

"I look for a wider opportunity of usefulness for downtrodden woman. My prayer, morning, noon and night," she said, "is for an elevated sphere."

"Don't care if I join you," said the Coarse Boarder. "High ball for me, too."—N. Y. Times.

Relative Value.

Cumso—All value is relative, and—

Cawker (interrupting)—And I suppose the nearer the relative is the greater is the value.

Cumso—I am afraid I do not follow you.

Cawker—I was merely thinking of the tendency among some young men to court girls for their pa value.—Leslie's Weekly.

About to Make a Change.

"What is he going to do now?" breathlessly asked the agitated young woman, with her eyes on the daring aeronaut, who was clinging to his parachute.

"He is about to sever his connection with the balloon," replied her escort, "to accept a position a little lower down."—Chicago Tribune.

Wondrous Wise.

At the classics he'd ne'er had a chance,
But in wisdom he led the whole dance.
Forsooth, he was able
To take a time table
And tell what it meant at a glance!
—Washington Star.

MINDFUL OF THE AMENITIES.

Her Mother (reprovingly)—Annette! You know you shouldn't say your prayers in bed, but should kneel down, as mamma has taught you!

Annette (sleepily)—Y-Yes; but I am going to ask God to s'cuse me.—Brooklyn Eagle.

An Exception Wanted.

And somehow this world's growing glummer;
'Twould be something remarkably sweet
If we only could live through one summer
Which did not break the record for heat.
—Washington Star.

One Doctor's Reasoning.

"How much do I owe you, doctor?"

"Ten dollars."

"Phew! Your colleague, Dr. Knodler, charges only five dollars for a mild case like this."

"That may be; but you must remember that he has a much larger practice."—N. Y. Times.

WOMAN AND HOME

FUN FOR RAINY DAYS.

An Evening of Frolic in Which the Ladies Drive Nails and the Men Trim Millinery.

It being a popular fiction that no woman can roll an umbrella as it should be rolled, the ladies of the company found themselves assigned to the work of umbrella rolling.

The young men were detailed to thread needles. Five minutes was the time limit in either case. At the end of this time the gentlemen who had threaded the largest number of needles was said to have won in his particular contest. He received a point toward the final prize.

TRIMMING A HAT.

The work of the ladies in umbrella rolling was examined and pronounced upon by the men. The lucky woman whose rolling was considered superior to that of her associates received a point toward the ladies' prize, to be awarded at the close of the festivities.

Driving nails and making buttonholes proved to be the next number on the programme. The nails were driven by the women, while the men devoted themselves to buttonhole working. Each lady in the company was given a strip of soft wood, a dozen nails and a hammer, the men receiving strips of linen with buttonholes cut in them, needles and thread.

A lively feature it proved to be. The room rang with laughter and good natured chaffing. Points toward the finals were bestowed here as in the preceding contests.

The awarding of these points was followed at once by a brisk round, in which the gentlemen trimmed cheap straw bonnets with flowers and ribbon, and the ladies puzzled over lengthy examples in commercial arithmetic.

The results of these tasks were judged by a committee, formed of persons of the opposite sex. The two most successful players receiving as before a point towards the prize.

The next feature was, if possible, even more gayly absurd and fun provoking than those which went before, for here both divisions of the company were given pencils and paper, the gentlemen being asked to write directions for making fancy dishes, such as angel cake, sweetbread patties and chicken croquettes, while the ladies were called upon to say how they would go about investing in stocks.

A longer time was allowed for this difficult feature than in the foregoing bouts. Each side had 15 minutes in which to do their best. Afterward the papers, signed with the authors' names, were read aloud. They were hugely enjoyed by the opponents.

DRIVING NAILS.

At the end of this supreme test points were collected and counted. The lady holding most of these received a book upon "The Ascent of Woman," while the male prizewinner was given a workbasket stocked with the instruments of domestic work, his future occupation.

The affair ended with a little dance, in which the ladies asked the gentlemen to tread a measure with them, and in other ways usurped the masculine prerogative. Again it was the girls, not the men, who invited their partners to supper, and who conducted them into the dining-room. — Boston Globe.

Rest for Nervous Women.

Anyone who is nervous should be careful how she expends her energy. To rest should not be an art difficult of acquirement or one requiring a teacher—yet many know very little of it. If you are physically tired a very few minutes flat on your back is worth as a means of repair, an hour's sitting in a chair, but mind that it is flat, not reclining on a lounge, or with your spine bent out of shape in a deep chair in which your weight rests on any part of your body except the part intended to support it—above all, not in a rocking chair, that special trap for the nervous.—Chicago Daily News.

They Were Both Surprised.

A Delaware man who deserted his wife five years ago returned the other day and said he went away "just to have a joke on her." A few moments later the woman sprung a much richer joke on him by introducing her newer husband.

PRETTY LAURA CONGER.

Like the Princess in Fairy Land She Rewards Hero Who Saved Her at Peking.

Announcement of the coming marriage of Miss Laura Conger, daughter of the United States minister to China, to Lieut. Fred P. Buchan, the dashing young American cavalry officer, has renewed public interest in the thrilling experiences which both of the betrothed persons encountered in the Celestial city.

The Chicago Chronicle says that the young man who was fortunate enough to form one of the relief expedition and to play a hero's part in the eyes of the rescued Americans and who has now reaped so rich a reward is lieutenant of troop K, Third cavalry, one of the fighting young soldiers whom the country sent to China.

The time was ripe for heroes when Lieut. Buchan first flashed his sword in Miss Conger's delighted sight. Week after week the distressed foreigners had huddled within their insecure shelter. Day by day slaughter, fire and bullets became more and more familiar spectacles. "Boxer" horrors were as common as summer showers. Daily the specter of death strode near. The food supply was practically gone, hope was dying and communication with home or with any part of the world had long been impossible.

Then, one Heaven-sent day, came the rescue party, and, well to the front of it, a tall, fearless figure of a certain young lieutenant. The way bristled with peril, yet Lieut. Buchan strode over dangers as if he did not see them. While not actually engaged in obeying the orders of his superiors, his only thought seemed to be the succor of the women of the legation. And such comfort as one young soldier could give them Lieut. Buchan saw to it that they promptly had.

Lieut. Buchan is a Kansan. His father is W. J. Buchan, a well-known lawyer and politician of Kansas City. But Frederick Buchan had never a fancy for the dusty stillness of a lawyer's office. Kansas is a state of dauntless men, and young Buchan's particular hero happened to be a doughty little man of the name of Funston, who has since become famous and a general. In Funston's footsteps therefore he was determined to tread. And his heroic conduct at the siege of Peking was the first step toward that career.

MISS LAURA CONGER.

Miss Conger was not the only American who admired the lieutenant's bravery. And so, when the horrors of war had subsided somewhat and a few weeks of comparative quiet had made a nearer acquaintance possible between the two, Lieut. Buchan asked for Mr. and Mrs. Conger's sanction to the engagement and it was cordially given.

The Congers have a special reason to delight in the affair, as they regard it in the light of a compensation to Laura for a tragedy which she has already suffered. Miss Conger is 29 years old, tall, graceful, fair-haired, a singularly gracious and lovely girl. But the sad look that you will sometimes notice in her eyes is the result of an unfortunate marriage which she made as a young girl.

Her husband, George Londrum, whom she had loved devotedly, proved altogether unworthy and the marriage turned out to be a deplorable mistake. After several years of misery, therefore, the girl secured a divorce and the right to return to her maiden name. Since then she has lived with her own family. George Londrum enlisted during the Spanish war, was wounded and died in a southern hospital.

Wherever she has been seen Laura Conger has been regarded as a brilliantly accomplished woman. She has been from childhood something of a mathematical prodigy and was for several years head bookkeeper in the Iowa state treasurer's office. She is a close friend and companion of her father and accompanied him on his last trip to Brazil, when he was minister to that country.

Keep Dish Towels Clean.

The dish-towel should be washed as regularly as the dishes, and should never be used more than once without a thorough rinsing at least, and if necessary a hot soap bath. This requires only a minute or two, and once the maid is trained to attend to it, it will become second nature to her. Few housekeepers send the dish-towels to the general wash, but make their cleansing a separate matter. About once a week, to keep them from becoming grimy, they should be scalded for 10 or 15 minutes in soapsuds, to which a little sal soda has been added, and then thoroughly rinsed and dried in the open air.

AGRICULTURAL HINTS.

EXTRACTING HONEY.

This Work the Writer Considers One of the Most Pleasant Features of Beekeeping.

Extracting honey from the combs is one of the pleasant features connected with bee keeping, but is not done in the open air, as the picture would indicate. I produce my extracted honey at the out-apiaries. Large hives are used, holding 20 of such frames as in my hand. Sometimes they are all in one body and sometimes in two bodies, with a queen excluder between. I use three styles of hives, but only one style of frame, so there is no difficulty in changing frames. I visit my out apiaries occasionally to see if the bees have room enough to continue storing honey.

The honey is all left on the hives until the latter part of September. By this time the bees have thoroughly ripened it and it has become so rich and thick that it takes a good right arm to swing it out of the combs. When the combs are taken from the hives they are carried to the honey house and there left until evening. After the bees have stopped flying I drive to the out-yard and haul home the honey. Before beginning to extract I take the uncapping knife and hone until the edges are keen. This will prevent tearing the combs when shaving off the cappings. The knife is occasionally dipped into a pail of hot water which expedites the work also.

EXTRACTOR AND TANK.

Two frames of nearly equal weight are selected each time, so as to balance nicely in the extractor. The crank is turned rapidly for a minute or so and the honey whipped out of the combs. It is then drawn off at the honey gate into an agate pail with a sieve over it to catch the bits of capping which frequently get into the extractor. The honey is then poured into five-gallon cans for the wholesale trade and into some Mason jars and tumblers for retailing. Before extracting begins the combs are held up to the light and graded. The white honey is extracted first, next the amber and lastly the dark. The uncapping can is in two parts; the top section telescopes into the bottom section. The top section has a sieve bottom, which catches the cappings as they fall into the can. The honey drains into the lower section and nothing is lost or wasted. The cappings after draining for a few days are rendered into the most beautiful light yellow wax. The empty combs are set out into the home apiary and cleaned up by the bees, then stored away until the next spring, when they are hauled to the out-yards and used there.—F. G. Herman, in Orange Judd Farmer.

CAUSED BY PARASITE.

Habit of Feather Eating in Hens Said to Be Due to a Pernicious Little Insect.

The New York experiment station published a bulletin on "feather eating" among fowls. The report makes a number of observations on this habit, suggesting that it is the result of a lack of nitrogenous matter in the feed, and citing experiments where fresh cut bone, lean meat, etc., were fed. "The vice," the report says, "is very uncommon among fowls that have exercise and a variety of feed, and it is most economical to prevent its appearance by careful feeding; but as the spread is rapid even under a ration which does not ordinarily seem to encourage its development, the vice should be stamped out by the death or removal of the first offender."

The editor of Farm and Dairy, New South Wales, calls attention to the fact of the failure to mention the true cause of "feather eating." "It is now a well-known fact," says the editor, "that feather eating is due to a minute parasite (sarcoptis laevis) which feeds at the roots of the feathers, thus irritating the birds and causing them to pluck out their own feathers. Where feathers are pulled out by other birds, it is due to the presence of lice, for which they are searching."

The prevention and remedy, says the editor, are simple, as the mite disease is contagious (through copulation) isolation of the affected bird is the first step, especially if it be a cock. The mite yields readily to treatment of one part of creosote to 20 parts of lard or vaseline, well rubbed into the affected parts.

Chicken cholera, also filth and lice, is abroad in the land again. Do not harbor such a villain.

"When the rooster crows in the door"—it's a sign the yard-fence needs attention.

ABUNDANCE OF FORAGE.

Orchard Grass Yields It Year After Year and Requires Hardly Any Attention.

Can anyone tell why orchard grass, one of the most common as well as one of the most valuable forage plants in the United States, is not better known and more appreciated? Many a farmer does not even recognize it at sight, though he has had chance to observe it all his life. A veritable gypsy, it has found a home in every country of Europe and America, in northern Africa and in Asia. Cheerfully adapting itself to all soils and conditions, it flourishes in wet or dry weather, sun or shade, and in a porous subsoil will send its roots to a great depth.

